The Lord would have all who act a part in His work bear testimony in their lives to the holy character of the truth. The end is near, and now is the time when Satan will make special efforts to distract the interest and separate it from the all-important subjects that should arrest every mind to concentrated action. An army could do nothing successfully if its different parts did not work in concert. Should each soldier act without reference to the others, the army would soon become disorganized. Instead of gathering strength from concentrated action, it would be wasted in desultory, meaningless efforts. Christ prayed that His disciples might be one with Him, as He was one with the Father. A limited number, united under one head, all obeying orders, will accomplish more than ten times the number who are drawing apart, who expend their strength on many things at the same time. Whatever good qualities a man may have, he cannot be a good soldier if he acts independently. Good may occasionally be done, but often the result is of little value, and often the end shows more mischief done than good. Those who act independently make a show of doing something, attract attention, and flash out brightly, and [then] are gone. All must pull in one direction in order to render efficient service to the cause. In Healdsburg some have acted from self-will. They have a high appreciation of their own ability. They put a great estimate on their own plans, and are already to take offense at the doings of others, and they refuse to act in concert. Now these, I saw in my dream, were attracted to you, and God's blessing cannot attend them, because His Spirit does not rule in their hearts, or control their actions.4LtMs, Lt 11a, 1886, par. 8

God requires concerted action of His soldiers; and in order to have this in the church, self-restraint is essential; self-restraint must be exercised. But some in Healdsburg, as well as in other churches, will have to learn this lesson; they will have to learn to forego their own wishes and preferences for the good of others. We have determined adversaries; we know not their number or their position. Satan works through agencies which we do not always see, through some whom we do not suspect. When we think Satan is routed, he is only preparing to make an attack to discomfit and repulse. When we fancy ourselves secure, we are in the very greatest danger. Watchfulness and prayer combined with persevering effort to keep the rank and file unbroken are more necessary than ever before. The work of the cause of truth in Healdsburg is a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men. Satan has brought elements into the Healdsburg church that will ever be a source of trial, unless these unconverted members shall see their defects of character as they have never yet seen them and will repent of their evil surmisings, their envy, their faultfinding, their accusing of the brethren, their walking after their own independent judgment. These have made independent assertions, and are bold and forward, not knowing their place, and not realizing the order that must be observed in the church of God.4LtMs, Lt 11a, 1886, par. 9

Such are a greater affliction to the church than any of the influences we meet with from unbelievers. The very worst elements will become instruments in the hands of Satan to obtain sympathizers. For this reason we see the need of using great caution in selecting persons to take responsibility in the school and in the church; for Satan will set these unsanctified ones to work, to clog the wheels, to question, to find fault, to create suspicion, disunion, and a disordered state of things; and all the time they will think they are doing God's service. These elements are already to work in the church, but their work is not yet fully developed. Much is kept in the dark. An undercurrent is working. Satan lays hold of those who are self-willed, and who move from impulse, and skilfully diverts them into channels where they will be an element of weakness in the church.4LtMs, Lt 11a, 1886, par. 10

Our conflict with Satan and his host must be earnest and determined. The enemy will use these rebellious ones to worry, confuse, and perplex those who would stand as bold, faithful soldiers for Jesus. We wish you to understand your danger, to know what gins and snares Satan has set for you. The warfare is waging now, and will continue to the end. The church must be a unit. I wish, my brother, that you had spiritual discernment, but in this you are deficient. I entreat you in the name of Jesus to seek wisdom from God; for Satan is surely coming to you as an angel of light. It is not easy to meet and withstand foes who wear the same dress as do the soldiers of Christ. But let the Lord come in and work with your efforts. God would have you and your wife consecrated to His service; but you both need divine enlightenment, you need to be careful with whom you connect, to take heed whom you admit into your confidence. The Lord will help you if you feel the need of His help. But He is found only of those who seek Him with faith, in earnest, humble prayer. May the Lord guide and control you, is my prayer. Yours with love.4LtMs, Lt 11a, 1886, par. 11

Daniels, Brother and Sister E. P.

[Basel, Switzerland]

[August 6, 1886]

An edited copy of Lt 11a, 1886. Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother and Sister _____:

Again my mind is much exercised in regard to you. I dreamed that I was in your home, sitting at your table, but I could not see that the teachings which you have given others on self-denial and health reform were carried out. I groaned in spirit, and said, "Brother _____, you and your wife are going into darkness." The Lord has shown me that you have such traits of character that, should you be prospered financially, you would be in danger of losing your soul. You would not be economical. Your wants would increase, and you would not practice self-denial. The Lord in mercy has kept you in the school of poverty, that He might save your soul. 4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 1

Sister _____ has lessons to learn in economy. I saw that you, Brother _____, have been tested by poverty, and that the Lord would test you with prosperity. If your use of His blessings and the advantages He gives you should not be in accordance with your faith and your instructions to others; if you should not appropriate in accordance to your faith the means God brings into your hands, then He would come closer to you by affliction, disappointment, and privation; for I saw that you do not know yourself. You would be led on and on by your natural inclinations, building high hopes on future prospects, but God would put His hand against you. He can in a moment remove your wisdom. He can in a moment take from you the power He has entrusted to you, by which you should glorify Him. If left to yourself, to follow your own will and judgment, you will surely ruin your soul. Both you and your wife need to learn in the school of Christ. 4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 2

Nebuchadnezzar was warned by God not to pursue a certain course; but his prosperity elevated and deceived him, and in a unguarded moment he exclaimed, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" [Daniel 4:30.] The instant he uttered these words, the sentence was issued that felled the tree. The blessings God had bestowed upon him were removed, his reason was taken away, and the mighty ruler was driven from men to find his place among the beasts of the field. 4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 3

There are many ways in which God can punish, and punishment will surely follow whenever pride is indulged. "Pride goeth before destruction." [Proverbs 16:18.] Let a man be lifted up by a sense of his own ability, and, trusting in his human strength, he will surely be overcome by temptation. God will bring him down. He will teach him his utter weakness, that he may feel his need of divine aid. Let any one glory in his wisdom or his talents, or in anything but Christ and Him crucified, and he will learn that the Lord alone is to be exalted. My heart is very sad when I think of the state of things in _____. I know that the church is not in a right condition. I know that your plans and ideas have fashioned some of its members, not to their spiritual advantage, but to their injury; and the end is not yet. I was in my dream led into the church, into the college, and into your house. I saw the working of things at present, and what it would be in the future, and it was far from being according to God's arrangement. In regard to your own family, I saw that dangers threaten your children. They are liable to receive a wrong stamp of character, a mold that will not be easily effaced—vanity, pride, love of dress, self-will, rather than the meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. May the Lord open your eyes to see and your heart to feel the necessity of an entire change. 4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 4

The Lord would have all who act a part in His work bear testimony in their lives to the holy character of the truth. The end is near, and now is the time when Satan will make special efforts to distract the interest and separate it from the all-important subjects that should arrest and hold every mind to concentrated action. An army could do nothing successfully if its different parts did not work in concert. Should each soldier act without reference to the others, the army would soon become disorganized. Instead of gathering strength for concentrated action, it would be wasted in desultory, meaningless efforts. A limited number united under one head, all obeying orders, will accomplish more than ten times the number if they are drawing apart and expend their strength on many things at the same time. Whatever good qualities a man may have, he cannot be a good soldier if he acts independent of brotherly counsel. Occasionally, good may be done, but often the result is of little value, and frequently the end shows more mischief than good. They make a show of doing something, attract attention, and flash out brightly, then they are gone. All must pull in one direction in order to render efficient service to the cause.4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 5

Some in _____ and in other churches have worked from self-will. They have a high appreciation of their own ability and are ready to take offense at the doings of others. They put a high estimate on their own plans and refuse to act in concert with others. These, I have seen, were attracted to you; but God's blessing cannot attend them, because His Spirit does not rule in their hearts or control their actions. God requires of His soldiers concerted action; and in order to have this in the church, self-restraint is essential. They must learn to forego their own wishes and preferences for the good of others.4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 6

We have determined adversaries, but we know not their number or their position. Satan works through agencies that we do not always see, and some that we do not suspect. When we think that he is routed, he is only preparing for another attack, to discomfit and repulse us. It is when we fancy ourselves secure that we are in the greatest danger. Watchfulness and prayer, with persevering effort to keep rank and file unbroken, are more necessary than ever before. The work and cause of truth are a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men. Satan has brought elements into the church that will ever be a source of trial unless they see their defects of character, as they have never yet seen them, and repent of their evil surmising, their envy, their faultfinding, their accusing of the brethren, and their walking after their own independent judgment, thinking themselves right and others wrong. These will make independent assertions, and will be bold and forward, not knowing their place, nor regarding the authority or order that must be observed in the church of God.4LtMs, Lt 11b, 1886, par. 7

Now these are a far greater affliction to the church than any of the influences we meet from unbelievers. The very worst elements will become instruments in the hands of Satan to obtain sympathizers. Chapman, Sister

Basel, Switzerland

December 27, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 4BC 1161; 6MR 256.

Dear Sister [Chapman]:

On returning from Tramelan, Switzerland, letters were awaiting me from California. I was much pleased to receive a letter from you. I thank you for responding, for now I will write again.⁴*LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 1*

You speak of your daughter's going to Snell's Seminary. Permit me to speak freely and kindly to you on this point. If God has in His providence established a school among our own people in Healdsburg, and if in the place of sending your daughter where she would be under the influence, and in the society of those who love the truth, place her where she will be associated with a worldly class who has no respect for God or His law, I ask you how you expect the Lord will work to counteract the influence that must surround your daughter and which you voluntarily choose. Will He commission His angels to do the work which He has left for you to do? God does not do for any of us the work He has left for us to do. He expects us to follow the light He has given in His Word to the very letter.⁴*LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 2*

He commanded the children of Israel to gather their children from the Egyptians into their own dwellings and strike their doorposts with blood, that the destroying angels might see the blood and pass over their homes. This is your work, this is my work, and the work of every mother who believes the truth. The angel with the writer's inkhorn is to place a mark upon the foreheads of all who are separated from sin and sinners, and the destroying angel follows this angel.⁴*LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 3*

bound her about like bands of steel, and it will require a strong and persevering effort to save her soul. If you have success in this case, no halfway work will do. The habits of years cannot easily be broken up. She should be placed where there is a steady, firm, abiding influence constantly exercised. If I were in your place, I would do all I could. I should put her in the college at Healdsburg; let her have the discipline of the boarding house. It is where she ought to have been years ago. God is not pleased with our inattention and trifling with His blessings placed within our reach. Neither is He pleased to have us place our children in worldly society because this suits their tastes and inclinations better. If you save the souls of your children, you must do your work with fidelity. You have encouraged the reading of story books, and papers with continued stories lying upon your tables have educated and trained the tastes and appetite of your daughter until she is a mental inebriate and needs a stronger power and will than her own to hold her.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 4

The boarding house in Healdsburg is a good home. It has good influences. It is conducted upon a plan that makes it a home. It is true that those who have been educated to false habits and false theories, to self-indulgence and selfish gratification, may feel that it does not suit their inclination because all their habits and customs have been in a wrong channel. But my dear sister, we are nearing the end of time, and we want now, not to meet the world's taste, the world's habits and practices, but to meet the mind of God, to see what saith the Scriptures, and then to walk according to the light that God has given us. Our inclinations, our customs and practices, are not to have the preferences. God's Word is our standard.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 5

I know that were your daughter my child, I should place her in the school at Healdsburg. As far as her health is concerned, right habits and right practices will secure to her health, while wrong habits and practices ruin her for this life and for the future immortal life. There is a heaven to gain, a perdition to shun, and when you in the fear of God have done all that you can do on your part, then you may expect that the Lord will do His part. But decisive action now may save a soul from death. I do not like the movement on your part of sending her either to Oakland or Snell's Seminary. She needs a strong influence to counteract the influence of the society she loves. She needs just as decided efforts in her case to cure her of this mental disorder as does the drunkard to be cured from his craving for liquor. I know what I am talking about. I write these words in the fear of God.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 6

You have a work to do which no other can do for you, and will you fail to do it? God has not been pleased with your work in many respects in regard to your worldly associations, and now the danger stands revealed. Will you in the name of the Lord deal with your child as with a soul in danger of eternal ruin? Were she a girl of self-control, a girl who loved God, her danger would not be so great. She does not love to think of God, or her duty, or of heaven. She has a firm persistence in having her own way. She does not seek strength daily from God in order that she may resist temptation, and then will you place her in connection with influences calculated to lead her thoughts away from God, away from the truth and righteousness? If so, you place her on the enemy's battleground, with no strength to resist his power, or overcome his temptations.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 7

If she were situated where there were heavenly and divine influences, her moral sensibilities which are now paralyzed might be aroused and her thoughts and purposes, by the blessing of God, might be changed to flow in the heavenly channel and she be restored. But she is now in danger through inward corruption and outward temptations. Satan is at work playing a game of life for her soul, and he has every advantage in his favor of winning the game. I have been over this ground in my dreams and have been talking to you as I have written at this time. My heart yearns over you with intensity. Trying as your case is now with your daughter, do not despond. You want cheerfulness and decision. Seek for help from God. God is your friend. You are never alone. The Bible is your counselor. It is a light to them who are in darkness. Be steadfast in the hour of trial, for you will have new trials to meet. But cling to Jesus, and make Him your strength.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 8

Yours with respect and love.4LtMs, Lt 12, 1886, par. 9

Bourdeau, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

August 22, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in Ev 646-647.

Dear Brother and Sister Bourdeau:

I have been thinking over the testimonies that God has been pleased to give you, Brother Bourdeau, and the thoughts arise in my mind whether you are letting circumstances shape themselves to control you, or whether you are strenuously controlling circumstances. I have feared that you have never seen this in its true light, and that is the reason that you do not make a decided, firm change. 4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 1

That which has been shown me in reference to Daniel you can see plainly, and yet he cannot see it. He will make any amount of excuses why he did as he did, therefore the testimony does him no good. Daniel sees plainly where you make mistakes, where your danger is, but you do not see it. You think you have sufficient excuse for the course you are pursuing in all things, and you are slow to reform. I fear that you will act over the past; for I was shown Satan would work to make necessities for you, to bind you away from the work of God. Now the tent has been set up for two months in Italy, and will you please to investigate your labors and see if you have heeded the counsel of God, or have taken counsel with your own mind and judgment. Will you consider the words, "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." 4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 2

After what has been shown you in reference to your inclination to be slow and moderate and to allow opportunities to pass by unimproved, you lose time, lose interest, and take things so moderately that Satan outgenerals you again and again. It is no common, indifferent work in which you are engaged amid a people estranged from God, and who need the most zealous efforts made in their behalf.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 3

The truth is to be given to the people to save them individually, and you must come close to the hearts to the people. Have you felt that you could leave the tent to go to your home nearly every night? If you have done this, you certainly have been doing the same thing for which God has reproved you. Have you felt that you could leave the tent burdens and the care upon Brother Geymet and Brother Auditat? Have you felt the burden of the work upon you or laid off the burden upon your fellow workers? I am afraid for you, knowing well your history in the past where you have signally failed in the efforts you have commenced. Have you felt content to preach a discourse now and then and felt that that was all you had to do? Will you see if you have labored for souls as those who must give an account? Have you the blessing of the Lord with you, or have you your attention so cut up and divided with different matters that the days are passing and you have nothing to show for your work?4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 4

I feel so burdened over your case, as well as the case of Daniel, that it seems that I shall cry out in agony of mind. Satan is constantly at work to give to your thoughts an earthly, common character. But if anything is done in this cause it must be by the vitalizing influence of the Spirit of God upon your heart. If there is scarcely nothing to show for your labors all this time you have been in the valleys, I think that you are not the man for that field. Short discourses, giving Bible readings, visiting, coming close to the hearts by personal effort will do much more than merely preaching. You have framed all kinds of excuses for the indolent manner that the work has been done in Italy, but God help you to stop justifying yourself and throw yourself into the work, and go forth weeping, bearing precious seed that you may return, bringing your sheaves with you.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 5

Time is passing, the angels are holding the four winds that a work may be done. With the help of Brother Geyette and Brother Auditat, I cannot see why you are not fitted to do a good work. Have you planned to make these meetings as interesting as possible? I hope that you will have the burden of the work upon your soul. Have you stayed by the tent, right on the ground, or have you made a necessity of going home every day and gathering on you burdens that have no part in the work? This work in God's service to meet the moral darkness requires self-denial, toil, and persevering effort and earnest faith. Many flatter themselves that they could do great things if they only had the opportunity; but something has always prevented them; Providence has hedged their way in so that they could not do what they desired to do. We expect no great opportunity will meet us on the road, but by prompt and vigorous action we must seize the opportunities, make opportunities, and master difficulties. You are in need of vital energy from heaven. We must in our work not only strike the iron when it is hot, but make the iron hot by striking. Slow, easy, indolent movements will do nothing for us in this work. We must be instant in season, out of season. These are critical times for work. By hesitation and delay we lose many good opportunities. You, my brother, need to be sharpened up, not once a month, but daily. Oh, pray that you may have the spirit of the true worker. Duty is above everything else. We are not to look to the right or to the left, but go forward, straight forward. Every single act of duty is an act of faith. To live truly and nobly is to act energetically. Life is a battle to be fought valiantly. A man must stand to his post of duty, not to be turned aside; inspired by high and holy purposes and stand by his post of duty, if he die there.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 6

That which stands most in the way of your performing duty is irresolution, weakness of purpose, indecision. May God help you to gird the armor on and do your Master's work.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 7

I will leave these lines with you and hope that God will bless them to your good. You have a tent, stick by it, and by your work. Meditate upon the subjects of truth; be constantly increasing in knowledge by being familiar with Bible arguments; be full of the practical subjects; bring from God's storehouse things new and old.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 8

May the Lord guide you, is my prayer. Love to Martha and to the church.4LtMs, Lt 13, 1886, par. 9

Drs. Burke and Gibbs:

For a few days my mind has been impressed to write to you. I feel anxious for you both. Some hints have been expressed that there were fears you might not harmonize in your work. I hope this hint is not founded upon facts. I know Satan is very busy and that one of his snares is to weaken the workers by awakening distrust and suspicion of one another. But this need not be. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 1

The cause is one great whole, and we each have a part to act; and because we individually have a work to do, we would be weak and narrow in our ideas if we thought we could do it all. It would show anything but nobility of soul if we should press and crowd each other and try to undermine one another. Why should you not draw in even cords? Why should you not labor together as brethren? There is no need of either of you feeling that you must have the superiority, or that you must be considered one superior to the other. You have plenty of room to work, and work enough to do; but unless this work is done in love and unity, it will savor of self and selfishness and a foul plot, and the whole work will bear the mold of men, and not the impress of the living God. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 2

Christ inquired of His disciples upon one occasion, "What was it ye disputed among yourselves by the way? But they held their peace; for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest. And He sat down and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all. And He took a child and set him in the midst of them, and when He had taken him in His arms, He said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such children in My name, receiveth Me, and whosoever shall receive Me, receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me.” [Mark 9:33-37.] We have many precious lessons to learn of Jesus, which we are slow to commit to memory, and slow to receive the true sense of, lessons which He would have us learn by heart and carry out in our life. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 3

My brethren, you cannot weaken your own influence and standing more than in trying to weaken each other. Dr. Burke, I think, is the older in years and experience in the Christian life. While he has been considered a man of humility, I know he has not been thus, in the true sense of the word. He desires to have esteem and praise of men. I know he must learn of the Master in His school meekness and humbleness of mind, else his ways will not be such as God can approve. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 4

Now, Brother Burke, you will have to learn the important lesson of what it is to be a man in the sight of God. It is to be like Jesus, meek and lowly of heart, to guard the interests of others more sacredly than you would your own. Your long experience in the truth should be of advantage to you; it should be carried out in your daily life and practice, showing that you have not been playing truant or a dull scholar in the school of Christ. You are responsible for the influence and impressions you leave upon the minds of others in regard to yourself and others connected with you. You are responsible to God for the example in Christian deportment that you shall give to Dr. Gibbs, who has not had the opportunities and privileges to learn the truth and obtain an experience that you have had. We are none of us accountable for the light and privileges which we did not have. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 5

I met Dr. Gibbs for the first time in Syracuse, and I could not endure the thought of the institution’s being closed for one year. I knew we needed it, and I loaned the retreat $1,000 without interest to educate a man for the place. While this was being done, in the providence of God I was made acquainted with Dr. Gibbs. Several said he would not be the man for the place, being so young in experience in our faith, and being a physician that had used drugs in his practice; but I felt that God would have him take the place. When Brother Burke’s education was finished, and he had got his diploma, there would be abundant work for both to take hold of.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 6

Elder _____ and several others told me gravely that we would be disappointed in Dr. Gibbs. I said, I do not wish to dispute you, my elder in years, but let me say, I humbly trust that you will be disappointed in the man. All depends upon the confidence he has in the doctrines and faith and Christian integrity of Seventh-day Adventists. His moral and spiritual qualities need strengthening by seeing a correct example among those who believe the sacred, solemn truth we profess. If there is a failure here, then we will see a failure in his filling the bill in the sanitarium. As I am the one who has taken the responsibility, I shall watch with intense interest and see the proving of the man. But I will help him in every way I can, and I hope you will unite with me in my efforts; for I am just as confident he is the right man for the Rural Health Retreat as you and others are suspicious. He has much to learn to begin a practice in an hygienic institution, which has been first disgraced, then mismanaged. He can be helped or hindered. He can be criticized and made unhappy by jealousies and suspicions, and fail to endure the test and trial; or he can be made very happy by receiving encouragements and confidence of those whom he is desirous to please.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 7

This has been my position, and I have had very much burden in this matter; but I am convinced that God in His providence has placed Dr. Gibbs in the position he is in; and if he will walk humbly with God, he will grow in grace and the knowledge of Jesus Christ. His ability as a physician is not questioned; but if anyone chooses, they may awaken distrust by a word, a look, or a gesture, and that suspicion may live and be communicated to others, and much harm may be done to Dr. Gibbs and the institution. I have been over this ground so many times that I understand it perfectly.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 8

Now, my brethren, I entreat of you both to be kind and courteous, and link together in your work. You have an important part to act. I believe both of you, if connected, as you may be, and as God would have you, will make a success of the institute. You will not work at cross purposes, but in perfect unity, cherishing love and confidence in each other. There is enough work for you both, but let not there be any clashing. Let neither think that his plans and ideas are perfect, while he will demerit the ideas of the other. If one has knowledge that he thinks the other has not, counsel together, open up all you can to each other, and never let one word or hint escape to your patients that the other is not reliable, or that you know better than he. This will destroy confidence in you both and will greatly displease God. You are not of the same stamp of character, and you may each consider your temperament preferable to the other's; but make no such comparisons which are unworthy of Christians. Let each esteem the other better than himself, and love each other as brethren. Nothing would bring the displeasure of God upon you as to exalt yourselves and demerit the other. You both need the divine mold. You both need to copy the pattern and be more and more like Jesus. You are doing up work for time and eternity. All your works must be compared with the standard, God's great moral law. Put self out of sight, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith. Work together in love, in unity, and God will surely bless you, and you may be a great blessing to suffering humanity. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 9

I hope Dr. Gibbs will not become discouraged. His life has not been pleasant, but of that character to stir up the objectionable features of his character. The Lord knows it all and will help, and strengthen, and bless him; but he must continue to trust in God and never entertain a thought that he will leave the post of duty where God has placed him, until the Lord shall point out his duty elsewhere. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 10

The institution will prosper, if you work humbly in God. Satan has been at work to ruin it from the first, but God has honored you, my brethren, with a part to act in bringing it up where it shall stand elevated and honored in doing a work for suffering humanity. 4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 11

Let your hearts be strong in God and in the power of His might. Oh, how many are waiting for opportunity to do some great work of self-sacrifice and are overlooking the little daily test which God gives them to prove them. It is the little things of life that develop the spirit in men and women and determine the character. These trifles cannot be neglected and yet the man be prepared to endure the severe tests, when they are brought to bear upon him. My brethren, your character building is by no means finished. Every day a good or a bad brick is placed in the structure. You are either building crookedly or with exactness and correctness that will make a beautiful temple for God. Therefore look not for great opportunities, and neglect the present little opportunities of doing little acts of kindness. In words, in tones, in gestures, in looks, you can represent the Spirit of Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 12

He who neglects these little things, and yet flatters himself that he is ready to do wonderful things for the Master, will be in danger of failing altogether. Life is not made up of great sacrifices and wonderful achievements, but of little things. Kindness and love and courtesy are the marks of the Christian. Brethren, you need to cherish the precious qualities that existed in the character of Jesus. The churches who profess to believe the truth for this time are weak and sickly, because they neglect to weave Christ into the simplest acts of life. In our association with each other, let it ever be remembered that there are chapters in the experience of others that are sealed from mortal eyes; there are sad histories that are written in the books of heaven, but are sacredly guarded from prying eyes. There stand registered long, hard battles with trying circumstances, arising in the very homes, that day by day sap the courage, the faith, the confidence, until the very manhood seems to fall to ruins. But Jesus knows it all, and He never forgets.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 13

To such, words of kindness and of affection are welcome as the smile of angels; a strong, helpful grasp of the hand of a true friend is worth more than gold and silver. It helps him to regain the manhood of the man.4LtMs, Lt 16, 1886, par. 14

My dear:

I earnestly pray that the Lord will give you His grace and His wisdom to take a right view of matters. The enemy is on the track of every one of us; and if we would resist temptations which assail us from without and from within, we need to make sure we are on the Lord's side, that His truth is in our hearts, that it keeps watch in our souls, ready to sound an alarm and summon us to action against every enemy. Without this defense amid unseen foes we shall be like the willow bending to blast, driven of the wind and tossed. But if Christ abides in the soul we may be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.⁴*LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 1*

It is the simple truth of God, the uniting the soul to Christ, that elevates, ennobles, and refines the character. Oh, how certain it is that folly is natural to men. The truth of God obeyed, the living by every word of God, is alone sufficient to make any of us stand in these evil times. Satan is playing the game of life for the soul. There is only one power that can make us steadfast and keep us. The grace of God in truth you must realize, the claims of God upon you you should have learned by this time. You cannot serve God and mammon.⁴*LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 2*

There are opportunities and advantages which are within the reach of all to strengthen the moral and spiritual powers. The mind can be expanded and ennobled and should be made to dwell upon heavenly things. Our powers must be cultivated to the uttermost, else we shall fail of meeting God's standard. Unless it flows in a heavenward direction, it becomes an easy prey to the temptation of Satan to engage in worldly projects and enterprises that have no special connection with God. And all zeal and devotion and restless energy and feverish desire are brought into this work, and the devil stands by and laughs to see human effort wrestling so perseveringly for an object that it will never gain, which eludes its grasp. But if he can keep them infatuated with the baseless delusion that they will give strength of brain and bone and muscle to the objects they never will realize, he is gratified, for the powers of mind that belong to God, that God claims, are diverted from the right aim, the proper objects. Especially so it is in your case.4LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 3

To be independent and self-reliant in some respects is duty which we owe to ourselves. But here, where the enemy will come in with his delusive snares, pride takes the place of humility. And when you or I trust to our own resources, our own wisdom, and seek counsel of our own heart, then certain disappointment, shame, and confusion will be our portion at last. We are in a fair way to triumph only when we are closely connected with God and have on the whole armor of righteousness. If we are having, and living, and working with an eye single to the glory of God, we shall realize a Saviour's love and have a sure defense. But if you bury yourself up in business, or engage in care and burdens that do not pertain to or have connection with the work of God, you are surely and steadfastly withdrawing yourself from spiritual, holy, ennobling influences. The deceitful heart within is constantly excusing a neglect of heavenly contemplations and earnest prayer, and an ensnaring worldly spirit enshrouds the soul like a cloud of darkness which will prove your ruin at last. The truth as it is in Jesus has been kept apart from the life. Schemes and projects which Satan invents ensnare the soul, and poor, deceived human beings go on blindfolded to their own ruin.4LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 4

It is essential that you feel the power of the truth as well as to believe it. It should have a steady, abiding influence upon the mind. But dream-like projects are favored and bar the way to deep and thorough heavenly principles. The things of this life have the precedence of the interest pertaining to the future, immortal life. The common and earthly deaden the senses of the eternal. There is one safeguard against Satan's deceptions and snares: that is the truth as it is in Jesus. The truth planted in the heart, nourished by watchfulness and prayer, nourished by the grace of Christ, will give us discernment. The truth must abide in the heart, be felt in its power in spite of all the alluring enchantments of Satan, and your experience and mine must be that the truth can purify, guide, and bless the soul. Satan is watching for your soul. He would tempt you to make your own opinions and judgment your guide. A rash act, a rash word, hasty conclusions, pride, and independence may inflict a wound upon the soul, or a blemish upon the character, that will so weaken your influence that your usefulness will be destroyed and place you where you cannot become a channel of light to others.4LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 5

I tell you, if you would be a Christian at all, you must be a Christian under all circumstances; then, through Christ, you are safe in being a humble, living Christian at all times and in all places. Lightness and trifling, jesting and joking, cheap talk will be painful to you. Your straight, consistent course may win souls to Jesus. God help you that you may not miss heaven, for it will be a terrible loss.4LtMs, Lt 17, 1886, par. 6

Elder Rice

Dear Brother in Christ:

Your letter was received yesterday. I have a short time before the Sabbath and will answer as best I can. In regard to the wood's being cut, no one has been gossiping to me. Reuben wrote as to what was being done without any word of complaint; but in answer to a letter in regard to his cutting wood, he wrote for information and made no word of complaint against any doing at the retreat, but merely stated that the wood was being cut by him and others as though it were a well-understood matter. I had written that I did not wish him to cut at all until I could be there to see what was done, for I did not want any, not one living tree, cut on my place by a set of boys or men, for they might take down trees that I wished to have remain. Now, Brother Rice, as far as money value is concerned, I care not; but to remove a green tree or living tree, except what I specified, I did not want done, and I do not want done at any time until I am on the ground myself. Money cannot replace a natural tree. I may have spoken too broad and covered too much in my letter, but I felt in earnest. Three weeks of cutting would go on before my letter could reach you, and I felt certainly uneasy and disturbed; and if there has been wood cut down and spoiling, let the retreat take it; for of what value will it be to me to rot on the ground. Take all the wood you have cut, but please cut no more. I never meant that tree that Brother Lockwood specifies as scraggly old tree cut, but these things I do not allow to trouble me after I have done what I can do in the matter.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 1

I thank you for your letter. You have not told me how much wood has been cut, whether you have cut my green trees or not; but no matter, I will not let this trouble me. I do not expect to be at California before another year shall roll around. Should I have my choice, I would be glad to be in California, but I do not want to follow inclination; I want to do the will of God and remain in Europe long enough to pay for coming. I must spend some time in England.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 2

There has not yet been any effort made at Basel for the French and Germans. Other fields seemed to need workers, so this field was left for the present. Brother Daniel Bourdeau lives in Geneva, one of the most beautiful and wealthy cities in Europe. But Brother Daniel commenced the effort alone, not as the Lord had shown him he should commence; and there are but few—about four embraced the truth. There will have to be a second effort, and it will not be as favorable as if they had had proper help at the commencement of an effort in so large and important a place. Brother Ertzenberger commenced an effort at Chandefaus. There was a small church at that place. As the result, eighteen good souls have taken hold of the truth. This makes our hearts glad.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 3

Brethren Ertzenberger and Conradi, and Brother Daniel Bourdeau are now working in Lausanne. Brother Ertzenberger is laboring for the Germans and has a good interest. Brother Bourdeau is laboring for the French and has a good attendance. There are other helpers uniting with them. Lausanne is an important place, but Lausanne is about forty miles from Geneva, and we feel deeply interested for this place. We believe that there will be a church raised up there to the glory of God.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 4

There has been that which has cheered and made us thankful to God in the additions to the church here since the conference. One Jew was being educated in the college for the ministry. He came to our conference meetings and has finally left the school and united with the church. We do not count so much upon the addition of a Jew because we have been so many times disappointed in them. They are artful and so inclined to be licentious. But this called the attention of a most worthy noble German. This Jew was expelled from the school for keeping the Sabbath, which led the German to investigate the matter, and he became convicted and step by step he advanced cautiously until he saw that he must keep the Sabbath.4Lts, Lt 18, 1886, par. 5

He told the president of the college and preceptor of his true convictions. They tried to argue with him; doctors of divinity sought to reason him out of his views, but the student had studied every point. He prepared essays and read them and of course no Bible argument could be brought against him. He saw the fallacy of every effort made to show him what they called his delusion. Then when they saw they could not move him from his position, then they said his Sabbath views would not need to interfere with his student college life, but, said he, How can I, seeing this to be the truth of the Bible, remain here? I have a work to do to enlighten others. I cannot keep these things to myself. If it is Bible truth and you see you have brought no argument to show that it is not Bible truth, I must do what I can to teach the truth to others. After he had taken his position, Elder Whitney said, What are [you] going to do now? He answered readily, I can work, I am an able-bodied man, I can engage in manual labor. Then he was called to the office and is the very help that they needed, and he is a good scholar. He has access to the public libraries and has found in old German histories most important information on the Sunday question.4Lts, Lt 18, 1886, par. 6

We were troubled about book bindery; help was needed, and we prayed over the matter, and a few Sabbaths since an experienced book binder has taken his position upon the Sabbath. His wife and daughter are keeping the Sabbath. His daughter was baptized about eight weeks ago. He comes to the office, accepting one hundred francs less per month than what he is now receiving. We feel grateful for these precious tokens of good.4Lts, Lt 18, 1886, par. 7

We have most interesting letters from France. Souls are embracing the truth from reading the papers. There is quite a little number raised up in Algeria which is the northern part of Africa. A minister sent the name of a friend to whom he wished the paper sent, and he sent the subscription price. That friend embraced the truth, and now the minister's wife has taken the truth. He pleads for the paper to be sent this year to him, and next year he will drop some of his papers and become a regular subscriber for the French paper.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 8

In France quite a large number have embraced the truth by reading alone and are begging for a minister to come and help them. Letters are coming from Russia. Quite a company has been raised up from reading, and Conradi is going to Russia soon.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 9

Well it is getting most mail time. I must close. I feel an interest in all that concerns the Health Retreat. I am more glad than I can express for your prosperity. If you trust alone in God, if you keep the Lord ever before you, He will be at your right hand to help you.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 10

Tell Dr. Gibbs I thank him for his letter and will answer it soon. I have been gaining strength of eyesight. I feared I should lose my eyes at one time. I am now quite a cripple from the broken ankle. It was injured five years ago in B.C. I cannot at time walk without a cane. I have had to purchase me a horse and carriage, cost something more than three hundred dollars for the whole outfit. All deemed it necessary for me as they saw I could not get exercise by walking; now I shall ride some. If I had felt free to get this horse before, I might have saved myself this lameness.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 11

I want you to tell your mother that the little feather bed she gave me goes everywhere I go and is a great comfort to me. My hip remains afflicted more severely now than for sometime, but I am thankful that I am improving in health. I am cheerful and happy. Much love to Sister Chase and Sister Ings, and all dear friends.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 12

Yours with respect.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 13

I have written this in haste, dare not read it because I cannot try my eyes. Excuse this miserable scribbling. Willie and his family are well, and W. C. White and his wife are full of business. They send love.4LtMs, Lt 18, 1886, par. 14

Christiania, Norway

July 12, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 20 & 4MR 327-328; 6MR 92-94.

Bro. Haskell:

W. C. White has read two letters from you, one just received with the sketch of the work in Australia. You speak of Sr. Burnham's going to Aus. if I were willing. I would not hold Sr. B. although I appreciate her labors. About the 25th of May, in answer to a letter that she wrote to me, I advised her not to go to Aus. on account of her health. She has enough work to do where she is, and her health is so poor she can only do a limited amount. I shall be obliged to give up my articles in the paper, but if Sr. Eliza desires to go, I withdraw all objections. It is her own health that made it seem inconsistent to me for her to go to a far-off country. I would suggest that there are those in Battle Creek who have ability and health combined that you could secure to go to Australia that would make it much more reasonable and profitable to the cause there.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 1*

Sr. Burnham is a good worker, but her health is the only thing that led me to discourage her going. I send this to you at once. Meant to have written it before, but was taken sick at Orebro so that everything was put out of my mind.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 2*

In regard to the school at South Lancaster, I should make some response to the remarks you have made. I think should we compare ideas we should not differ. You may leave directions for those whom you leave in charge of the school at South Lancaster to do after certain rules, and they may, like machines, do after these certain rules, but at the same time fail to bring in another element which would be, under certain circumstances, highly essential to combine with the carrying out of these rules in order to have everything done with equity and justness, that the work may stand perfect and complete in all its parts. God has given me light in these things, and I was shown that there was constant danger of the persons in charge at South Lancaster becoming narrow and critical and exacting and your school dwindling out.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par.

Those who are connected with these instrumentalities of God have the greatest missionary field in the world where they can exercise their tact and ability and reveal their love to God in seeking to save the souls of the youth under their charge. They need to preserve the missionary spirit continually. The true missionary spirit will be exercised where it is most needed to save the youth. The young are not perfect, they are full of faults and wrong tendencies; many have transmitted to them as a legacy defective characters, and if wrong tendencies are allowed to strengthen through unwise management in their earlier years, it will require patient, persevering efforts to mold them and educate them in the right direction.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 4

There is a transformation needed in those connected with the school. They need tact and wisdom to consider the circumstance of every case, entering into the feelings and bringing sympathy, tenderness, and love into their dealing with the minds of the youth. Let each interested worker make it a point to obtain the confidence of his students, then he can do anything with them he chooses. I am a mother and have dealt largely with children, and I know that we must have the Spirit of Christ with us continually and our own spirit under control, or we shall make a failure. Children will be cheerful, full of life, and inclined to mischief, and they may carry their love for amusement too far; but these things should not be regarded as sins. If the managers should unbend from their grave looks and from their dignity and mingle with the children in their innocent sports and amusements at proper times, they would have far more influence over them. If the lines are held too firmly, there will be a breaking loose somewhere. There is a case I will mention that has come before me.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 5

Sister B belongs to the Christiania church. She has been one that has helped Bro. Oyen to furniture so that he would not have to buy and has helped different families cheerfully and gladly. Sister Dahl has a son only fifteen years old who was, at considerable expense, sent across the broad waters to attend the South Lancaster school. Well, the boy writes to the mother that he has been expelled from the school, that he wanted to go to the camp-meeting and was told he could not go; nevertheless he did go, and he says for this and some other reasons which he gave he was expelled. Now why did not these good friends deal with that boy as they would have been pleased to have a child of their own dealt with? Why was not this a good missionary work for them to engage in, to write to the mother and clearly state the facts in the case? The mother had had confidence enough in them to place her boy in their charge. Was not this then their plain duty? The mother is in great anxiety for her boy. Martha Matteson says that he was one of the worst boys in school, that he was a thief and did many wrong things. If this is a true statement, why did not some one write to the mother and notify her before sending the boy adrift?4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 6

The mother had means to give her boy a thorough education, and why should she be left in the dark to conjecture and surmise anything and everything in regard to her boy? Why should this boy or any boy in like circumstances be treated thus, turned adrift in a foreign country, his mother and sisters separated from him by the broad Atlantic Ocean? Would they have wanted one of their children treated in like manner? Was not this the very course to take to force the boy to go to the bad? He has a step-father, his mother married unwisely, who has run through for her a large property. She feels distressed beyond measure when she learns the boy is with his step-father, doing nothing, and therefore must be doing ill.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 7

She would have sent for the boy to come home at once, but she knows that he would have society here that would only be congenial to him in his present state of mind. There are those to whom he would tell his story and create prejudice. Was the boy cared for as he should have been? Was there anyone who possessed the missionary spirit to take a personal interest in him, to win his heart? Was his clothing looked after? Was it mended and kept neat and tidy? Was there a mother, with a mother's heart and tender sympathy, who could appreciate the situation of a lad in a strange country, separated from mother and sisters? Would it not be well to read the direction God gave to Moses in regard to their duty to care for the strangers among them? Will you please to place this letter in the hands of the mothers in Israel in your school, if you have any, and let them criticize their own work, what they have done and what they have not done that they should have done, to have a transforming influence over this boy. They would do a good work should they succeed in reforming him, and he would be a jewel in their crown in the kingdom of God.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 8

The sister of this lad occupies an important position in the office at Christiania. She is a woman of excellent disposition. Her whole heart is in the truth. She acts as reporter and translator. She has decided to go with Br. and Sr. Oyen to America, but the office here would meet with a great loss should she go. There is now no one to supply her place as reporter and secretary. But the mother feels so deeply over her wandering son that she urges her daughter to go to America to look after him and try to save him.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 9

Another daughter, Kristene Dahl, has been a member of my family since last November. She embraced the truth while with us. She is a true Christian and has the spirit of a true missionary worker. All feel that the boy has been bad enough, no doubt, but I do not think they feel satisfied with the course that has been pursued toward him. Such things as this will bar the way to others' sending their children to America to be educated. The mother's and daughters' hearts are fully in the truth. Means would have been sent to America to have brought this boy home had they not feared the influence of the elder son who has not the least inclination to the truth, but is preparing for the position of a captain in the army.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 10

Brother Haskell, there are many branches that are included in the missionary department, and God forbid that they should neglect the home missionary work for the youth and look far beyond to do a work at a distance. I have stated this case more fully because it may represent the cases of others. This expelling of students at South Lancaster has a bad look to it; and be assured, as matters now stand, I would be the last person to recommend youth to go to

South Lancaster away from the watchcare of their parents to attend school unless I had greater evidence that there was a true missionary spirit exercised constantly to save the erring and inexperienced youth. If for some misdemeanor they are turned adrift to become the sport of Satan's temptations, my advice would be, Parents, keep your children at home where they can have a mother's prayers and a mother's influence. Send them to no place where you have not evidence that there are mothers in Israel who will pity and sympathize with the weak and erring, who can pray with them and weep with them and work for their salvation as Christ has worked for us to save us poor, erring, defective characters. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 11

If Christ should drop us and have no more patience with our weakness and blunders, who have had so great light, we would certainly perish. We must not readily let go of the souls for whom Christ has died because they are sinful and erring. I tell you before God that I cannot feel that the best efforts have been made to bind the hearts of the youth to their instructors. There are many hearts that are starving for light, for words of kindness and approval. There is great danger of feeling that we are compelled to have much criticism, and the precious love of Christ has not been a ruling element in the labors put forth. There is a dearth of tender words and thoughtful little acts which true love would prompt. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 12

Some of our experienced brethren and sisters, while working in Worcester, acted in a very indiscreet manner. They were walking into Satan's snare. We labored earnestly to correct this evil. We did not discharge them from the work, withdraw the hand of fellowship, and send them adrift; and is it wise to deal with the youth and young and inexperienced in this manner? We see experienced, gray-headed men fall into sin; we pity them; we have our compassion stirred for them, and we do not denounce them and leave them in a state of discouragement. We are weak, erring mortals, defective in character; and if we had not a pitying Redeemer, our case would be hopeless. And why should the youth be so readily given up? Why should we consider them past hope and drop them so easily? Why push them into the very arms of the devil, in the place of plucking them as brands from the burning? There is danger of our instructors of youth forgetting that they were once children, that they needed to be borne with patiently, sympathized [with], loved, and pitied when they fell into temptation and needed much long-suffering to be exercised toward them.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 13

A sister once desired me to find her a child to adopt and told me the qualifications the child must have. She did not want a child prone to selfishness, but one that had a sweet disposition and would be obedient, one who would never deceive or tell an untruth, one who had qualities and would make a capable, useful, intelligent woman. I said: "Sister, do you think that in taking such a child you are doing a deed of mercy? Such a child would be fit for heaven, and not fitted for the atmosphere of your home. You desire one that possesses qualities that you have not yourself. If you can obtain such a child, you will be fortunate. If you want to do real missionary work, and wish me to find you a child with faults and errors such as are subject to humanity, and then seek to the utmost in your power, in the name of Jesus, to work for the interest of that child, then I will find such a child for you. This would be doing true missionary work, to mold the child after the divine Pattern. You would be doing the work Christ came to the world to do for us poor, fallen souls.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 14

"And while you are engaged in this work of educating and training a soul for the future immortal life, you are in a school yourself, learning self-control, practicing virtues you wish the child to practice. You will be kind and patient because you want to set the child a good example; you will be circumspect in all your conduct because you want the child to be circumspect. You will guard your words, never manifesting impatience, because you want this child to be patient. You will not fret and scold because you do not want the child to fret and scold. You will seek to be earnest and true in the service of God because you want that child to reverence God and appreciate spiritual things. I can find you an imperfect child, full of faults and errors, to entrust to your care if you will only undertake to do the missionary work faithfully for the Master."4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 15

I am glad to say that this sister was ashamed of her narrow ideas and selfish motives.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 16

I fear the reason we have not many more youth among us is we expect too much of children and do not treat them as if they had rights as older people. They have disappointments, temptations, and trials just as hard for them to bear as those have of mature experience. May God help us to have a sense of our own shortcomings and put away the criticism and severity which we have woven into our characters, excluding the love of Jesus. We need to bring love into our Christian character. Oh, how wearied Christ must be with our stupidity, our disobedience, our oft rebellion, and yet He does not give us up. He loves us still.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 17

Said Christ, "Love one another as I have loved you." [John 13:34.] What a depth and breadth to such an injunction as this. This will require soul struggle which Jesus revealed in His life; they will pray as Jesus prayed; they will entreat and plead for the erring as Christ importuned with His Father for sinful rejecters of His love and His salvation.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 18

I do think the older members of the church have too little sympathy and forbearance for the youth, and they have very many lessons to learn at the feet of Jesus, that they exercise patience to young sinners as the old sinners wish patience to be shown to them. I advise and exhort that those who have charge of the youth shall learn how to adapt themselves to meet the youth where they are, by learning useful lessons themselves of Him who was meek and lowly of heart, that they may bring into their life and character the love of Jesus. They should be kind, cheerful, and courteous, and bind the hearts of the youth to their hearts by the strong cords of love and affection.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 19

Do not be afraid to let them know that you love them. If the love is in the heart, give it expression, do not smother it. When they gather about the table to partake of God's precious bounties, make this a season of cheerfulness. Do not make it a season of grave decorum as though they were standing about a coffin, but have it a social season where every countenance is full of joy and happiness, where naught but cheerful words are spoken. And the youth should not feel that they are under an eye that is watching them, ready to reprove and condemn. Approve whenever you can; smile whenever you can; do not arrange your countenance as though a smile would bring the condemnation of heaven. Heaven is all smiles and gladness and gratitude. I wish we all knew more about heaven and would bring its pure, healthful, holy, influence into our lives, for then we would bring sweet joy into many a life that needs it.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 20

In association with one another, we should cultivate habits and ways and manners that would attract and invite the confidence of the young. Satan has abundance of alluring temptations to charm and captivate the youth. If Christians would bring more pleasantness into their lives, they would make religion and truth a power for good. I verily believe that few know how to deal with the young. They need more of the spirit that pervades heaven, before their own religious life will be as the sweet perfume, and before they can exert a proper influence over the faulty, erring youth who, notwithstanding all their faults, have a depth of love and affection if it could only be called forth by love and affection.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 21

Oh, that we could be more like Christ and not repulse, but attract. With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. God will deal with us as we deal with one another. Then let us be very careful that we do not become pharisaical, but let us be Christlike. This your school in South Lancaster needs.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 22

If anyone has a motherly influence that tries to help and encourage the young, do not let the idea be entertained that she is teaching them to be rebellious; because there is a kind, courteous spirit manifested to help the young, do not let this be interpreted as working against the instructors of the youth. It will certainly be a contrast to the attitude of some, and the children will prefer to be in the company of those who have a sunny temperament, who possess some joyfulness and gladness; but this should not create envy or jealousy or evil surmisings.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 23

This spirit of cheerfulness and hope and joy must be an element in your school, or it will never flourish and grow up and become a missionary field as every school should be.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par.

Now be careful that no rules are made that are unreasonable; and then be careful, that if these rules are transgressed, not to expel or cut off the transgressor without every effort being made in love, in kindness, to awaken the offender to a sense of his wrong. Do not reprove him before the school, for then his pride is aroused, his combativeness makes a stand. Do not reprove him before his young companions, lest they shall triumph or incite him to rebellion. Take him alone, and with tenderness and love show him his error; pray with him; if you have any tears to shed, weep over him, and tell him you cannot endure to separate him from the school, for then he would lose self-respect and might become reckless; that you love his soul and will give him another trial; then throw around him every influence in your power to help him. Work as earnestly as you would to rescue a life from drowning. Fight against Satan in behalf of the erring. If this course had been pursued in our institutions, many a youth today would stand among the noblest of our workers, who is lost to the truth, lost to the work, all because of injudicious management.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 25

I will not sanction this at all; I will lift up my voice against it; I will work against this cold, cast iron, unsympathizing religion as long as I have strength to wield my pen. The Lord knows there is enough of this element in the churches in our land. My soul is pained beyond measure as I see so little of the love of Jesus. We need to live very close to Jesus, to have wise discrimination, to have wisdom to speak a kind word, that will have a soothing and comforting influence at the right time, throwing sunshine into the minds and hearts. Oh, for the sunshine of the Son of righteousness to rise in our hearts!4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 26

Jesus never needlessly spoke a harsh word. He never gave pain to sensitive hearts. He never suppressed the truth, but He always uttered the truth in love. Jesus who paid so high a price for the souls of men had a wonderful reverence for humanity. All, from the highest down to the little child, were sacred and precious in His sight. In every one He saw a being lost, a being whose love He might win, and restore, or whom, by a harsh word, He might repulse and drive beyond hope. He softened the very tones of His voice to the most tender pathos to the sorrowful and suffering. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 27

The truth as it is in Jesus should come into our hearts, clothed in the warm radiance of love. Whoever in his habits or manners makes the truth unpleasant commits a sin against God. The truth, although it cuts and wounds the soul, must be spoken in order to save the soul. Yet truth is still lovely, and we cannot be loyal to truth and present it in a manner making it repulsive. Many a precious youth who might be saved by gentle manners has drifted away from Christ and the truth by harshness and want of tact. God would have us wise to use our powers for good. We need to be converted through and through. The warm love of Jesus in the heart will lead to warm, unselfish thoughts. Gentleness is wiser far than force. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 28

If Christ looked upon us as sharply and critically as we look upon one another, we could not bear the test. He does not withdraw His love, but continues to let it flow to us, although we have many blemishes and ill-treat His goodness. We sin against God, but His mercy never fails us; His love is working still to save us. He bears long with our neglect, forgetfulness, ingratitude, and disobedience. He never grows impatient with us. The wrongs He endures from us are of far greater magnitude than the trivial grievances we must endure from others. Then let us have very tender thoughtfulness for those around us and not condemn them harshly. Jesus delights in mercy. We must recount over and over again what Jesus has borne for us. We are soon to meet these precious youth that we are instructing now around the throne of God. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 29

The truth must be brought into the life and into the character, and we exemplify the life of Christ. Those who profess the truth should show its graces, its loveliness in the life. The warmth of love dwelling in the soul expresses itself in sympathy, in kindness for all. These show that they have peace with God and an indwelling Saviour. They will never magnify the defects of others. They look at the best and not at the worst features in the character. 4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 30

Love is the fulfilling of the law. Not selfish love, but love that goes out to others in deeds. Be cheerful, let the soul be uplifted to God, reflecting the rays of the Sun of righteousness. Oh, for Jesus to take possession of our souls and sanctify us and refine us, that we may be a blessing to others.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 31

Let the young receive the impression that Bible religion practiced in the life does not make us gloomy and joyless. Hear what Christ says upon the subject:4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 32

“If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father’s commandments and abide in His love. These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.” “Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.” John 15:10; 16:24.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 33

We do not have right conceptions of the life of Christ. There is pleasantness and fulness of joy in the religion of Jesus. Gloomy spirits are not a token of piety. Amid all the sorrows of Christ, while walking under the deep shadow of the cross, He bore a heart of cheerfulness and joy. Wherever He moved, joy and gladness sprang up in His path. He did not frown upon children’s plays. He misrepresents Christianity who brings into religion a cold, rigid, joyless character, that is ready to frown upon innocent gladness and would repress pure pleasure. Jesus loves to see His children happy.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 34

I wish all who profess to love Christ had correct ideas of what constitutes genuine religion. Every instructor of youth should be a happiness maker. We want to bring all the joy, peace, and cheerfulness into our lives that is possible. We want to make melody in our hearts to the Lord. Many lives would be prolonged if they would unbend from the strain which has been upon them and be glad and happy. They should take real pleasure in seeing the children joyful and happy.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 35

Christ loved children, He attracted them, but never repulsed them. The children loved Jesus and never dreaded His presence. It would do the teachers good should they unbend from their dignity occasionally and at proper times become more like children. Meet the children where they are, then you can lift them up into almost any position.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 36

There is such a thing as over-governing in the home or in the school. There has been something of this, I think, in South Lancaster. I hope they will closely examine this matter and see if they cannot make some changes. Let them see if they have not something to do for the souls of those that they have expelled. What efforts have they made to redeem them and bring them back? If they have not felt a burden in this line a little practical experience might soften and subdue their own souls.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 37

You may think this is a strange letter, but I have written this because I feel it my duty to write it, and I hope all who are connected with the school at South Lancaster will try to have perfect harmony in their work. I know you all desire the school to prosper, but you may have to look a little deeper and study more closely as to the best ways and means to make the school a success. No one has complained to me, but I speak the things I know. I have made earnest appeals and cautioned Bro. Ramsey and Bro. Robinson that they should be kind, patient, and forbearing in their management of the youth. I knew a decided change in the management must take place. All connected with the school should overcome narrow ideas and plans.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 38

I would consider it a great privilege to attend the meetings in America, especially in Portland, but I know this cannot be. I came over here to see what we could do to help the cause in Europe. We could do the people but little good to come so far and rush through from place to place, touching here and there and obtaining no thorough knowledge of the wants of the people. We shall be just as glad to return to America as our brethren would be pleased to have us. It is a task to speak through an interpreter, and there is much to be done in plain, decided talk, in seeking to set things in order, and devising various plans of operations.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 39

I will be patient; I will not be guided by my feelings; I will not become discouraged; I will not be beaten off from the work by infirmities. The customs and habits of the people are not always agreeable to us, but this is a small matter. There are souls to be saved; Christ died for them. I will try and do my duty. I would love the retirement of my home at Healdsburg; but if I am faithful, there is a better home preparing for me where I shall find peace and rest. A work is to be done, and the Lord help us to do it with fidelity.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 40

Much love to your wife and all the children of God.4LtMs, Lt 19, 1886, par. 41

Christiania, Norway

July 12, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 203.

Dear Mary:

We are usually well, although since coming to this place I am not as well as I was at Orebro. We have none of us felt much ambition.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 1*

Yesterday I had some plain talk with the Board and Trustees in regard to the correct observance of the Sabbath. There is a blacksmith shop directly in the yard of the meetinghouse and has been directly beneath them. Prayers are ascending from the minister and people amid the sound of the hammer and the anvil, the handling and rattling of iron; and just on the other side of where we live is the marble factory where the noisy, continuous sound of chisel and hammer is mingled with the prayers and preaching and the exhortation. This has been close under their place of meeting for six years, and now is in the same enclosed gates, the very next door to the meetinghouse.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 2*

Well, I told them I expected that my words seemed to them like idle tales, when Brother Hansen arose, and at the same time several others arose and declared the words spoken were not idle tales to them. They accepted them, and this gave me great relief.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 3*

I spoke last evening, and the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and deep feeling was in the audience. Many wept. I hope I shall not have to speak again, but tonight I labor with the church in regard to the talkers in the church.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 4*

Yesterday W. C. White hired a coach, and the coachman took us about Christiania. The ride did good. I am sure the work is going forward here and becoming established upon a higher, nobler basis. I hope we will have wisdom and grace to do all that is needed to be done, all that we can do at the present time. We leave here next Friday for Copenhagen, remain there until the twenty-fifth, then start homeward, and I shall be very glad to be back again.4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 5

Now Mary, if I had patterns of Ella's aprons and her dress pattern, the sack or waist part, I could get her some things made very cheaply; and if you will send the same to Copenhagen, I will get some sewing done for Ella. We have to pay twenty-seven cents per day for good workers; and if you were only here, or if we had your patterns, we would get you cloth and have something made for you. If I had Ella's patterns, I might purchase her material for summer cloak and get it all made well. I have got the girls' dresses made and a dress well advanced for me, cashmere (drabatay?).4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 6

We read that you were going with the team to Tramelan. I am glad. I suppose when this reaches you, that the journey will be ended and you at home again. I hope you will both keep well. I hope Marian will keep well. We shall have plenty of work to do when we return. May the Lord help us. I do not mean to return wholly exhausted if I can help it.4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 7

Since writing the above we have received your letters with the enclosed letters from Haskell and Henry. One has just come to Sarah from Mary Roth. In the letter she speaks of a girl that she thinks would be the girl we would want. She is in Bienne. She can talk with you in regard to the matter and you with her. We will be at home the last of July.4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 8

The blacksmith shop under us is filling the rooms with coal smoke which affects my heart and throat and eyes. I think we will have to repair to the meetinghouse.4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 9

I hope you will take no burdens upon yourself, but you will be free from care as possible. Marian will have to prepare matters and leave you without care or perplexity of any kind. Well, I must stop. We will go into the meetinghouse. Perhaps that will be a relief from this smoke.4LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 10

I send you the address that you may make no mistake.⁴*LtMs, Lt 19a, 1886, par. 11*

Bourdeau, A. C.

Basel, Switzerland

January 25, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Elder A. C. Bourdeau

Dear Brother:

I received a letter from Daniel Saturday evening, in which he speaks of receiving a letter from you, urging reasons why you should not leave the valleys at the present time. I wish that I could make myself believe that there were sufficient interest that would warrant your stay. I thought I would not write you any more in reference to the matter, but leave you to your own conscience. Then again there come up before me past things which have been shown me where many precious opportunities have been lost, where greater good could have been accomplished had you felt it your duty to give yourself entirely to the work. But you would see something at home that you thought demanded your attention and presence, and thus home matters were with you your first consideration. Again I have been shown when there was an interest where you were at work which demanded your presence and most earnest attention, you would be drawn away from this interest by some home matters. The work has been left again and again by you to serve tables.⁴*LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 1*

Understanding your weakness upon this point, I feel earnest and anxious that you should break up this habit which makes your labors next to nothing in the cause of God. Like a firm soldier in the cause of Christ, you need to put on the armor and learn to wear it as you never have done before. I wish, Brother Bourdeau, there were more push in you. Should you keep an account of every day's labor, as I believe you should, in which you are actively engaged in the cause of God, you would have a very poor account to present to our conference. I believe that every one of us should be just as faithful in labor in God's cause as the workmen that are employed should be faithful in their business. I do not want to be severe at all. I have your interest at heart, but I do think it very important that a decided change take place with you in these things. I thought the letter I wrote to Daniel and sent to you would be sufficient. You certainly in your management and movements have not moved discreetly.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 2

In your bringing your children from America, I fear you have moved inadvisedly. This is a missionary field, and those who work in this field will have to do missionary labor and in a missionary spirit. Of course, it is pleasanter for you to have your children with you. You told me that you expected that your wife would go with you into the field. Who, then, did you calculate would take charge of your children? Both of them might have been placed where they would have good schooling and good care; then you could have given yourself more fully to the work, and your wife labored in connection with you. It is best in every movement to count the cost. It is more important that your children have discipline in practical labor than that they should have opportunity to study aside from this education.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 3

It makes my heart ache when I see so much unwise planning of our ministering brethren. They have but little experience in the missionary spirit. It pains me to speak of these things. It pains me to see how you are situated with your children, without any opportunity for them to have systematic labor, but a large share of their time must be unemployed, which can but have a demoralizing influence upon them. Your oldest boy was, I believe, far better situated with his sister's attending to home duties which kept him employed. If you go out to labor, you cannot be much with your family, neither can you take your family with you. You have tied your own hands. And now if you should go to Genève to labor, I expect nothing but that you would see some special duty at home to call you there in a short time.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 4

I cannot see, as the turn things have taken, how you can accomplish much at present in Italy. I do wish it were otherwise. The way seems at present to be hedged up. I believe God will open the way sometime, but it is not your duty to wait in Italy and do nothing for this way to be opened, when there are so many fields needing workers. Sister Bourdeau writes to me that Daniel is very poorly, and his difficulty which you are acquainted with remains upon him. Yet he feels all courage to still push the work. I think if you could go cheerfully, you should share his work. If you go leaving your heart at home, you cannot accomplish anything. But certainly Daniel should have help, and must have it from some source. If you could go with cheerfulness and courage, I believe God would bless you in making this effort. But be careful and not bring before the mind of Daniel anything to discourage him. Do not talk of your financial embarrassments. Do not talk of the great sacrifices you have made in the past, but like a soldier with the armor on go to battle with hope and courage and faith.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 5

I do not know as I can say more to you than I have said in this letter. I am confident that you will have to see things in a different light from what you now view them before you can do successful work in the cause of God. I refer now to your manner of labor.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 6

I hope these words will not leave the impression upon your mind that I do not understand the situation, and that you will need to enter into a definite explanation. I have understood your temperament in the things I have mentioned for years. The cause wants the work accomplished for which it employs and pays the workmen.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 7

I have written this with the kindest and tenderest feelings toward you. But you must receive a different mold in reference to your labor in order to accomplish the work so essential to be done here in this hard field in Europe. Your hand slips off from the work when it should hold with the grasp of death. There is a great amount of labor to be done and only two American ministers who can speak French. Daniel is doing all in his power and more than he ought to do. I pray God to give him strength to do what he loved to do so much. But he must have help. He wants careful conversation. He wants living faith exercised in his behalf. He wants to connect with those who have courage, and will tell him to look up instead of down; to lead him to forget himself, and cling to the arm of the

Mighty Helper.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 8

I have great interest and respect for Martha, and I believe that God will have a care for her. I think you have thought too much depended on you in her case. I think you could do but very little, but God can do great things. We want more faith in God that we can trust where we ought to trust, and then do where we ought to do. I have an interest for yourself, for your wife, and for your children. But I beg of you to lay all upon the altar of God, and not feel that you must hold them all in your arms, that unless you do just so much that everything would go to rack.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 9

May God help, strengthen, and bless you is the prayer of*4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 10*

Your sister.4LtMs, Lt 20, 1886, par. 11

Brethren and Sisters in Healdsburg

Christiania, Norway

July 9, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 5T 477-490; 5MR 242.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Healdsburg:

Will you please remember that the greatest snares Satan has prepared for the church will come through its individual members who do not love God supremely and their neighbor as themselves. Satan is continually at work to wedge himself in between the individual members of the church; and, if he can secure to himself agents who shall work in his interests, to turn aside and thwart the purposes of God in any degree, he is exultant. God has instrumentalities in our colleges and in the ministry and in the missionary work; and if Satan can invent something which will divert the talent, and have the means flow into another channel, he will.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 1

There are those who will be deceived. They work into the hands of the great deceiver; he manipulates them, and they do his service, while they flatter themselves that they are doing God's service. Beware of these deceptions. Ever remember what is due to our Christian character as God's peculiar people, and beware lest in any way one iota of our influence shall be exercised against God's design and God's purposes and stumbling blocks be laid in the way of those who are weak and halting. We must be careful to give our enemies no occasion to blaspheme God and scorn believers in the truth.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 2

Let the conversation of believers be modest and sincere. Let them be guarded about speaking of their own abilities and becoming tools in the hands of Satan, to present bribes to divert the minds and souls of men, women, and youth from the great work for this time. Let them surrender themselves to God; let no gloomy picture sever one soul from having full and deep interest to build up that which God has specified should be built up. If Satan can, he will engage persons from our very midst to discount and weaken that which God would have strong.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 3

Let every one beware how he presents bribes in glowing flattery of wonderful achievements, great financial gain, and wonderful educational attainments. Some who think they are standing firm are dazed, allured, and intoxicated with presentations and hopes that they will never realize. Men and women, unless fully consecrated to God, are weak and foolish in their estimate of human ability, and of their estimate of what constitutes Christian fidelity. We do not plead for inactivity, but we plead for any enterprise which will cement the individual interests of the church and bring harmony and unity of effort to engage in the work of God with might and soul. Never, never forget that you are servants of Jesus. Work strenuously for the unity of believers that Christ prayed might exist. If you do not do this, you are working against Christ.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 4

Doing anything that shall in any way weaken the interest of the college or missionary work at Healdsburg is not working with God, but under another captain. Now, I do not think that Elder [E. P.] Daniels has designed to do this, but there is that in his work which will result in this very thing, and I hope he will stop and consider the foregoing.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 5

There is not one of the instrumentalities of God but that Satan will make every effort in his power to bring into discredit and disrepute, and he can do this most effectually by men who are not far-seeing. He leads them on little by little until they are in a snare and doing the very work that they would in the beginning condemn.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 6

I would say to Elder Daniels, my dear brother whom I respect and love in the Lord, stop where you are and consider what you are doing. If you have decided to build up a separate interest (although you will fail to do it) go out of Healdsburg into the world; do not work with the students of our college at Healdsburg, or present anything to attract or divert them from the college. There are special privileges connected with the college which every student should have.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 7

You may say you have not done this, but whatever your intentions have been, you could not do the work you have been doing without this being the result. If you want to do work for the Master, put your active mind to work in the field of saving souls to Jesus Christ. See what you can do in bringing many sons and daughters to God. You cannot go on with your present plans without seeing ways where means must be invested, and thus means will be turned from the proper channel and invested in an enterprise which to you seems wholly successful, without a possibility of failure. Then on this foundation of hope more means are invested, which lead to greater plans and requires more means, and so on until finally the result will be disappointment and failure. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 8

Brother Daniels is not a safe planner in any enterprise. It will be failure on his part, and he will involve others. God sees that prosperity to Bro. Daniels would be the very worst thing he could have. Therefore, however much Bro. Daniels may wish to do God's service, he is certainly going to work the wrong way to accomplish the object. Keep ever in view the example of Jesus who was meek and lowly in heart. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 9

Brethren and sisters in the Healdsburg church, your usefulness requires that you be humble, holy, pure, and undefiled. Let there be less pride; when the individual members of the church are clothed with humility; when they put from them self-seeking; when they seek constantly to do God's will, they will draw together in even cords. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 10

The crisis is just before us, when each will want all the strength and power from God that he can have, in order to stand against the wiles of Satan which will come in every conceivable form. Those who have allowed themselves to be the sport of Satan's temptations will be unprepared then to take the right side. There must be no betraying of confidence or holy trust; no effort to benefit ourselves at the expense of other sacred interests. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 11

The world side of our religion should be watched with jealous care. Say it, act it: "I am a Christian. I cannot act upon the world's maxims. I must love God supremely, and my neighbor as myself. I am a Christian; I cannot enter into any arrangement which shall interfere in the slightest manner with any one of God's instrumentalities." 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 12

I do not believe that many of our brethren in Healdsburg see the sad result of the plans and arrangements they may ardently enter into. I do not believe that Eld. Daniels realizes that he is moving blindfolded, under a deception. God looks at the hearts of all. He requires uprightness of every soul, but there are those who for a little consideration in a money point of view, or who see an opportunity to exalt themselves, would not hesitate to be bought or sold. Remember that God's people are but a little flock compared with the Christian world, and the myriads of world-adorning men and women. There are examples of righteousness to be given to our youth. Every influence surrounding them should be of a holy character. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 13

My dear brother Daniels does not use good judgment on all occasions; he has extravagant words of flattery; and unless he is himself walking in all humility of mind before the Lord, he will hurt some and lead them away from paths of humility, lead them to think they can do some great things. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 14

Every individual member of the church by his baptismal vows has solemnly pledged himself sacredly to guard the interest of another and to the utmost of his ability build up the kingdom of God in the world. Each is required of God, as far as is in his power, to ward off from his brethren and sisters every influence that will have the least tendency to separate their interests from the work for the present time. He should not only have a regard for his own spiritual and eternal interest, but he should in every word and project regard the souls of those to whom he stands related. This feeling should constrain every individual member of the church to follow Christ's example in his self-denial, self-sacrifice, and love for others. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 15

If one in the church exerts an influence that is contrary to the love and disinterested benevolence that Christ manifested for him, and draws apart from the church members, this influence will spread, and many will be led astray. Care should be taken that these discordant ones who are filled with a self-sufficient spirit shall have their influence cut off so that it shall not imperil the interest of one soul.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 16

In order to raise the moral tone of the church members, each should regard it a duty to make efforts for personal culture and in the sight of a holy God strive to train himself to strict principles. Let each church member feel that he must himself set a good example. Then all are under special obligations to consecrate all their gain to the Lord. It is His, and there should be care how the money is used. They are not to follow the sight of the eyes and the inclinations of their selfish hearts to get that which would gratify them. God is the giver of ability and power to accumulate, and all is to be laid upon His altar. "Honor the Lord with thy substance." [Proverbs 3:9.] The sin of covetousness must be constantly repressed else it will eat into the hearts of men, and the greedily running after gain will pervert the senses.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 17

We are to meet our Lord in a short time, and what account will we give to Him of the use we have made of our time, our talents, and our money? I solemnly inquire of the Healdsburg church, Is God among you? Of a truth, "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis who have not defiled their garments." [Revelation 3:4.] Are you of this number? Have you held fast your integrity? As drowning men, have you clung to Jesus? Has your refuge been in Christ? Are you living for Him, obeying Him, loving Him who is pure and holy and undefiled, in whose mouth there is nothing savoring of guile? If so, you are most happy, for you are more precious in the sight of God than the golden wedge of Ophir.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 18

While multitudes are devoted to the service of mammon, there will be some who have not defiled their garments, but have kept them unspotted from the world. This latter class will have no cheap faith, but will exemplify lofty Christian principles, seeking by personal connection with the Holy One of Israel to improve every ability God has given them, that they may not be of an inferior order. God would have you bring into your religious life all the aptness, tact, sagacity, and soundness of reason, with the most unbending uprightness and lofty integrity, to signalize you as children of the most high God.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 19

Jesus was calm and gentle, not losing His self-control even when in debate and amid elements of contention. God says to you who have had great light, Come up higher, nearer to God and heaven. You want faith unfeigned. God has entrusted you with great and sacred responsibilities in placing in your midst the college. Here is a missionary field for every member of the church. Here you can exert an influence for good.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 20

Our college is not what it should be, and what it will be if our brethren and sisters will feel that this is a sacred trust. Its influence for good may be wide-spread, and a light go forth from it, and rich blessings, if godliness is made the foundation in all its operations; then its workers will possess true dignity and completeness of character which is the privilege of all to cultivate. There are many youth who should go forth from that college, if it is properly conducted, to be active laborers together with God. But all should take heed that they shall not cast in word or action any influence to demerit the college, for this will be an offense to God.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 21

The college will always have to struggle against difficulties. Satan will not cease his efforts to tear it in pieces, for he sees that youth may be benefited, and he will press in uncontrollable elements into the church and those who have selfish influence who will seek to weaken the influence of the college rather than build up, support, and strengthen it. We are sorry that these elements are in Healdsburg. We should advise and pray that they will seek some other location whereby they can exercise their ability. But when Satan uses these elements in such a responsible place as Healdsburg, the power of influence to injure the college will be of far greater force than any influence outside of our faith. Christ says it is impossible but that offenses will come, but woe to that man by whom they come; for it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he be cast into the sea. [Luke 17:1, 2.] It is a sad thing to work contrary to God's mind and will.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 22

Let those whose names are upon the church book closely criticize their spiritual standing before God; and let those who are confident and self-sufficient take heed to these words, "Let him that thinketh

he standeth take heed lest he fall.” [1 Corinthians 10:12.] Peter addresses the brethren in the faith, “Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” 2 Peter 3:17, 18. Pressed together, united, you will be strong to resist the enemy; divided, you will become weak and fall. Let every one of you make it the business of your life to answer the prayer of Christ in your life, to be one as He was one with the Father. Oh, what unity is this! And, says Christ, “By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another.” John 13:35. The precious plant of love will not grow of itself in the natural heart; it must be planted there by the Spirit of God and be carefully cultivated. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 23

We are nearing the end. The trials of this time will be abundant. Satan, united with wicked men, will make every effort to weaken and annoy God’s people. But let not the spirit of envy and jealousy be exercised among believers, for its influence is to weaken, discourage, and destroy. “We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.” 2 Corinthians 5:10. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 24

There is in every one who truly loves God the spirit of Christ, which always leads to peace and love and never to dissension. The more the heart is under the influence of the Spirit of God, and its affections centered in Christ, the less will it be disturbed with the roughness and hardships that will be met in this life. True Christians will talk of Christ; they will work for Christ; and as they are imbued with His Spirit, they will work with unselfish interest to bless humanity around them. They are growing, ever growing to the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. They become more and more like Christ in disposition. Discontent, restlessness, and murmuring come from a heart that is not renewed by grace. The heart that is at peace with God is constantly rising above the low earthly elements and is partaker of the divine nature. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 25 for the church in Healdsburg, if they will only come into a position where God can safely bless them, and where they are so humble, meek, and lowly, that they will not turn the rich grace of God to exalt and ruin themselves. The work of humility is greatly needed in this church. Many are devoid of vital faith and moral strength. They talk boastfully and independently as being rich in spiritual blessings when the facts in the case are they are “wretched and miserable, and poor and blind, and naked.” [Revelation 3:17.] Words of solemn warning are addressed to the church by the True Witness, against the sins of pride, worldliness, formalism, and self-sufficiency. “Be zealous, therefore, and repent” lest “I come unto thee quickly and remove thy candle-stick out of his place.” [Revelation 3:19; 2:5.]4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 26

Words of gracious encouragement are presented to the lowly, the suffering, the patient, the faithful, who are alive to their true weakness and inefficiency. “Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man will hear My voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with Me.” [Revelation 3:20.] The True Witness says to all, “I know thy works.” [Verse 15.] The same searching, scrutinizing eye is in the midst of all the churches in California; nothing passes that eye of flaming fire. The sinful departure from truth, the declensions and shortcomings need not be; for every provision has been made for them that they may perfect a Christian character and honor the cause of truth. The promise of God is given to the weak that they may take hold of His strength and make peace with Him, and He will make peace with them. His sympathy and love follow the trembling, conscientious soul. I hope and pray that you will walk in all lowliness of mind, that you will learn the precious lessons in the school of Christ, for whoever learns in Christ’s school will always be a blessing to those around them.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 27

Dear brethren and sisters, Christ is soon to come. Will He find you ready and waiting? The bridal lamps must be kept trimmed and burning. His chariot wheels have been delayed because of His long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance and have eternal life. When we shall stand with the redeemed upon the sea of glass, with harps of God and crowns of glory, and before us the unmeasured eternity, we shall then see how short was the waiting period of probation. "Blessed are those servants who when the Lord cometh shall be found watching." [Luke 12:37.]4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 28

We are living in an age when we need to heed the injunctions of the Saviour, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." [Matthew 26:41.] You cannot avoid the temptation, but you can through the strength of Jesus avoid entering into temptation. Let every one bear in mind that he is exerting an influence to gather with or scatter from Christ. Is every power put to the highest strain and taxed to the utmost limit to make a success of perfecting Christian character, that he may do honor to the truth of God and represent the life and character of his Redeemer, that His people may build one another up in the most holy faith, themselves growing in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, to become strong and as pillars in the church?4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 29

The Lord is willing to bless us. We may have a fulness in Jesus. We are individually to be tested and tried. We must all pass through the refining process, until all the impurities in our characters are burned away. Every individual member of the church will be subjected to the furnace fire. The Refiner means not to extinguish them, but to purify them from all dross.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 30

The Lord has wrought in your midst, and Satan, who is ever active, watching for a favorable opportunity, has intruded himself to mingle fanaticism with God's work, to sow tares with the good seed. We need to live very close to Jesus in order to discern the precious from the spurious.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 31

Some of you are in danger of being satisfied with glimpses you have had of light and love of God and go no further. As you value your souls, watch and pray, for temptations will come just as sure as you are children of God. When you are making the acclamation, "The temple of the Lord are we," Satan is close by your side to make you vain and conceited, and darkness gathers about the soul. There is an earthliness brought into your religious experience; a high opinion of yourself; a glorifying of self; Christ is not exalted; and yet there is the claim "the temple of the Lord are we." [Jeremiah 7:4.]4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 32

There is necessity for the Lord to communicate Himself to the soul, that all the powers may be exercised to exalt Jesus and abase self. The Lord will communicate ideas. What a thought that the Lord will substitute His own ideas, His own thoughts, noble, broad, far-reaching, heavenly, for our poor, earthly, contracted ideas and plans!4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 33

Here is your danger—that you do not press forward to the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Has the Lord given you light? You are responsible for that light. Not merely while its bright rays are shining upon you, but for all the light that has been revealed to you. You are to walk in the light and to expect more light, for the light from the dear Saviour is never exhausted, but continually shining forth in clear and steady rays, increasing in power amid the moral darkness more and more unto the perfect day.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 34

Are you, the members of the Healdsburg church, seeking to gather fresh manna every morning and evening? Are you seeking earnestly and continuously the divine enlightenment? Are you putting every power and ability to work, to devise means whereby you may glorify not yourselves, but God? Are you, with your whole soul, might, mind, and strength, loving and serving God in blessing those around you by leading them to the light of the Word? Or have you settled down with the idea that you have been blessed and so are seeking fresh blessings every day? Are you working for the salvation of others, as Christ has worked for your salvation? Are you revealing the spirit and power of the truth to the world, in word and actions? Are you, as obedient children, living pure and holy lives?4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 35

Are you bringing Christ into your lives? He alone is able to cure you of envy, of evil surmisings which you have against your brethren. He alone can take away from you the self-sufficient spirit which some of you possess to your own spiritual detriment. Jesus alone can make you feel your weakness, your ignorance, and then your great need of Him. Jesus alone can let His light reveal to you the true inward corruptions of your nature. He alone can make you feel His pure, cleansing power. He alone can refine you and fit you for the mansions of the blessed.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 36

The life in Christ is a life of restfulness and peace. Uneasiness, dissatisfaction, restlessness reveal an absence of the Saviour. If Jesus is brought into your life, you will be continually growing, full of good and noble works for the Master. You will forget to be self-serving. You will not live for yourself. You will come closer and still closer in sympathy and love with the dear Saviour, and your character will become fragrant with good works. All around you will take knowledge of you that you have been with Jesus and learned of Him. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 37

It matters not whether we live in a cottage or a palace if the peace of God is abiding in our hearts. Every human being will be precious to us because he is the purchase of the blood of Christ. We shall lose sight of self and selfish interests in seeking to do others good. Satan will present ambitious projects to daze the senses, but every one must have an eye single to the glory of God and press toward the mark of the prize. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 38

Jesus crowded all the good and holy works into this life that it was possible for Him to, and we must do the same. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." [Daniel 12:3.] 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 39

Inquire earnestly, "Is the Lord among us? Is the power of His grace controlling us? Are we building up the interests of His cause?" In the Lord we shall do valiantly. It is impossible to estimate what an amount of good we can do individually by being loyal and true to God and to our brethren, repressing every unkind thought, beating down self-importance, self-righteousness, and exalted opinions of ourselves, and demeriting others. Let our lives be filled with the ministry of kindness to others, and in self-forgetfulness do others good. We fail fifty times out of a hundred where we should be successful in comforting, encouraging, and strengthening the members of Christ's body. 4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 40

Some of you in Healdsburg will soon be called to lay off your armor. Death will claim some of the church members. Are you all ready? You may have no time to prepare for your last change. You may have no strength of physical and mental powers to do that work of preparation which you neglected in life and health. You cannot be too devoted to God; you cannot fix your thoughts and mind too earnestly upon your Redeemer. Some ere long will know by experience how vain is the help of man; how worthless is the self-importance, the self-sufficient righteousness to satisfy the soul when the physical and mental powers are failing.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 41

I feel urged by the Spirit of the Lord to warn the individual members of the church to make personal efforts for a preparation for eternity. Now is your day of privilege and trust. Will you improve it? Oh, how precious is the soul! Are you keeping before your mind's eye brilliant prospects whereby you flatter yourself you may obtain self-glorification and financial gain? If so, you must be bitterly disappointed. If you seek now to die to self, to live pure and holy lives, to overcome every evil and learn daily the lessons in the school of Christ, which He has invited you to learn, to be meek and lowly of heart, then you have a peace and a joy which no circumstances can change. It is the privilege of every one to carry in his heart the Saviour who is the source of his own happiness.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 42

May the Lord help you to rise above a low, cheap, sentimental feeling. You want to take hold from above. Circumstances need not mold your experience. It is the spirit which is cherished that gives coloring to all our actions. A heart that is at peace with God and with our fellow men cannot be miserable. Envy cannot be admitted there; evil surmisings will find no room there; hatred cannot take root there. The heart in harmony with God is fitted above the annoyances and trials of this life. But a heart where the peace of Christ is not is unhappy, full of discontent, seeing something defective in everything and every one. In everything there seems to be discord and jarring. Lives of selfishness are lives of evil. They store away evil thoughts of their brethren; passions are kept warm and fierce by Satan's promptings; a bitter fountain is opened, sending forth streams to poison the lives of others.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 43

We are living for eternity. The truth needs to be burned into our souls, that we are building our characters for eternity. Then let us be careful what elements we bring into the character building. Could we realize that our characters are imprinted in the books of heaven as the features are transferred to the polished plate of the artist, what a difference would be seen in our ways and manners here. There would be a new meaning to all human relationship. We should be far more tender, kind, and thoughtful for others than we are now. Every selfish action would be despised; every harsh, unkind word would be repressed; the miserable suspicions, envy, and jealousy that now so often embitter the streams flowing from the fountains of our lives would be all changed. The impatient faultfinding would cease. The misunderstandings which build up strong walls of separation between our brethren and sisters would be broken down. Petty quarrels would no longer mar the members of Christ's body, but each would strive most earnestly, when temptations to feel and act wrong would come, to resist them. The noble, forgiving spirit of Christ which would make peace would pervade the heart. No loner would we be cold, unsympathetic, and unloving because we fancied some neglect was intended us.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 44

Hearts are hungering and thirsting for words of commendation and sympathy and confidence. If the dear Jesus is abiding in our hearts, He will be in us as a well of water springing up into everlasting life. Let every one in the Healdsburg church appreciate himself less and his brethren more. Press together, press together; in union there is strength and victory. In discord and division there is weakness and defeat. These words have been spoken to me from heaven. I speak them to you as God's ambassador.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 45

When death shall separate the members of the church, what will be our memories of the treatment we have given those from whom we have parted? How forcibly every harsh word and unkind action will impress itself upon our memory! How differently would we conduct ourselves had we another trial! But the one whose career is closed, with whom we have associated in the church, can come back to us no more. What influence has our conduct had over him in relation to his record in the books of heaven? We must meet the faithful record of all our actions in the judgment.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 46

hung upon memory's hall pictures that are pleasant to reflect upon, of kind words spoken, of sympathy given at the right time? Have you tried to turn away the impression of evil surmisings that indiscreet meddlers have thrown into your mind? Have you vindicated his case? How do the pictures hang in the halls of memory in regard to the spiritual help you have given him? May not these memories be of a painful character that you cannot endure to reflect upon? There will never be another opportunity to do him good, to recall any unkind word spoken, or to confess a fault, to wipe from the memory any painful impression. Then let us take heed to our ways, that we offend not in word or action. Let all coldness, all variance be put away; let the heart melt into tenderness before God, as we recall His merciful dealings to us. Let the Spirit of God, like a holy flame, burn away the rubbish that has accumulated at the door of the heart. Throw wide open the door, and let Jesus come in; then His love will flow out from us to others in tender, thoughtful words and acts. And when death shall part us from our friends, no more to meet till we stand around the great white throne, then we shall not have words and acts of which to be ashamed.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 47

When death closes the eyes, when the hands are folded upon the silent breast, how quickly the sentiment and feeling change. There is no bitterness entertained; slights and wrongs are forgotten. How many loving words are spoken over the dead; how their best qualities are treasured and brought up in the mind; how many words of praise and commendation are spoken; shall they fall upon the ears that hear not, and hearts that feel not? Had these words been spoken when the weary spirit needed them so much, when the heart was oppressed, when the soul was battling with temptations, when the ear could hear and the heart could feel, what a comfort and joy it would have been to them, and what a pleasant picture you could look upon in memory's hall. Oh, how many as they look upon the dead are awed and heartily ashamed of the words and acts of their own selfish life that brought sadness to the heart that is now stilled forever.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 48

Let us now bring all the beauty and love and kindness into the life of the living. Be thoughtful; be pitiful; be patient and forbearing in the intercourse with one another. Let the thoughts and the feelings which you are so ready to give expression to over the dying and dead be brought into the daily associations with your brethren and sisters in their life.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 49

The brethren and sisters in Healdsburg should have that faith which was once delivered to the saints which enabled them to say boldly, The Lord is my Helper. I can do all things through the Lord who strengtheneth me. The Lord calls upon you as a church to arise and go forward. Whenever the church at any period has confessed and forsaken her sins and believed and walked in the truth, she has been honored of God. Humble obedience and faith have a power which the world cannot withstand. The order of God's providence in relation to his people is continual advancement in the perfection of Christian character and in the path of holiness, going on from light to still greater light, increasing in knowledge and the love of God to the close of probation.4LtMs, Lt 21, 1886, par. 50

Great Grimsby, England

Portions of this letter are published in UL 276.

Dr. Gibbs

Dear Brother:

I have been interested to learn how you were prospering at the health retreat. I hope that the prospering hand of God is with you. I have had many fears that you would not be wise in caring for yourself. I know that you are too willing to place yourself in hard and trying places. I have been thinking to write you for weeks in regard to this matter. I know that you occupy an important position, and I am very much concerned at times lest you will, under the pressure of circumstances, feel that you must take hold of matters and do work that does not belong to you to do, and which will weaken your physical forces for doing the important work which should not be trusted to other hands than your own to do.⁴*LtMs, Lt 22, 1886, par.*

I hope you will not become discouraged. I hope you will consider that you are engaged in a work where you can be a great blessing to humanity. You are not to expect that your best and most taxing efforts may always be appreciated; but you are not working merely for wages, but to do the work more important to be done than the one who ministers in word and doctrine. I know that you are often tempted and tried. I know that the Lord will not leave you to wrestle with these temptations alone. Only believe Jesus is your helper, a very present help in time of trouble. Somehow today it seemed to me I must see you and bid you look up; yes, look up through the mist, through the clouds to the Sun of righteousness. You must not be depressed. It is the depressing discouragements that are sapping your life forces. You must be cheerful even though disappointed in men. Jesus understands, Jesus is true, Jesus is your Saviour. Only a little while of trial, a little moment of affliction, then an eternal weight of glory.4LtMs, Lt 22, 1886, par. 2

I write to you as I would to my own sons. You are in the place where God would have you. I tell you, my brother, there is no mistake in this matter. I know what I am talking about. Be true to God, and you will do the work He has given you to do with fidelity. God lives and reigns. We have a living and a risen Saviour. He has a care for you. The mighty, wonderful Saviour that led the armies of the Hebrew host is your God. You have only to trust Him as a child trusts its parents. Only to obey Him, and although your confidence in men and women may have been severely shaken, yet your confidence in God may be firm and abiding. He has never proved false; He has never deceived you. He will be your guide and deliverer in the most trying circumstances. He will be at your right hand. We are every moment girded with His power and surrounded by His presence as really as were the Israelites in the midst of the divided sea.4LtMs, Lt 22, 1886, par. 3

The deepest and truest philosophy of life and faith is to bring ourselves into the most intimate relation with God. God is giving you an experience; and if you do not grieve too much and feel too keenly, you will have physical strength. But sorrow and dissension and untruthfulness are to you a living death. But you must in faith commit your case to God. Truth will triumph, and you will triumph with it.4LtMs, Lt 22, 1886, par. 4

Keep fast hold on Jesus. Look up to the haven of rest and the home of the blest. Keep your soul in the love of God whatever may betide, and you will grow spiritually strong. Jesus is your loving friend, He will take your hand and help you over every hard and trying place. A grateful, trustful, habitual recognition of God lies at the very foundation of all right conduct, all true character. You must never lose confidence in God. It were less sinful, less unreasonable, to forget every human friend you have in the world than to forget God. I know that you love God, and I know you will try to serve Him in all sincerity, in all fidelity; and no one will ever be able to make you afraid or ashamed to be known as a servant of the Most High God. May the Lord bless you is the prayer of [your sister].4LtMs, Lt 22, 1886, par. 5

Albert [Vuilleumier?]

Great Grimsby, England

September 23, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in AH 46; LYL 21-22.

Dear Brother Albert:

Willie has spoken to me of some things concerning your relation with Sr. Bowers. While at Basel I had some conversation with Hattie in regard to your attentions to her. I asked her if her mind was fully made up that she loved Albert well enough to link her interests with his for life. She answered that she was not fully settled upon this point. I told her that she should know just what steps she was taking; that she had the example of Edith before her, and that the influence of Edith's example was not yet at an end; that she should give no encouragement to the attentions of any young man, showing him preference unless she loved him.⁴*LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 1*

She plainly stated that she did not know as she did love him, but thought if she were engaged to him she might become acquainted with him. But as it was, they had no opportunity to become acquainted. I told Hattie that to become engaged was as binding in this country, or nearly as binding, as the marriage vow, and she must know assuredly the steps she was taking. She should consider whether the marriage with Albert would be for the bettering of the condition of both.⁴*LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 2*

I had reason to think that she disliked domestic labor, and I knew that you should have a wife that could make you a happy home. I asked her if she had any experience in those duties that make a home. She answered that she had done housework at home in her father's family. (Why I asked these questions was that as her character had been presented to me she needed special education in practical duties of life, but had no taste or inclination for these things, and was greatly deficient in habits of order, if she herself was required to keep things in order. Everything like taxation in the practical duties of life she had shunned. Labor and perseverance in practical duties she had avoided.)4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 3

When I stated the true importance attached to an engagement, I also said to her, "When you decide to take this step, your proper course will be to disconnect with the office. It will never do for you to manifest your preferences or anything like special attentions in this office. No courtship must be carried on here, because the example we have had, and its deleterious influence in the course pursued by Edith, has left its mark upon more than one or two connected with the office. Lovesick sentimentalism is not religion. While no one is at liberty to say you shall not marry, or to control your preferences in this respect as to whom you will choose as a husband, there are things which must be controlled, and among these is the moral tone of the publishing house; and courtship, which would suit the inclinations and promptings of the natural heart, practiced in the office, cannot be tolerated. You must separate from the office until this matter has run its course and come to a termination."4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 4

She then answered: "If I am not engaged, how can I get acquainted with him? I think I had better give it all up at once."4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 5

I told her that on this point I was settled. We had seen courtships extending along weeks and months and years, and then after living, as it were, fascinated, bewitched, and exerting an influence over others, leading them to think that the preference and special attachments were a heaven of bliss, they would break them off. Then mysteries and misunderstandings occur. Both are spoiled for this life, although in time they would attach themselves to another. "No, Hattie," said I, "you can go from the office; you can carry out your purpose if you think this is your duty; but you shall not, by your example, if we can help it, demoralize others."4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 6

She told me that she was not decided in anything, that Albert was very urgent and loved her, but she could not say that she loved him, although he was very kind and attentive. Said I, "Then come to an understanding. Do not lead him on as Edith led on young men. I fear you are now following out her example.”4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 7

She told me that Bro. and Sr. Whitney were both opposed to her marrying Albert. I told her she should consider the object of a marriage with you, whether by such a step you could both glorify God; whether you would be more spiritual; and whether your lives would be more useful. These marriages that are impulsive and selfishly planned generally do not result well, but often turn out miserable failures. Both parties find themselves deceived, and gladly would they undo that which they did under an infatuation. It is easier, far easier, to make a mistake in this matter than to correct the error after it is made.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 8

I told her that now was an important time in the experience of you both, that Albert was a man with stern, noble qualities which, with proper development and firm Christian principles maintained, would place him in high positions of responsibility in connection with the work and cause of God. I stated to her that I had hoped that Albert would be a man who could be depended upon, that he had great firmness which was in danger of working into stubbornness, but that these qualities under the control of the Spirit of God would fit him for the work in which he was engaged. Again I repeated to her, “Be careful not to lead on a young man and encourage him to entertain love for you, when you do not know whether you love him or not. And when you decide to marry, go away from the office for a time, for courtship and lovesick sentimentalism cannot be carried on in this building.”4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 9

Now, my brother, I cannot say that it is my business to say that you shall not marry Hattie Bowers; but I will say that I have an interest in you. Here are things which should be considered: Will the one you marry bring happiness to your home? Is Hattie an economist, or will she if married not only use up all her own earnings, but all of yours to gratify a vanity, a love of appearance? Are her principles correct in this direction? Has she anything now to depend upon? Has she means that she has reserved to pay her expenses in coming to Europe? Are these debts canceled? I know that to the mind of a man infatuated with love and thoughts of marriage these questions will be brushed away as though they were of no consequence. But these things should be duly considered now, for they have a bearing upon your future life.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 10

I do not think Hattie knows what self-denial is. If she had the opportunity she would find ways to spend even more means than she has done. With her, selfish gratifications have never been overcome, and this natural self-indulgence has become a part of her life. She desires an easy, pleasant time. She desires to be cared for, to receive attention and be an object of attraction. She has no idea of wrestling with the stern duties of life. Self-serving, self-pleasing have been brought into the life experience. I must speak plainly. I know, my brother, that should you marry her you would be mated, but not matched. There would be something wanting in the one you make your wife. And as far as Christian devotion and piety is concerned, that can never grow where so great selfishness possesses the soul.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 11

I will write to you, Albert, just as I would write to my son. There is a great and noble work lying just before us, and the part we shall act in this work depends wholly upon our aims and purposes in life. We may be following impulse. You have the qualities in you to make a useful man, but if you follow inclination this strong current of self-will will sweep you away. Place for yourself a high standard, and earnestly strive to reach it. If you make of yourself all that God would have you, each day the battle with you will go on. It must be a constant striving for something better than you have reached.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 12

Those who work for their own happiness in this life find at last that their lives are a sad failure. You may reach a higher standard, doing something each day to help you to a larger life of the soul. Every one who has heaven in view will keep his eye fixed upon the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. He will move steadily forward. He will have his eyes, his ears, his tongue consecrated to God. He will not be turned aside from his purpose by objects ever so attractive. He will have a fixedness of purpose to succeed, and this purpose will govern all his plans and his conduct in life.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 13

Our probation is short. Let it become the ruling purpose of your heart to grow to a complete man in Christ Jesus. In Christ you can do valiantly; without Christ you can do nothing as you should. You have a determination to carry out that which you purpose. This is not an objectionable feature in your character if all your powers are surrendered to God. We would not have you less firm nor less determined, but we would have all these impulses and strong points of character so wholly sanctified that they will be agents in the hands of the Lord, of great usefulness to your fellow men, a blessing to your parents, a power for good to advance the cause of God. Please bear this in mind, that you are not at liberty to dispose of yourself as your fancy may dictate. Christ has purchased you with a price that is infinite. You are His property, and in all your plans you must take this into account and so relate yourself in association with others that you will have no drawbacks.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 14

Especially in your marriage relations, be careful to get one who will stand shoulder to shoulder with you in spiritual growth. Your parents must be taken into consideration. The cares of life bow the form, and parents must lean on their children much earlier than is imagined. As years pass, the children gain experience and strength; but with parents, cares tell upon them. The once strong grow weak, and then it is the duty of the children to show their nobleness of character, not merely to make a home for them, but to make them comfortable, to give them expressions of love that are due them. Many parents hunger for love; their hearts are constantly yearning for love. Express your love for them, be not ashamed to love your parents. Parents never outgrow their desires for affection and love from their children. Every little thoughtful affection you can show your mother brings a throb of joy to her heart. The father needs these tokens of respect also and will appreciate them. All these acts are observed by the angels in heaven and are written in the books there. For them is a promise annexed to the fifth commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." [Exodus 20:12.] Yes, every act of fidelity to parents is registered in the books of heaven.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 15

In your choice of a wife, study her character. Will she be one who will be patient and painstaking? or will she cease to care for your mother and father at the very time when they need a strong son to lean upon? and will she withdraw him from their society to carry out her plans and to suit her own pleasure, and leave the father and mother who, instead of gaining an affectionate daughter, will have lost a son? Albert, I want you to consider all these things. God help you to pray over this matter. Angels are watching this struggle. I leave you with this matter to consider and decide for yourself.4LtMs, Lt 23, 1886, par. 16

Dear Mary:

We met Willie when we came home from meeting last night. Was glad to see him. He seems well. I have now spoken twice in the tent, once in the mission, and three times in the morning. I do not like this air, but I am thankful I am as well as I am. Will you please get for Marian three bottles of malt, and have her take it as by direction. This is considered good for such as are troubled as she is. I feel worried about her, and I want something should be done to help her if possible.4LtMs, Lt 23a, 1886, par. 1

I feel some overworked and will have to hold up a little. I spoke twice Sabbath, twice on Sunday, and twice Tuesday. I am now trying to rest.4LtMs, Lt 23a, 1886, par. 2

I have had a great liberty in speaking. Sunday night the tent was crowded full, and they said about half as many were upon the outside. Last night the tent was not full, but I had an interested audience and spoke with freedom. I speak again Thursday and Sunday evenings. I believe I can do something in the name and strength of Jesus, in England.4LtMs, Lt 23a, 1886, par. 3

I will send you samples of flannel I have bought and am making up. This flannel cost me seventy-five cents for three yards and three quarters. The pink cotton and wool cost one English shilling. This red oil goods—I can get remnants like this, two yards for thirty cents. There is quite a pile of remnants. Prints are eight cents per yard, good twilled calico like this sample.4LtMs, Lt 23a, 1886, par. 4

Shall I get any for Ella or any other purposes? I saw in the great hotels white curtains trimmed with this cloth. Write your wishes about the matter. Love to Ella and all the family. 4LtMs, Lt 23a, 1886, par. 5

Managers of the Health Retreat

Great Grimsby, England

To the Managers of the Health Retreat

My dear friends:

I wish to make an appeal to you in behalf of one whom I highly esteem in the Lord, Sister Clase. I found her very nearly broken down at the sanitarium at Battle Creek, and I advised her to leave Battle Creek and go with us to California if she wished to save her life. She had done valuable service in the sanitarium, but among the pressure of cares Sister Clase was left to bear too heavy a burden for her feeble strength. Dr. Kellogg saw but one chance for her life, which was to change climate. I promised this sister she should not be left to take burdens and do hard work, but to oversee and tell others what to do. This is exceedingly hard for her to do, but she must. One year ago last spring we [feared] all our efforts were too late. But with care and attention she has recovered from the hemorrhage and has been of real service. I am thankful that she can do the work she loves so well. Should Sister Clase be removed, you would lose a valuable woman; her place could never be supplied.⁴*LtMs, Lt 24, 1886, par. 1*

Now the question is, Can I trust her with you at the Health Retreat? Will you guard her? Will you take her work away, and every day make it a rule that she shall go thus far and no further? Will you let her do all she desires to? If you do, she will die, for her love of work and her ambition know no bounds. She will sacrifice her life rather than to neglect one responsibility. I want her cared for every day, and God wants you to care for her. She is precious in the sight of the Lord. She is precious in my sight. And I charge you before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, care for Sister Clase. I know her life; I know that Jesus loves her; I know that she has a crown of life laid up for her at Christ's appearing. I know of no woman living who has done her work so faithfully and with the affection and love for all. God bless her, is my prayer. Now if you will not guard her thoughtfully, release her of burdens, care for her, love her, and make her life as pleasant as you possibly can, I have a home for Sister Clase. She is more than welcome to my home and to the blessings I enjoy in this life as if she were my own sister. I consider I am honored in acting a part for a child of God whose lot in life has been a hard struggle with poverty and misfortune, with sickness, with carrying heavy burdens. God has blessed her. I feel in earnest in this matter.4LtMs, Lt 24, 1886, par. 2

I know how hard it is for some people to get their thoughts away from themselves and feel another's grief, another's burden. I know Dr. Gibbs and Elder Rice will know the value of Sister Clase. I know they will do what they can on their part. I appeal to these two responsible men to care for Sister Clase. If she does not lift her hand to do one stroke of work, if she is there alive to advise, to counsel, and to speak words to the patients, she will then be worth far more than someone more active. Dr. Gibbs, will you please not only prescribe, but to give your positive orders in regard to the entire freedom from all care at stated periods. I know it is your kindly interest, your faithfulness, that has done much with the blessing of God toward keeping Sister Clase in as good health as she has. Dr. Gibbs, will you forbid her ever under any circumstances to lift weights or mix bread. I feel thoroughly all I write on this point. I am attached to Sister Clase, for I know what has been her life experience; and I say to all in the institution, in the name of my Master, Shield her, love her, smooth her way all that you possibly can. She will do work rather than to tell others to do. But others must step in and not allow her to do. I did not encourage her coming to California to have her work as she did in Michigan. I believe you will regard my wishes.4LtMs, Lt 24, 1886, par. 3

Bourdeau, D. T.

Basel, Switzerland

January 10, 1886

Previously unpublished. +NoteOne or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

Dear Brother Bourdeau:

I was glad to receive such cheering news from you and your work. I hope that the interest will remain good and increase. We do not expect that the interest in such a place as Genève can be worked up in a few days or a few weeks. Keep your strength good as far as possible, that you may be prepared for an emergency.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 1

I do not know whether your sending your teacher to Italy was wise or not. It may be it was wisdom to do this, still it is not for her interest as I view the matter. You may not be aware that every proofreader has to have some knowledge of standing at the case and setting type. They do not take hold of the work as making it a special business, but when they have not the special work of proofreading to do, they are to stand at the case and employ their spare time setting type; for this is a part of the education positively necessary to make a good proofreader. As we view matters, she is losing time. She could be obtaining a drill that would make her a successful worker and give her a permanent business in connection with our offices and she receive the benefits spiritually of the influence of those who have experience in the work. It may be a good thing for Bro. A. C. Bourdeau, but will be no special advantage to her in obtaining advanced knowledge.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 2

I did interest Bro. Whitney in her case and was in hopes that she would come for her sake and her future good. And now as the matter is arranged as it is, I do not see why that A. C. Bourdeau needs to be confined closely to Torre Pellice, Italy. Why would not the best plan to be carried out now be to have him connect in the work with you, and you labor together in the interest that is now started in the work that is to commence at Lausanne, and in the interests at other points that are coming forward. He might work in these places if he can work anywhere. There seems to be no opening where he is, unless he should go into the stables. I cannot think that this is the best course for him to take; it might belittle his influence for laboring in halls. And still there is another drawback. It will be dangerous for him healthwise. His liver is not in an active condition, so that he can readily throw off impurities. He needs to breathe as pure air as possible and should avoid inhaling the impurities of the stable. His temperament is sluggish, and infirmities increase this difficulty.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 3

He is inclined to occupy his time and thoughts with small home matters, which another could do just as well as he. He has now another to board and pay wages, which increases his expenses. He writes that she is a help to his wife in the work about the house. It is not a blessing to his children to have the way closed up so that it will not be necessary for them to have employment in helping Martha do the work, as they have nothing to do outside the family. But as this arrangement is made, there is no reason that I can see why A. C. Bourdeau at this time could not be spared to work in the interests now started in Switzerland. I hope that we shall all move wisely and in the fear of God. I fail to see wisdom in this arrangement that has been made as far as the teacher is concerned. If there had been no opening for her here, then it might be in order. As it is, she is losing time. She will have to go over the same ground at some future time that she would have to go over now, to commence at the lower round of the ladder and know every step that she goes over and become an intelligent worker. I have deep interest for those who recently embrace the truth, that they shall have every advantage in gaining an experience.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 4

You did not speak in your last letter in regard to your health. Are you improving? You can have hope and courage in looking away from yourself and your infirmities to the sympathizing Healer. Jesus lives and reigns! He is your present help in every time of need. He loves you, and He cares for you; and while engaged in His work, you may take hold of His strength. There is a great work to be done in such a place as Geneva. But Satan will oppose every step of advancement that is made to enlighten the minds and save souls.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 5

I am pleased with the account you gave of coming close to hearts in the family circle. May God give you strength to do this work in which you are engaged. Be cautious about overdoing. I believe God is willing to give His workers help, but they must not be presumptuous. They must rightly relate themselves as far as they can understand to the laws of health, and then God will do for them what they cannot do for themselves. Keep the right hold from above. Of ourselves we can do nothing, in Christ we can do all things. Do not allow yourself to become nervous. Take rest if it is possible for you to rest, and then lay hold on Christ by living faith. As a family you want Christ as a living guest. You want the protecting care of angels when you go out and when you come in, when you lie down and when you rise up. And faith must be in lively exercise. Do not allow depressing feelings to discourage you and weaken your faith. Talk faith, act faith, and faith will bring the returns. I have a special interest in yourself and your family. Jesus wants you to be at peace and rest in Him. Only believe and look to Him continually, and He will be a blessing to you and yours.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 6

I am so glad that you feel encouragement in your labors. I hope you will see still greater tokens of the manifest power and blessings of God. He does not want His workers to labor under a cloud of discouragement. You are not to look at your infirmities and failings in the past, but look to Jesus who is willing to save to the uttermost all who believe in Him. Our warfare here will soon be ended; and if we shall trust God fully, we shall receive the "well done," the heavenly benediction from the lips of the Master. [Matthew 25:21.] Work on in faith. Look up and not down, and Jesus will be the health of your countenance and your God.4LtMs, Lt 25, 1886, par. 7

Vuilleumier, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

February 9, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother Vuilleumier:

I am much interested in the work that is opening in the place where you live. Although quite unable to write, I sit propped up with pillows, and with trembling nerve I attempt to express a few ideas. May have to drop my pen after writing a few lines.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 1

I am anxious for the people who know not the truth, and I have been shown that it is a nice job to deal with minds and that there is with you, my brother, a manner of too great severity. You are not as humble and Christlike as you should be. You are not as patient and kind and long-suffering as you should be. Your feelings are too quickly stirred, and you show resentment in words and deportment when you are not treated with respect. That hurts you. You do not see the importance of daily learning in the school of Christ the lessons of meekness and lowliness of heart. You are impatient if your course is questioned and suggestions made contrary to your ideas.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 2

My brother, your labors have not been what they might have been, because you have not learned the lessons of Christ. He has invited you to learn meekness and lowliness of heart. Every worker must have the meekness of Jesus. He must have the spirit of Christ. His love, His patience, His kindness, His forbearance and mercy must be interwoven in the life experience. The workers must cease to say sharp things. They must not be critical. They must not be overbearing. They must have tact, wisdom, and great gentleness in seeking to win souls to Christ.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 3

Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people. We are to meet the people where they are and let God's light flash upon their pathway. The moral condition of those in error is pitiable. They are under the delusion of Satan. He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. The god of this world has blinded the eyes of them who believe not. Christ is the light of the world, and His followers are gathering the light from the great Source of light, and in their turn they are the light of the world.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 4

I have been shown that in the work of saving souls there is much lost through unskilful management of the work. There is frequently more accomplished in simplicity than in efforts to make display. All the preaching may be good, but there is not that meeting of the [people] where they are and becoming acquainted with them individually—in entering their homes, visiting with them, talking with them socially, not reprovingly, not creating prejudice by assailing them on their errors of doctrine, but agreeing with them whenever you can and praying with them and for them. Show that kindness and love that Christ has shown to us poor erring mortals.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 5

Never set yourself up as a reprovor. This would suit your nature, but it is not your work. You are to cultivate a different set of graces. You are to develop traits of character which need to be cultivated as I have mentioned. Being full of earnest love, meekness, and forbearance, you will not disgust people, but will win them to you. Our work is aggressive. It should be the study of every worker how they can find access to hearts. Faith, zeal, and holiness in your own life will have a telling influence upon those for whom you labor. Those who wrestle most earnestly with God in their closets will go forth to their converse with men, anointed with the heavenly unction for their mission. They carry with them the breezes of the heavenly atmosphere. Their faces express the inward Saviour. "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.]4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 6

I leave these lines with you, my brother. Labor in the spirit of Jesus, doing your duty for eternity. There is constant necessity of being faithful sentinels over self, that not one selfish act shall control the workers. No one is to have a spirit that will lead him to want to embrace in his labor any certain field or branch of the work to the exclusion of other workers, feeling that he himself can do the work better than to connect with them. One individual is only one link in the great chain. Other links are essential or the chain will be deficient. So in the work of God, one man is not to consider himself sufficient to begin and carry forward and finish the work. God has different gifts to use in perfecting the work in any place.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 7

I have been shown that in Europe and also in America there is a selfish spirit that creeps into the heart and intrudes itself into the labor of the workers and makes it difficult and almost impossible for workers to unite together. One has an idea even in the missionary work that he is capable of doing the best kind of work. Therefore he prefers to work alone to show what he can do.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 8

Brother Vuilleumier: I was unable to complete this letter and have been so pressed with other writing since this was begun that I have not had time to touch this until now.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 9

I have been shown that there should be less of self and more of Jesus with all the workers. There should be a blending together, a chiming in wherever they can to advance the work. Brother Albert Vuilleumier has a most excellent ability to enter into families, and in this work he can do much good. He should not be discouraged, but should be a zealous, earnest worker wherever he can find a chance to work. He can do as much in coming close to hearts, in talking, in opening the Scriptures to families as the minister can who preaches the discourses.4LtMs, Lt 28, 1886, par. 10

Hanson, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

February 7, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 153.

Dear Brother and Sister Hanson:

I have not lost my interest in you, but my heart is still burdened on your account. I hoped to have written to you three weeks ago, but through our labor in Italy, and much labor in speaking and writing which came upon me here, I could not endure the burden. Congestion of the brain and eyes compelled me to lay aside the pen. Last Wednesday I was taken with a chill lasting two hours. I had a very sick day and have not been able to sit up but little since. It seems a very strange thing to have to give up and lie in bed, but this morning I came near fainting away. I am propped up in bed with pillows, trying to write a few lines to you. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 1

Soon after we returned from Norway, a German who was attending the theological college here in Basel took his stand upon the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. He had many inducements presented by an uncle and his parents to continue to study and obtain an education. The professor told him he could keep the Sabbath and still continue his studies. They introduced him to ministers who argued with him, but they brought only customs, practices of men, and the testimonies of the fathers. Like Luther, he told them if the fathers found their evidences in the Scriptures, he also had reasoning powers and could find evidences there. They either did or did not obtain their light from the Bible. If they did, he could go to the same Bible, and if they did not, then it was only the judgment and doctrine of men and not that which he would want to risk his soul upon. He told them that his soul's salvation was altogether of too great consequence to risk any uncertainty. As they could not prove that the first day was the Sabbath, he told them his feet must stand upon the platform he had chosen until a plain "Thus saith the Lord" should be shown as evidence that he was not right.

He had many arguments with them and finally told them he must leave them.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 2

The Lord was at work upon the heart of this young man. No one went after him, but he came to solicit conversation with the young men at work in the office, presenting everything before them which appeared to be objectionable. He told the professor that if this were truth, he had a work to do, not only to believe it, but to teach it to others. Well, he has come out free and strong. When leaving the school, he did not know what he should do. But in answer to that question, he said, "I am strong, and I will engage in manual labor. I am not afraid to work." Brother Whitney then suggested that he come to the office and work on the German paper. He was much surprised at this offer, but glad to have some part in the work. He came here and is just the help they needed. He understands the printers' trade, as they afterward learned. This is the Lord's work; and as every soul is precious, we feel to greatly rejoice. Others in this theological college are interested and inquiring in regard to the truth.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 3

Yesterday our hearts were made glad to know that a businessman living in Basel, but employed in a bookbinding establishment about thirty miles from here, came to our meeting and kept his first Sabbath. This help is also needed very much in the office. He is an intelligent man and will have an influence over others. As yet no public labor has been put forth for the Germans in Basel. But the Lord is at work upon hearts.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 4

We have letters from Italy, not the part that I visited, saying that by accident they had obtained an old, worn French Signs and became interested in it. They noticed that it was issued at Basel and so sent on and wanted more papers. Other letters have been received from the same party, wishing the editor to thank Mrs. White for her articles which they said were of great value to them. We have also received letters from France. Several have embraced the truth there by reading the papers and have sent in several subscriptions for the paper—one letter from a young man who wanted the paper sent on for a time, saying that he would try to pay for it. He is an apprentice in a bank and does not receive wages. They sent him the paper, and he wrote again saying that he would like the paper continued, that his father and mother had been opposed to his reading it, but now they were interested in it themselves, and he desired that it should not be stopped. He asked if they would take a blank book (a register) for pay. He does not know how glad they are to let him have the Signs if he cannot pay a cent. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 5

Letters come from India and Russia, stating that a number are keeping the Sabbath there. One from Russia was signed by five persons who expressed their appreciation of the paper. So the good work is going on. Brother Conradi is here now, and he thinks of visiting Russia soon as there is a deep interest already awakened there through reading. I am glad Brother Conradi has come, for he is a successful worker among the Germans. After he shall spend a few months in Russia, he intends to return to Basel and labor in this place, the Lord willing. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 6

I hope you will be strengthened, settled, established in the faith. The work is bound to go forward and triumph whether we go forward with it or not. It will be victorious. The question is, Will we be victorious with it? I want that you should feel the need of a deep work of grace in your own hearts. Remember that Jesus has bought you with the sacrifice of His own life. "Ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." [1 Corinthians 6:19, 20.]4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 7

That which you need, my brother and sister, is the converting grace of God upon your own hearts. You need the Spirit of Jesus. You both need to learn in the school of Christ meekness and lowliness of heart. You do not feel your need of deep inward piety, and here is where you are being self-deceived. I feel that you are delaying the decisions you ought to make for your own good and for the good of others. God shows no special favoritism to elevate one above another. He requires the whole heart, the entire affection. God expects and enjoins upon every man to do his duty, not to profess a knowledge of Jesus Christ and the truth and have no fruit appear. Small or great, learned or unlearned, rich or poor, it is just the same requirement. Every one is called to act just according to the ability God has given him. He must render his service, or there will be guilt on his conscience and peril to his soul. No one can afford to lose heaven. Remember the words of Christ to all of His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.] God depends on those who know the way to show it to others. God has entrusted to men the treasures of His truth. The inward grace will be revealed in the outward action. It is faith and trust and confidence we want in God. It is not the eloquent speech, the intellectual acquirements that make the influence far-reaching. We need that spirit that will show to others that we have been learning in the school of Christ and that we copy the Pattern given us. We want a heart not lifted up into vanity; and mind not centered on self, but drawn out to bless others. God notices these humble works, and they outweigh every other consideration.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 8

Home piety, sweet, satisfied contentment you both need. No faultfinding, no grumbling, no pettishness, no harshness, no scolding, no severity. Let kindness and love be the rule of your household. Are you truly converted? The truly converted soul is illuminated from on high, and Christ is in that soul a well of water springing up into everlasting life. Whoever refuses to shine dishonors Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 9

The truth as it is in Jesus does much for the receiver, and not only for him, but for all who are brought within the sphere of his influence. His motives, his words, his actions will be misrepresented and falsified; but he keeps straight on, for he has a hell to lose and a heaven to gain. He is not looking and considering his present convenience, he is not ambitious for display, he does not crave the praise of men, but he keeps straight on, his eye fixed upon Jesus. His hope is in heaven. He will do right because it is right, and because it is such alone that will have an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. He is kind, humble, thoughtful of others' happiness. He will never answer, "Am I my brother's keeper?" [Genesis 4:9.] He loves his neighbor as himself. He is a true, bold soldier of the cross of Christ. He holds forth the Word of life. He gains an influence, and the prejudice against him dies away, and his piety is acknowledged. His Bible principles are respected. His manners are not harsh and dictatorial like the godless. He is reflecting light from heaven upon men. Thus it is with all those who are truly converted. They bear precious fruit, and in so doing walk as Christ walked, talk as He talked, work as He worked, and the truth as it is in Jesus makes its impression in his home, in his neighborhood, and in the church. He is building a character for eternity. While he is working out his own salvation with fear and trembling, he is carrying out before the world the valuable principles of truth, showing what the truth will do for the life and character of the genuine believer. He is unconsciously carrying forward a vast, sublime experiment in the presence of the world which is in its character and influence far-reaching, silently undermining the foundation of false religion and false science. Such a man you must be. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 10

I know your brethren will never say to you what I say, therefore I feel it necessary to speak the words I know no one else will speak to you. I do not want that you or your wife shall meet with so great loss as to lose the heavenly mansions. Heaven is worth everything to us. Eternal life is worth a lifelong, persevering, untiring effort. We are required to put forth an energy and zeal proportionate to the value of the object we are in pursuit of. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 11

I want you and your family to be Christians in every sense of the word and you show in your character charity and the sanctifying power of the truth upon your life. Then your works will stand the test of the judgment. For all our works will be tried by fire. But, my brother, your works are not of the right character now. Should the fire of the last day kindle upon them as they now are, they would prove unworthy—hay, wood, stubble. Do not think this severe. It is truth, I know what I am writing about. Self has been mixed and mingled with all your doings. Will you come up to the high standard? It will be like learning the first principles of what constitutes a Christian character. Christ said to the apostle Peter, “When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.” [Luke 22:32.] This is the very work you must have done for you before you can do this work. You can, if you will, be a strong man in God. You have talents of ability that God has entrusted to your keeping to be sanctified to His service. But if not, all your ability will prove dangerous to others, leading them to walk apart from truth, apart from Christ. 4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 12

The church in Christiania needs very much done for them. God forbid that you should by precept or example bar the way to this essential work. Will you work with Jesus? Will you be true to the Lord who has bought you? Will you push into the background all matters of minor consideration or of imaginary importance? You want so much to be baptized into a larger faith, a larger charity or love. You want greater reverence for things of eternal importance.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 13

The church in Christiania must become more humble, have more fervent zeal for Christ, be more patient, more kind, more teachable, more Christlike in every respect, for they must by their character exhibit the sanctifying power of grace to the world. It is impossible for me to impress upon your mind too strongly the extent and power of an influence which flows from examples of individual piety and from the exhibition on a larger scale by the church of the sanctifying influence of the truth upon the character. It will be seen that the church who are professedly keeping all of God's commandments are doers of the Word. Their principles are living, active principles. There is a much greater ingathering yet to be realized in Christiania if the church will come into a right position before God, each seeking to set his own heart and his own house in order. Talk less, and let true inward piety shine forth in good works. The church should find fault with none of its brethren or sisters. This is Satan's work. But be kind, cultivate love, and gentleness. Pray more, read your Bibles more. Be diligent students in the school of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 14

I have been holding this letter, hoping to be able to write more; but since my health has improved, I have been so pressed with other writing, it has been impossible. I will not keep you waiting longer, but will send this now, and will write again.4LtMs, Lt 29, 1886, par. 15

Brownsberger, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

February 7, 1886

Previously unpublished.

[In the first portion of this letter Ellen White shares with Br. Brownsberger what she wrote to the Hansons (Lt 29, 1886), adding additional encouragement.]4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 1

Dear Bro. Brownsberger:

I have not lost my interest in you, but my heart is still burdened on your account. I hoped to have written to you three weeks ago; but through overlabor in Italy and much labor in speaking and writing which came upon me here, I could not endure the burden. Congestion of the brain and congestion of the eyes compelled me to lay aside the pen, and last Wednesday I was taken with a chill lasting two hours. I had a very sick day and have been able to sit up but little since. It seems a very strange thing to have to give up and lie in bed. This morning I came near fainting away, and I am propped up with pillows, and my writing paper before me, trying to pen a few lines to you.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 2

Soon after we returned from Norway, a German who was attending the theological college took his stand upon the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. He had many inducements presented by an uncle and his parents to continue to study and obtain an education. The professor told him he could keep the Sabbath and still continue his studies. They introduced him to ministers who argued with him, but they brought only customs, the practices of men, the testimonies of the Fathers. Like Luther, he told them if the Fathers found their evidence in the Scriptures, he had reasoning powers and he could find the evidence there. They either did or did not obtain their light from the Bible. If they did, he could go to the same Bible; if they did not, then it was only the judgment and doctrines of men and not that which he would want to risk his soul upon. "My soul's salvation is of altogether too great consequence to risk any uncertainty," (he said). As they could not prove that the first day was the Sabbath, he told them his feet must stand on that platform until a plain "thus saith the Lord" should be shown as evidence he was not right.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 3

He had many arguments with them and finally told them he must leave them. The Lord was at work upon the heart of this young man. No one went after him, but he came to solicit conversation with the young men at work in the office, presenting before them everything which appeared to be objectionable.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 4

He told the professor that if this were truth, he had a work to do not only to believe it, but to teach it to others. Well, he has come out free and strong. He did not know what he should do, but in answer to "What will you do now?" after he left school, he said, "I am strong. I will engage in manual labor. I am not afraid of work."4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 5

Brother Whitney then suggested he come to the office and work on the German paper. This he has been doing, and he is just the help they needed. This is the Lord's work, and as every soul is precious we feel to greatly rejoice. Others in this theological college are interested and are inquiring in regard to the truth.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 6

Yesterday our hearts were made glad that a businessman employed in the bookbinding establishment in the city came to our meeting and kept his first Sabbath. His help is needed in the office very much. He is a smart, intelligent man, and will have an influence over others. As yet no labor in public effort has been made for the Germans in Basel, but the Lord is at work upon hearts.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 7

We have letters from Italy, not the part I visited, that they had by accident obtained an old, worn-out French Signs and become interested. They found these papers were issued from Basel and they wanted more. Other letters have come from the same people, wishing them to thank Mrs. White for her articles which are of great value to them. Letters came from France. Several have embraced the truth by reading the papers, and they sent several subscriptions for the paper.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 8

Letters came from a young man who wanted the paper sent for a time, and he would try to pay for it. He is an apprentice in a bank and earns no money yet. Another letter comes from him saying he wants the paper continued. His father and mother had opposed his reading it; but now they are interested in it, as well as he, and he desires that it shall not be stopped. He asks if they would take a record book as part pay for the Signs. He does not know how glad they are to let him have the Signs if he cannot pay one cent.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 9

Letters come from Russia and India stating that a number are keeping the Sabbath. The one from Russia was signed by five names, expressing their appreciation of the paper. So the good work is going on. Brother Conradi is now here. He thinks of visiting Russia, as there is a deep interest already awakened there through reading.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 10

My dear Brother Brownsberger, I am deeply interested in the college and in the church at Healdsburg, and I am sure the enemy will seek in every way to hurt you and to discourage you through your wife. Whatever she may do or say, maintain your principles. If you feel that you may safely take her to yourself as your wife, that you can love and cherish her, then do so. I think she will be planning and contriving to this end all the time; but if you feel that she has no genuine work of grace in her heart, then move cautiously and know that Jesus will be your helper.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 11

One thing, do not be drawn away from the college. Be a man. Stand in your God-given manhood, free from every gin and snare of Satan. I have thought much of your case. I have longed to learn that the device of Satan has been broken and that you could again feel that you had a family. As things are, you will be ever harassed, but cling to your work. Please write me just how you feel upon this matter. I will let no one see the letter. I am really anxious to know what you purpose to do in the future. I hope and pray that the Lord will bless you and strengthen you and give you wisdom, fortitude, and courage. Lie low at the feet of Jesus. Let not the enemy dwarf and cripple your religious experience. I know you are often sore perplexed. I know you want to do the will of God, and I hope and pray that you may understand what the will of God is. Press closer and still closer to the bleeding side of your Redeemer. Walk in all humility of mind. You may do up your work for time and for eternity so that you will not be ashamed to meet your record in the day of final accounts. Please write me when you can. I will be happy to receive a line from you.4LtMs, Lt 29a, 1886, par. 12

Bourdeau, D. T.

Basel, Switzerland

February 10, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Brother Bourdeau:

I wish I could answer your letters, but I am not able. I have been unable to sit up but a few minutes at a time for five days. Yet I feel anxious to respond in some few words to your letters. Bro. Augustin's letter I will attempt to answer at some future time. I sit bolstered up in bed to say a few words to you.⁴*LtMs, Lt 30, 1886, par. 1*

Bro. Daniel, I have so wished that I could see in your letters a somewhat different spirit. In some things I am pleased, but not altogether. You write that you want the notices published just as you have written them, without a word of change. Then you have to repeat so often, "I am sore on some points." I want to tell you in love, it is your pride that is irritated and sore. When you have less of self and more of Jesus you will find rest in Him. But you think you must carry your own self or you will be crowded and hurt, and yet you continually place yourself where you are hurt. I like not your spirit of talk of your own individual independence, a spirit the Lord has been seeking to separate from you for years, and yet you cling to it with a vise-like grasp. Jesus' words are to you, "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." [Matthew 11:28, 29.] This lesson of meekness and lowliness you have daily to learn of Christ.⁴*LtMs, Lt 30, 1886, par. 2*

Do you feel it essential to keep lifting up yourself for fear people will not see and appreciate you? You cannot accomplish much in the work and cause of God, even with your many years of experience, unless you are daily learning in the school of Christ. The Lord would make you a channel of light if you will lay your burdens on the Lord and not try to lift yourself up. I am pained when I read sentences in your letters about your independent judgment. After showing as great weakness as you have, after being often under the special, controlling power of Satan, these words are not appropriate, as though you were infallible, your decisions and judgment without a defect.4LtMs, Lt 30, 1886, par. 3

My brother, I do not want you should hurt yourself. It is just as easy for you to have a high estimate of your powers as it is for you to breathe. Then the Lord withdraws Himself from you. I write these words with much pain. If your case had not been laid open before me so many times, then I should not write as I do. Keep humble, meek, and lowly. Be willing to be counseled, to be entreated. Do not think you know it all and are competent to direct and plan and execute all yourself, for if ever a man needed a balance wheel, it is yourself. Now I tell you this because I feel it my duty to do so. Unless you get rid of this self-sufficient spirit and become humble, I do not know whatever the Lord will do with you. It is the men who walk in the greatest humility whom God honors. When God sees that it is not safe to let prosperity attend you, He will withhold it from you. It does not matter with the Lord how many years you have been in the truth, but what have you learned in these years that has given you advantage over those who have had less number of years in the truth. It matters not with the Lord how much learning you have, but whether you are willing to learn the lessons which He gives you. It is the character of the experience that determines its value. Has the long experience been such that it has made its possessor a wise man after God's own heart? Has this experience made him less trustful of self and more and more dependent upon God? Has your experience made you weak in self-control? Has it made you impatient of restraint? Has it made you a bold soldier, putting self out of sight? Oh, that God may enlighten your mind, soften and subdue your heart, and make you more like Himself. Oh, that your pen would never trace the words that you must follow your own independent judgment. Come on a level with your brethren, receiving counsel as every one must do. You cannot expect that every thing shall be deferred to your judgment when you have shown so great defects. Will you learn the lessons in the school of Christ that He would have you to learn, to wear His yoke and lift His

Lt 31, 1886

Bourdeau, Augustin

Basel, Switzerland

February 11, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 174.

Bro. Augustin Bourdeau:

Your letter was about what I expected from you. You speak of openings in Italy and halls where you could labor. You have been there all winter, and with but very few exceptions you have nothing to show for your time. Now you could just as well, had you had the burden of the work upon you, had these openings months ago as at this late period. Any other man sent out to Italy as you were would have done something.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 1

I have need to speak plainly to you. You have but little burden for the work. You are content to see little matters about your home and let them absorb your time and whole mind. You do not make the cause of God first. When you went to Italy, you had in mind that you were to settle a house. Now this should have been with you as it has been with me a matter of secondary consideration. Every effort should have been made to do something to get the truth before others.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 2

Your mind has received such a mold that you will see reasons and excuses where your brethren see none and the Lord sees none. These excuses are just what every father could make and then wait for openings and favorable circumstances. How would the work be done if entrusted with such hands as yourself? If all the workers should do as you have done in regard to Italy, the cause would do better without them. If you do no more than you have done, you could be spared from Italy, for your example to the inexperienced workers has already had an influence upon them that is not such as we want the workers to receive. You are not a bold soldier for Jesus. Remember that co-laborers with Christ are to save souls. Our work is aggressive.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 3

The workers for God after the death and resurrection of Christ gave themselves to the Lord. They were doing the will of God. All selfishness was laid aside, and the salvation of souls for whom Christ died was the burden of their message.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 4

You state in your letter to me dated Jan. 10, "I know that Daniel and his family have desired that I should go and help in the work in Genève and Lausanne. But as we talked the matter over we could not see how I could leave the Valleys at present. It seemed to us that I should try for a while to counteract the efforts that have been made against us by M. Grant and Mallon. I know that it would be advisable that Daniel should have some preacher to assist him, and I have felt deeply upon this point. But you and Bro. Whitney can readily see just how things stand here now. We have succeeded to find a hall at Angrogue that we can occupy for three months, and another hall in Lucerne that we can occupy any length of time. Would not have to pay high rent for them. Bro. Geymet feels really bad that I am going away. He thinks it is our best time in this season to get a hearing, and hardly knows what to say to the proprietors of these halls, to whom we have spoken with encouragement about wanting the halls. He says that he dare not undertake to hold meetings in halls."4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 5

What earnest, persevering effort did you put forth to obtain these halls at a much earlier date? You lost time in bemoaning your situation. Now my Brother, I have felt much distressed as I have considered in regard to what you have done in real efforts since the Conference at Basel. I might not have felt so keenly over this matter of seeing the time passing, you in the Valleys where labor was so essential, and yet your feeling so restful and unconcerned, and doing so little, had not these slow, sluggish movements been presented before me so distinctly at times in the past, and shown me to be one of the most serious errors of your life.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 6

Had you had the real burden of God's cause you could not have pursued the course you have. Had you had the missionary spirit, you would have opened the way before you. You could not have rested day or night until the way was opened. You would have found halls and gone to work doing something. While I could not recommend your entering the stables, I believe you could have many openings had you felt the burden of the work. But you seemed to rely upon Brother Geymet to do about everything that was done. The very fact of your being in the Valleys and doing nothing, or but little more than many lay members who had no special calling from God would have done, had they been in your place, was against you. The position you occupied in the Valleys was much like the array of Quaker guns to hold a fort. Your very presence there with no burden to push your way was in my judgment far worse than had you not been there at all. Your example was bad for Bro. G. Almost all errands you wished to have done, instead of doing them yourself as you had nothing else to do, you would call upon Bro. G. to attend to. Had you been unable to speak French, then it would have appeared more consistent. Had you had life and zeal and thoroughness in you, you would have been able to have educated Bro. Geymet, and your example would have been a pattern of industry. How can we talk to him with such an example as this before him? You had ample time to do things; but hour after hour was frittered away upon unimportant matters, and next to nothing was done.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 7

You might have opened ways for me to have got into St. Johns, and to have gone to several places, had you done as most ministers would have done. But your taking things so easy was then and has been to me since a great marvel.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 8

Some years ago I was shown your need of energy and zeal, and your need of studying the subjects that you presented to the people. But you were troubled with mental laziness. You let your mind and brain rust from inaction. You did not every day make it a point to progress. You were content to take the production of others' brains and arguments that other men had searched out while you were indolent yourself. These halls that were found, could they not have been found months before? As far as your presence in the Valleys is concerned, you might just as well have not gone there. But when you were sent to the Valleys, it was not for you to do nothing, but to feel the burden and work as a faithful servant of Jesus Christ. What did you do weeks before the Conference at Basel? What have you done since that meeting?4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 9

In your letter Jan. 27, you make many explanations, then state "While it is true that I would gladly labor with my might this winter to extend the work in these Valleys in view of our being located here etc., yet reason teaches me that I should help my brother, and I have felt a great drawing to labor in portions of France where there are fields needing workers. The Lord knows that while I am truly a lover of home, I do feel a willingness to sacrifice home comforts and the society of loved ones and labor for the Master."4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 10

I am glad to read these words and shall rejoice to see them practiced.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 11

In regard to your boys' coming to Europe, no one asked our advice. From a letter you read to us in this house, I think your daughter Sarah expressed great regret that Arthur could not remain with them. In regard to your training them and caring for them, you must see that if you are doing missionary work, you would not, could not be with your children but a small portion of the time, and you would effectually close the door to your wife's being with you in your labors. You have but a very small experience in the training of children. Your wife had this burden principally upon her. You knew but little by experience of the care-taking and management of them.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 12

You say you will leave out of your account the time from Sept.-Jan., but my brother, this is the smallest part of the matter. The Lord had a right to expect better things of you than this. You were the Lord's hired servant. In your letter dated Jan. 29, from Genève, you state, "I wish to say frankly and freely, that though I did not make a great noise, yet I felt an intense interest in seeing something accomplished in the Valleys, and had it at heart and felt determined to do what I could to push forward the work. I felt deeply because the way had been hedged up so long." Now, I do not think that the way has been hedged up, as it has been thus presented to me, any more than in many places where the truth has been introduced. When the Lord sees that we have it at heart to make a determined effort, He works with our efforts. But when we wait and wait for a favorable opening in every respect to meet our convenience and our plans, the way will be hedged up till time closes.4LtMs, Lt 31,

You may, my brother, have had thoughts and good intentions to do, but however good your intentions you certainly did not do in this case. There was no pushing at all, but a listless, do-nothing waiting. Just look over the time and see how it has been spent. Certainly not in doing the work you were expected to do. You see that as soon as you set to work to find a hall, you succeeded. Could not this have been done months before, had you carried out the intense interest you express that you had for those people in Italy? You say you meant to hold eleven meetings a week, and believed God would have helped you. Would He not have helped you in the months that have passed into eternity with their record of work to be done that was not done?4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 14

You say, "If an effort is not made this winter in these villages, we will not be likely to do much in halls before another winter." Will you reckon and see how many months have passed with one excuse after another to keep you from the work? You are grieved with thought of being located in these Valleys and nothing being done. This is what grieves me.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 15

You say, "I ask myself the question, Was it in the order of God that I should move here as I did?" This matter none of us can determine. But there being nothing done I attribute to your manifest neglect of your duty. The Lord did not decree that you should make no effort. The Lord did not ordain that week after week pass away and nothing be accomplished. You were sent to the Valleys to do missionary work; and after engaging in the work to the best of your ability, then the moments aside from your work would be lawfully used in settling your house.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 16

You say, "You cannot blame me if I say that I feel very bad that no more has been accomplished in the Valleys since last Oct." We do not blame you for feeling thus, it is natural and right that you should feel thus. I fear that the books in heaven will show that your talents and time have been misemployed, misdirected, and Satan came in and preoccupied the field while you were busy here and there serving tables.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 17

men slept, Satan sowed the tares among the wheat. You make a statement like this, "Daniel has had many more opportunities than I have to give lessons himself to his wife and children. My wife and boys say they learn much faster when I teach them than when any one else does." Are you not deceiving yourself here? If you had made good use of your time, one extra hour could certainly have been employed in giving instruction to your children when I was with you; but I concluded when you were hunting up a teacher in Italy for them, it was because you had not a sufficiently thorough education in the French to teach them. You say you had not opportunities; please say you had not tact, skill, energy, and ability to seize opportunities within your reach.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 18

You say, "It would be very beneficial for me to spend an hour each day in teaching French and studying German." As far as studying is concerned, you can do this if you closely apply yourself. But you will have to put your powers to task in a much more orderly and determined manner, and make the most of your moments in a greater degree than you have hitherto done since coming to Europe.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 19

What hindered your giving your children lessons every day since you have been in Italy? You could have had your rules and regulations and accomplished much both in teaching your children and studying yourself.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 20

My brother, I have tried to respond to your letter and will not hesitate to say that you need a work done for you that must be done in order to make your work acceptable to God.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 21

Do not, I beg of you, think that I have written this because I do not love and respect you. I do, and this is the reason I speak plainly to you, for no else will; and I dare not withhold from you the things which I know, for your future labors will be affected by the way you view matters. Now I want you to see and sense the situation as it is, and put away your childish petting and sympathizing with yourself, and be a man in every sense of the word. Lean not to your own understanding, but lean on God.4LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 22

If the way is opened in Italy, I wish to come there and give another trial. But if there is no opening, I do not desire to go there again. I respect you just enough not to allow you to be deceiving yourself to your own ruin. I was never a better friend to you than while writing to you these straight and pointed truths. You must reform. God help you to overcome all the defects in your character and win eternal life.⁴*LtMs, Lt 31, 1886, par. 23*

Dr. J. H. Kellogg

Dear Brother:

I have received two letters from you and designed to answer them at once, but was not able. For two weeks I have suffered with congestion of the brain and intense pain in the back of the eyeball and through the temples. I flattered myself that this would soon pass away. I made most earnest supplication to the Great Healer several times a day that He would relieve my infirmities and restore my eyesight. For a time I could not exercise my brain in any way. I believed that the Lord heard my prayer and that I should be restored to health. Day and night this was the burden of my petition. The fourth of February I had a severe chill, two hours long. W. C. White and party arrived the fifth, finding me sick in bed. I was not able to sit up but a few minutes at a time for a week, then I began to gain a little strength, walked out a short distance several times, but found myself extremely weary. Wednesday morning I ventured to walk down in the city with W. C. W. and Mary to get our passports. I began to chill soon after leaving the house, but kept up until our business was done, and then called a hack and returned home, took a very hot bath, and went to bed. I had a very severe pain in my head, and my stomach would not take care of food. But I have not lost my faith. I think this is a crisis from which I will come out much better than I have been.⁴*LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 1*

Yesterday for a time I felt homesick and discouraged; but the peace of Christ rested upon me in the night season, and I felt sure that the promises of God would be verified to me. Today has been a season of comparative freedom from pain and exhausting nervousness, and I feel a gratitude to God, for I do believe that He is working in my behalf. The atmosphere of this climate has seemed to penetrate and cause me great chilliness, and then I would begin to plan where I would go to improve my health. I finally made up my mind that I would rest my case in the hands of God. If it is His will that I should remain here, I want to feel that I am in the way of my duty. The enemy would do to the uttermost of his power to discourage me and drive me away from the work.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 2

When I was in Italy, I there met Elder Grant; and he commenced his mean work against me, and against the law worse than me. My mind was stirred day and night in regard to the position the opposers of the truth were taking. The light from heaven flashed upon my mind in wonderful clearness in regard to the subject of redemption in connection with the fall of Satan and the law of God. I believe that the Lord sent me to Italy that I might come in contact with those who were making a raid against the law of God. I knew not what to do on this occasion, only to pray to God with heart and soul, day and night, and I had the most precious assurance that God would work to vindicate the truth. I have lessons of faith and trust to learn over and over again. I wrote early and late upon this subject so precious to me.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 3

I returned home very much worn to find Edith sick and dying. She sent for me several times to pray with her. It drew upon me in a wonderful degree, and my feebleness has been since her death. I did feel while praying for her, as I used to of old, as though Jesus were in the room and angels were round about us. It seemed as though I could bear her in the arms of my faith to the very feet of Jesus. I have the hope and assurance that she sleeps in Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 4

I cannot now answer your letters as I would be glad to do because I dare not allow my mind to take on any burden of thought. Just as soon as my head becomes strong enough to think of the questions that you wish answered, I will answer them. I have a request to make to you that you will send me a copy of the letter that Willie handed to you. I had not time to make a copy before Willie left Christiania.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 5

I hope, my brother, that you will not become confused, perplexed, or discouraged. You are in a most responsible position, standing under a load of cares and perplexities and difficulties. I do not cease to pray that God will preserve you. I am glad to hear that you are in better health. I hope and pray that the prospering hand of God will be with the workers in the institution. We need special help from God every moment. I often feel that it would be a great pleasure if I could have from time to time the advantages to be found in the sanitarium. I much desire to see you and your wife and Sister Hall and talk over some important matters.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 6

I am in perplexity to know just what to do. My crippled ankles forbid my walking much. My hip also at times is quite troublesome. I have always been where I could have a team at my command to ride out. I have thought that I would purchase a horse and carriage that I could be out doors more, but a good horse would cost me $200 and an ordinary carriage $200 and $300 for a good one. As I do not expect to stay here longer than this summer and fall, I hardly feel free to invest so much means when money is wanted so much in so many places. It is against me that I cannot have more exercise in the open air. At Healdsburg I have my horses and comfortable carriage and have made it my practice to ride out every day at least two hours. Today our goods came that Willie sent by freight from Liverpool. The boxes of crackers that came from the sanitarium look homelike. They have no crackers here. Some of my friends sent us some dried fruit, which is very precious to us, as we put up no fruit. I had some dried peaches come from my place in Healdsburg, which seemed like a little piece of home.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 7

I have written you this much merely to let you know that your letter was not being neglected for want of an interest in you and your work.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 8

I am obtaining a new experience since my feebleness in writing by dictation. This is the only way that I can communicate with you at present. I have always said that I never could write in this way, but I may have to more or less.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 9

Please tell my friends Brother and Sister Sawyer, Sister Hall, and your good wife that I have not forgotten them and would be more than glad to see them.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 10

Yours with respect.4LtMs, Lt 32, 1886, par. 11

Bourdeau, A. C.

Basel, Switzerland

February 27, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 1MCP 101; 2MCP 399, 592, 656, 801; VSS 323-324.

Brother A. C. Bourdeau:

You should cultivate energy of character, for the example of an energetic man is far-reaching and compels imitation. He seems to have an electric power on other minds. The earnest men are few in our world. Obstacles and barriers will meet every worker for God. But men must have the push in them. The energetic, earnest worker will not allow his way to be hedged up. He will force down the barriers.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 1

You want a steady, uniform, unyielding energy. You must discipline yourself. Make an entire change. Put forth exertions, and overcome all childish feelings. You have pitied yourself too much. You should have a determination that life shall not pass with you in working at trifles. You should determine to accomplish something and do it. You have had good resolutions. You are ever going to do something, but you do not get at it and do it. Much of your doing is in talk rather than action. You would have far better health if you would have more earnest energy and accomplish something in spite of obstacles.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 2

Be not dismayed at difficulties. You magnify seeming difficulties to large proportions and yield to weakness and despondency. A spirit of heroism would put them to flight. There are thorns in every path. All who follow the Lord's leadings have cares, disappointments, crosses, and losses.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 3

The thoughts must be trained. Gird up the loins of the mind, that it shall work in the right direction and after the order of well-formed plans; then every step is one in advance, and no effort or time is lost in following vague ideas and random plans. We must consider the aim and object of life and ever keep worthy purposes in view. Every day the thoughts should be trained and kept to the point as the compass to the pole. Every one should have his aims and purposes and then make every thought and action of that character to accomplish that which he purposes. The thoughts must be controlled. There must be a fixedness of purpose to carry out that which you shall undertake.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 4

You have lost much time and valuable acquisitions through your neglect to search the Scriptures and to gather ideas of other minds. You should be a diligent student. But you are not to rely upon the ideas of others. Do not through indolence neglect to search the Scriptures. Take the ideas you have found by a careful study; and instead of repeating them in a parrot-like manner, make them your own from the material you have searched out. Frame these arguments yourself. Do not borrow the productions of others' brains and pens and recite them as a lesson, but make the most of the brainpower God has given you; use your talents and not other man's as your own.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 5

No one but yourself can control your thoughts. In the struggle to reach the highest standard, success or failure will depend much upon the character and the manner in which the thoughts are disciplined. If the thoughts are well girded, as God directs they shall be each day, they will be upon those subjects that will help us to greater devotion. If the thoughts are right, then as a result the words will be right; the actions will be of that character to bring gladness and comfort and rest to souls. Every right action in the fear of God brings us nearer to Him. If the thoughts, the dreamings of the mind, are of great purposes in which self figures, there will be revealed in words and actions self-exaltation, a lifting up of self. These thoughts are not such as lead to a close walk with God. Those who move without thoughtful consideration move unwisely. They make fitful efforts, strike out here and there, catch at this and that, but it amounts to nothing. They resemble the vine; its tendrils untrained and left to straggle out in every direction will fasten upon any rubbish within their reach; but before the vine can be of any use, these tendrils must be broken off from the things they have grasped and trained to entwine about those things which will make them graceful and well formed.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 6

Brother Bourdeau, the afternoon sun of life may be brighter and more mellow and fruitful than the morning sun, and may continue to grow larger till it drops behind the western hills. Better, far better to die of hard work in some far-off mission field than to be resting with inaction. A true minister of Christ ought to be continually improving, and not settling down without improvement and without study. He can and should dig in the Word of God studiously for subjects that will feed the flock of God and instruct the ignorant. He should be full of matter and bring from the treasure house of God's Word things both new and old. His experience should not be ten, twenty years old, but a daily, living experience that he can give to each his portion in due season.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 7

Your sermons should not be dull and lifeless, but all aglow with light, full of instruction. Look forward, not backward. Keep your heart and mind young by continuous exercise. Never be obliged to tug at your memory to relate your past experience. What is that to you today, or to others? You should have a fresh experience. Do not boast of what you have done in the past, but give evidence what you can do by doing something now. Let your works and not your words praise God. Prove the promises of God, that they who are planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall bring forth fruit in old age, to show that the Lord is upright and that there is no unrighteousness in Him.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 8

You need the quickening grace of Christ to energize your movements, that you will not be so slow in all you do. You need to put earnestness into your sermons. You need not be lengthy, but have your subject matter clear and well defined. Do not deliver your discourses with hesitancy as though you did not yourself half believe what you were saying. You must learn to be a minuteman. Overcome slowness, hesitation, and undecided, sluggish movements. You are one of those who needs intellectual discipline. You need training of the mind as well as of the habits and the character. You have been altogether too well content with yourself as you are. Your education is not finished and never will be. Education is the work of a lifetime; and when this life ends, it goes forward into the future life. You have subjects which you present before the people, but they are not half what they should be in strength of argument, in connection of ideas, and in presentation. They lack in force. You have not improved your capabilities; the faculties of the mind have not been cultivated. For this reason the precious fruit does not appear. Because of the want of protracted, determined, painstaking endeavor, there will flow out from you an influence that will be decided upon those who are young in the faith and experimenting as workers in the cause of God.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 9

But if the young worker shows more earnestness than is evidenced by the experienced minister, how can the latter be any help to this man young in the faith and young in experience, and who has need of being educated in every movement, that he shall not receive a wrong mold? Your influence is not what it should be, and what it may be. Your mind needs to be taxed by dwelling upon difficult problems. Diligent, earnest students of the Scriptures will find leisure moments when walking, when riding upon the cars, or when at home with the Bible in hand they read, contemplate, and cultivate the mind to deep and earnest thought which will produce fruit. Vigorous mental efforts, habits of diligence, and prompt action will be established. As for failure, they do not think of this. They will not allow themselves to fail.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 10

You could give an hour each day to your children, to educate them, even if it be in the early morning. You would thus teach them to place a value upon time. You can, when it is thought proper, be diligent in studying German or perfecting yourself more thoroughly in the French language. Efforts made in a determined, unconquerable spirit will succeed.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 11

Many of our laborers might today be intellectual giants had they not been content to meet a low level, but been diligent and let their thoughts and investigations plow deep. Many of our young people are in danger of being superficial, of failing to grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. They consider that they have a sufficient degree of knowledge and understanding of subjects; and if they do not love study, they will not plow deep to obtain all the treasures possible for them to acquire.4LtMs, Lt 33,

Some of our ministers have a runway of discourses which they use without variation year after year—the same illustrations, the same figures, and almost the same words. They have ceased to be students. There is an end to improvement, and they stagger under the load of a few set discourses to prevent mental decrepitude. But by the everlearning student, new light, new ideas, new gems of truth will be found and eagerly grasped. He thinks; the laws of the mind require him to think. The human intellect gains expansion and vigor and acuteness by being taxed. The mind must work, or it will dwindle. It will starve unless it has fresh subjects to think upon. Unless it is made to think hard, it will surely lose its power of thinking.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 13

The perusal of works upon our faith, the reading of arguments from other minds, the restoration of old sermons are not that which will make the mind work. There are powers to be brought in to penetrate beneath the surface. This is compared to digging for the truth as for hid treasures. There must be a continual tax placed upon the mind, a continual progress made. The Bible is the best Book in the world for the intellect. The grand themes that are presented, the dignified simplicity of its manner of handling the mysteries which it reveals, the illumination which it throws into the mind bring strength and vigor to the understanding.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 14

Every student of the Scriptures will come from his discipline of study ennobled. His mind will be more elevated and expanded. He will, while searching the Scriptures with a humble heart, have suggestions and fresh ideas that he can present to other minds. The minister must receive a new endowment of life and power and be indeed a channel of light. There are those in the ministry who have been readers of the Bible, but who think themselves so well versed in the Scriptures that they do not study it, notwithstanding this very Book will be unfolding truth through eternal ages. God wants His delegated servants to be good preachers, and in order to do this they must be diligent students; they must bring out from the treasure house of God things new and old; they must understand the doctrinal subjects and be as well versed in the practical.

Studious habits, a firm hold from above, will qualify them for their position as ministers of the gospel of Christ. Mental activity will produce health, and this is better than a sluggish, disorderly, untrained mind. Many become worthless as ministers after advancing in age and cease their labors at the very time when their experience would be of advantage and when they can ill be spared. Had they worked the brain, they would have been fruitful in old age.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 15

The gospel is not properly taught and represented before unbelievers by men who have ceased to be students, who have, as it were, graduated as far as the searching of the Scriptures is concerned, and they bring a reproach upon the truth by the manner in which they handle it. If men obtain the ears of the people, [the] very best quality of preaching is needed, because pleasing fables are presented by eloquent lips. Gray hairs may be crowned with superior wisdom and piety. Remember that that which we achieve here is not left behind; it is taken into the future immortal life. The mind must not be the repository of a confused medley of ideas, but it must be trained to bring these ideas into order. The mind must be disciplined and richly furnished with the knowledge of imperishable truths.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 16

Brother Bourdeau, you are the man who has ceased to be a Bible student. You are the man who is intellectually lazy. You may now redeem the past in some degree, but never fully. Begin now and harness up the mind for effort and expansion, and say in the strength of Jesus Christ, I will study for eternity. Then you will rise above and overcome the sluggish temperament. You will do all quickly when the heart is enlisted in the work.4LtMs, Lt 33, 1886, par. 17

See variant Lt 34a, 1886. Portions of this letter are published in PM 230; PH102 15-17; SpM 132-134.

Dear Brother Butler:

Your letters have been received. Your last in reference to the college came this morning. I was not aware that our college was in debt twenty thousand dollars. This must make it a necessity to call for donations. That which led me to write as I did was the great need of business managers—godly, devoted men to take hold of the work and push it in a God-fearing manner.⁴*LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 1*

The evils of centering so many responsibilities in Battle Creek have not been small. The dangers are great. There are unconsecrated elements that only wait for circumstances to put all their influence on the side of wrong. I can never feel exactly safe in regard to B. C. or B. C. College. I cannot at this time state all my reasons.⁴*LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 2*

Whatever may have been the object in placing the tuition of students at so low figures, the fact that the college has been running behind so heavily is sufficient reason for changing the price that this shall not be the showing in the future. The low price is not in its favor even if the college is not so largely patronaged. Those who really want the advantages to be obtained at Battle Creek will make extra exertions to receive these advantages, and a large class who would be induced to come because of the low tuition would be of no benefit to other students or to the church. The larger the number, the more tact, skill, and vigilance [are] required to keep them in order and from becoming demoralized.⁴*LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 3*

Some provision should be made in having a fund raised to loan to the worthy, poor students who desire to give themselves to the missionary work; and in some cases they should even receive donations. Then these youth should have it plainly set before them that they must work their way, as far as possible, and partly defray their own expenses.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 4

The churches in different fields should feel that a solemn responsibility rests upon them to train youth and educate talent to engage in missionary efforts. When they see any in the church who give promise of making useful workers, but who are not able to educate themselves, they should lift that responsibility and send them to the college to be instructed and developed with the object in view of becoming workers in the cause of God. There is material that needs to be worked up and that would be of good service as laborers for God, but are too poor to obtain the advantages of the College, and all the churches should feel it a privilege to bear the responsibility of defraying their expenses.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 5

The tuition should be placed higher; and if there are some who need help, let them be helped as above stated. When the college was first started, there was a fund placed in the Review and Herald office for the benefit of those who wished to obtain an education, but had not the means. This was used by several students until they could get a good start and earn enough to replace the amount they had drawn, that others might be benefited by it. That which costs little will be appreciated little. That which costs something near its real value will be estimated accordingly.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 6

If there were less students and those of a hopeful character, it would be a blessing to Battle Creek. If there are men as teachers in the college and associated with it who are well balanced, who have a strong moral influence, who know how to deal with minds, and who possess the true missionary spirit, then if the college were crowded so as to necessitate the building of another equally large, it would be the best missionary field in the world. But it is the ability that is greatly needed in the college.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 7

If these superior qualities were found in the men connected with the office at Battle Creek so that they could have a controlling influence over the students, then the outlook would not be so discouraging. Whatever the men employed there may think of their ability, I have reason to say that they will have to be greatly improved before they will fill the bill. They may feel competent to give counsel, but they are in need of counsel from Him who is unerring in wisdom. I know whereof I speak. Great and important interests are in danger of being misshaped and of coming forth defective from their hands. If some felt their ignorance more, and would depend less on self, be less self-sufficient, then they might learn of the great Teacher meekness and lowliness of heart.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 8

I would say, in regard to the college, increase your prices and have a better class of students. But provision should be made to do the very best for those who do come; to secure to them every advantage healthwise and every advantage for intellectual strength and moral power. I do see the need of still another boarding house, and there may be need of another building for the students, but I cannot see how you can do better than to do as you have done in calling for means while that debt is on the college. It ought not to be there; and if there had been the right kind of planning, it would not have been there. I mean if those especially employed in the college were all enterprising men, they would not be narrowed down. Their ideas would be broader. They would constantly be exercising tact and ingenuity and devising means whereby the college should not become burdened with debt.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 9

There are not men of sufficient breadth and depth in your councils or in the office, and this is the reason I wrote as I did. Now I will have nothing more to say in the matter. Go ahead according to your best light. I have confidence that the Lord will look upon us in mercy and will surely help us in every time of need.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 10

If we only had devoted, spiritually minded workers connected with our important institutions, who relied upon God more than upon themselves, then we should certainly look for far greater prosperity than we hitherto have had. But where is a decided want of humble trust, and an entire dependence upon God, then we are sure of nothing. Our great want today is men who are baptized with the Holy Spirit of God. Men who walk with God as did Enoch. Men who are not so narrow in their outlook that they will bind about the work in the place of enlarging it. Men who will not say as did Aldrich, "Religion is religion, business is business." Oh, we need men who can take in the situation. Men who are far-seeing. Men who can study from cause to effect. Well, I will say no more. Do what you can for the college. But I could not say this without saying more, which I have done.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 11

I will give extracts from a letter written to Bro. Haskell Nov. 8, 1880.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 12

"Dear Bro. Haskell:

"The interest of every part of the cause is as dear to me as my life, and every branch of the work is important. I was shown that there is great danger now of making the tract and missionary work so absorbing that it will become intricate through a multiplicity of plans, that it will become perplexing and absorb every other interest. I was shown that there was too much machinery in the tract and missionary work, and in the Sabbath school. There was form and arrangement, but little Christlike simplicity felt and practiced by the workers. We want less machinery and mechanical arrangement and more heart work, more real piety and true godliness. Especially in the missionary workings everywhere there needs to be piety, purity, and wise generalship, and then far greater and much better work would be done with less expenditure of means." [A page possibly missing here. See Lt 2, 1880.]4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 13

There is a broad field to be covered, and there is a getting above the simplicity of the work. Now is the time to work and to work in the wise counsel of God. If you connect unconsecrated persons with the mission fields and with the Sabbath schools, our work will take on the formal mold and be without Christ. The workers must study carefully and prayerfully in every part of the field how to work in the simplicity of Christ and in an economical manner, to plan and devise the most successful manner of reaching hearts.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 14

We are in danger of spreading over and starting into enterprises to do more work than we can possibly attend to properly. There is danger of overdoing and of leaving some important parts of the work to be neglected. To undertake a large amount of work and do nothing perfectly would be a bad plan. We are to move forward, but not get so far above the simplicity of the work that it will be impossible to look after the enterprises entered into without sacrificing our best helpers to keep things in working order. Life and health must be regarded.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 15

While we should be ever ready to follow the opening providence of God, we should lay no larger plans, occupy no more ground in branching out than there is help and means to bind off the work well and keep up and increase the interest already started. While there are larger plans and broader fields constantly opening for the laborers, there must be broader ideas, and broader views in regard to the workers who are to labor to bring souls into the truth.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 16

Our young ministers must be encouraged to take hold of the work with energy, and labor must be given as well as encouragement to these men. They must be trained and disciplined to carry forward the work in simplicity. I am astonished to see how little some of your young ministers are appreciated and how little encouragement they receive. Yet some of them cling to the work and do anything and everything with unselfish interest. These will yet be lost to the cause because they are not receiving proper encouragement.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 17

Narrowness and dishonest dealing must not come into the settlement with the workers high or low. The course pursued towards Eld. Lane while he was laboring in the East was after the eastern fashion, but not after God's plan. The support in sympathy and union of help was withdrawn from him. He felt it keenly, and it nearly ruined him. He never fully recovered from this wound. The course pursued toward Elders Lane and Corliss in the South was not after God's order. The course Eld. L. Whitney pursued in New York in his sharp criticism, and giving them limited wages, was not as God would have it. It was his ways, but not God's ways. There must be more of Christ's ways and less of self. Sharp criticisms should be repressed. Sympathy, compassion, and love should be cultivated in every worker. Unless Jesus comes in and takes possession of the heart; unless self is subdued and Jesus exalted, we shall not prosper as a people. I testify that which I have seen. I beseech of you, my brethren, to labor in God wholly. Do not have too many plans, but strive to have the work carried on healthfully, circumspectly, and with a thoroughness, that it will not ravel out.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 18

There is a subject that I wish to mention to you. It is the matter of royalties on books. W. C. White has received letters since he returned from America from A. R. Henry of a very decided character on this point. W. C. W. has stated the positions taken by your board in Battle Creek. I am sorry that they are not farseeing in judgment. They evidence that they are narrow in their views and comprehension. They will arouse much unpleasantness of feeling in the bookmakers and will not accomplish that which they have undertaken. This movement will create a want of harmony. God will not sanction any such plans as they have in view, because they are not just. Here is where the danger comes in when such men as Russell Hart and Will Sisley are depended upon to make decisions. They cannot be proper judges in this matter. While I respect the men, I do not honor their judgment. Bro. A. R. Henry is not a proper judge in this matter. None of these men take in the situation. They are not writers or bookmakers.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 19

Selfish policy is not heavenborn, but it is earthly. The leading maxim is, "The end justifies the means." And in pursuing the course entered upon, it stops at nothing, but will seek for its own success. This may be traced in every department of business. It is the presiding element in every class of society, and in the grand councils of nations, and presides in the council of every meeting where the spirit of Christ is not the ruling principle. Prudence and caution, tact and skill need to be cultivated by every one who is connected with the office of publication and with those who serve in our college and sanitarium. But the laws of justice and righteousness must not be left [to] one side, and the principle of all prevailing be to make their own branch of the work a success, regardless of other branches of the work. The interest of others should be closely investigated to see that no one's right is invaded.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 20

The policy plan is a snare. While the council may pride themselves in the thought that they are doing a very nice thing, they show a short-sighted wisdom which will cripple their own efforts for success. The structure must be built upon a right foundation in order to stand. When the board of the Publishing Association takes it upon them to urge the matter that all the profits of books shall go to the Publishing Association, they are seeking to control matters which do not come under their jurisdiction. They are taking upon themselves a work which they cannot carry out.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 21

These brainworkers have as much interest in the cause of God as those who compose the board or council, who are willing to be conscience for them. Some of these have had a connection with the work almost from its infancy. God has not placed upon this board the work of being conscience for others. They should not seek so persistently to force men to their terms. The policy plan is not to be classed with discretion, although it is too often mistaken for this. The policy plan is a species of selfishness in whatever cause it is exercised. It will stop at nothing which will make them successful. But discretion uses judgment and is never narrow in its workings. It has large and broad ideas, and the eye of the mind is capable of taking in more than one object. It views things from all sides of the question, while policy has a short range of vision and can see every object near at hand, but fails to discover objects at a distance. It is ever watching for opportunities to obtain advantage which belongs not to them. They would build themselves up by pulling out the foundation from another man's building.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 22

Let it not be necessary for God to send a rebuke to men in responsible positions who should be guardians of the people, and especially of the interests of those who have long served in the cause of God, whose pen and voice have been active in bringing up the work to its present proportions. I wish I could lay these matters before these men in their true light. I have been connected with the work of publishing from its commencement; and since the Publishing Association was formed, light has been given in perplexity and the Lord has oftentimes spoken and laid down principles and rules which must be carried out by all the workers. The grave responsibilities resting upon those in positions of trust were continually kept before us, and we sought the Lord from three to five times a day to give us heavenly wisdom, that we should sacredly guard the interests of the cause of God and the interests of His chosen people. I have been repeatedly shown that we must sacredly guard the interests of God's cause as well as the interests of His chosen people. I was shown that those who preside over these institutions should ever bear in mind that there is a chief Director which is the God of heaven. There should be strict honesty in their business transactions in every department of the work. While there should be firmness in preserving order, there should be compassion, mercy, and forbearance incorporated into their characters. Justice has a twin sister which is love. These should stand side by side.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 23

It has been repeatedly presented before me that God was observing every transaction in that office. "Thou God seest me" [Genesis 16:13] should be ever in the mind, and there should be with every one who bears responsibilities in the office courtesy and Christian politeness exercised. They should have a sense of the ever-abiding presence of Christ which will prevent the encroachment upon others' rights which is so common in the world's practice, but which is an offense to God. The board of directors should ever act as under the divine eye, and with a continual sense that they are only finite men, and are liable to make mistakes in judgment and in decisions and plans, unless they are closely connected with God. As they are only weak and erring men themselves, they should feel kindness and pity for others who may err. The divine standard must be met. You should take the Lord with you into every one of your councils. If you sense that God is in your assemblies, every transaction will be conscientiously, carefully, and prayerfully considered. Every unprincipled act will be repressed and uprightness characterize the dealings in small as well as great matters. There should be the cultivation of universal kindness with every worker. Seek counsel of God first, for this is necessary in order for you to properly counsel together.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 24

There should be a watchcare lest the busy activities of life, the engrossment of business, should so accumulate as to lead the workers to neglect prayer when they most need the strength prayer would give them, because of business matters which are in danger of crowding godliness out of the soul through overdevotion to business. Here come in all the evils, because they defraud their souls of the strength and heavenly wisdom which are waiting their demand upon them. They need that illumination which God alone can give them, and they are unfitted to transact business unless they shall have this wisdom. There are a few words of formal prayer uttered at the commencement of the meetings, but the heart is not brought into sympathy and harmony with God by earnest, importunate prayer offered with broken hearts and contrite spirits in living faith. If they divorce themselves from the God of wisdom and power, they cannot preserve that high-souled integrity in dealing with their fellow men which God requires. Without divine wisdom, their own spirit and the objectionable traits of their own character will be woven into the decisions they make. And if these men are not in communication with God, Satan will just as surely be one in their council and take advantage of their unconsecrated state in their decisions. There will be acts of injustice because God was not presiding in their councils. The Spirit of Christ must be an abiding, controlling power over the heart and mind. In the world, the god of traffic is the god of fraud. It must not be thus with those who are dealing with God's cause. The worldly principle and standard is not to be the standard of those who are connected with sacred things.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 25

Some years ago the matter of the publication of books came up, and plans were laid which I cannot now call to mind. It was something like this, that no individual was to be benefited by the publication of their books. I think it was as far back as when J. Aldrich was serving as highest authority in the publishing association. [Line illegible regarding Elder White's suffering from disease] ... and a proposition was then made to us which my husband, without ability to fully consider, assented to, that the publishing association should have the benefits of his books. I was considering the matter and thought like this: I wish the testimonies to go to as many as possible. It was a message from God to His people, and I wished no benefits personally for this work. And thus we stated the matter. But shortly after, I was shown that this was not wisdom to relinquish our rights to manage and control our own writings: that we would know better how to handle the profits of these books than those who had far less experience; that publications were to be multiplied, and the profits that we would receive would enable us to lead out in the advancing work and to build up the interests of the cause and to carry others with us in the work; that there was a principle to be maintained to guard the interests of the true workers—ourselves were not the only ones that this decision would effect; that there was justice to be maintained; that the cause of God would be continually widening; it would take in its embrace the whole world as its field; that the wants of the cause of God would not be determined by one man's mind and one man's obscured vision; that there would be important work done in God's moral vineyard, and no man should feel that the part of the work over which he presides is to be all absorbing and swallow up all other interests.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 26

This settled our minds upon this point, and we have had no reason to change them.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 27

I have been shown that brain workers have a God-given capital. The improvement of their brain belongs to God, not to man. If the worker gives the time to his employer for which he receives his pay, then he has no further claim upon him. If by diligent and close economy of moments he prepares matter for publication, it is his to do with in the fear of God as he thinks he can serve the cause best. If he gives up all except a small royalty, he should not be urged to do more; he has done a good work for the one who handles the books; but if the publishers want the whole, and cannot see how they are exceeding their rights in this urgency, it would be the worst thing that could be done, for the author to accommodate this grasping, avaricious spirit, even with the plea that it is for the cause of God. These authors are responsible for the means which they receive and how they use them. There will be many calls for means. I was shown that there would be many interests to build up, that my husband and myself would be called upon to invest in meetinghouses that would have to be erected that would never come into existence unless some one could feel and know the needs of the cause and lead out in investments of means themselves.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 28

I was shown that mission fields would have to be entered which would require means. And those to whom God has entrusted talents are to trade upon these talents according to their ability, for they are to act their part in carrying forward these interests. I was shown that we would not be working for the best and most successful interests of the cause of God to have our income barely enough to sustain life, for we would see many ways and opportunities to help the cause, because of our experience, which others would not discern. God had in His wise providence given the ability to write, and He designed means should come into our hands to be used wisely. We were not to be restricted by compromise, but use the means that we should obtain as God's stewards to invest in His cause when and where the Spirit of God should indicate. It was not our duty to shift our stewardship upon any man or men. God Himself had given us the ability to write, and God called upon us to use this entrusted talent for the advancement of His cause.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 29

I was shown that there were poor men whose only means to obtain a livelihood was by the use of their brainwork. The position we would at that time take would surely affect others as well as ourselves. There were men who had not grown up with our institutions and been benefited with the instructions that God had given from time to time, businessmen who would not incorporate in their business management religion and the Spirit of Christ; they would separate religion in a large degree from their business; therefore even the publishing association should not be made an all-controlling power. Individual talent and individual right must be respected. Should rules then be established, arrangements entered into to invest the benefits of personal talent in the publishing association, other important interests would be crippled; men would have a controlling power in connection with the publishing association who would not at times have compassion and make a difference, ever guarding the interests of those in poverty and in distress. There would be one iron rule to bear upon all after the worldly policy rather than the Spirit of Christ. Principles established would mean more to others than to us; we must therefore guard every decision.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 30

I was shown that we should not, my husband and myself, be dependent upon others, for there would be men connected with our institutions who have been educated and trained as businessmen of the world who would make us feel our dependence if they had a chance; for all men are not in character as God would have them—tender, compassionate, and Christlike. He would have us guard the means entrusted to us to use in different branches of His work; we should have to lead out in different enterprises by investing means, and by this act stimulate others. We should not make donations largely to any one institution; for our message was a world-wide message, and there would be necessities continually arising that would demand means. To every man He has given his work, talents of means and of influence, and those who have the cause of God at heart will understand the voice of God telling them what to do. They will have the burden to push the work where it needs pushing, while some engaged in some other branch of the work will see only the interest of that branch. Other branches of the work would be left to suffer because of the want of far-seeing judgment.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 31

I have several times been shown that there has been a close, ungenerous spirit exercised toward Bro. Bell from the very first of his labors in Battle Creek. It makes me sad to state the reasons: because he came to them in poverty, and a stranger; because he was a poor man, he has been placed in unpleasant positions and made to feel his poverty; because that men connected with our institutions have thought that they could bring him to their terms, he has had a very unpleasant time. There are unpleasant chapters in his experience that would not have passed into history, if his brethren had been kind and dealt with him after the manner of Christ. The record in heaven has been of that character that some will not be proud to meet in the day of final settlement of all accounts. The Lord's cause should always be free from the slightest injustice. Any work connected with God's cause should be free from the slightest act of littleness or oppression.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 32

There were some men and women who invested means in the publishing association as a donation. Afterward these individuals through misfortunes were brought to actual distress and want. When my husband was stricken down by disease, they came to the ones who occupied his place and begged that some of the means which they had invested in good faith should be returned to them again as they had no means at their command. The matter was treated on the policy plan: business is business, religion is religion. They reasoned that nothing donated to the cause should any portion of it be returned to the donor under any circumstances; and they took no means whatever to relieve the situation of those in distress. When my husband returned to his position in the office, these persons laid the matter before him. Some of the means received from widows my husband had objected to when they freely offered it and made statements upon the books that they should have their means back when they needed it. But notwithstanding this, their cases were past by with indifference. Every such matter treated in this way is after the worldly policy, but not in accordance with the character of Christ. The cause of God can best be served in ever considering in tenderness the cases of suffering humanity.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 33

In the cause of God, Christ's spirit and manner of working is to be carried out in every particular. The laws of mercy and justice will be a ruling principle in every department where Christ abides. Men in connection with the work of God, in order to be qualified for their position of trust, must be Christlike in all their dealings with one another. These Bible principles we have labored to have maintained from the very first in our publishing association. We have had to fight these battles over and over with men connected with the publishing association. This is God's institution. We prize this instrumentality too highly to allow one blot or stain to rest upon it if we can do or say anything to prevent it.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 34

The policy which worldly businessmen adopt is not to be chosen and carried out by men connected with our institutions. I think it was in 1881 that the precious light was given me upon the scenes of the judgment. Then the books registering the deeds and actions of men revealed [that] the dealings of men professing godliness in our institutions were after the worldling standard, but not in strict accordance with God's great standard of righteousness. That which bears some close relation to the question in dealing with others, especially those connected with the work of God, was opened to me quite fully. I had a message for Dr. Kellogg and Henry Kellogg, reproving their spirit and manner of dealing with one another. Neither of them was meeting the standard of God's law. The Spirit of Christ did not enter in and control their business arrangements. Their dealing was too much after the sharp policy plan, but not according to God's rule of right and justice. Each was suspicious and jealous that the other was trying to be advantaged at his disadvantage. Their attitude toward each other was not as should exist between Christians.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 35

I saw that there should be no close, sharp dealing with these brethren who were representative men of two important institutions of a different character, but branches of the same work, that both of these men should ever maintain a noble, generous, Christlike spirit in their deal with one another. The spirit of avarice and grasping should have no place in their dealings. God's cause could not be advanced with any action on their part contrary to the spirit and character of Christ. Both of these men should show an unselfish interest, and should seek to advance the interest of the other, for the cause of God and truth can afford to be fair. Any sharp dealing in a single instance would be an offense to God. That which they sewed in their deal to one another they would reap again. A selfish manner of dealing would provoke the same in his brother. Liberality and true courtesy, manifesting the Christian gentlemen in all words and in all business arrangements, would be reflected upon them again in the same kind. But I was shown that a spirit was coming into the councils and board meetings that was after the order of the worldly policy, but not in accordance with God's great rule of righteousness. Anything of this order is as distinct from the spirit of Christ as light is distinct [from darkness].4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 36

There is a critical spirit brought in and personal feelings molding to a greater or less degree decisions that are being made. There is a hard and unsympathetic spirit that is bearing control which is ruling out the spirit of kindness, of compassion, and of love. Those who compose our councils need daily to sit at the feet of Christ and learn in His school to be meek and lowly of heart. They are not prepared to deal justly, and love mercy, and to have the true courtesy which characterized the life of Christ, unless they see the necessity of yoking up with Christ and lifting all the burdens of Christ. The love of Christ must be incorporated into the branches of the several departments of work in the office in order to do justice not only to the work, but to the worker.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 37

Your councils and your board meetings in 1886 need all this instruction just as much and more so than in 1881. Let such men as Russel Hart receive a mold of character and discipline in Christ's school, learning meekness and lowliness of heart of Jesus; then he will be less self-sufficient, less self-confident of his own ability, will not have so high an opinion of himself, and will be regarded by those connected with the office as a Christian brother walking humbly with God, trying to serve in any capacity where he can do the most good without exalting himself at all. This is a lesson he never yet has learned. Therefore he has a new character to form, a new experience to gain in order to give him a fitness to come close to the hearts of his brethren and to deal with minds who are acting a part in the work. He will have to guard himself closely or he will be dictatorial and officious, ready to speak and to give orders and have oversight of things that he is entirely ignorant of, and will disgust the workers in the office. If he takes hold in an humble way, trying to learn in every thing as much as he can, taking the position of a learner rather than a director, then he will make to himself friends and will have influence in the office. Unless he can, by a right manifestation of humbleness and universal kindness, take the position as one of his working brethren, not above them, not esteeming himself more highly than he ought, he cannot bind their hearts to his own, and he will utterly fail in the position that he is expected to fill. He should be swift to hear and slow to speak. He has nearly everything to learn before he can be an instructor to others. 4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 38

Every one that serves in the board meetings needs to seek most earnestly the wisdom from above. The influence of the Spirit of Christ upon their hearts will then place a right mold upon the work. The transforming grace of Christ should transform every board meeting. It will be able to quell tumultuous actions and charm away the unhallowed effects of business, worldly policy which makes them sharp, critical men, ready to accuse and make them overbearing. There will have to be most earnest reformation in the characters of men who are now connected with our important institutions. There is most valuable talent in some respects which these men possess, while in other respects they must bring into their character a different mold after the divine character of Christ. Every one of them must remember they have not yet attained, that the work of character building is not yet finished. If they will improve every ray of light that God has given, and walk in this light, then they will be learning lessons from Christ. They will compare their lives with Christ's life and character, they will discern where they have failed to meet the requirements of God's holy law, and will seek to make themselves perfect in their sphere even as God in heaven is perfect in His sphere.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 39

In these hours of probation they are to seek for perfection of character. They must learn daily of Christ. They are connected with the work of God not because they are perfect, unerring men without defects of character, but notwithstanding their defects, God expects them while connected with His work to be constantly learning and studying how to copy the pattern.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 40

Jesus connected John, Peter, and Judas with Him in His work, making them co-laborers with Him, but at the same time they were to be constantly learning lessons of Christ. They were to gather from His divine teaching instructions which were to correct their wrong ideas and incorrect views of what constituted Christian character. John and Peter were not perfect men, but they improved every opportunity to learn. Peter did not learn the lesson to distrust himself, to be jealous of himself, until he was overcome by the temptations of the devil and denied his Lord. Judas had the same opportunity that these disciples had to learn the valuable lessons from the teachings of Christ, but he was a hearer only and not a doer. The result was seen in his betrayal of his Lord. God has connected men with His instrumentalities, and He wants them to be learners. They are not to feel that there is no improvement for them to make because they stand in responsible positions. If they are to be representative men, to be guardians of the most sacred work ever committed to mortals, they must take the position as learners. They must not feel self-sufficient or self-important, but ever feel that they are treading on holy ground, that angels of God are ready to minister unto them, and they must be in reception of light and heavenly influences daily, or they are no more fit for the work than unbelievers. A transformation will be wrought in the characters of these men which will repress unfavorable traits of character and develop the Christlike, bringing them up to the highest standard of Christian perfection. Judas failed to be benefited because he did not see the importance of being molded in character after Christ's example.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 41

These men today, if they had realized the importance of their position, would have been far in advance, far more qualified to fill the positions of trust.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 42

The Lord guards every man's interest. The interest of the poor man He would have sacredly guarded. He was always the poor man's friend. There is the most wonderful dearth of Christlike love in the hearts of nearly all who are handling sacred things. I want to echo from one part of the earth to the other the love of Christ. The love of Christ should be cultivated and well up in the soul of the Christian like streams in the desert refreshing and bringing gladness, peace, and joy into their own life and the life of others. No one liveth to himself. If there is shown the least oppression of the poor or unjust dealing with them in small or great things, God will hold the actor accountable. The very first work with my brethren is to secure the blessing of God in your own hearts. Here the work begins. Then bring this blessing in your own homes; put away your criticisms, overcome your exacting spirit, let the atmosphere of cheerfulness and kindness pervade your homes. The atmosphere of your homes will be carried with you in the office. Heavenly peace should be the atmosphere surrounding your own souls. Wherever the love of Jesus reigns, there is pitying tenderness and thoughtfulness of others. Here is the most precious work that my brethren can engage in. It is the work of fitting up the character to be Christlike, that they may enter into the mansions which Christ has gone to fit up for them. I cannot be a partaker in any way to injustice in dealing with any one of God's children.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 43

Do not seek to make terms either with Eld. Smith or Prof. Bell or any other brainworker which is not just and fair. Do not urge these men to drive them to accept the terms of those who do not know what it is to make books. In this matter these men have a conscience and are accountable to God for their entrusted capital of talent and what use they make of its improvement. They want the privilege of investing the means which they will acquire by hard labor when and where the Spirit of God shall indicate. My brethren must remember that the cause of God covers more than the publishing house at Battle Creek and the institutions there established. No one knows better than U. Smith how that publishing association came into existence. He has been connected with the publishing work from its earliest years, when it was oppressed by poverty; when the diet upon our tables was hardly sufficient to sustain the wants of nature because self-denial had to be carried into our practical life in eating and in dressing and in the receiving of wages, in order that the paper might live. This was positively necessary then. Those who obtain this experience would be ready under similar circumstances to do the same again, for they know how it is done. It does not come with a good grace for those to come in who have had no experience to take the work and cause when it is prosperous, who have had naught to do in bringing it up in this condition and to press and urge and force the early workers to submit to their terms which these men can see justice in. U. Smith loves the cause of God. He loves the truth, and he will invest his means in advancing the cause of truth where he sees there is a necessity. But leave this burden upon the men whom God has intrusted with talents of influence and of means. They are responsible to God for this. The publishing association or its chief workers are not to assume their stewardship. 4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 44

If these men on the board should be able to bring these workers to their terms, would these writers feel that they had been dealt justly by? Would there not be open a door of temptation before them which would break up the sympathy and harmony of action between these men? The plan that these men would carry out to grasp all the profits for the publishing association would be the worst plan for them that they could imagine. There would a train of evils grow out of this arrangement that would be disastrous to the publishing association. Encouragement would be given to a spirit of intolerance that is coming in to preside in your council rooms—a narrow, conceited spirit which God cannot approve, but which Satan enjoys and longs to have take possession of the men who are connected with the sacred work of God. The Bible precepts must be carried into the every day life. It must be a lamp to your path. There can be no greater deception than for man to think that he can find a better guide in difficulty than the Word of God. It is the worst kind of folly to leave the Lord out of your councils and put confidence in the wisdom of men. You are in your positions of trust in a special sense to be the light of the world. You should feel an intensity of desire to place yourselves in connection with the God of wisdom, light, and knowledge, that you may be channels of light. Important interests are to be considered that relate to the advancement and prosperity of the cause of present truth. How then can you be competent to come to right decisions, to make wise plans, and to give counsels, unless you are thus connected with the source of all wisdom and righteousness? Your councils have been considered in altogether too cheap a light. Common talk, common remarks, comment made upon others' doings have come in for a place in these important meetings. You should consider that the eternal God is a witness in all your councils. The all-seeing eye of Jehovah measures every one of your decisions, and they are compared with His holy law, His great moral standard of righteousness. Men in the position of counselors should be men of prayer, men of faith, unselfish men, men that will not dare to rely on their own human wisdom, but who will pray earnestly for light and intelligence as to the best manner of conducting their business.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 45

Joshua, the commander of Israel, searched diligently the books written by Moses, in which he had faithfully chronicled the directions given of God in His requirements, in His reproofs, in His restrictions, lest he might move unadvisedly. He was afraid to trust his own impulses and his own wisdom. Everything that came from Christ, who was enshrouded by the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, was to him a matter of sufficient importance to be sacredly cherished. He meditated upon the words which had been spoken to [God's] servant Moses day and night. He wanted to know God's will. He wanted to do it.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 46

He was commanded of God to study all the directions which he had been given, to meditate upon them: "For then shalt thou make thy way prosperous, and thou shalt have success." [Joshua 1:8.] This was the secret of Joshua's victory, that amid his accumulated cares and responsibilities, he dared not trust to his own finite wisdom, but he made God his counselor and guide.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 47

The Pharisees and the scribes and elders in Christ's day manifested an avaricious spirit. This brought them under the control of Satan, and was the main cause of their hatred to Christ, because His teachings and His example rebuked everything of this character. If this spirit should be cherished in our institutions under any policy, God cannot abide there. There should not be a grasping spirit toward their brethren, for this is not heaven-born but from beneath. Any injustice done to one of God's children is registered in the books as done unto Christ, as done unto His saints. That success which is gained in taking advantage of another in sharp-dealing will prove to be loss in the end. And that which appears to be failure through the practice of principles that represent the life of Christ is divine success.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 48

The men in connection with the work of God have not yet the crown of immortal glory upon their brow. They are yet engaged in the earthly battles; the work of character building is still going on. They are on probation, being tried and tested by God's great standard of righteousness, and it is their business to show themselves men, true men, loving righteousness and hating every evil practice which makes our world today as was the old world before the flood. They must be men willing to venture something in order to carry out the precious principles laid down in the Word of God. They should make determined efforts to be representative men after God's pattern and rejoice in success only as it flows from obedience to duty and truth. They need not strive to show their wisdom, for the confession of their weakness and a sense of their inefficiency throw them upon the strength of Jesus Christ. They that are whole need not a physician. The greatest loss which they need to deplore is the want of elements woven into their character through life practice of earnestness to do right at whatever cost to themselves. The loss of humility, the loss of faith and sterling integrity should cause them intense sorrow.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 49

If the soul is filled with earthly things, then there is no room for the heavenly intelligence. The affections have not been kept in close communion with God. There is an earthliness in every project that is devised. The communication must be opened. Clear the channel in some way. Man that is to plan and devise for the interests of God's cause must see that his connection with heaven is not cut off. This must be established before he should dare to come into the room for counsel; unless this is the case, Satan will come in with him and manipulate his thoughts and his plans to suit his own satanic majesty. The heavenly atmosphere must surround you in order that your works and plans may be in harmony with heaven. Oh, how important that these representative men keep themselves in the love of God that they may be quick to discern the signals from heaven and ready to respond to them.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 50

March 2

I could not complete this last night in time to mail it; my head became too weary. I wish to say, my brother, that Michigan has been shown me as bound about with extreme caution and with a determination to save means to the conference. Both caution and economy are essential in our work; but unless the mind is broad and can take in the real wants, these elements will be a block before the wheel of progress.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 51

There is talent in Michigan, but it needs to be educated and disciplined. There are those who have some experience who should, with every effort they make in dying churches as well as in new places, select young men or men of mature age to assist in the work. Thus they will be obtaining knowledge by interesting themselves in personal effort, and scores of helpers will be fitting for usefulness as Bible readers, as canvassers, and as visitors in the families. But this kind of work is not being done because there is so great fear that some of the conference money will be used.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 52

There should always be two and two of our brethren to go out together and then as many more as they can rally to engage in the work of visiting and seeking to interest families, making personal efforts. But those who would do something are not encouraged. If mistakes are made, they are not with tender compassion corrected, but they are disheartened. Michigan is one of the best fields in the world, but it wants men of far-seeing judgment who will push the work.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 53

God would have those in responsible positions show tact, skill, and wise generalship in seeing talent, in seizing it, and of putting it to use. God will not work a miracle to advance the truth. He has material in men and women, and He wants the generals in His army to have intelligence to bring it out and put it to use, not be constantly studying how to bind about the work so that it shall not branch out and make a demand for means. Set men to work under those who have some knowledge of the work, who can educate them. Thrust the workers out into the harvest field. All they want is encouragement.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 54

Eld. Fargo's mind must grow with the work, or he must be replaced by someone who will take a more extensive view of what is needed to be done to warn the world. Do something, do it now. Let the pull-back principle go and the go-forward principle come in. The angel with the third message flies swiftly.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 55

E. G. White.

P.S. I have spoken to you the truth because I dared not to withhold it. My words are not for the purpose of discouraging, but of opening before you the fact that although you may have good business qualities and business tact, yet something higher than this is necessary in the work in which you are engaged. You can become men valuable as gold, and this is why I have written as I have. Your characters must bear the character of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 56

E.G.W.

I have received a good letter from Dr. Kellogg. He says he has had a talk with Dr. Maxson and finds him very much changed for the better. [I thought] perhaps the Dr. has changed somewhat, and this brought them where they could work together. I was more pleased than I can express at the reception of this letter.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 57

Brother Whitney and W. C. White have been absent the two last Sabbaths, one week ago at Neuchâtel and last Sabbath at Lausanne. There was much that needed to be looked into. It is the hardest matter to tell what to [do] in the Bourdeau cases. Daniel is in a perfect distress and agony at the thought that any one shall have a word to say in regard to his plans, while he wants to have everything to say about everybody else's work, and on the French paper in regard to their work. He takes upon himself too much responsibility. He was about to send two men into France to work, so Eld. Whitney and W. C. W. have gone down to Lausanne.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 58

His efforts at Geneva proved about fruitless. A. C. Bourdeau joined him, but he has done so little in studying and in laboring that he is rusty. Neither of these men can see his mistakes. I pray that the Lord will help them and imbue them with His Spirit.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 59

Brother Coggeshall and Jenny have just gone to the civil authorities to be married. I have not seen much of her for I have been sick for some weeks. I am better now, but I fear I will have to resort to crutches because of my lame ankles. The one I injured in Battle Creek I dare not bear my weight on.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 60

I have written two articles on our Sabbath schools and sent one to Edson and the other [to] U. Smith.4LtMs, Lt 34, 1886, par. 61

Dear Brother:

Your letters have been received. Your last in reference to the college came this morning. I was not aware that our college was in debt twenty thousand dollars. This must make it a necessity to call for donations. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 1

The evils of centering so many responsibilities in Battle Creek have not been small. The dangers are great. There are unconsecrated elements that only wait for circumstances to put all their influences on the side of wrong. I can never feel exactly safe in regard to Battle Creek or Battle Creek College. I cannot at this time state all my reasons. That which led me to write as I did was the great need of business managers—godly, devoted men to take hold of the work and push it in a God-fearing manner. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 2

Whatever may have been the object in placing the tuition of students at so low figures, the fact that the college has been running behind so heavily is sufficient reason for changing the price, that this shall not be the showing in the future. The low price is not in its favor, even if the college is not so largely patronized. Those who really want the advantages to be obtained at Battle Creek will make extra exertions to receive these advantages, and a large class who would be induced to come because of the low tuition would be of no benefit to other students or to the church. The larger the number, the more tact, skill, and vigilance required to keep them in order and from becoming demoralized. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par.

Some provision should be raised to have a fund raised to loan the worthy poor students who desire to give themselves to the missionary work; and in some cases they should even receive donations. Then these youth should have it plainly set before them that they must work their way as far as possible and partly defray their expenses.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 4

The churches in different localities should feel that a solemn responsibility rests upon them to train youth and educate talent to engage in missionary efforts. When they see any in the church who give promise of making useful workers, but who are not able to educate themselves, they should lift that responsibility and send them to the college to be instructed and developed with the object in view of becoming workers in the cause of God. There is material that needs to be worked up that would be of good service in the Lord's vineyard; but they are too poor to obtain the advantages of the college. The churches should feel it a privilege to take the responsibility of defraying their expenses.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 5

The tuition should be placed higher; and if there are some who need help, let them be helped as above stated. When the college was first started, there was a fund placed in the Review and Herald office for the benefit of those who wished to obtain an education, but had not the means. This was used by several students until they could get a good start and earn enough to replace what they had drawn so that others could be benefited by it. That which costs little will be appreciated little, but that which costs something near its real value will be estimated accordingly.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 6

If there were fewer students, and they were of a hopeful character, it would be a blessing to Battle Creek. If there are men as teachers in the college, and associated with it who are well balanced, and have a strong moral influence, who know how to deal with minds, and possess the true missionary spirit; then if the college were crowded so as to necessitate the building of another equally as large, that would be the best missionary field in the world. It is this ability that is greatly needed in the college.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par.

If these superior qualities were found in the men connected with the office at Battle Creek, the outlook would be more encouraging. Great and important interests are in danger of being misshaped and of coming forth defective from their hands. If some felt their ignorance more and would depend less on self, be less self-sufficient, they might learn of the great Teacher meekness and lowliness of heart.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 8

In regard to the college, I would say, Increase the cost of tuition, and you will have a better class of students. But provision should be made to do the very best for those who come; to secure for them every healthful, intellectual, and moral advantage. I see the need of still another boarding house, and there may be need of another building for the students. I cannot see how you can do better than you have in calling for means while this debt is against the college. It ought not to be there; and if there had been the right kind of planning, it would not exist: that is, if those especially employed in the college were all enterprising men of broader ideas. They would constantly be exercising ingenuity and tact and devising means whereby the college should not become burdened with debt.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 9

If we only had devoted, spiritually minded workers connected with our important institutions, who relied upon God more than upon themselves, we might certainly look for far greater prosperity than we have had hitherto. But where there is a decided want of humble trust, and of an entire dependence upon God, we are sure of nothing. Our great need today is men who are baptized with the Holy Spirit of God; men who walk with God as did Enoch; men who are not so narrow in their outlook that they will bind about the work in place of enlarging it; men who will not say "business is business, religion is religion." We need men who can take in the situation; men who are far-seeing; men who can reason from cause to effect.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 10

I will here give some extracts from a letter written Nov. 8, 1880:4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 11

"The interest of every part of the cause is as dear to me as my life.

Every branch of the work is important. I was shown that there is great danger now of making the Tract and Missionary work so absorbing that it will become intricate through a multiplicity of plans; that it will become perplexing and absorb every other interest. It was also brought before me that there was too much machinery in the Tract and Missionary and in the Sabbath school work. There was form and arrangement, but little of Christlike simplicity felt or practiced by the workers. We want less machinery and mechanical arrangement and more heart work; more real piety and true holiness, especially in the missionary work everywhere. There needs to be piety, purity, and wise generalship, and then far greater and much better work would be done with less expenditure of means.”4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 12

There is a broad field to be covered, and a getting above the simplicity of the work. Now is the time to work, and to work in the wise counsel of God. If you connect unconsecrated persons with the mission fields and with the Sabbath schools, our work will take on a formal mold and be without Christ. The workers must study carefully, prayerfully in every part of the field how to work with the simplicity of Christ, and in an economical manner, to plan and devise the most successful manner of reaching hearts.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 13

We are in danger of spreading over more territory and starting more enterprises than we can possibly attend to properly, <and they will become a wearing burden in absorbing means.> There is danger <to be guarded against> of overdoing some branches of the work and leaving some important parts of <the Lord’s vineyard> to be neglected. To undertake <and plan> a large amount of work and do nothing perfectly would be a bad plan. We are to move forward, but <only in the counsel of God.> [We] must not get so far above the simplicity of the work <we lose our spiritual perception> and it will be impossible to look after the <many accumulated lines of work and> enterprises entered into without sacrificing our best helpers to keep things in order. Life and health must be regarded.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 14

While we should ever be ready to follow the opening providence of God, we should lay no larger plans <in places where our work is represented,> nor occupy more ground than there is help and means to bind off the work well. <Surface plowing means a limited, scattered harvest.> Keep up and increase the interest already started, <until the cloud moves, then follow it.>. While there are broader plans and fields constantly opening for the laborers, our ideas and views must broaden in regard to the workers who are to labor <in new fields in the Lord's vineyard> to bring souls into the truth. Our young ministers must be encouraged to take hold of the work with energy and labor in educating. Encouragement must be given to these men. They must be trained and disciplined to carry forward the work in simplicity. I am astonished to see how little some of our young ministers are appreciated and how little encouragement they receive. Yet some of them cling to the work and do anything and everything with unselfish interest, but some will yet be lost to the cause because they are not receiving proper encouragement.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 15

Narrowness or dishonest dealing must not come into the settlement with the workers, high or low. The course pursued toward Eld. Lane while he was laboring in the East was after the eastern fashion, but not after God's plan. The support, sympathy, and union of the brethren were withheld from him. He felt this keenly, and it nearly ruined him, never fully recovering from the wound. The course pursued toward Elders Lane and Corliss in the South was not after God's order.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 16

There must be more of Christ's ways and less of self. Sharp criticisms should be repressed. Sympathy, compassion, and love should be cultivated in every worker. Unless Jesus comes in and takes possession of the heart; unless self is subdued and Jesus exalted, we shall not prosper as a people. I testify that which I have seen. I beseech of you, brethren, to labor wholly in God. Do not have too many plans, but strive to have the work carried on healthfully, circumspectly, and with such thoroughness that it will not ravel out.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 17

There is another subject which I wish to mention to you. It is the matter of royalties on books. W. C. White has received letters since he returned from America from A. R. Henry of a very decided character on this point. W. C. W. has stated the positions taken by your board in Battle Creek. I am sorry that they are not far-seeing in judgment. They evidence that they are narrow in their views and comprehension. They will arouse much unpleasantness of feeling in the bookmakers and will not accomplish that which they have undertaken. This movement will create a want of harmony. God will not sanction any such means as they have in view, because they are not just. Here is the danger in depending on unsanctified men to make decisions.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 18

Selfish policy is not heaven-born, but earthly. The leading maxim is, "the end justifies the means." And in pursuing the course entered upon it stops at nothing, but seeks its own success. This may be traced in every department of business; it is the prevailing element in every class of society, in the grand councils of nations, and in every meeting where the spirit of Christ is not the ruling principle. Prudence and caution, tact and skill, need to be cultivated by every one who is connected with our institutions. But the laws of justice and righteousness must not be left to one side, nor the all-prevailing principle be to make their own branch of the work a success regardless of other branches. The interests of others should be investigated to see that no one's right is invaded.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 19

The policy plan is a snare. While the council may pride themselves in the thought that they are doing a very nice thing, they show a short-sighted wisdom which will cripple their own efforts for success. The structure must be built upon a right foundation in order to stand. When the board of the Publishing Association takes it upon themselves to urge that all the profits from books shall go to the Publishing Association, they are seeking to control matters which do not come under their jurisdiction. They are taking upon themselves a work which they cannot carry out.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 20

These brainworkers have as much interest in the cause of God as those who compose the board, which is willing to be conscience for them. Some of these have had a connection with the work almost from its infancy. God has not placed upon this board the work of being conscience for others. They should not seek so persistently to force men to their terms. The policy plan is not to be classed with discretion; although it is too often mistaken for this. It is a species of selfishness in whatever cause it is exercised and stops at nothing which promises success; but discretion uses judgment and is never narrow in its workings, has broad ideas, and the eye of the mind is capable of taking in more than one object and views questions from all sides. While policy has a short range of vision, seeing every object near at hand, but failing to discover those at a distance, it is ever watching to obtain advantages which do not belong to it and would build itself up by pulling out the foundation from another's building.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 21

Let it not be necessary for God to send a rebuke to men in responsible positions, who should be guardians of the people, especially of the interests of those who have long served in the cause of God; whose pen and voice have been active in bringing up the work to its present proportions. I wish I could lay these matters before these men in their true light. Ever since the Publishing Association was formed, light has been given in cases of perplexity. The Lord has often spoken, laying down principles and rules which must be carried out by all the workers. The grave responsibilities resting upon those in positions of trust have been continually kept before us, and we have sought the Lord from three to five times a day to give us heavenly wisdom, that we might sacredly guard the interests of the cause and of His chosen people. I have been repeatedly shown that we must do this. It was shown me that those who preside over these institutions should ever bear in mind that there is a Chief Director, even the God of heaven. There should be strict honesty in the business transactions in every department of the work. While there should be firmness in preserving order, there should also be compassion, mercy, and forbearance incorporated into the character. Justice has a twin sister—love, and they should stand side by side.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 22

It has been repeatedly presented before me that God is observing every transaction in that office. “Thou God seest me” [Genesis 16:13], should be ever in mind; courtesy and Christian politeness should be exercised by every one who bears responsibilities in the office. They should have a sense of the everabiding presence of Christ. This would prevent the encroachment upon others' rights which is so common in the world's practice, but which is an offense to God. The Board of Directors should ever act as under the divine eye, with a continual sense that they are finite men and are liable to make mistakes in judgment, decisions, and plans, unless they are closely connected with God and seeking to have every deficiency removed from their characters. As they are only weak and erring men themselves, they should feel kindness and pity for others who may err. The divine standard must be met. You should take the Lord with you into every one of your councils.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 23

If you sense that God is in your assemblies, every transaction will be conscientiously, carefully, and prayerfully considered. Every unprincipled act will be repressed, and uprightness will characterize the dealings in small as well as in large matters. There should be cultivation of universal kindness with the workers. First seek counsel of God, for this is necessary for you to properly counsel together.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 24

There should be a watchcare, lest the busy activities of life, the accumulating business should so engross the workers that it would lead them to neglect prayer when the strength it would give them is most needed. Here come in all the evils, because they deprive their souls of the strength and wisdom of heaven which are waiting their demand upon them. We need that illumination which God alone can give, and we are unfitted to transact business unless we have this wisdom. There are a few words of prayer uttered at the commencement of the meetings, but the heart is not brought into sympathy and harmony with God by earnest, importunate prayer, offered by broken hearts and contrite spirits, in living faith. If they divorce themselves from the God of wisdom and power, they cannot preserve that high-souled integrity in dealing with their fellow men which God requires. Without divine wisdom, the objectionable traits of their characters will be woven into the decisions they make. And if these men are not in communication with God, Satan will just as surely be one in their councils and take advantage of their unconsecrated state in their decisions. There will be acts of injustice because God is not presiding in their councils. The Spirit of Christ must be an abiding, controlling power over the heart and mind. In the world the god of traffic is the god of fraud. It must not be thus with those who are dealing with God's cause. The worldly principle and standard is not to be the standard of those who are connected with sacred things.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 25

Some years ago the matter of publication of books came up, and plans were laid which I cannot now fully call to mind. A decision was made something like this, that no one individual was to be benefited by the publication of his own books. A proposition was then made to us which my husband, without ability to fully consider, assented to, that the Publishing Association should have the benefit of his books. I was considering the matter and thought like this: I wish the testimonies to go to as many as possible; they are a message from God to this people, and I wish no personal benefit from this work. Thus we stated the matter. But shortly after, I was shown that this was not wisdom, to relinquish our right to control our own writings; for we would know better how to [use] the profits of these books, than would those who had far less experience. Publications were to be multiplied, and the profits we would receive would enable us to lead out in the advancing work, to build up the interests of the cause, and to carry others with us in the work. There was a principle to be maintained to guard the interests of the true workers. We were not the only ones who would be affected by this decision. Justice must be maintained; the cause of God would be continually widening—it would embrace the whole world as its field; the wants of the cause would not be determined by one man's mind and one man's obscure vision; there would be important work done in God's moral vineyard, and no man should feel that part of the work over which he presides is to swallow up all other interests.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 26

I have been shown that brainworkers have a God-given capital. The improvement of their brain belongs to God and not man. If the worker gives the time to his employer for which he receives his pay, the employer has no further claim upon him. But if by diligent and close economy of moments he prepares matter for publication, it is his to do with as he, in the fear of God, thinks he can serve the cause of God the best. If he gives up all except a small royalty, he should not be urged to do more; he has already done a good work for those who handle the books; but if the publishers want it all, and cannot see that they are exceeding their rights in the demand, it would be the worst thing that could be done for the author to accede to their grasping, avaricious spirit, even though the plea be that it is for God's cause. The authors are responsible for the manner in which they use means received. There will be many calls for them. It was shown me that there would be many interests to build up and that my husband and myself would be called upon to invest in meeting houses that would have to be erected which would never be built, unless some one should feel and know the needs of the cause and lead out in investments themselves.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 27

I was also shown that there would be mission fields to be entered and this would require means. Those to whom God has entrusted talents are to trade upon these talents according to their ability; for they are to act their part in carrying forward these interests. We would not be working for the best and most successful interests of the cause of God to have our income barely enough to sustain life, as our experience would enable us to see many ways and opportunities of helping the cause which others would not discern. God in His wise providence [has] given the ability to write, and He designs that means should come into our hands to be used wisely, as His stewards, unrestricted by compromise.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 28

It is not our duty to shift our stewardship upon any man or set of men, but to invest our means in His cause when and where the Spirit of God shall indicate. God Himself has given us the ability to write and calls upon us to use this entrusted talent for the advancement of His cause.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 29

It was presented to me that there were poor men whose only means of obtaining a livelihood was their brainwork. There are men who have not grown up with our institutions and been benefited by the instruction that God has given from time to time, businessmen who will not incorporate in their business management the religion and spirit of Christ. They would separate religion in a large degree from their business; therefore even the Publishing Association should not be an all-controlling power. Individual talent and individual right must be respected. Should rules be established and arrangements entered into to invest the benefits of personal talent in the Publishing Association, other important interests would be crippled. Men would at times have a controlling power in connection with the Publishing Association who would not have compassion and guard the interests of those in poverty and distress. There would be one iron rule, after the policy of the world rather than after the spirit of Christ, to bear upon all. The principles established would mean more to others than to us; therefore we must be guarded in every decision.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 30

It was shown me that my husband and myself should not be dependent upon others, because there would be men connected with our institutions who have been educated and trained as businessmen of the world, and they would make us feel our dependence if they had the chance; for all men are not in character as God would have them—tender, compassionate, and Christlike. He would have us guard the means entrusted to us and use it in different branches of His work, at the opportune time stimulating others, by our example, to invest in the different enterprises. We should not invest largely in any one institution, for our message is a world-wide one, and there are necessities continually arising that demand means. To every man He has given his work and talents of means and influence, and those who have the cause of God at heart will understand the voice of God telling them what to do. They will have a burden to push the work where it needs pushing, but others will only see the needs of their own respective branches, and other branches will be left to suffer for want of far-seeing judgment.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 31

It has several times been pointed out to me that there has been a close, ungenerous spirit exercised toward Bro. Bell from the very first of his labors in Battle Creek. It makes me sad to state that the reason is that he came to them in poverty, and a stranger. Because of this poverty he has been placed in unpleasant positions and made to feel his poverty. Because men connected with our institutions have thought they could bring him to their terms, he has had a very unpleasant time. There are unpleasant chapters in his experience which would not have been recorded if his brethren had been kind and dealt with him after the manner of Christ. The record in heaven is of such a character as some will not be proud to meet in the day of final settlement of all accounts. The Lord's cause should always be free from the slightest act of littleness, injustice, or oppression.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 32

There were some men and women who invested in the Publishing Association as a donation. Afterwards through misfortune they were brought to actual distress and want. When my husband was stricken down by disease, they came to the one who occupied his place and begged that some of the means which they have invested in good faith should be returned to them. The matter was treated on the policy plan that business is business and religion is religion. The managers reasoned this way that nothing donated to the cause should be returned under any circumstances, and they took no measure to relieve the situation of those in distress. When my husband returned to his position in the office, these persons laid the matter before him. In the case of means donated by widows, my husband had objected when it was freely offered and had entered upon the books that the money should be returned when the donors needed it. Notwithstanding this, their cases were treated with indifference. Such management may be dictated by worldly policy, but it is not in accordance with the character of Christ. We can best serve the cause of God by ever considering in tenderness the wants of a suffering humanity.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 33

In the cause of God, Christ's spirit and manner of working are to be carried out in every particular. Mercy and justice will be the ruling principles where Christ abides. In order to be qualified for their positions of trust, men who are connected with the work of God must be Christlike in all their dealings with each other. These principles we have labored to have maintained from the very first in our Publishing Association. We have had to fight the battle over and over with men connected with the Publishing Association. This is God's institution, and we prize it too highly to allow one blot or stain to rest upon this instrumentality if we can do or say anything to prevent it.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 34

The policy which worldly business men adopt is not to be chosen or carried out by men connected with our institutions. I think it was in 1881 that the precious light was given me upon the scenes of the judgment. The books registering the deeds of men revealed the dealings of those professing godliness in our institutions, showing that it was after the world's standard and not in strict accordance with God's great standard of righteousness. That which bears a close relation to the question of dealing with others, especially those connected with the work of God, was opened to me quite fully. The Spirit of Christ did not enter into and control the brethren's business arrangements. Their dealings were too much after the sharp policy plan, and not according to God's rule of right and justice. Some were suspicious and jealous, imagining that others were trying to gain advantages at their expense. Their attitude toward each other was not such as should exist between Christians.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 35

I saw that there should be no close, sharp dealing between these brethren who were representatives of two important though different characters of institutions, for they are branches of the same work. They should ever maintain a noble, generous, Christ-like spirit; the spirit of grasping avarice should have no place in their dealings with one another. God's cause cannot be advanced by any acts which are contrary to the spirit and character of Christ. Men should show an unselfish interest, seeking to advance one another's interests; for the cause of God can afford to be fair. Even a single instance of sharp dealing is an offense to God; and that which is sown will be reaped again. A selfish manner of dealing will provoke the same spirit in others. Likewise the manifestation of a Christian gentleman's spirit in word and deed—by liberality, courtesy—will provoke the same spirit in others.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 36

There is a spirit of worldly policy coming into the council and board meetings, a critical spirit in which personal feelings mold in a greater or less degree decisions that are being made. A hard, unsympathetic spirit is ruling out the spirit of kindness, compassion, and love. Those who compose our councils need to daily sit at the feet of Christ, learning in His school to be meek and lowly of heart. They are not prepared to deal justly, to love mercy, and to exhibit that true courtesy which characterized the life of Christ, unless they see the necessity of yoking up with Christ and bearing the burdens of His cause. The love of Christ must be incorporated into the work of the several departments in the office, not only to do justice to the work, but to the workers also.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 37

Your council and board meetings in 1886 need this instruction just as much and even more than in 1881. Let men receive a mold of character in the school of Christ, learning meekness and lowliness of heart from Jesus, and they will be less self-sufficient, less self-confident, and will not have such a high opinion of their own ability, but will be regarded by those in the office as Christian brethren, walking humbly with God, trying to serve in whatever capacity they can do the most good without trying to exalt themselves. This lesson has not been learned by some. Therefore they have a new character to form, a new experience to gain, which shall fit them to come close to the hearts of their brethren and to deal with those who have a part to act in the work. They will have to guard themselves closely, or they will be dictatorial and officious, ready to give orders, to speak of and to take the oversight of things of which they are ignorant, and will thus disgust the workers in the office. If they take hold in an humble way, trying to learn as much as they can, maintaining the position of learner rather than of a director, they will make themselves friends in the office. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 38

Every one that serves in the board meetings needs to seek most earnestly the wisdom from above. The influence of the Spirit of Christ upon their hearts will then place a right mold upon the work. The transforming grace of Christ should be manifest in every board meeting, quelling tumultuous actions and charming away the unhallowed effects of business, and checking the sharp, critical, worldly policy which makes men overbearing and ready to accuse. There will have to be most earnest reformation in the characters of those who are now connected with our important institutions. Some of these men possess valuable talents, but they must fashion their lives after the divine character of Christ. Every one must remember that he has not yet “attained”—the work of character building is not yet finished. [Philippians 3:12.] If they will improve every ray of light God has given, and walk in this light, they will learn lessons from Christ. By comparing their lives with Christ’s character, they will be able to discern where they have failed to meet the requirements of God’s holy law and will seek to make themselves perfect in their sphere, even as God is perfect in His sphere. If men of today realized the importance of their positions, they would have been far in advance, far more qualified to fill positions of trust than they are. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 39

In these hours of probation we are to seek for perfection of character. We must learn daily of Christ. We are connected with the cause of Christ, not because we are perfect and unerring, but notwithstanding these defects; and God expects those connected with His work to be constantly studying how to copy the Pattern.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 40

Jesus connected John, Peter, and Judas with Him in His work, making them co-laborers with Him, and at the same time they were to be constantly learning lessons of Christ, gathering from the divine Teacher instructions that would correct their wrong ideas and incorrect views of what constituted a Christian character. John and Peter were not perfect, but they improved every opportunity to learn. Peter did not learn to be jealous and distrustful of himself until he was overcome by the devil and denied his Lord. Judas had the same opportunities to learn as did the other disciples, but he was a hearer only, and not a doer. The result was manifested in the betrayal of his Lord. God has connected men with His instrumentalities, and He wants them to be learners; they must not feel self-sufficient, or self-important, but must ever realize that they are treading on holy ground. Angels of God are ready to minister unto them, and they must receive light and heavenly influences daily, or they are no more fit for the work than are unbelievers. A transformation will be wrought in those who will repress unfavorable traits of character and develop Christ-like dispositions; this alone will bring them up to the highest standard of Christian character. Judas failed to be benefited because he did not see the importance of having his character molded after the example of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 41

The Lord guards every man's interests. He was always the poor man's friend and would have his interests sacredly guarded. There is a most wonderful dearth of the love of Christ in the hearts of nearly all of those who are handling sacred things. I would echo from one part of the earth to the other that the love of Christ should be cultivated; it should well up in the soul of the Christian like streams in the desert, refreshing the heart, bringing gladness, peace, and joy into their own as well as into other lives. No one liveth unto himself. If there is the least oppression practiced toward the poor, or unjust dealing with them, either in large or small things,

God will <make> the actor accountable. The very first work, my brethren, is to secure the blessing of God in your own hearts. This is where the work begins. Then take the blessing into your homes; let the atmosphere of cheerfulness and kindness prevail; put away your criticisms, overcome your exacting spirit. The atmosphere that surrounds you in your homes will also envelop you in the office. Wherever the love of Jesus reigns, there is pity, tenderness, and thoughtful care for others. The most precious work that my brethren can engage in is that of forming a Christlike character, that they may enter into the mansions which Christ has gone to prepare for them. I cannot be a party to any unjust dealing with any of God's children. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 42

Do not seek to make terms with Elder Smith, Prof. Bell, or any other brainworker that is not perfectly just and fair. Do not urge or compel them to accept terms dictated by those who do not <know what> it <means> to make books. They have a conscience and are accountable to God for the use and improvement of their entrusted talents; and they want the privilege of investing the means which they acquire by hard labor, when and where the Spirit of God shall indicate. My brethren must remember that the cause of God includes more than the publishing house and other institutions established at Battle Creek. No one understands better than Brother Smith the difficulties through which the Publishing Association was brought into existence, for he has been connected with it from its earliest years when it was oppressed by poverty, and self-denial had to be carried into our practical life. The table was hardly supplied with sufficient food to sustain our lives; there was economy in dressing and in wages paid. This was positively necessary in order that the paper might live. Those who passed through these experiences would be ready, under similar circumstances, to undergo the same privations again. It does not show very good grace for those who have had no part in <bringing> the work up to its present prosperous condition, to press and urge, and even try to force the early workers to submit to terms which they can see no justice in. Brother Smith loves the cause of God. He loves the truth and will invest his means to advance it wherever he sees that it is necessary. But leave this burden upon those with whom God has entrusted talents and means; they are responsible to Him, and the Publishing Association or its chief workers are not to assume their stewardship.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 43

If the board should succeed in bringing the workers to their terms, would the writers feel that they had been dealt with justly, would it not rather open a door of temptation to them and break up sympathy and harmonious action between the brethren? If they should carry out this plan to grasp all the profits for the Publishing Association, it would be worse than they can imagine. A train of evils would grow out of such an arrangement that would be disastrous to the association. And it would encourage a spirit of intolerance, a narrow, conceited spirit, which God cannot approve, but which Satan enjoys and longs to have take possession of those who are connected with God's sacred work.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 44

The Bible precepts must be carried out in every-day life. They will be a lamp to your feet and a light unto your path. The greatest of all deceptions is for a man to think that he can find a better guide through difficulties than is found in the Word of God. It is the worst kind of folly to leave the Lord out of your councils and put your confidence in the wisdom of men. In your positions of trust, you are, in a special sense, to be the light of the world; and in order that you may be clean channels of light, you should feel an intense desire to place yourselves in connection with the God of light, of wisdom, and knowledge. Important interests that relate to the prosperity and advancement of present truth are to be considered; and how can you be competent to arrive at right decisions, to give wise counsels, and to make proper plans, unless you are connected with the Source of all wisdom and righteousness.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 45

Your councils have been regarded in altogether too cheap a light, and common talk and comments upon others' doings have found a place in these important meetings. You should bear in mind that the all-seeing eye of Jehovah is a witness in all your councils; He measures every one of your decisions and compares them with His holy law, the great moral standard of righteousness. Those holding the positions of counselors should be unselfish men, men of faith, men of prayer, men that will not dare to rely upon their own human wisdom, but will seek earnestly for light and intelligence as to what is the best manner of conducting their business. Joshua, the commander of Israel, searched the books diligently in which Moses had faithfully chronicled the directions given by God, His requirements, reproofs, and restrictions, lest he should move inadvisedly. Joshua was afraid to trust his own impulses or his own wisdom. He regarded everything that came from Christ, who was enshrouded by the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, as of sufficient importance to be sacredly cherished. He meditated day and night upon the words which had been spoken to Moses, the servant of God. Joshua desired to know and to do God's will, and he was commanded by God to study and meditate upon all the directions which had been given: "For then, shalt thou make thy way prosperous, and thou shalt have success." [Joshua 1:8.] The secret of Joshua's victories was that, even amid his accumulated cares and responsibilities, he dared not trust to his own finite wisdom, but made God his counselor and guide.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 46

The Pharisees, scribes, and elders in Christ's day manifested an avaricious spirit which brought them under the control of Satan and was the main cause of their hatred toward Christ; for His teaching and example rebuked everything of this character. If such a spirit should be cherished in our institutions under any pretense, God cannot abide there. There should not be a grasping spirit manifested toward brethren, for it is not born of heaven, but from beneath. Any injustice done to God's children is registered in the books of heaven as done unto Christ. That success which is attained through taking advantage of another by sharp dealing will prove to be loss in the end, but that which appears to be loss through the practice of principles that represent the life of Christ is divine success.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 47

Those connected with the work of God have not yet the crown of immortal glory upon their brows, but are still engaged in earthly battles. They are still on probation, being tried and tested by God's great standard of righteousness; and it is their business to prove themselves true men, lovers of righteousness and haters of every evil practice which makes our world today like the world before the flood. They must be men willing to venture something in order to carry out the precious principles laid down in the Word of God. They should make determined efforts to be representative men after God's pattern, rejoicing in success only when it arises from obedience to duty and truth. They need to strive to show their wisdom by the confession of weakness and inefficiency; for this throws them upon the strength and all-sufficiency of Christ. They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. The most deplorable lack any can suffer is that of an earnest determination to do right at whatever cost to self. The lack of humility, the loss of faith and sterling integrity should cause intense sorrow. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 48

If the soul is filled with earthly things; if the heart has not maintained close communion with God, there is no room for heavenly intelligences to work; and there is an earthliness in every project that is devised. The communication with heaven must be kept open, clear the channel in some way. He that is to plan and devise in the interests of God's cause must see that his connection with heaven is not cut off before he should dare come into the room for counsel, otherwise Satan will accompany him and manipulate his thoughts and plans to suit his satanic majesty. The atmosphere of heaven must surround you if you would have your plans and works in harmony with heaven. O how important it is that the representative men keep themselves in the love of God, so that they may be quick to discern and respond to the signals from heaven. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 49

March 2nd. My head became so weary I could not complete this in time to mail it last night. I wish to say to my brethren that Michigan has been shown to me as being bound about with too extreme caution, a determination to save means for the Conference; but while economy and caution are essential in our work, unless the mind is broad enough to take in its real needs, these elements will be a block before the wheel of its progress. 4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 50

There is talent in Michigan, but it needs to be educated and disciplined. There are some who have experience who should put forth every effort in the dying churches as well as in new places to select suitable young men and men of mature age to assist in the work. Thus they will obtain useful knowledge by interesting themselves in personal efforts, and scores of helpers may be fitted up for usefulness as Bible workers, canvassers, and family visitors. But this kind of work is being neglected because there is such great fear of using the Conference money.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 51

Our brethren should always go out two and two, taking as many other as they can rally to engage in personal visiting, seeking to interest families. But those who would work in these lines are not encouraged; but when mistakes are made, they are not corrected in tender compassion, but are disheartened. Michigan is one of the best mission fields in the world, but it needs men of far-seeing judgment to push the work.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 52

God would have those in responsible positions show tact, skill, and wise generalship in detecting, seizing upon, and putting talent to use. He will not work miracles to advance the truth. He has material in men and women, and He wants the generals in His army to have intelligence to bring it out and put it to use, not be constantly studying how to bind about the work so that it shall not branch out and create a demand for more means. Set men to work under those who have some knowledge of the work and who can educate them. Thrust the workers out into the harvest field. All they want is encouragement.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 53

Elder _____'s mind must grow with the work, or he must be replaced by some one who will take a more extensive view of what needs to be done to warn the world. Do something, do it now. Let the pull-back principle go and the go-forward principle come in. The angel with the third message flies swiftly.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 54

P.S. I have spoken to you the truth because I dare not withhold it. My words are not designed to discourage, but to open before you the fact that although you may have good business qualities, and tact, yet something higher than this is necessary in the work in which you are engaged. You may become men as valuable as gold, and this is why I have written as I have. Your character must reflect the character of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 34a, 1886, par. 55

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 171.

Dear Brother Daniel Bourdeau:

I have been reading over the letter written to you from Healdsburg, and I have inquired whether you have read it thoroughly so as to take in all that was written. I fear greatly that you have not done this, and that you will go on just as you have done in past times, feeling self-confident, that you know better than any one else how to labor, and that you shall continue to estimate your powers more than they will bear.⁴*LtMs, Lt 35, 1886, par. 1*

You have an opportunity, now that you are engaged with others in labor, to see whether you will want to load on to yourself the whole burden of preaching, or whether you will esteem your brethren as you do yourself, and will give them room and opportunity to labor. If you do as you have done in the past, you will press yourself forward, grasp the opportunities which your brethren should have, and use the time yourself to your own injury and to the disappointment of the hearers. You flatter yourself that you can interest the hearers better than any of your brethren, and sometimes in this you deceive yourself. In the past you have done this and done the main part of the speaking with the idea that you could do better work than any of the brethren.⁴*LtMs, Lt 35, 1886, par. 2*

Now, my brother, I write for your good. You have lessons to learn that are very hard for you to understand. That is not to think more highly of yourself than you ought to think, and not place yourself high above your brethren, and of feeling so sensitive if your way is questioned or your plans interfered with. No one must suggest to you anything that will change your course of action. I have been surprised to read letters of this character that you have written to

Bro. Whitney, with request that they should be read to me. I cannot hold my peace, for I see that you do not sense your danger and do not realize the necessity of constantly learning in the school of Christ, of accepting the light that God has given you, and acting upon this light.4LtMs, Lt 35, 1886, par. 3

My brother, self is your greatest enemy. You have not even heeded the light given you because self was so determined to have its own way. I see by the expression of your letters that you need to die daily to self. You need to obtain victories over yourself. God will not work a miracle in your behalf while you do not bring yourself into submission before Him, but are continually striving to have yourself exalted. That independence you have so much to say about maintaining is the very element in your character which makes the work so exceedingly hard for you and for others. If you cannot stand first, you will not do anything.4LtMs, Lt 35, 1886, par. 4

I have heard a voice say, "I will be no man's second. I will be dictated to by no man." He is sleeping in the grave now. I know, my brother, that Eld. Andrews might have been alive today if he had received and improved the light that God sent him. But he took those parts of the testimony that agreed with him in every point, but those which corrected his course he said were the mind of Sr. White. The Lord has sent you light, and He wants you to heed it and improve in every way, that you may meet the mind of the Spirit of God. The Lord has cautioned you; and if you draw away like a rebellious child as did Eld. Andrews, the Lord has no reserve means to bring to bear upon you. You have refused to be advised and counselled by any of your brethren because you think you know better than any one that would teach you; and if the testimony of the Spirit of the Lord does not effect the change in you that must be made, then nothing more can be done. You are not above your brethren, but on an equal with them, and you grieve the Spirit of the Lord when you talk about your individuality, your independence, your being sore upon these points. These are words that I never wish to read from your pen or hear uttered from your lips, for you have nearly ruined your own soul over these misgivings.4LtMs, Lt 35, 1886, par. 5

Dear Bro. and Sr. Lockwood:

Your letter reached me this noon. I thank you for your faithfulness in writing. I did not write you in regard to the furniture and carpets, that you need not dispose of them, for it would only make more work for me to find them and get things together again. I wrote that we were no longer pressed for means, for we had been able to borrow or hire money at the bank in Basel.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 1

Yesterday we received a draft sufficient to pay for my horse and carriage, which draft I hired of a sister in England at six per cent. If you have received the letter, you may have forgotten it, or you many not have received the letter at all. Well, you need not sell the carpet, seeing that my rag carpet is sold.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 2

The money you mention in your letter as having set to my account I do not want to receive, Bro. Lockwood. You will need it yourself. Just use it to live on. And I do not want you to pay the expense of horse-keeping either. The Lord bless you for your liberality. I am hoping in one year more to get out of debt, and I do not worry about anything. It is not long since I wrote you, but your letter calls for an answer.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 3

Now, Brother Lockwood, some things you wrote me made me think you needed to be cautioned. Do not be strong in spirit, but be childlike, free and humble. I beg of you, do not go to extremes.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 4

Offend not in words. Talk less. You will by talking so strongly make others have a wrong impression of you. And they think that you have a hard spirit. It is your work to keep well balanced. Because you think others have done wrong, it is no reason that you should sin, and retaliate, and keep talking of their wrong. You just do right yourself. Be wise in words and actions. Your father was an extremist, and your mother was in many things very set and unyielding. Now these things were reproofed in them, and you have their traits of character transmitted to you as a legacy. Therefore, you need to watch and not feel strong or act strong. I have respect for Bro. Daniels. I shall not tell you all my ideas in this matter, but the Lord knows that I have not dropped him or lost confidence in him. He only develops under these circumstances weaknesses which I knew he possessed in a large degree, but he did not rise up against the testimony of reproof. God will help Bro. Daniels if he lies low, and He will bring him forth pure as gold if he will preserve his integrity of character. I would, if I saw Bro. Daniels today, not hesitate to lay my hands upon his head with all the freedom and heartiness I did once before. I do not think Bro. Daniels has done a wilful wrong. I believe God loves him and will bring him forth as gold if he will watch and pray and cultivate piety and meekness and lowliness of heart. 4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 5

The way for you to obtain and retain the confidence of your brethren is to not feel so strong, to show a mellow spirit. Just sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of Him. I love you and your good wife in the Lord. I believe God loves you, and I cannot bear the thought that you will give the least occasion for any one to think that they cannot place any confidence in you because you are an extremist. Now, my brother, if your brethren have erred, do you think it will help the matter to talk about it and draw as far apart from them as you can? No, you have no right to do this. I do not think any one of them did or said wrong wilfully. I think they have misjudged some things. But do not talk over things you take exceptions to. Christ prayed that His disciples might be one as He was one with the Father. Now it is your duty to do your part to answer this prayer. If they do not do their part to press together, the sin lies at their door. You must be right whether any one else is right or not. Now is the time to show the true spirit of Jesus. Under test and trial, the genuine religion of Christ will appear. Has God blessed you with freedom and light and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost? Then let this appear, not in boasting and self-confidence, but in meekness and lowliness, bearing your testimony for God because you are God's hired servant, and let all the light shine God has given you.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 6

My brother, Christ is soon to come, and I want your influence to be good upon others. If others do not agree with you it is your nature to draw away from them and have no sympathy for them. Is this Christlike? No, no, my brother. I want you to be guided by your feelings less and by principle more than you have done during your past life. Be calm. Do not become easily excited, and talk strong and feel strong, for if you do this you will certainly lose out of your heart the sweet Spirit of Christ. You will lose your consecration. You will begin to feel bitter, and you will not seek to harmonize with your brethren. You must seek to be a peace-maker, not one who would make a breach and widen the breach after it is made. You have no right to think unkind thoughts. Just open the door of your heart to Jesus and let Him in. Let Him take the lines of control. Let your brethren see that the good work wrought in you was genuine. Draw together, but don't draw apart. May the Lord bless you and give you much of His Holy Spirit. I see that Satan is trying to make capital out of the revival at Healdsburg. He would divide the church; but do not do anything on your part to help this matter. Close the door against him. Let not a word or breath be in the direction of drawing off. Do not feel bitterness in your heart against your ministering brethren. If you do, your peace will be poisoned. It is your duty to work and talk and think and plan, to be one as Christ was one with His Father.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 7

Well, I can write no more now. This I want to go in the mail tonight. Do not be discouraged.4LtMs, Lt 36, 1886, par. 8

Bourdeau, A. C.

Basel, Switzerland

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother A. C. Bourdeau:

I have received both of your letters in answer to mine. That which you say is your mind in regard to Daniel I thought and understood to be just as you stated it. But Bro. Adamer Vuilleumier made inquiry if I had been shown that the cause of Daniel's sickness was in consequence of the trials brought upon him by his brethren in Bien, that you told him that this was the case. Bro. Vaucher wrote the same thing to Bro. Whitney. I think they both received that impression whether you designed to convey it or not. I do not think that you have felt the necessity of being guarded in your conversation as you should be. My brother, do not think that I have no confidence in you; I have. If I had not, I would not labor as I do to present your case before you as it is. But I know that you have not had a true knowledge of yourself, what you might be and could be, and have not sensed what you were not. But I am encouraged in your case, because the Spirit of the Lord will not let me rest, but keeps the burden upon my soul to write to you and present these things before you again and again, because I see that the Lord will not leave you to yourself. I feel more confident that the Lord has work before you, and He wants you to prepare for it. He wants you to be fitting up for this work. He wants you to let go the last rope of self and hang your helpless soul upon Jesus. He wants you to have faith, to put away your weakness of pitying yourself and gathering sympathy to yourself. He wants you to be a man in your time of life. He will do those things for you that you cannot do for yourself. 4LtMs, Lt 37, 1886, par. 1

My brother, you have thought that you were a wonderful help to Martha, but you do not know how much you are leaning upon her. She will be a greater help to you than you have been to her if you will allow her to be. Your blessed, good Charlotte was not a woman that would interfere with your plans, because in her experience she found you took it so to heart and pitied yourself so much and grieved over it so hard that she did the very thing she ought not to have done, acceded to your plans and your wishes. She lost her individuality in you. With Martha there are capabilities and powers that she does not know that she possesses. She is a treasure in mind and soul and purpose. I estimate her as fine gold. Yet she may be, through wrong management, one who will not maintain her individuality, but think that every one else can be and do better than she can. She will never exalt herself, but will, if she has room and encouragement, be a woman of great value. God loves her, and her voice and judgment will supply a want that you have if you will encourage it. She has no babyish qualities in her make up. She needs circumstances and emergencies to develop the true sterling worth which she possesses.4LtMs, Lt 37, 1886, par. 2

Now I have presented this matter that you will not feel that Martha needs you so much, so very much, for you need her far more than she needs you. And she will help you in every way if you will give her room. You have such a habit of pouring out your troubles upon some one that you hurt yourself and hurt those you should help. Well, I love you both, and I want to do my whole duty to you in the fear of God and the love for your souls.4LtMs, Lt 37, 1886, par. 3

Sr. Martha has been desponding because the enemy saw that he could take advantage of her conscientiousness. But on this point Jesus has helped her, and He will not leave nor forsake her. Satan is well aware that with her principles and naturally good judgment she can be a blessing to others. All her feelings and distress and agony of mind have been from the cruel power of the oppressor through her large conscientiousness. But Satan's power is broken. She will have temptations to distrust God, to write little things against herself, but she must look to Jesus; and in looking at His mercy and knowing that He died for her, she has the positive evidence that He will not cast her aside if she will only trust in Him. She loves Jesus, although Satan may tell her that she does not. Satan is a liar. He is an accuser of the brethren.4LtMs, Lt 37, 1886, par. 4

Well I must close now with the request that you send to me the testimony for Daniel. I would be very much pleased if you would look among your books and find me Jewish Antiquities. It is there, for I saw it and I would so much like to have the use of it for a while.4LtMs, Lt 37, 1886, par. 5

Dear Children Edson and Emma:

I sent you a letter from Lausanne, but I thought I would write you again. I was able to speak to the people in Basel last Sabbath with freedom.⁴*LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 1*

As we journeyed from Geneva to Basel, we passed through large and small cities; and my meditations were, How are these people in these large cities to be warned? In the vision of John, four mighty angels were shown him as holding the four winds, that they should not blow upon the earth until God's servants are sealed in their foreheads. [Revelation 7:1-3.] When this work is done, then the ministers of vengeance are called and commanded to pour upon the earth tempests, thunders, pestilences, calamities. Now then is the time to work when Jesus is interceding in the heavenly sanctuary. Now is our opportunity and privilege to be co-workers with God.⁴*LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 2*

The law of duty is supreme. It claims authority over reason, over conscience, over talents, over business, over every capacity of man. Everything that is noble in man belongs to the service of God. He admits no rival in anything. He makes no abatement of His demands. God enters into no compromise with men for a divided heart. The voice of duty is the voice of God to win souls. Obedience to its claims brings us into living personal relation with God. It makes us channels of light, and the humblest service will be an honor, for it is the great plan of God to associate men with His plans and His purposes. In the work of duty we go out of ourselves and beyond ourselves, and we may lay upon the foundation gold, silver, and precious stones. We are not excusable if we do not do all in our power to enlighten souls that are in darkness. We may shun duty, delay duty, but it is duty still. No business is of sufficient value to deter us from duty that is marked out for us by the Lord, Him whose word of command is the highest law for the soul.4LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 3

The excuses Satan will make and present before the mind are not one but many to neglect God's specified will for what seems to be an urgency of business, and the same will be pushed in as barriers day by day. But this will not diminish our obligations to God. The duty of today God requires His soldiers to perform.4LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 4

How my soul is drawn out for the State of Michigan, planning day and night, dreaming and waking, to arouse our brethren to see and to seize the opportunities within our reach, before Michael shall stand up, before probation closes. The people of our faith seem locked in midnight slumbers. God's angel of mercy is pleading for entrance to the obdurate heart in vain. Those who should come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty, those who should be channels of light, polished instruments for God, are doing nothing. Many of them are locked in stupid indifference when they should be winning souls to Christ.4LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 5

Michigan is a good field, but strangely neglected. May the Lord of heaven open the blind eyes, arouse the dulled senses, quicken the desire in hearts to devotion, to earnest effort for the salvation of souls. My heart is burdened for Michigan. I dreamed I was in a meeting where were our leading men, and a messenger from heaven came in and said, "Why are ye slow of heart to believe? why are ye doing so little? why do ye not see the fields all ripe for the harvest? Why have ye not shown wise generalship in securing your workers in the Lord's harvest? Your ideas are not after God's order; you are too narrow. You bind about the work with your own narrow plans. You are dying out in much. While you should feel the necessity of caution, and avoid extravagance, you should have that far-seeing judgment to plan rapidly, to execute without delay, to seize the talent wherever you can find it, educate, discipline, train it, that faithful workers shall be in the field. Where now there is one there should be one hundred. You are far behind. The wheels of time are rolling on, and you are doing little less than nothing. Death is seizing the workers in the wide harvest field because of your overstrained ideas of economy of means." Much more was said which I cannot now write.4LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 6

I must close this, for there are other duties I must do in writing to many. May the Lord help you, my son, much loved children, to do all your duty, for there is a crown of life for the faithful.4LtMs, Lt 38, 1886, par. 7

Dear Daughter Mary:

I was sorry indeed to hear of Ella's affliction. While I am sorry for her, I am sorry for you because these things are trying, and I want to charge you particularly to be careful. I know that you may think now that all danger is past, but I am not so sure of this. I think that by you especially, great care should be exercised. Do not forget yourself in lifting any weights, in bending over, ironing, or anything of this kind. I know what I am talking about, and I do not want you should have care and taxation of any kind. This period must be one to you of comparative rest and freedom from mental taxation and overexertion of the physical. Take just the very best care of yourself that you can. Do not you lift Ella once. Let her walk on her two feet. She can do this much better than you can carry her. If you get through this critical period all right, I think your health will be better than it has been for years in the past; but you must have plenty of rest and sleep and be in the open air when it is pleasant. Do not think that Mother does not know, for she does know, by painful experience.⁴*LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 1*

I am praying for you, and I have trusted your case in the hands of the Lord. I cannot endure the thought of the possibility of harm coming to you, and your being a lifelong sufferer, or your life extinguished when it can be devoted to useful service in the cause of God. I hope and pray and worry some. This morning I was able to lay your case in the hands of the Lord and say, "I will not carry the burden. The Lord will do all things well. He will not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men." [Lamentations 3:33.] I hope to be able to hold you upon the altar, but sometimes my faith trembles. I have you so much interwoven in my life and heart that I have a dread of your being exposed to any risks. Well now, we will trust in the Lord.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 2

Before rising, which was half-past four this morning, I had a precious season of prayer for you, and I felt much more peace and rest afterward. I think sometimes I am shrinking from the least approach of trial because I have been so many times so severely tried that I do not have all that confidence in God I should have, but I am feeling better. My conflict is over, and I trust Jesus with you with everything, and I feel that whatever the Lord sees is for our good He will do for us. God ever has and ever will have an interest in the work of His hands, and nothing can happen to us but our heavenly Father has some object for our good. But I believe that you will be carried through this critical period in safety.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 3

I desire that you should take the journey W. C. White has proposed, if you will have a good driver and be entirely free from care. Make your position in the carriage that of as perfect ease and rest as possible. I believe this journey will do you great good if you take time enough to rest as you go and do not become too weary in journeying. Now just take all the happiness you possibly can, and may the peace of Christ be with you is the prayer of*4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 4*

Mother.

I think that the work here is going well, and I have felt much better healthwise than for months in the past. I have already spoken four times at length and ten times in all. The brethren are much encouraged. It is a good meeting, and everything moves harmoniously. Brother Matteson, I think, had some fears that we were going to place Brother Olsen in here in his place, but we told them plainly Elder Matteson had done a good work and we could not spare him. We wanted Elders Matteson and Olsen and many others, if we could get them, to work in these kingdoms, and I think Elder Matteson appears well at this meeting. I think the letters I have sent him have not been without influence. Yesterday we had an excellent meeting; quite a number of outsiders were in, and we had a good congregation of attentive listeners. Well, I am sure the Lord has given me health and strength and the light of His countenance.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 5

W. C. White's testimony is received by all. I tell you, things look much different than when we were here last fall. There is a good hall, good seats to accommodate the people; and if Jesus will work with our efforts, we will be encouraged indeed, and He will be. Well, He has promised it, and His Word will not fail. There are beautiful parks close at hand here, and nicely laid out roads, and seats plentifully supplied. All this is in groves of trees. W. C. W. and I walk out between eight and nine o'clock. The sun sets forty minutes after nine, rises before three. I think it is daylight at two.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 6

I wish you and Ella were here this moment and could accompany us to Norway. They have made arrangements for us to occupy the old part of the printing office. This will be agreeable to us. And we can do more than if we were in any house, to be entertained as guests. I hope Marian and you will arrange the seats in the carriage where you can both have a restful, enjoyable time. I speak once more today at six o'clock, and then my labor here ends.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 7

Brethren Matteson and Olsen go to Denmark, and then they come to Norway. We stay here until Thursday, then take the cars for Norway, spend two weeks there, return to Copenhagen, spend nearly two weeks there when we will have a similar effort to that we have had here—to educate the young men and encourage the believers to all take hold and work with energy. Then we make our way back home again to Basel.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 8

Ella May White, Grandma would be very much pleased could she see you this morning. I was very sorry to hear that you fell down the stairs. Was it the long back stairs or the short stairs? I think one of the good angels of the Lord was close by you to prevent your falling and breaking your limbs or killing you. These good angels are watching over you, else you might get into many difficulties.4LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 9

Remember that the Lord loves you, and you please the dear Saviour when you are gentle and kind and obedient; and if you are pleasant and have a beautiful character, Jesus will, when He comes, give you a beautiful harp that you can play upon. He will give you a crown of gold, and you will be very happy always. You will never fall downstairs, never be sick, but be happy. Try hard every day to be a good, sweet-dispositioned little girl.⁴*LtMs, Lt 38b, 1886, par. 10*

Dear Brother Henry:

I have heard Willie read your letter written to him, and I thought I would write you a few lines.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 1

My much respected brother, I wish to say that I have no selfish motives in claiming the royalty on my books, but I consider that there is a principle involved which affects not only my own rights, but the individual rights of others which the Lord would have me guard. I have duties to do in this matter which the want of far-seeing judgment of my brethren does not comprehend or take in.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 2

All that I receive of royalty on foreign books is dedicated to the foreign missions, and when I see how difficult it is for my good brethren to outgrow narrow plans and narrow ideas in some things, connected with our work, I feel that I can understand, through the light God has given me, where means is really needed, and I do not mean to shirk my stewardship on to my brethren, even if it is their judgment that I should do this; I dare not leave it for their judgment to apply this means. I do not mean that the means that should come to me justly shall be under control of any board of directors. I might see necessities, and often do, that some minds composing your board would not see; for one would lead out, taking a position, and others would follow and, having great confidence in their own opinions, would not be easily entreated, but would be very unyielding and make me much unnecessary labor to explain, and urge, and press matters, and perhaps fail after all my labor. I know perfectly well what I am about, and I know that I should control the means God has made me steward of. All is the Lord's.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 3

The small amount of means that I shall receive for my books I shall claim the right to appropriate. I do not charge you with selfish interest, I do not charge any one with personal, selfish interest, but I know that not only your ideas, but Brn. Amadon's, Hart's, and Sisley's need a molding over, and greatly to be enlarged. God's cause in the publishing house can afford to be fair.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 4

While I respect all these brethren as having good qualifications and appreciate them, especially your capabilities as a businessman, which lead me to urge your coming to the great heart of the work in Battle Creek, I still shall urge that you may in some respects greatly improve. I know that this coming was not your choice, yet notwithstanding God had lessons for you to learn that were essential. You need a different mold of character. There is need of your bringing into your character more of Christ. Bro. Sisley especially needs to put considerable more of the softening, subduing influence of the Spirit of God into his character. He is not compassionate and far-seeing. His own peculiar temperament has a controlling power in your councils. God is not pleased with this element; it tastes too strongly of self. It bears not the fragrance of the spirit of Jesus. Bro. Sisley has too much of the cast iron to be a man after God's own heart, and, my brother, you have the same trait of character. You need the love of Christ, the winning charms of Jesus. Compassion, tenderness, and love need to be cultivated. This will not make you a less successful businessman, but will give you greater success. You have valuable traits of character, but without this love, this compassion, you will only be a one-sided, imperfect man.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 5

If all your entrusted capabilities are submerged in Christ, and you take on the mold of Christ's character, you will grow up into the full stature of a perfect man in Christ Jesus. You need this love in your family. You need it woven into all your plans, and into all your words and actions. You need to be often tender and express sympathy, but there is none allowed to come into your life. Bind your family to your heart in love. Make no rules, lay no demands on your wife, but treat her with tender compassion. She has trials and heart sorrows as well as you. Be pleasant to her at all times. Carry sunshine into your home, restrain threatenings, put away your criticism, and do not rule too much. Let mercy and love bear sway. Do not cover these up.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 6

Oh, my brother, you want more of Jesus in dealing with the minds of your children. You are so stern, so severe; the law of love is so little regarded that in dealing with your wife and children you raise their combativeness and place them beyond your reach. There should be altogether a different atmosphere in your home. They do not respect you or your words or government. Bitter words are passed from one to another. This has a depressing influence upon you. Let all the sunlight into your family you can, in pleasant words, in commendation, but don't criticize and censure and threaten; all this will be reflected back upon you.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 7

The Lord loves your wife. Jesus died for her, and you should use your influence to win her, not to force her, but to win her. The Lord loves you, but He wants you to love Him, to meditate upon Him. Reflect upon the purity, the loveliness of His character, and be like Him. He wants you to be a kind, loving, affectionate husband, and father, and brother, and friend.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 8

I might write much more on this subject, but I forbear at present. May the Lord enlighten your eyes and give you an understanding mind, that you may be firm as a rock to principle, while you will be humble and meek and lowly as was Christ, kind, tender, forbearing, easy to be entreated, ready to yield your ideas and personal feelings. This is the work that must be done for you, but it will not be done unless you shall learn lessons daily in the school of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 9

You often feel that you would gladly get away from the position you now fill, which involves great responsibilities. But, my dear brother, the voice of duty is the voice of God; and should you tear yourself away from the work, it would not bring to you the relief you imagine. What you want is an element woven into your character which will make you more tender, more forbearing, more patient; you need to be transformed, expressing your love, expressing your affection, showing a zeal, an interest in the happiness of your wife. This lesson you must learn before you can have peace. Dictate to your wife in nothing, cease to be overbearing to your children. This will be a strong battle for you to fight, but it is home that tests the religious character. If you save your own soul and win your household, you must be more tender, pitiful, and merciful. May the Lord help you, my brother.⁴*LtMs, Lt 39, 1886, par. 10*

Bourdeau, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

April 4, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother and Sister Bourdeau:

I wish to say of the book you sent me, this is not the book that I desired. There is in your library a smaller book entitled Jewish Antiquities. It is something in the form of a dictionary, but it is not after the order of this book which you have sent me. It does not say Josephus's Works. I know that I looked into this book when I was at your place. If you can find such a book in your library, please accommodate me with the use of it for a short time.⁴*LtMs, Lt 40, 1886, par. 1*

My health is much better than it was when I last wrote you. The Lord has been merciful to me. He has heard my earnest prayers to remove physical infirmities, that I might be the better able to do the work which seems necessary to be done. The last letter received from you gave information that you were having a crowded hall. Does this interest continue? May God help you in this work, that you may so closely connect with Him, that you may be able not only to interest, but to educate and instruct the people. I know Italy is a hard field, and we may say the same of very many places in Europe. But if there is earnest praying to God and working as well as praying, we do believe that the Lord will bless the efforts made, that the opposition which will be fierce and determined in Italy will not prevent honest souls from accepting the light of truth.⁴*LtMs, Lt 40, 1886, par. 2*

Let us ever remember that God has intrusted with us a most solemn and testing message for the world. If we work in His strength, putting our whole dependence upon God, my faith is we shall see souls converted to God. I never felt more deeply than at the present time the necessity of constant, living faith that will not be quenched by seeming impossibilities. We are in constant danger of relying upon our own finite powers. It is God alone that can make His truth to triumph, and we should feel highly honored if we can have the privilege of triumphing with it.4LtMs, Lt 40, 1886, par. 3

I hope you will be very guarded not to allow minor things to divert your mind away from the work of God. This work is of that importance that it requires all the powers which we possess, and then we must rely wholly upon the power of Jesus Christ to work with our efforts. May the Lord give you wisdom and be your everpresent counselor by having success attend your labors in Italy. We have no time to lose; while the angels are holding the four winds, that they shall not blow, is our opportunity to work.4LtMs, Lt 40, 1886, par. 4

Tell us when you think is the best time for us to again visit Italy, not merely Torre Pellice, but Naples and other places where there are souls in the faith. May the Lord bless you both with a large measure of faith is the prayer of your sister.4LtMs, Lt 40, 1886, par. 5

Portions of this letter are published in TSB 203.

Dear Brother Sharp:

I have this morning received and read your letter, and if I do not answer at once I fear it will pass from my mind. I am happy to say that we are enjoying good health and beautiful weather. Every thing is looking so green and lovely that we are sure winter is passed and spring has come.4LtMs, Lt 41, 1886, par. 1

In regard to your changing your location, I would mention to you England. There is a large field and but few workers, plenty of work to be done in which all may act a part, all of your family if they desire to give themselves to the Lord and act a part in His cause. You will find room enough to work, and if you go forth to labor in meekness and humility, redeeming the past errors of your life, God will accept you. There is need of laborers in England, and the advantage of that country over other parts of Europe is that our American brethren do not have to work through an interpreter. There is great need in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway of experienced workers in their own language. France, Switzerland, Germany, India, and Russia need workers in their own tongue. Calls come to us from all these countries, begging for helpers and ministers to teach them the truth more perfectly as they have accepted it through reading. They want missions established in Russia, but where are the men? Lord, raise up laborers is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 41, 1886, par. 2

Should you come to England, you will certainly find work enough to do, and God is merciful; He pities our weakness, He forgives our transgressions; and if we will only live humble and penitent, if we will cease from evil and do well, the Lord will approve. May the Lord teach you and work for you. I wish that there were many more men who would give themselves to the missionary work in England. That kingdom has but few workers. We want missionaries whom God can work with and bless. We want men who will feel the burden of souls, men who will work as Christ worked, zealously, disinterestedly, to save sinners and enlighten those in darkness.4LtMs, Lt 41, 1886, par. 3

I write this short letter to you, thinking it is as well as more that might be written. Your sister in Christ.4LtMs, Lt 41, 1886, par. 4

Ramsey, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

April 7, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 5T 651-654; UL 111; 3SM 228.

Dear Brother Ramsey:

I have just sent an article to the Healdsburg College and I will send a copy to you, for it embraces not only Healdsburg, but South Lancaster and Battle Creek. I specified Healdsburg because it refers to them as I was laboring with them.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 1

I am glad you are today in South Lancaster; and, my brother, if you make God your trust, you will be the right man in the right place, but let not self come in, though this will be natural. Keep self out of sight. Walk humbly with God. Let us work for the Master with disinterested energy. Think of the life of Moses. What endurance and patience characterized his life. Paul in his epistle to the (Hebrews 11:27) says, "For he endured seeing Him who is invisible." This character of Moses does not simply mean passive resistance of evil, but perseverance in a firm, consistent course. He kept the Lord ever before him, and the Lord was at his right hand to help him. Moses had a deep sense of the personality of God. He saw God. He was not only looking down through the ages to a Christ that would be revealed, but he saw Christ in a special manner accompanying the children of Israel in all their travels. God was real to him and present in his thoughts. When called upon to face danger, to bear insult, and to be misunderstood for Christ's sake, he was persevering to endure without retaliation. Moses believed in God as one whom he needed and one who would help him because he needed His help. God was to him a present help in time of need.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 2

We have far too much dead, nominal faith, but the real trusting, persevering faith we do not have. God was to Moses a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him. Moses had respect unto the recompense of the reward. Here is another point in faith we wish to study; and if brought into the life and experience, it will enable every one who fears and loves God to endure trials. God will reward the man of faith and obedience. Moses was full of confidence in God because he had appropriating faith. He needed the help of God, and he prayed for it, and believed for it, and wove it into his life experience that God cared for him. He believed that God ruled his life in particular. He knew that God had assigned to him a special work, and he would make that work thoroughly successful so far as possible. But he knew that he could not do this without the help of God; for he had a perverse people to deal with. The presence of God, he knew, was strong enough to carry him through the most trying positions that a man could be placed in. He could see and acknowledge God in every detail of his life, that he was under the eye of an all-seeing God who weighs motives, who tries the hearts. He looked to God and believed in Him for strength to carry him through uncorrupted every form of temptation. Moses did not merely think of God, but saw Him. He saw Jesus as His Saviour; he believed the Saviour's merits would be imputed to him. This faith was to Moses a reality, no guesswork. This is the kind of faith we need, faith that will endure the test. God was the constant vision before Moses; he never lost sight of His face. Oh, how often we yield to temptation, because we do not keep our eye upon Jesus; our faith is not continuous because through self-indulgence we sin, and then we cannot endure as seeing Him that is invisible.⁴*LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 3*

My brother, make Christ your daily, hourly companion, and you will not complain that you have not faith. Contemplate Christ. View His character. Talk of Christ. The less you exalt self, the more you will see in Jesus to exalt. God has a work for you to do. Let not self mar the work, but endure as seeing Him who is invisible. Keep the Lord ever before you. Brother and Sister Ramsey, reach up higher and still higher for clearer views of the character of Christ. When Moses prayed, Lord show me Thy glory, the Lord did not rebuke him, but He answered his prayer. We keep apart from God, and this is why we do not see the revealings of His power. My brother, my sister, may the Lord impart wisdom to you both, that you may know how to deal with minds. May the Lord teach you how great things He can do if you will only believe. Carry Jesus with you, as your companion, into the school room. Keep Him before you as you open your lips, that the law of kindness may proceed from your lips. Do not allow any one to mold you in this matter, but allow that the children have an individuality as well as yourself. Ever try to lead them, but never drive them.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 4

I see some things here in Switzerland that I think are worthy of imitation. The teachers of the schools always go out with their pupils while they are at play and teach them how to amuse themselves and repress any disorder or any wrong. This is an invariable law and includes children from five to fifteen years of age. As a reward for good behavior and studious habits, the teachers take their scholars out and have a long walk with them, dismissing the school earlier than usual. I like this; I think there is less opportunity for the children to yield to temptation. The teachers seem to enter into the sports of the children and to regulate them. I cannot in any way sanction the idea that children must feel that they are under a constant distrust, and must be watched, and cannot act as children. But let the teachers join in the amusements of the children, be one with them, and show they want them to be happy, and it will give the children confidence. They can be controlled by love, but not by a stern, strict, unbending rule, to follow them in their meals and in their amusements.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 5

Let me say here that those who have never had children of their own are not the best qualified to wisely manage the varied minds of children and youth. They would make one law from which there can be no appeal. Teachers must remember that they were once children. When they do not place the crib too high, the children can reach it and be instructed and benefited, both by precept and example.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 6

May the Spirit of Jesus come in to mold every heart, to fashion every character, to elevate and ennoble every soul. Christ said to His disciples, "Unless ye humble yourselves, and become as this little child, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." [Matthew 18:3.] There is need of coming down from these cast iron stilts to the humbleness of the child. Oh, that some of the spirit of severity may change to a spirit of cheerfulness, love, happiness, and sunshine rather than shadow. If I were writing this to some who had a different mold of character than have some in South Lancaster, I would write differently. May the Lord bless you and your family is the prayer of your Sister.4LtMs, Lt 42, 1886, par. 7

Matteson, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

April 13, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 17MR 98-106.

Brother Matteson:

Your letter was received yesterday. You state in your letter, "Your mother speaks of Bro. Hanson as a transgressor of the Sabbath. I suppose you know that Bro. Hanson is not a member of the church, consequently we cannot labor with him, or cut him off because he is already cut off by his own positive request." 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 1

He places himself outside of the pale of the church where he cannot be brought under the discipline of the church, and yet he has a voice in the church as if he belonged to the church. I cannot see the consistency of this and know that this move is all out of God's order. It shows blind, hazardous movements; it is giving influence to a man who refuses to be in harmony with the church, and through this one man whose way is after the world and not after the Lord's plans Satan comes in to control other minds. Then how could you or any member of the church, if they stood in the light, place him on a committee? 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 2

You state, "I do not know whether he will make an application for admittance. If he should do so, he would have to take a better stand than he has ever done yet." My brother, notwithstanding this attitude of Bro. Hanson who has cut himself loose from the church, he is made one of the committee of your board to have influence in the matters of the church, and you have allowed this thing done. Strange foresight!—a man who does not keep the Sabbath, for he does do business on the Sabbath, collects debts, pays his workmen, settles accounts, and has no more sacred sense of the Sabbath than to keep it when convenient and transgress it when it is convenient for his own interest. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 3

I know that God cannot approve of your connecting Brother Hanson with a committee or giving him any trust while he has cut himself loose from the church and stands dishonoring God in his business matters. It shows that the man has not true and sacred ideas of holy things, and you are fastening him in a fatal deception in thus treating his case. My brother, you have done more to keep him in this position of blindness than any other man could do. You have in your attitude said to the sinner, "It shall be well with you." You say you could not labor with him, or turn him out because he is not in the church, yet you have linked up with him and showed your preference for him and made him your confidant and counsellor. He has upheld you, and you have upheld him, and God is dishonored by you both. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 4

"Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at My mouth, and give them warning from Me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul." [Ezekiel 3:17-21.] These solemn words speak to you and me. I have to bear the plain notes of warning from God. I must not suffer my brother to continue in sin; [I must warn him of] his danger; I must tell him "the wages of sin is death." [Romans 6:23.] God has said it. "Cry aloud and spare not. Lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show My people their transgressions and the house of Israel their sins." [Isaiah 58:1.] Here, my brother, is a work that you have not done as you should have done. And why? Because your own soul was not right before God. [Line illegible.] 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 5

My brother, had you felt the necessity of preaching the lessons of true Christianity yourself, and of taking J. G. Matteson under strict discipline, then you could have seen and felt the necessity of instructing others. When you do not reach the standard yourself, how can you bring others up? When I see the people in Christiania and other places regarding you in the light they do, as though you were almost as Christ, and then know how far short you come of practical godliness, I am distressed beyond measure. A man who has ability as you have, and with your entrusted talents, is far more accountable than those who have less light and less ability. Your position, then, what you have done or may do, will be no excuse in your case that you do not reach the Bible standard in Christian character. You need daily the transforming grace of Christ on your heart, or you cannot do the work of God with clear spiritual discernment, with an eye single to His glory.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 6

From time to time God has seen fit to open before me your life, your temperament, your character; and I must say to you that you have a work to do for yourself before you can be admitted to become a member of the Lord's family in the heavenly courts. Sin is sin, whether it is in J. G. Matteson or in the man of lowly position. You are not right with God. A man in God's eye is just what he is in his own family. The converting power of God will be seen in his home. You should have had a testimony to bear to individuals and families in the Spirit of Christ, and a love for their souls that would have placed you among the faithful watchmen, but, I feel compelled to say, you are not there now. You must set your own heart in order. You have a work to do for yourself which no other can do for you, to overcome your pettish spirit and to cleanse the soul temple of its defilement.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 7

When you see yourself as God sees you, you will possess genuine humility, not humility put on for special occasions, but a principle that is abiding. You cannot be clear before God and prepared for His appearing unless you put away every wrong from you. It will be a most difficult lesson for you to learn true humility. While you appear to be at times very humble, there is a self-esteem, a self-devotion, a high opinion of yourself which leads to dangers that you do not discern. You are not ready for Christ's appearing; and unless you are a changed man in heart and in character, in manner, in deportment, you cannot be a true watchman on the walls of Zion. There is earnest work before you. You must be a different man.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 8

While it is duty for the watchmen to be wide-awake, faithful to discern evil, and understanding the necessities of the cause and work of God, they will frequently be called to bear a plain, pointed testimony to individuals who are in danger. Their testimony must not be given in an impatient spirit, not in an overbearing spirit, not with a domineering spirit, but with the spirit and meekness of Christ. There are two extremes to be avoided, one is the shunning to declare the whole counsel of God, and running into the spirit of revivalists in this age of crying, "Peace, peace, where there is no peace" [Jeremiah 6:14], and weaving into the labors an element which moves the feelings and leaves the heart unchanged. A sensational religion is to be dreaded, for it is hard work when once it has been woven into the experience to ever make the individuals feel that they must go deeper than mere emotional exercise; that they must practice true godliness.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 9

My brother, you have been weaving into your labors this kind of an element. While evils have been growing and gaining the mastery, you have fastened many to J. G. Matteson, but not to the cross of Jesus Christ. Now I am alarmed for you because I was shown that you have unbounded confidence in yourself and your manner of labors. You have not laid the ax at the root of the tree, and various kinds of evils have been springing up that needed to be rooted out from the church, with judicious labors and with far-seeing judgment.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 10

The very work that needed to be done has not been done. Your ways appear right in your own eyes, but not so in the eyes of the Lord. The truth of God may be proclaimed from the lips while it has not a sanctifying influence upon the heart and character, having a constraining power upon the man. The thoughts, the affections are engrossed by worthless revolting things, and the heart is defiled. The salvation of the soul will not be secured without a deeper work. Your supreme love and confidence in yourself must be broken up in some way, or you will be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Your conscience feels the power of the truth, you work earnestly to present the truth, and for this reason I feel so bad because I know that unless you are an overcomer, you will not have the overcomer's reward. You lack the very experience you need to make you what God would have you to be. You need to study the law of God. Look in the mirror; bring your own heart to its searching, far-reaching principles, and go not away and forget what manner of man was presented to you in that mirror. I have not much hope for the church, unless the very ones who labor for them are converted men and Christlike in character. I am pained to write you these things. I hoped I should not have to write them. Search and see if self is not idolized. You must cleanse the soul temple. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 11

The second extreme is to be always hammering at the people and in a harsh, unchristlike manner, talking in a way that they think you are provoked, weaving self into your labors, in the place of learning lessons of Jesus and having His Spirit. Now, my brother, whatever you have done or may do, I feel burdened with the Word of the Lord. The Lord says to you as to Nicodemus, "Unless ye are born again, ye can never see the kingdom of God." [John 3:3.] The truth has been accepted and preached by you, but the heart has not been cleansed of its moral defilement. You need the divine impression on your character. There are men like Bro. Hanson who are not controllable by the Spirit of God, who are harsh in their families, dictatorial, severe, and overbearing. If you were a thoroughly converted man and a daily learner in the school of Christ, a man to put away your childish, babyish feelings and manners at home, and put on meekness, gentleness, kindness, forbearance, and long-suffering, then you would be prepared to give instruction to those who need it. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 12

You have so little self-control that when you read these words I greatly fear you will act like a child that when reproved or corrected will throw itself down. "A new heart will I give you, a new spirit will I put within you." [Ezekiel 36:26.] While you are desirous to appear right with your brethren, do for Christ's sake surrender your soul to God. The truth is kept far away from the center of your being; [part of line illegible]. This is an individual work. I was shown while in America the condition of the churches in the kingdoms that had your labor. Many precious souls had been raised up, but they were receiving a mold that would not tend to make them perfect and entire, wanting nothing. One of the most earnest prayers in the Bible is, "Create in me a clean heart." [Psalm 51:10.] Oh, will men in any position, as superiors, inferiors, or equals, learn the simple lessons to begin at the beginning and have the heart right with God through the new creating power of His Holy Spirit? Then what pure streams would flow forth from a pure fountain. How precious the experience; how precious the lessons that they have learned and can in their turn teach others. But if they have not reached the standard themselves, how can they teach others to reach it? The church must be refined, purified. Better if they had never connected themselves with the truth than to claim to believe it, take the name of Seventh-day Adventists, and yet not stand as high in the scale of morality and practical godliness as do many who have never seen the truth. Thus Christ and the truth are misrepresented; the world is encouraged in their unbelief; other churches do not care to examine the evidences of doctrine and faith that bear such fruit. The example of men and women professing the truth is of such a character that it works against the truth. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 13

They are holding the truth in unrighteousness because they are destitute of the first principles of Christianity exemplified in the life. Hearts are buried up in worldliness, saturated with that which is earthly, sensual, cut off by their own course of action from communion with God, dead to holiness, twice dead, plucked up by the roots. 4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 14

Now you can never cure these evils till you see the necessity of subduing and controlling J. G. Matteson. The truth must be planted deep in your own soul first and then in the souls of others. I want you to be a conqueror, God wants you to be a conqueror, but you are far from this today. You need to be busy and earnest with your own soul. A solemn message is to be given to the world, and you are standing directly in the way of our reaching the hearts of many because all their experience and all their religion centers in their high estimate of yourself. No one can ask you to labor more than you do; but you must have a living connection with God so that you will have His grace to be with you. You must bring religion into your home; religion must regulate your life. The truth must sanctify your words, your thoughts, and your actions. Your faith must produce beauty of soul that will be manifested [in] words and actions, else it will be a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 15

When you are sanctified through the truth, you will be a Christian, patient, kind. You have an overbearing temperament. You hold yourself too high and others hold you too high; therefore anything you may do looks right in the eyes of others, but they do not look into the soul. The great Searcher of hearts says, "I know thy works." [Revelation 14:15.] Your heart needs to be humbled before God. You need to be very jealous of yourself. You have made acknowledgment of your errors at different times in your experience, but you have not put them away. You have not seen the sinfulness of many thoughts or the offensive character of your works before God. As a faithful watchman, I see the danger, if you die as you are, of your losing your soul; therefore I warn you.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 16

Now, my brother, I have not thrown you aside, I have not lost my interest in you; but I do urge upon you to face the mirror. Sin is offensive to God. We must live so near to Jesus that we shall protest against iniquity and disobedience of God's requirements. While self is strictly disciplined, God will give wisdom and power to aid in disciplining others. Thus all the influence will be exerted on the side of pure, faultless, undeviating obedience, and no exception will be made on any policy principle and no unsanctified influence will be tolerated to weaken and demoralize a church. Oh, how I dread to write these things to you! But I dare not withhold them, lest my soul will be chargeable with your sin.4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 17

There must be a decided reformation in Bro. Hanson's family or they will all be lost together, parents and children. Their attitude to the help in their family is, How can flesh and blood be turned to the profitable account? The management in the house is conducted upon principles the reverse of Christians. The employer is too ready to prey upon the employed. They are often arrayed against each other like natural enemies. How can angels abide in that house?4LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 18

May the Lord turn and overturn in Christiania. Better, far better, would it be today, so far as the church is concerned, if a blow had not been struck there until an altogether different mold could have been placed upon the work and the church. This work may look all right in your eyes, but oh, my soul, how it looks in the eyes of the Lord! Now I shall write no more on this, although there are other things I might say in reference to the work as God has presented it before me. Now you can see why I have not desired to come to Christiania again. I am soul-sick. If you stood free and clear, then I should know that God would work for us; but as you have stood, I have no confidence that He will.⁴*LtMs, Lt 43, 1886, par. 19*

Littlejohn, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

May 10, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 5MR 275-276.

Dear Brother and Sister Littlejohn:

My mind has been exercised for some weeks to write to you. I commenced and half finished a letter to you last January, but sickness came upon me and I ceased to write any one; therefore you did not get your letter. But I will try to finish this.⁴*LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 1*

A few days since, we returned from a tour into Italy, and our homeward route was through Geneva and Lausanne. In the latter place, which is a very beautiful city, laborers have been at work to interest the people. And as the result of Bro. Bourdeau's efforts in French, Brn. Ertzenberger's and Conradi's in German, about twenty from the Methodist and Baptist churches have embraced the truth.⁴*LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 2*

In all the places we have visited we see much work to be done, and but few to do this work. It is a marvel to me that there is not a greater missionary spirit among our people to bear the truth to other nations, and especially of that class that speak the languages of the different nationalities of Europe.⁴*LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 3*

It will require far greater effort to accomplish the work than in America because of the poverty of the people. Then the ministers are so plentiful. I think of the words of the apostle, "They shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears." [2 Timothy 4:3.] As soon as the truth is brought in to the place, the ministers of the different churches become alarmed and send at once for ministers to come in and commence revival meetings. Here they are called conferences. These meetings will continue for weeks, and no less than ten ministers will be on hand; the very best talent will be enlisted, and warnings and threatenings will be poured out from the churches against the seventh-day people, who are classed with Mormons, and who they say are breaking up churches and causing divisions.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 4

It is very hard to get any hold of the people. The only way that we find to be successful is in holding Bible readings, and in this way the interest is started with one or two or three; then these visit others and try to interest others, and thus the work moves slowly as it has done in Lausanne; but twenty have embraced the truth there, and this is not all the good that has been accomplished, for the young men who are preparing themselves for laborers have here had a good drill and received an education that will fit them for greater usefulness in the cause of God.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 5

At first some thought they could go out on their own responsibility and do the work singly and alone, and keep everything to themselves, fearing that another might come in upon their ground. We visited Lausanne, and W. C. White and myself did the best we could to talk, and pray with them, and show them that this was not the way to work; that all must work in harmony; that no one person was competent to perfect these persons in the knowledge of the truth. We labored earnestly by letters and by word of mouth, and we are pleased to see a more pleasant and Christlike mold given to the laborers, and the work is of a much more substantial character.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 6

It has called forth much labor to organize the workers. Brother Conradi is the right help here, and we thought no pains or expense too great to get the work once started right; then the men who were educated to go out as laborers would take hold of the work intelligently and do much better work, and the right ideas of working communicated to them would extend to others.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 7

There is one man who has been laboring in Naples, who by appointment met us in Torre Pellice, Italy, and we labored with him and sought most earnestly to help him to take hold of the work, not as a fighter, contending and debating, as was his habit, driving people away from the truth rather than into it. He saw we talked the truth, not with storm; not pelting the people with denunciations like hailstones. We had very precious seasons of prayer. We held meetings in three different villages in the Waldensian valleys with good interest.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 8

This brother from Naples said he had received much light and would labor in altogether a different manner than he had done. The Italians are an excitable people. They will bring every power to bear suddenly, and under great excitement will exclaim, "Is this so? What will you do? Will you keep the Sabbath? Say Yes or No!" They are as sharp as a razor, [and] cut off the ears of the people, and make them mad, and that is the end of the business, so far as converting them to the truth is concerned.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 9

Now we have to work with these men who are really intelligent, just as we worked with them one by one in the infancy of the Seventh-day Adventist cause; separating from these precious souls their unsanctified ways and manners; talking to them about Jesus, His great love, His meekness, His lowliness, His self-denial. These rough stones we bring if possible into the workshop of God where they will be hewed and squared, and all the rough edges removed, and they be polished under the divine hand until they will make precious stones in the temple of God and shall be living stones, emitting light. Thus they may grow up into a holy temple for God.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 10

Some who are really capable men, intelligent in the Scriptures, do not know what it is to bring religion into their homes. They treat the wife and mother of their children as an inferior, never ask her advice, never consult her taste, never think she has a right to her individual taste or feelings, or judgment. They order, she obeys. I know this is a rag of heathenism, but it is the custom of many in this country. They do not know anything better. They need to be Christianized; and when the truth is once received in the love of it, then we can obtain their confidence and instruct them.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 11

When you see women in Italy doing the heaviest work that belongs to men, driving or leading their cow teams, and great strong men in the wagon riding, you can have a little degradation put upon women. They rear their children, do the hardest part of the work, and they fade early and look far older than the men.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 12

In winter they leave their houses, which they call cold, and because they cannot afford wood for a fire, go into the stables with their cattle. Here are the cows, donkeys—if they are rich enough to have a donkey—sheep, goats, hens, and perhaps one pane of glass, little square holes, or oblong crevices for ventilation. These are kept carefully stuffed with hay in winter to exclude the air. In such places is where our laborers in Torre Pellice and adjoining valleys hold their meetings. They have to reach the people where they are. One would not think of such a thing as sympathizing with them, for they do not know any better way, although some who do thus are financially considered well off, and some have intelligent countenances and minds.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 13

They pity Americans when told that they do not live in stables in winter. They inquire if they do not suffer greatly with cold? The warmth of the cattle they consider as good as stoves. They eat, keep their provision hung up in baskets in the stables. Bro. A. C. Bourdeau has shared their hospitality several times when he has been holding meetings in these stables. This repast would be a piece of black bread, nearly as black as a stone. This bread is made from smutty wheat, ground up smut and all, and eaten with a little milk or wheat cheese. Fifty or seventy-five will congregate in one of these stables and sit on the straw of dry leaves which have been carefully gathered for bedding for the cattle and for their beds. These stables have no floors in them, but the people will sit on the leaves or musty straw, and with ears, eyes, and mouth open listen with intense interest to the Word of God, and they seemed charmed. Some of the very best members of the Vaudois churches are among the hearers in these meetings, and the ministers are doing their best to break up the meetings, but they have not as yet succeeded. Bro. A. C. Bourdeau occasionally attends these meetings, but the principle workers are Italians. The Americans are not inured to the atmosphere of the stables, and their throat and lungs become inflamed and diseased. Italians can stand this atmosphere much better, so we are seeking to educate the Italians to go into the stables, and when once the people are interested, then halls are hired. These halls are generally only rooms in a private dwelling, which will hold about one hundred people. Then Eld. A. C. Bourdeau, our laborer in Italy, speaks to them. But if they should once get the impression that he would not condescend to meet them in the stable, they would say, Because he is an American he thinks himself too good to associate with us and we will not go to hear him. So great care has to be taken to this matter.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 14

Brother Geymet, an Italian, is doing what he can. We tried to educate him. He can talk both French and Italian, so he is fitted for this field. This brother walks up the rugged mountains through the defiles, in paths where precipices are on either side, and where in fogs, which are so common to these mountains, a stranger would most surely imperil his life; but one who is accustomed to these trails can find his way, but he dare not go alone. He is holding meetings in three different villages, one five miles away, another seven, and the other three. He goes on foot to these places, holds his meeting commencing at eight o'clock, and then walks home, getting to his bed about midnight. This is done night after night. W. C. White accompanied him to one place, by name Angronia, meaning the valley of groans. The place was seven miles distant. Mary K. White and I went in a carriage part way, and when we could go no farther because there was no carriage road, we returned and stopped in a pretty village in the narrow valley and inquired for the noted place where so many Protestants perished. We left the carriage, and a venerable-looking man about sixty years of age communicated to us freely the history of the village. Once it was a flourishing village. But the Catholics who had found entrance there burned the village. The inmates of the dwellings were driven out. We were then standing in a beautiful level spot of land clothed with living green. Plum, cherry, and peach trees scattered here and there were in full bloom. Our guide walked along, conversing as he went. Thousands of poor souls were driven to the edge of this level table land which ended abruptly in a deep precipice, from the sides of which projected rugged rocks, sharp and cruel, and were pitched over, and many of their mangled bodies were a prey to the wild beasts or birds. There on those pointed rocks hung for weeks the bodies of pastor, peasant, mother and child, having [been] caught by their clothes. At present there stands a house of worship called

Vaudois temple, and at a little distance upon a strong fortification of rocks stands a Catholic church and a monastery. No carriage can reach this from the road some distance below. Our guide informed us that no less than three times had their church been destroyed by fire, and as many times rebuilt. He pointed towards it and the fence and said, We built a strong foundation of stone and then an iron fence with sharp picks on the top, and a Catholic divine asked us what we were doing that for. We answered, You have burned our church three times and we wish to make it as secure as possible, and after we have done all we can on our part we will trust it with God. He said the Catholic flew into a rage and said he was glad they had burned it and wished they would do it again, it ought to be burned. Well the view or the scenery from this point is grand, awful, and awe inspiring. It is indescribable. You look at the mountains reaching thousands of feet above the level of the valley, and there are houses clinging like nests to the brown rocks all up the sides of the valley, terrace after terrace to the very summit. There are houses that are hundreds of years old. These were the places of refuge for the persecuted ones; among God's mountains was their stronghold and fortress. We turned from this place of interest and stepped into the carriage and carefully descended the steep heights. The Italians dared not drive a carriage along these precipice roads which to avoid the castle-like rocks and high mountains wind up the mountainside like this. We left W. C. White with Bro. Geymet to attend the meeting in the stable. He said there were about fifty present sitting on the mangers, straw, dry leaves, or ground floor. He said he conversed with several before the meeting, and they were deeply interested in the Bible light which has been given to them. They said at first they thought these strange and interesting things were not in the Bible until they began to search their Bibles and found them for themselves. And they were still searching the Scriptures. The Sabbath has been presented, and they want to see the evidence for it themselves. 4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 15

Now this is good work, but performed under the greatest difficulties. But God has precious souls in these valleys, and this is the only way we can see to reach them. But we shall have to limit our labors unless means shall come into these missions. I have prayed much over this matter, and my mind was carried to you. I have presented to you the hardest fields; there are more favorable fields. God is working in Lausanne, Switzerland, and in France and Russia, and India. Letters are coming, begging for help. We have sent Bro. Albert Vuilleumier to Africa in response to an urgent call. He has made some reports to us, in reference to his visit, which as yet have not been translated to me.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 16

I have a request to make of you, my brother and sister. As God has placed in your hands means and made you His agents, I feel as a servant of the Lord to ask you to give something for this missionary field. I ask Sister Addie if she could not replace that one thousand that was cut off from this mission fund. We need means. We are unable to support laborers in the work. They are poor and cannot work without means. They do not live at all as our ministers in America. They are very economical in both food and clothing; but they must live, and many of them have families to support; these must be fed and clothed.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 17

Brother Littlejohn, how much of your earthly treasure are you laying up in heaven? What are you doing with the means entrusted to your stewardship? I hope you have not wrapped it in a napkin and buried it in the earth. I hope that while you live you will dispense that which God has lent you in a wise, judicious manner, and not leave these things as did Bro. Harvey, throwing upon others the burden of the work which belongs to you, but attend to it while you have your reason and ability.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 18

Jesus for our sake became poor that we through His poverty might be made rich. He requires of us self-denial. He requires us to act a part in sustaining with our means and influence the cause of truth. This work will go, but you and I want to have a part to act in its advancement. There never was a time when we could do more earnest work than now; and while the angels are holding the four winds, we want to work with our means and with our influence.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 19

I have confidence that you will place by the side of your wife another one thousand. You can do this much and not distress yourself. I am working with hired money. My property is for sale, and until I can sell it I borrow money and am paying eight per cent on thousands and shall use it until God shall open the way for me to pay both principal and interest. The Lord wants us to be laborers with Him. Will you carefully consider this proposition? I thought your wife could not feel justly free and clear until that one thousand should be replaced to this European mission. I have been waiting and hoping that she would do this without my introducing the matter to her, but I have now done so.4LtMs, Lt 44, 1886, par. 20

Dear Brother and Sister Vuilleumier:

I am anxious to obtain the loan of a book entitled The Giant Cities of Bashan. Will you please to send it to me? I will take good care of it and return it to you again soon.⁴*LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 1*

I cannot tell you how anxious I am for the work in Lausanne, that it shall take a right mold and prosper. There is a great work to be done in many places in this great European harvest field. And I hope that the work in Lausanne will so shape itself that you will not feel that you must be confined to this locality, but be ready to take hold with earnestness in other places as the Lord shall open the way. There is a great work to be done and but few workers. And there is need of every one who can work, taking hold with disinterested effort wherever and whenever duty seems to indicate. Every worker must now make the most of the precious time and opportunities to win souls to Christ. There is need of broader views with most of our workers and of their cultivating a spirit of unselfishness. These are the lessons we must learn and teach to others. There is need of your cultivating a trait of character of thoughtfulness, of tenderness, and of respect for your brethren. You need to cultivate tact to build up and draw men to Christ.⁴*LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 2*

There has been encouraged in yourself and your brothers a constant temptation to criticize, to find fault, and to question others' motives. Now, my brother, work out of this as fast as possible. The state of the church in Bienne I regard in a very sad condition. God is not pleased with that church, because the spirit of criticism has been largely indulged, and they have not been cherishing the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus. There has been much said to the injury of those whom Christ calls His brethren; and Christ charges it to them as though done unto Himself. Christ identifies His interests with His people. God will not work with the church to add souls to it when they do not show wisdom and tact to strengthen and build up those of their own number.4LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 3

God's people should become wise, and the church in Bienne need a special work accomplished for them in order that they may correctly represent the religion of Jesus Christ, the need to come into a position of humiliation before God. They must seek the meek and lowly spirit of Jesus and love as brethren. The church must work as Christ worked, and love as Christ loved. They need not expect that God will add souls to the church, when they do not know how to treat them. With their present spirit they will criticize and sit in judgment upon any one who does not agree with their own ideas. What they want is the grand principles of truth interwoven in their experience and mingled in their character, and then they will be fit to represent Christ and to lead souls to the truth. When their meetings are meetings of criticisms, the Spirit of God leaves them to themselves. They need the sweet, abiding Spirit of Christ in their own hearts; then angels will accompany them in their meetings. But self has been interwoven into their religious experience, and self has ruled and controlled in their meetings. There is a weak and sickly state of things in the church, because of the condition of its members. This spirit I hope will never be revealed in the church at Lausanne. I hope and pray that all the workers may feel the solemn responsibility that rests upon them, that they may so conduct their labors that they may leave a Christlike mold upon the work and not the mold of finite man. They should be kind and affectionate and sacredly guard the interests of each other. They should be courteous like Christ; pure, holy, and humble; constantly gathering with Christ; binding up wounds, but not making them. They should bring all the fragrance of the graces of the Spirit of Christ into their work. They must study never to repel, but to win.4LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 4

We have reason to expect that more will embrace the truth in Lausanne, if the workers place themselves in right relation to God; for then they will become channels of light. Remember ever, that you can only reach the people through God. If Jesus is brought into your hearts, then your works will reveal Christ. You will not become narrow in your ideas, but broad and extended. Just as soon as the spirit of criticism comes in, then the Spirit of the Lord departs. It is Satan's work to be an accuser of the brethren. I feel very deeply over this point, that the very first example that is given to this church in Lausanne should be that of kindness, compassion, and true Christian courtesy. If the workers cultivate gentleness, and meekness, and love for one another, this example will be far reaching. It will be well to dwell much upon the exercise of thoughtfulness in words and actions towards each other. There is altogether too little of the love of Jesus exhibited in the hearts of those who profess the love of the truth, and in those who teach the truth to others, because they are not daily learners themselves in the school of Christ. Hearts are too much bound up in selfishness; they love that which appertains to self more than they love God and their brethren. The love of God will bind hearts together. Selfishness will separate hearts. We want more of Jesus and less of self.4LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 5

May the Lord help you, my brother, that you may be in the hands of God, as clay in the hands of the potter, molded and fashioned to be a vessel unto honor. You have light; you have knowledge of the truth; and God wants you to impart all this to those who are in darkness. You cannot live to yourself, and yet please God. God will do for you great things if you will only believe in Him and walk before Him in meekness and humbleness of mind. Never, never become self-sufficient. Rely wholly upon Jesus. His might and power will attend you. Throw your whole energies into the work; looking to Jesus, trusting in Jesus, put on the whole armor of righteousness; weave the golden threads of love into your character; reveal it in your labor; and you will carry a holy atmosphere with you; you will win souls to Jesus Christ. Oh, my brother, the Lord is good! He wants to work for us, and He will work for us if we only believe and trust Him. But self-sufficiency often excludes Jesus. I long to see this work move forward as I know it will if we have a close connection with God. You can do a good work if you hide self behind Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 6

May God bless you abundantly, that you may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 45, 1886, par. 7

My dear Brother Bourdeau:

I write you at this time because it is the first opportunity I have been able to secure to do this. We feel deeply interested in your work in France, and we are sure that God will give success to the work if you go forward in His name and heed and observe the cautions He has given you from time to time for years in the past. Do not place yourself in a position to be constantly weary; for God does not place you there. I have been shown in your case as in that of others of our brethren that you make mistakes in your manner of labor; and the reason why I feel urged upon to keep this matter before you is you are blind to these mistakes yourself. When you begin an effort you load yourself down with many burdens that are not essential to the present work, but only hinder it. You feel that the Lord lays these upon you and that He calls and directs your mind in many things, when He does not do this; it is the working out of a nervous, intensely active temperament, which in a great degree defeats the very purpose and work which you so much desire to do. 4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 1

In order to make a success in this work you must do one thing at a time, concentrate your powers upon that one work. Your judgment in this direction is at fault. When you begin to give a series of discourses, make these discourses the main business. Do not begin to write letters and articles for the papers; for you divide your strength in doing this. Elder Waggoner and Elder Loughborough were corrected in this matter. The Lord showed me that the important work of presenting the truth was being marred in their hands; not one-half the strength was brought into their work, because of their devoting so much time to letter writing. The visiting is the important part of the labor; but the time of these brethren was occupied in almost constant writing which wearied them, occupied their time, and did not help the present work, but hindered it. The people were robbed of the clear, convincing exposition of Scripture, and the devotional part of the work was neglected.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 2

Their manner of presenting the truth was far from being perfect. They rambled too much in their discourses, bringing in too large an amount of matter. They were well satisfied with their work themselves; they did not discern their mistakes and see that their work was far from being what it might and should have been with their capabilities. Now the reason: out of the desk they employed much of their time in writing, excusing themselves from visiting because they were so busy and so tired. As the result, they were brain weary when they came into the desk; they were not prepared to do a work that God could set His seal upon. They made nothing clear. Yet if they worked themselves up to a high pitch of excitement, they thought their discourses were powerful.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 3

They touched here and there, bringing a large mass of matter which they regarded as convincing and overwhelming evidence, but in fact they buried the truth under a mass of matter poured out upon the hearers so that the points never could be found. Everything they presented was muddled. So many subjects were brought into one discourse that no point stood proved and clear in the minds of those unacquainted with the truth. That which was perfectly clear to them they thought must be clear to others when they had presented a mass of matter which the mind could not handle. One subject, a few points made plain and clear, would be of more value to the hearer than this mass of matter which you may call evidence and think your point substantiated. But it is this which the people do not comprehend, and it cannot benefit them.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 4

Your mistake has been this: Just as soon as you enter upon an effort, you begin to do much writing. Now if your part of the work is to write, if God has said to you as He did to John, Write these things, then give yourself to that, and do not attempt more. If you are to give discourses, your mind is not vigorous enough, although intensely active, to sustain the strain of speaking and visiting and writing. You should let your mind rest in a great degree when you engage in an effort to present new and startling truths to the people, the reception of which involves a cross. You need to carefully select your subject, make your discourses short and important points of doctrine very plain. Take up one point at a time in a discourse, make it strong and clear and plain, with reasons drawn from the Word of God that all may understand. Your discourses should be short. When you preach at great length the mind of the hearer cannot grasp one quarter of what you say.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 5

You manifest strong faith in the truth and express it. You express strong faith in God and what He will do for His people. But on one point you cannot trust the Lord; that is, to do your part only and leave the Lord to do His part. You take the work out of the hands of God to do yourself. You seem to think that the Lord has not power to bless a short discourse to the good of the hearer. While you may give the whole counsel of God, it is not all to be given in one discourse, but to extend over a period of labor when you engage in a protracted effort.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 6

I know that you plead not to be interfered with, that you must work in your own harness, you must be independent and follow the leadings of your own mind. But you are far from being a safe and successful worker in doing this. Your mind is not always in such a condition that you can safely follow its leadings. Frequently things come into your mind which you regard as the special teachings of the Spirit of God, impressions direct from the Lord; but they are not. You cannot rely upon these impressions. Elder Andrews did this, and it was to a great degree ruin of body as well as to the detriment of his soul. It was the Lord's way to instruct him by warnings and counsels through the testimonies. This light was to correct the force of his impressions; and yet these impressions were preferred and relied upon. The light given of God was rejected because it did not coincide with these impressions and sustain the intense feelings he had upon many points. This is the very way with yourself. God has given you light, not because He wants to embarrass you and tear you in pieces, but to correct your mistakes, that He may build you up, strengthen, stablish, settle you; that you may not be at one time on the mountain top and at another in the lowest depths. The reason why we have to keep pressing these points is that they do not have the force on your mind that your own impressions have. The light God has given you is set aside, and Daniel has his own will and his own way, whatever betides.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 7

Now you are to engage in an important work and let the Lord come into your counsels. Preach short, govern your voice, put all the pathos and melody into it you can, and this terrible exhaustion that is liable to come through long protracted preaching will be avoided. Remember that the whole counsel of God is not to be brought out in one discourse. Let the people have the heavenly food in such measure that they can retain it and carry it away with them and digest it, so that their minds can comprehend the truth and their souls be impressed with it.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 8

It should be uttered in the most pleasant manner, that they may want to hear again. The gospel seed is to be sown and take root and bear fruit. The truth is precious, of more value than gold; therefore its delivery should be carefully considered, that the message may be presented in such a manner that it will be to the hearer as the voice of God.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 9

Much of the effect of discourses is lost because of the manner in which they are delivered. The speaker frequently forgets that he is God's messenger, and that Christ and angels are in his audience as listeners. His voice should not be raised to a high key, shouting out the truth as through a trumpet; for this is more nervous power than the calm spirit and power of the Holy Ghost. Jesus, the greatest teacher the world ever knew, was calm, earnest, and impressive in His discourses. He is our example in all things.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 10

It is of little consequence how much we either hear or read from the Word of God, or how much we write upon the truth, unless we make the message our own, bring it into our life practice. We ourselves are to be sanctified through the truth. The message of salvation, the tidings we proclaim concern our individual life and character and practice. We are to read the Word as written expressly for us and practice the teachings of Christ for our own individual salvation. Then we shall be strong in the strength of the Mighty One.4LtMs, Lt

The people need to be educated. This cannot be done if all the preacher's powers are given to sermonizing or to brainwork and writing; for this unfits for the real work at the right time, and it has to be neglected for want of strength. The vitality, both physical and mental, has been expended needlessly, and the work has not been done with efficiency to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. The mere hearing of sermons Sabbath after Sabbath, or the reading of the Bible through and through, or the explanation of it verse by verse will not benefit us or those who hear us unless we bring these precious truths into our own individual experience. In short, my brother, you must take time to be a Christian, not tax brain and nerve to such an extent that you cannot be Christlike under difficulties. It is only by living a life in harmony with that of the Saviour that we meet the requirement of God to be not only hearers, but doers of the Word.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 12

The counsels are of God, and His Word was not given in a few days on a high-pressure plan. It took a long space of time to bring out the Bible history. Under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, a chapter was written, a psalm was composed, a proverb penned, a vision from God recorded, and so down through the ages the will and purposes of God were brought out. About fifteen hundred years were occupied from the time Moses began to write the book of Genesis down to the completion of the Revelation by the beloved John. God would not have us so excitable, in such a hurry; and yet there are some who need to be taught diligence.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 13

God help the teachers of His Word that they may give due attention to their discourses. I know that you do not do this. I know that you write too many letters that tire the mind and have an exciting influence upon the nervous system. You need less of the ways and impulses of Daniel Bourdeau and more, far more, of the oil of grace which will make the machinery run without so great heat and friction.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 14

There are sermons that are so filled with heavenly dew and fatness that the people never get weary of listening. But where this is the most lacking there is an endeavor to make up in length for want of the Spirit of God. But when the people are impressed that the message they hear has first been brought home to the soul of the speaker, that he has proved the preciousness of the truth, that his heart enlarged by the love of God is reaching out for others, that they may be blessed as he has been, that they may be partakers of the same consolation and receive the same joy, then souls will be stirred. They will come into sympathy with the speaker.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 15

“I do not like to go much beyond the half hour,” said a faithful and earnest preacher, who certainly never gave to his hearers that which cost him nothing in the preparation. “I know that the spiritual digestion of some is but weak, and I should be sorry for my hearers to spend the second half hour in forgetting what I had said in the first, or in wishing that I would cease when I had given them as much as they could carry away.”4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 16

The discourses given upon present truth are full of important matter; and if these discourses are carefully considered before being presented to the people, if they are condensed, and do not cover too much ground, if the Spirit of the Master goes with the utterances, no one will be left in darkness, no one will have cause to complain of being unfed. The preparation both in preacher and hearer has very much to do with the result.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 17

I will here quote a few words that have come under my notice just now: “I always know by the length of Cannon’s sermon whether he has been much from home during the week,” said one of his flock. “When carefully studied, his discourses are of moderate length, but it is almost impossible for his hearers to forget the teachings conveyed in them. When he has had no time for preparation, his sermons are unreasonably long, and it is equally impossible to get anything out of them which will stick to the memory.” Another able minister was asked how long he was accustomed to preach. “When I prepare thoroughly, half an hour. When only partially, an hour. But when I enter the pulpit without previous preparation, I go on for any length of time you like; in fact I never know when to stop.” Here is another forcible statement: “A good shepherd,” says a writer,

“should have always abundance of bread in his scrip, and his dog under command. The dog is his zeal, which he must lead, order, and moderate. His scrip full of bread is his mind full of useful knowledge, and he should ever be in readiness to give nourishment to his flock.”4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 18

We have important, solemn truth to give to the people. Thank God, my dear brother, that you can act as a co-laborer with Christ; but do not, I beg you, groan under a yoke that Christ has never placed upon your neck. Do not bend under a burden which He has not made it your duty to lift. That which has greatly lessened the effect of your discourses in an important effort is that with that effort you keep up almost incessant writing, so that the vital elements and the condensed arguments are not matters of thoughtful consideration with you. You keep on hand no reserve force. You preach too many discourses, and too long, on a high key. When you cannot speak without being obliged to cough quite frequently, do not try to speak; for you so enlist the sympathies of the hearers that they take no true sense of what you are saying. These points are worthy of consideration. You imperil your own health and make it painful, exceedingly painful, for the hearers, so that anything you may present to them will not have much effect on their hearts or principles.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 19

I write this because I want you to preserve your life and your influence, and I want the cause of God to have the very best kind of service we can any of us give it. We must not be fitful, changeable, as the weather vane in our feelings. Nervous prostration comes from over taxation. Now God gives you a part to act in His cause in connection with your brethren. In these important efforts, it is best that as strong a force as possible should be connected with the work. No one's freedom is to be limited, no one is to be ignored, no one is to bear universal sway; but you are to counsel together and pray together and realize that if left to the strength and wisdom of any one of you, you will surely fail. You must not trust your own experience or wisdom or knowledge. God must be your dependence, and your trust. If you look to Him, trust in Him, believe in Him, and feel your own utter helplessness, then you will have help of the right kind just when it is most needed. God help the workers! Do we estimate the truth above the estimate we have of ourselves? Do we appreciate it according to its value? If we believe that we are engaged in a work of preparing people to stand in the great day of God, then we shall labor accordingly. It is not the busy activity that we bring into the work that makes it a success, but it is the well-directed effort that we make, not trusting in ourselves, but through the grace of Christ, taking God at His word, working humbly with the Spirit of God, keeping self under strict control, preserving nerve and brain from overtaxation, that religion may be the controlling element in our life, that the atmosphere of heaven may be diffused in the home circle, in the church, everywhere. 4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 20

Show that you believe in God. Self-will indulged will drive to infidelity. Self subdued will lead to the submission of thought, word, and action to Christ. The Word of God, not impulses, not impressions, must be your guide. A solemn, sacred work is this, to preach the truth for these last times to perishing souls. Take the things God has revealed in warnings, reproofs, corrections, encouragements. But if we have eyes that see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that feel not, then it is in vain that the declaration from God has ever come to us. God has come very nigh to us; He has honored us by making us the depositaries of His truth, and this places us under the most sacred obligation to be keepers and diffusers of the light that must illuminate those who are in darkness. Has God made a mistake in us? Are we His chosen vessels? Are we the agents whom He has selected to carry out and send forth the last message of mercy to the world? Oh, if we only had Jesus in our works, if His Spirit controlled our actions, if it were the rule and law of our life, what a power for good we should be in the world. We must remember that others have pleaded and preached for souls; persons more learned and talented than we have pleaded in vain. But the humble, devoted worker, feeling his own weakness and depending only upon God, will realize the strength and sufficiency of the Mighty Helper. 4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 21

We must pray more, have more faith. We only partially believe God's Word. We shall reveal all the faith we have. We want to take in the greatness of the work, believing every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. We must show our faith by our works. 4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 22

Let not one of you seek for the supremacy. Let each regard his brother laborer as a worker for God. Let all plans be opened before the council, and not one labor to be the greatest. Alas, we are blind to our own deficiencies. We are not easily impressed with our weakness and the necessity of seeing as far as possible our errors, not to discourage our efforts, but to bring us to reform and thorough reformation. The minister must stand perfect in Christ, wanting in nothing, if he would present every man perfect in Christ Jesus, coming behind in no grace.4LtMs, Lt 47, 1886, par. 23

Variant of Lt 47, 1886. Portions of this letter are published in 8MR 328-330.

My Dear Brother:

We feel deeply interested in your work, and God will give success if you go forward in His name and heed the cautions He has given you from time to time. He does not require you to place yourself in a position where you must necessarily be constantly wearied. I have seen that you, as well as others of our brethren, make mistakes in your methods of labor; and I feel urged to keep this matter before you because you are blind to these mistakes yourself. 4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 1

Your error has been this: Just as soon as you enter upon a ministerial effort, you begin to write letters and articles for the press, which tax your brain, exhaust your nerve power, and unfit you for labor in the pulpit. In order to be successful, you must do but one thing at a time, concentrating all your powers upon that. If God has said to you as he did to John, "Write" [Revelation 1:11], then give yourself to that, and do not attempt more. But if you are to give discourses, your mind, although intensely active, is not vigorous enough to sustain the strain of speaking and visiting, and writing too. You should let your pen rest in a great measure when you engage in an effort to present new and startling truths to the people, the reception of which involves a cross. 4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 2

Elders Waggoner and Loughborough were reprov'd for this same error. The Lord showed me that the message for this time was being marred in their hands. The work just before them did not receive half their strength, because they devoted so much time to writing. They excused themselves from visiting, which is an important part of labor, because they were so busy and so tired. As the result of this extra work, they were brainweary when they entered the pulpit and were not prepared to do a work upon which God could set his seal. They made nothing plain. Everything they presented was confused, and thus the people were robbed of the clear, convincing exposition of Scripture. The devotional part of the work also was neglected. Their manner of presenting the truth was far from having that strength and perfection it should have had; yet if they worked themselves up to a high pitch of excitement in delivery, they thought their discourses were powerful. They were well satisfied with their own efforts and did not discern their mistakes nor see that their work was far from being what their capabilities might have made it. 4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 3

In their discourses, they touched here and there, bringing in a large mass of matter which they regarded as convincing and overwhelming evidence for the truth; but in fact the proof was so buried up that the people could never find it. So many subjects, too, were brought into one discourse, that not one point stood out clear in the minds of those unacquainted with our peculiar views. That which was perfectly clear to the speaker he thought must be so to the hearers; but the brethren did not realize that these are new and starting subjects and should be presented slowly. The mind cannot grasp so much at once. One subject brought out at a time, a few points made clear and strong, would be of more value to the hearer than such a mass of matter poured on to the people to substantiate the points. 4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 4

In your own work, you should select your subjects carefully and bring out important points of doctrine very plain. It will cost you an effort to take up one point at a time, making it clear and strong with proofs drawn from the Word of God that all may understand; but it is the only way that you can be really successful. 4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 5

And make your discourses short. When you speak at great length, the minds of your hearers cannot grasp one quarter of what you say. The mistake of preaching long discourses is one which you should correct at once. You express strong faith in God, and in what He is ready to do for His people; but on one point you do not trust Him; that is, to do His part of the work. You not only try to do your own part, but you take God's part out of His hands to do yourself. You seem to think that the Lord cannot bless a short discourse to the good of the hearers. Remember that while you may give the whole counsel of God, it is not all to be given in one discourse. Let the people have the heavenly food in such a measure that they can retain it, and carry it away with them, and digest it, that their minds may comprehend the truth and their souls be impressed with it. It should be uttered in the most pleasant manner, that the people may want to hear again. You should govern your voice and put all the melody and pathos into it you can. Then this terrible exhaustion which is liable to come through long-protracted preaching will be avoided. When you cannot speak without being obliged to cough quite frequently, do not try to speak; for you so enlist the sympathies of your hearers that they can get no true sense of what you are saying.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 6

I write thus because I want you to preserve your life and influence, and because I want the cause of God to have the very best service you can give it. Nervous prostration comes from overwork.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 7

We have an important, solemn truth to give to the people. Thank God, my dear brother, that you can act as a co-laborer with Christ. Do not, I beg of you, groan under a yoke that Jesus has never placed upon your neck; do not bend under a burden which He has not made it your duty to lift. The gospel seed is to be sown, that it may take root and bear fruit. It is more precious than gold; therefore its delivery should be carefully considered, that it may be presented in such a manner that it may be to the hearer as the voice of God.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 8

Much of the effect of many discourses is lost because of the manner in which they are delivered. The speaker forgets that he is God's messenger, and that Christ and angels are in his audience. He should present the truth in a calm, earnest, impressive manner; for this is the way Jesus did, and He is our example. Then the Holy Ghost will have room to work upon hearts and melt them into tenderness before God.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 9

It is of little consequence how much we either hear or read from the Word of God, or how much we write upon the truth, unless we make the message our own, bring it into our life practice. We ourselves are to be sanctified through the truth, that others may be sanctified through us. The message of salvation, the tidings we proclaim, concern our individual life, our character and practice. We should read the Word of God as if written expressly for us and practice the teachings of Christ for our own individual salvation; then we shall be strong in the strength of the Mighty One. The mere hearing of sermons Sabbath after Sabbath, the reading of the Bible through and through, or the explanation of it verse by verse will not benefit us or those who hear us, unless we bring these precious truths into our own individual experience.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 10

There are sermons that are so filled with heavenly dew and sunshine that the people never get weary of listening to them. When the people are impressed that the message they hear has first been brought home to the soul of the speaker; that he has proved the preciousness of the truth; that his heart, enlarged by the love of God, is reaching out for others, that they may be blessed as he has been, and may be partakers of the same consolation and receive the same joy, then their souls will be stirred. They will come into sympathy with the speaker.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 11

The discourses given upon present truth are full of important matter; and if they are carefully prepared before being presented to the people; if the Spirit of the Master goes with the utterances, no one will be left in darkness or will have cause to complain of being unfed. The preparation, both in speaker and hearer, has very much to do with the result.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 12

My brother, you must take time to be a Christian, not tax brain and nerve to such an extent that you cannot be Christlike under difficulties. It is only by living a life in harmony with that of the Saviour that we meet the requirements of God, to be not only hearers, but doers of the Word of God.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 13

The Lord would not have us be so excitable, in such a hurry. The counsels of God in His Word were not given in a few days, on the high-pressure plan. It took a long period of time to bring out the Bible history. Under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, a chapter was written, a psalm composed, a proverb penned, a vision recorded, and so down through the ages the will and purposes of God were brought out. About fifteen hundred years passed from the time Moses began to write the book of Genesis, down to the completion of the Revelation by the beloved John.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 14

The people need to be educated. This cannot be done if all the preacher's powers are given to other things. If your vitality, both mental and physical, has been expended needlessly, you cannot do your work with efficiency.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 15

"I do not like to go much beyond the half hour," said a faithful and earnest preacher, who certainly never gave to his hearers that which had cost him nothing in the preparation. "I know that the spiritual digest of some is but weak, and I should be sorry for my hearers to spend the second half hour in forgetting what I had said in the first, or in wishing that I would cease when I had given them as much as they could carry away."4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 16

"I always know by the length of Cannon's sermons whether he has been much from home during the week," said one of his flock. "When carefully studied, his discourses are of a moderate length; but it is almost impossible for his hearers to forget the teachings conveyed in them. When he has had no time for preparation, his sermons are unreasonably long; and it is equally impossible to get anything out of them which will stick to the memory."4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 17

Another able minister was asked how long he was accustomed to preach. "When I prepare thoroughly, half an hour; when only partially, an hour; but when I enter the pulpit without previous preparation, I go on for any length of time you like; in fact, I never know when to stop."4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 18

Here is another forcible statement: "A good shepherd should always have abundance of bread in his scrip and his dog under command. His dog is his zeal, which he must lead, order, and moderate. His scrip full of bread is his mind full of useful knowledge, and he should ever be in readiness to give nourishment to his flock."4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 19

I know that you plead not to be interfered with, that you must work in your own harness, that you must be independent and follow the leadings of your own mind. But in doing this you are far from being a safe, successful worker. Your mind is not always in such a condition that its leading can be safely followed. Frequently things come into your mind which you regard as the special teaching of the Spirit of God—impressions direct from Him—when they are not from Him at all. You cannot rely upon these impressions.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 20

Elder Andrews did this, and it was to a great degree the ruin of body as well as soul. The Lord tried to instruct him and counteract the force of these impressions; but he preferred to rely upon them, and therefore, because the light God gave him did not coincide with these impressions, and sustain the intense feeling he had upon many points, it was rejected.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 21

God has given you light, not because He wants to embarrass you, but so that you may see and correct your mistakes, that you may be built up, strengthened, and established. He does not want you to be so unstable—on the mountaintop that one time, and then in the lowest depths. The reason why these points have to be pressed upon you is because they do not have the force on your mind that your own impressions have. The light God has given you is set aside, and you have your own way, whatever betide.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 22

But you must not trust your own experience or wisdom. God must be your dependence, your trust. If you look to Him, believe in Him, and feel your own utter helplessness, then you will have the right kind of help just when it is most needed. In these important efforts to present the truth before the people, it is best that as strong a force as possible be connected with the work. No one should be ignored, no one should have universal sway; and no one's freedom is to be limited. They should counsel together and pray together, realizing all the time that they are not to trust in their own strength and wisdom, but in the living God, and then they cannot fail. God help the workers!4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 23

laborer as a worker for God. Let all plans be opened before the council. Alas! we are blind to our own deficiency. We are not easily impressed with our own weakness. We do not see the necessity of becoming acquainted with our errors; not to discourage us, but to bring us to thorough reformation. The minister himself must stand perfect in Christ, wanting in nothing, if he would present every man perfect, coming behind in no gift. We must have more faith. By our works we shall reveal all the faith we have. We must comprehend the greatness of the work, believing every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 24

Is our estimate of the truth above the estimate we have of ourselves? Do we appreciate it according to its value? If we believe that we are engaged in the work of preparing a people to stand in the great day of God, then we shall labor accordingly. It is not so much the activity that we bring into the work that makes it a success, but it is the well-directed efforts, not trusting in ourselves, but through the grace of Christ, taking God at His word, working humbly with Him, keeping self under strict control, preserving nerve and brain from overtaxation, and having religion the controlling element in our lives, that the atmosphere of heaven may be diffused in the home circle, in the church, everywhere.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 25

Show that you believe in God. Self-will indulged will drive to infidelity. Self subdued will lead to the submission of every thought, word, and action to Christ. The Word of God, not impulses, not impressions, must be your guide.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 26

A solemn, sacred work is this, to preach the truths for these last times to perishing souls. Take the things God has revealed in warnings, reproofs, corrections, encouragements. But if we have eyes that see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that feel not, then it is in vain that the declaration from God has ever come to us. God has honored us by making us the depositaries of His truth; and He has placed us under the most sacred obligations to diffuse that light, that it may illuminate those who are in darkness.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 27

Has God been mistaken in us? Are we not His chosen vessels? Are we not the agents He has selected through whom to send forth the last message of mercy to a world? Oh, if we only had Jesus in our hearts, if His Spirit controlled our actions, if His law was the rule of our life, what a power for good we would be in the world! We must remember that others have pleaded and preached for souls—persons more learned and talented than we—and have pleaded in vain. But the humble, devoted worker, feeling his own weakness, and depending only upon God, will realize the strength and sufficiency of the mighty Helper.4LtMs, Lt 47a, 1886, par. 28

Brethren Engaged in Labor in Nimes

Basel, Switzerland

August 24, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 17MR 67-74.

Dear Brethren Engaged in Labor in Nimes:

I feel very grateful for the success you have had and sincerely hope that you will cling to the work until it is nicely bound off. When the first efforts are made in a place by giving a first course of lectures, there is really greater necessity for a second course than for the first. The truth is new and startling, and the people need to have the same presented the second time, to get the points distinct and the ideas fixed in the mind.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 1

I have been reading over some of the light God has given me. It is like this: There should be great wisdom used in the presentation of a truth that comes directly in opposition to the opinions and practices of the people. Paul's habit was to dwell upon the prophecies when with the Jewish people and bring them down step by step and then after some time open the subject of Christ as the true Messiah.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 2

I have been shown that our ministers go too rapidly through their subjects and bring the most objectionable features of our faith too early into their effort. There are truths that will not involve so great a cross that should be kept before their minds day after day, and even weeks, before the Sabbath and immortality questions are entered into. Then you gain the confidence of the people as being men who have clear, forcible arguments, and they think you understand the Scriptures. When once the confidence of the people is gained, then it is time enough to introduce publicly the Sabbath and immortality questions. But men who are not wise advance these questions too soon, and thus close the ears of the people, when with greater care, and more faith and aptness and wisdom, they could have carried them along step by step through the important events in the prophecies and in dwelling upon practical subjects in the teachings of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 3

In efforts made in large cities, one half of the effort is lost because they close up the work too soon and go to a new field. Paul labored long in his fields, continuing his work for one year in one place and one year and a half in another place. The haste to close up an effort has frequently resulted in a great loss. Never weary the hearers by long discourses. This is not wise. For many years I have been laboring on this point, seeking to have our brethren sermonize less and devote their time and strength to making important points of truth plain; for every point will be assailed by our opponents. Every one connected with the work should keep fresh ideas. They should not allow themselves to become merely spectators, but interested workers watching for opportunities to speak with souls; to come close to them by personal, interested efforts. And by tact and foresight, bring all that is possible into your work to interest your hearers, but avoid long sermons, for they soon weary of this. They want a diversity of labor.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 4

The Bible readings are of great advantage and will do more to fasten the points of truth in the minds than many discourses. But short, plainly made points, avoiding all rambling, will be of the greatest advantage. God would not have you exhaust your energies before you come into the meeting, either in writing or in any other employment; for when you come with a tired mind, you give a very imperfect discourse to the people. Put your freshest energies into the work, and let not the slightest dullness or imperfectness be seen in any of your efforts. If from any cause you are tired, and exhausted, for Christ's sake do not attempt to give a discourse. Let another who is not thus exhausted speak short, to the point, or else have a Bible reading; anything but sickly discourses. These will do less harm where all are believers; but when the truth is to be proclaimed before a people who are not in the faith, the speaker must prepare himself for the task. He must not ramble all through the Bible, but give a connected, firm discourse, showing that he understands the points he would make. Put all your energies and soul into the work. But every discourse given when the mind is wearied is an injury to the truth. Things must and will be managed by skilful workmen, rightly dividing the words of life, that the interest will be kept up.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 5

A few forcible remarks upon some point of doctrine will fasten in the mind much more firmly than to bring in a mass of matter where nothing lies out clear and distinct in the mind of those ignorant of our faith. There should be interspersed with the prophecies practical lessons of the teachings of Christ. There should ever be the softening, subduing influence of the Spirit of God upon our own heart. The self-denial and the sufferings of Christ should be brought into our labors and the great love wherewith He has loved us appear in all our efforts.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 6

I wish you to distinctly understand this point, that souls are kept from obeying the truth by a confusion of ideas, and also because they do not know how to surrender their wills and their minds to Jesus. They want special instruction how to become Christians. The work done for Christ in the world is not made of great deeds and wonderful achievements. These will come in [as] needed. But the most successful work is that which keeps self as much as possible out of sight. It is the work of giving line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; coming close in sympathy with human hearts. This is the service done to Jesus Christ that will be recognized at the last day. The worker has not made himself prominent, but just picked up the opportunities and privileges to do work for the Master which God alone counts of precious value. The little fillings in, the cup of cold water given, the word spoken in due season, all these count; and yet they have not been treasured up by the actor as any wonderful work "I have done." The labor of love for Christ's sake, if treasured by the giver, ends there, for he has all the reward he will ever have. But if he does this work for Christ's sake, thinking not of the matter afterward, angels of God gather up these incidents and cherish them as precious pearls.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 7

The gentleness of Christ that is revealed in laboring for souls, while self takes no credit, will be rewarded. With God the deeds of all are counted for just what heaven values them, not as they are estimated by the worker. It becomes us to do no more than we can do with order, with thoroughness and exactitude.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 8

If our active temperament gathers in a large amount of work that we have not strength nor the grace of Christ to do understandingly and with order and exactitude, everything we undertake shows imperfection, and the work is constantly marred. God is not glorified however good the motive. There is a want of wisdom which is too plainly revealed. The worker complains of constantly having too heavy burdens to bear, when God is not pleased with his taking these burdens; and he makes his own life one of worryment and anxiety, and weariness because he will not learn the lessons Christ has given him, to wear His yoke and bear His burdens, rather than the yoke and burdens of his own creating. Christ says, "My yoke is easy, My burden is light." [Matthew 11:30.] Then let every extra burden be left for Jesus, and all the necessary burdens He will also take and bear them, and us too.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 9

God would have us pay heed to His words. The carefully wrought service in the sight of God is of value, although easily overlooked by human eyes, yet indispensable in this world where we are doing our work. God wants intelligent workers, doing their work not hurriedly, but carefully and thoroughly, always preserving the humility of Jesus. Those who put thought and painstaking into the higher duties should put care and thought into the smaller duties, showing exactitude and diligence. Oh, how much neglected work is done, how much leaving things at loose ends because there is a constant desire to take on greater work. The work is slurred over that relates to the service of God, because they pull so much work before them that there is nothing done thoroughly. But all the work must bear the scrutiny of the Judge of all the earth. The smaller duties connected with the service of the Master assume importance because it is Christ's service. Selfishness and self-esteem should be guarded against as your bitterest enemy. But how easily self finds opportunities to exhibit itself, and how Satan exults at the exhibitions, and how sorrowful and ashamed are the angels of God of man's foolishness. How unlike Jesus Christ; in what contrast to the example He has given us in His own life. How far removed from His requirements, to crucify self with the affections and lusts. He that will be His disciple, He plainly states, can be so only on condition that He denies self daily, and takes up the cross, and follows Him. We are not only to be partakers with Christ in His sufferings and sacrifices, but we are to imitate Him in the daily small self-crossings and the denial of personal inclinations.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 10

What will be our feelings when we shall stand on the sea of glass? Shall we look back on the hours of our impatience here? Shall we stand upon the eternal hills of paradise and take in the events of our past life and see how many unnecessary trials we had because we thought God was dependent upon us to do everything? God help us to see our own littleness and God's greatness. God forbid that we should have exalted ideas of our own greatness and exalt self. Magnitude of experience is no measure of worth. God has a standard so unlike human standards; and if we see God's estimate of us, we would see value where we supposed was littleness and littleness where we supposed was greatness.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 11

It is the long connection with God which makes man of value. The divine principle in the man constantly growing reveals the heavenliness of his character and the value of his association with men. Brethren, you are all of value in the sight of God. He will not forget your labors of love. I would counsel you not to be in haste to move your tent out of Nimes. It may be advisable to change locations and have new congregations, but all the time you are making a second effort. Do it just as perfectly as if the first effort had not been made. Let every talent of the workers be put out to the exchangers, everyone do his level best, act an energetic part in the work and service of God.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 12

There are different kinds of work to be done. Souls are precious in the sight of God; educate them, teach them as they embrace the truth how to bear responsibilities. He who sees the end from the beginning, who can make the seeds sown wholly fruitful, will be with you in your efforts. Says Christ, "Without Me ye can do nothing." [John 15:5.] Let not one discouraged thought or feeling come in. See and sense the value of human souls. Toil for them knowing you must meet these again. Oh, we have not fully learned the value of Christ or of His work. Work in faith; do your part, and believe the Lord will work with your efforts. God giveth the increase.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 13

You may do your work with fidelity and believe that the Lord will do His work. Never forget that you must reach the people through God. If your experience has been long, it is not its length that makes it valuable—it is not the knowledge that makes it of value—it is the praying, loving, godly life that is a sermon daily. I tell you [line illegible] of the world today is more Christlike men and women. The preaching the world needs is not only that which comes from the pulpit, but that which is seen in the every-day life—not only Bible precepts, but Christlike characters and heaven-born practices. The living, loving disciples of Jesus who have felt that it was more precious to commune with Jesus than to have the most exalted position and praise of men; hearts that are daily feeling the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ, that are made strong and tender by inward conflict and secret prayer, and whose lives though humble are eloquent with holy deeds—these are the kinds of workers that will win souls to Jesus. In our ministry we must reveal Christ to the people, for they have heard Christless sermons all their lives.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 14

God and Jesus, His beloved Son, must be presented before the people in the wealth of the love They have evidenced for man. In order to break down the barriers of prejudice and impenitence, the love of Christ must have a part in every discourse. Make men to know how much Jesus loves them and what evidences He has given them of His love. What love can equal that which God has manifested for man by the death of Christ on the cross. When the heart is filled with the love of Jesus, this can be presented to the people, and it will affect hearts.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 15

Brethren, bring Jesus into your work. Be one in Jesus—of one mind, of one judgment. God will bless you, and you will see of the salvation of Jesus. But let not one exalt himself over another. Work for the Master, and do your work in such a manner as not to bring “I” prominent, but each esteem other better than himself. Let Jesus into your heart. Seek to glorify Jesus. Oh, self, self, how hard to crucify self; nevertheless self must be crucified, and then Jesus will reveal Himself as a mighty worker in your midst.4LtMs, Lt 48, 1886, par. 16

Elder L. R. Conradi

Dear Brother in Christ Jesus:

We were made very sorry to hear that you were in prison. We anticipated nothing of the kind when you left us, and we cannot make it seem real now. We have not forgotten you, but we have presented your case to the highest tribunal—the Great Sovereign of the worlds. The Lord whom we serve will deliver you in His own good time.⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 1*

We feel sorry to have your wife in constant worry and anxiety, but the Lord will not leave you. Jesus the precious Saviour will give you peace and the consolation of His Holy Spirit. Jesus, in giving His commission to His disciples, bade them go into all the world and proclaim the gospel to all nations, tongues, and people. From His divine lips came these words, “Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.” [Matthew 28:20.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 2*

Although we cannot see and understand why the good you meant to do your fellow men in Russia was interrupted, yet this is one among the things that shall work together for good to them that love the Lord. My dear brother, wherever you are you can make for yourself friends. We can see now more clearly some of the difficulties that lie in the way of those who would obey God. Men are finite; God is infinite. The Heavens do rule.⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par.*

We may not now be able to reconcile this fact with circumstances, but God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform. God is working, we will not doubt, to bring light before many who otherwise would never have received knowledge of it. He works to diffuse blessings to His people scattered throughout our world. Do not for a moment think that God's hand is against you. Keep up good courage, and remember that the Lord is Supreme Ruler. God suffers sin to develop itself in crimes and cruelties, yet He will not leave those who love Him to confusion.⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 4*

Think of the love of God manifested to man. Think what Jesus the Prince of Life suffered in this world, the just for the unjust, that He might save men from death and misery. God governs the world. He is Omnipotent. Be sure then whatever His wisdom desires, or His love inspires, His power will execute. "O Lord God of Hosts, who is a strong Lord like unto Thee? or to Thy faithfulness round about Thee? Thou rulest the raging of the sea; when the waves thereof arise, Thou stillest them. ... Justice and judgment are the habitation of Thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before Thy face." [Psalms 89:8, 9, 14.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 5*

God reigns, and notwithstanding His majesty, He loves the most helpless, the most suffering ones among His children. God is showing us evidences of His power, and truth will triumph. God will uproot every error in doctrine. Every truth will be immortal. Commit the keeping of your soul to God as unto a faithful Creator. The angels of God are round about you. Have faith in God. Remember Jesus your Redeemer, and see what He endured. When the apostles of Christ were thrust into prison, angels of God came within the prison walls and ministered unto them. Oh, the tenderness, the compassion of God. He says, "Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." [Isaiah 49:15.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 6*

Daniel was placed in the den of lions, the three worthies were cast into a burning fiery furnace, but Jesus was with them and the flames could not harm them. Oh, trust in God. You are guilty of no crime, only that of seeking to make men kind, and obedient, truthful, and loyal, and with this consciousness you can lift up holy hands without doubting. Wherever God has an obedient child, there is an element of power wielded for God and the truth. Because men are misjudged and condemned and cast into the silent prison, it is no evidence that God does not reign. He says that those who believe on Him shall suffer persecution. The greater the opposition of right and righteousness, the more will the Lord let His precious light shine forth.4LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 7

Just put your trust in Jesus, and remember that you are suffering for His sake and that He will not leave nor forsake you. Have faith in God. Our prayers are going up daily to God in your behalf. We will have special care for your wife and child. Those who have put you in prison have done an unjust thing. Instead of enclosing you in prison walls, if they had known you and been acquainted with your work, they would have sent you two throughout the length and breadth of the domain, telling you to proclaim to all people, to all subjects and to all tongues, that there is a living God, that there is salvation for the sinner.4LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 8

The truth cannot be advanced by force. The weapons of our warfare are mighty because they are not carnal. May the Lord give you grace to bear with meekness anything that men may do unto you.4LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 9

Says Paul, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." [Romans 8:35-39.]4LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 10

You are not ignorant that Jesus gave His precious blood for you. You have a shepherd full of kindness, full of care, and of mercy and tenderness; then believe you may trust Him every moment.4LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 11

Jesus identifies His interest with suffering humanity. That which is done to you to make you suffer is done to Christ in the person of His saints. We believe God is working in your behalf. Only cling with unwavering faith to the promise. May God bless you two brethren who are imprisoned for the truth's sake, and remember we are praying for your deliverance.⁴*LtMs, Lt 49, 1886, par. 12*

Ertzenberger, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

September 5, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother Ertzenberger:

I felt sorry as I read your letter to see that you were afflicted in mind and perplexed, but I know that you have a blessed helper and comforter in God. I have been awake since half-past two o'clock, pleading much of the time with God for help and light and a greater nearness to Him that I may reflect more light. And while all are sleeping, I arise to communicate a few thoughts to you.⁴*LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 1*

My dear brother, you cannot always know, neither can your brethren always know, how matters will shape themselves, when an effort is made any place. No one anticipated so great resistance as revealed itself in the mob spirit in Nimes. The question seemed hanging in the balance which would triumph. Many prayers were offered, and the Lord heard and answered prayer, and the victory was on the side of truth. In such a city such a victory gained is not small. The Lord revealed Himself as a wonder-working God. When such manifestations have happened in our experience, we have always taken it as an assurance that the Lord had precious souls in that place to whom He would reveal Himself.⁴*LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 2*

My mind was much exercised in the hours, while the others were sleeping, to write to you and those connected with you the things I did write. We may lay our plans according to the very best light we have, but frequently the workings of God in His own way reveal that for the good of souls and for the glory of God some change must be made in our plans, and we must none of us have our stakes fastened so strongly that we cannot pull them up. I have ever had to occupy a position to be prepared for anything, to work anywhere.

Many cherished plans have had to be given up, my ideas and plans changed to meet the Lord's plans as He opened them before me. And this is the position we shall have to occupy.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 3

It seems to me that you have not gathered all the sheaves that you can gather for the Master in this work at Nimes. You may all be learning new lessons, most valuable to yourselves and to others, in regard to the very best way to work in order to reach a certain class of minds. We are individually in a school where we may, if diligent students, be obtaining a more rich and valuable experience in the work. The Lord will shift and change us about, place us under varied circumstances, the better calculated to give us a broader and richer experience because there is a great work for us to do for Him and a very great reward for us to gain.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 4

We must every one of us be in that position where it is not difficult for us to give up our plans to the Lord's plans. We all feel the tenderest regard for you who have been laboring in Nimes. It has seemed to impress itself upon my mind that if you move in accordance with the will of God, that you will see greater victories there. The work is now carried forward to that point where, if you work in wisdom, you will see of the salvation of God. We did not dare to encourage the relaxing of your efforts, the letting loose of one hand. The prospects may be fluctuating, sometimes encouraging, and other times discouraging; but present appearances must not govern your judgment, you must make your efforts over gain. If you present the same arguments you have already presented, they need not and will not lose one jot in vital interest, but be more interesting than they were the first time, because the mind is better prepared to receive them than at first.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 5

We must have greater faith and broader ideas, and every one try to do his very best, and the Lord will give the increase. I hope and believe that we will see of the mighty workings of the Lord in Nimes. We need to walk in all humility and continually expect great things of the Lord. Keep praying, keep believing. God is giving the workers in Nimes an experience which will fit them for His work in the future.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 6

We have been making special efforts to complete the book containing sketches of the missions and giving some reports of the work in Europe and of our travels. It has required more labor and far more taxing thought than we anticipated. Our object is to get this book out to benefit the mission by whatever it may bring in. There are many things to crowd upon the mind here; many things to decide; many communications to be answered; many things requiring much perplexing thought and careful consideration. Brother Whitney is constantly overworked. We have tried to bring the Lord into all our counsels. We have prayed much, and will still pray for the Lord to lead us, to guide us, to uphold us by His Holy Spirit, and help us that we may make no mistakes. We are all finite, and unless we have heavenly wisdom we will be in danger of making blunders.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 7

There is, my dear brother, a great work before us, and we must believe that Jesus is ready and will work with our efforts. Be of good courage, my dear brother; Jesus loves you and will lift upon you the health of His countenance. Take the Lord at His word; believe that He will do just as He said He would. Hang your helpless soul on Jesus Christ, as Jacob hung upon the neck of the angel, and declare: "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me." [Genesis 32:26.] There is a fulness for us in Jesus. You may be strong; you may be of good courage. Look up, look up. The Lord in His glory is above the ladder, and angels are ascending and descending this ladder to bring light and blessings to the workers. Jesus will give you rest and peace in Him. Only believe.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 8

With much love,4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 9

I remain your sister in Christ.4LtMs, Lt 50, 1886, par. 10

Butler, G. I.

Basel, Switzerland

September 6, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 21MR 378-387.

Dear Brother Butler:

I am troubled in regard to Elder [J. H.] Waggoner. He writes me nothing, and I feel deeply pained on his account. It seems sometimes to me that the Lord is testing us to see whether we will deal faithfully in regard to sin in one of our honored men. The time is close at hand when the General Conference will have to decide the point whether or not to renew his credentials. If the Conference does this, they will be saying virtually we have confidence in you as a man whom God recognizes as His messenger, one to whom He has entrusted the sacred responsibilities of caring for the sheep of the Lord's pasture, one who will be in all things a faithful shepherd, a representative of Christ. But can we do this? Have we not seen the workings of an unsanctified heart?⁴*LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 1*

The persistency in Eld. Waggoner to accept and claim Mrs. Chittenden as his—what shall I call it—his affinity? what is this? Who can name it? Is Eld. Waggoner one who has hated the light God has given him, showing that his preferences for Mrs. Chittenden's society and his intimacy with her was sinful as in the light of the Word of God? Or did he accept the message and act upon it? Notwithstanding I went to Elder Waggoner with the testimony given me of God, yet he did not reform. His course has said: I will do as I please in the matter, there is no sin in it. He promised before God what he would do, but he broke his promises made to Bro. C. H. Jones, W. C. White, and myself, and his feelings did not decidedly change; but he seemed to act like a man bewitched, under the spell of the devil, and who had no power over his own inclinations. Notwithstanding all the light given, he has evidenced no real conviction or sense of sin. No repentance, no reformation. Hearts have ached sorely over this state of things, but they had no power to change his heart or his purposes.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 2

Now we should be very grateful for the help of Eld. Waggoner in England, and in Switzerland, but what can we decide upon? We must have evidence that he is clear before God. We do not want to make a light matter of sin and say to the sinner, It shall be well with thee. We do not want to connect Eld. Waggoner with the work here unless he has a connection with God. We do not want to have the drawback that would come by connecting a man with the work who has a foul blot on his garments. We cannot pass lightly over this matter.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 3

The plague of sin is upon Elder Waggoner, and pain and sorrow are upon the souls of all who are aware of this chapter in his experience. Christ is dishonored. A man blessed with superior light and knowledge, endowed with great capacity for good that he may by a life of obedience and fidelity to God become equal with angels, his life measure with the life of God, has perverted his God-given powers to administer to lust, coveting the wife of another. God finds Eld. Waggoner setting at naught the most costly lesson of experience, violating the most solemn admonitions of God, that he may continue in sin. I have hoped and prayed that he would restore reason to its right throne and break the fetters which for years Satan has been weaving about him soul and body, and that the clouds that have shadowed his pathway be removed and Christ come to his soul to revive and bless it. Christ will lift the heavy burden from weary shoulders and give rest and peace to those who will wear His yoke and lift His burdens.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 4

I will say Eld. Waggoner, what can be the character of your experience when in the face of many warnings and reproofs you continue to pursue a course condemned of God? Can you think well of yourself? Just think of Jesus crowned with thorns, and nailed to the cross for our sins, and let it humble, yes, let it break your heart. Look at the meekness of Christ, His loveliness, and then bow in the dust with shame and humiliation. Will you please to think what you would do in the case should one of our leading men be found in the position you are in? Could you, without any greater evidence on his part of the sense of his sin than you have given, advise that he have credentials as one of pure and holy purposes before God? Cannot you see you are placing your fellow laborers in a very unpleasant and unenviable position? Will they venture to become responsible for your character and your influence in the future in the work and cause of God?4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 5

Your case has been shown me to be worse than that of Eld. Cornell, because you had greater light, capacity, and influence, and his course is a beacon to warn you off from following in his steps. Eld. Cornell's credentials were taken away from him; he is a deeply repenting man, humbled in the dust. Supposing David should, after being reproved by Nathan, have repeated the same offense. Would the Lord then have had compassion upon him? But he repented bitterly; he declared his transgression was ever before him. Hear his humiliating confession, and listen to his despairing cries.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 6

We must as a people arouse and cleanse the camp of Israel. Licentiousness, unlawful intimacy, and unholy practices are coming in among us in a large degree, and ministers who are handling sacred things are guilty of sin in this respect. They are coveting their neighbors' wives, and the seventh commandment is broken. We are in danger of becoming a sister to fallen Babylon, of allowing our churches to become corrupted, and filled with every foul spirit, a cage for every unclean and hateful bird, and will we be clear unless we make decided movements to cure the existing evil? Will you have others follow your example? Will you wish them to pass over the ground you have traveled and feel that they have done no great wrong? Without repentance and genuine conversion you are a ruined man.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 7

I hear you are taking treatment at the sanitarium, acting as chaplain, speaking in the tabernacle. Now this does not look right for you to take such positions until you have done all in your power to correct past evils. I have felt for your sake restrained from opening the matter of Mrs. Chittenden's infidelity to her husband, but I fear I have neglected my duty. If we had dealt with this matter as if it had been the case of a lay member of the church, I believe God would have then sent you repentance that needeth not to be repented of. Our pity, our love to save you from reproach has hurt you. My heart is so sad and agonized at times for you, I can only weep. I say, must he be lost? Must he after suffering for the truth's sake, after standing in its defense until he is old and gray headed, become an idolater as did Solomon? Will he for the love of a woman trample down the law of God and look about him as much as to say, I do no sin, I am all right?4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 8

Will we be clear to let such things be concealed and sins hidden with no real evidence of repentance or reform? Your leaving California does not give you a new heart. You are out of sight of the infatuating influence of your "adorable charmer," but this does not change the affections or impulses of the heart. Elder Himes might have finished his course with joy had it not been for sensual practices, but he was led away of his own lusts and enticed. The days and years which might have been his very best were his worst. We see in the character of Solomon intellectual greatness combined with moral degradation. He might have gone forward from strength to strength, but instead of this he went backward from weakness to weakness. After a life of promise, his history was one of deterioration.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 9

My brother, my heart yearns toward you for Christ's sake. You have been attempting what other ministers have attempted, to harmonize light with darkness, Christ with Belial, purity with impurity, good with evil. The result will be moral ruin unless you can be aroused to see that you are standing upon the very brink of the precipice. There are many such cases that I have to write about. It alarms me to see how the sin of licentiousness is coming in upon us. I felt this when I wrote to Elder Butler upon this point at the last General Conference, begging him to do all that he could to fence against what was coming in upon us. We must elevate the standard and build up barriers about the soul so that nothing shall mar its simplicity and purity and thus defile the religious character. God has given men intellect, and let every soul beware how this great gift is prostituted to the soul's eternal ruin. There is no more hope of you than of any common sinner, nor as much unless you greatly humble your soul before God, repent, and are converted. Take the first steps in the way to life, repentance, faith, and baptism. You have tampered with the divine safeguards of your peace. If you refuse to listen to the voice of reproof, if you choose your own course, if you will not allow the grace of Christ to transform you, your guilt will be as much greater than that of the common sinner as your advantages and light have been greater. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 10

Great care should be exercised in companionship and friendship lest the soul be imperiled, lest there be even an appearance of evil which in the eyes of others would lower the standard of religious principle and sap the foundation of religious belief. How many even in the ranks of Sabbathkeepers are forming unsanctified connections. Men who have wives and women who have husbands are showing affection and giving undue attention to each other. How many men of promise there are in our ranks who no longer have pure faith and holy trust in God because they have betrayed sacred trusts. Noble aspirations are quenched. Their steps are retrograding because they covet another man's wife or are unduly familiar with unmarried women. Their frivolous conduct leads them to break the seventh commandment. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 11

Of Solomon the inspired record says, "His wives turned away his heart after other gods and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God." [1 Kings 11:4.] 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 12

This is no theme to be treated with a smile. The heart that loves Jesus will not desire the unlawful affections of another. Every want is supplied in Christ. This superficial affection is of the same character as that exalted enjoyment which Satan promised Eve. It is coveting that which God has forbidden. When it is too late, hundreds can warn others not to venture upon the precipice. Intellect, position, wealth can never, never take the place of moral qualities. Clean hands, a pure heart, and noble, earnest devotion to God and the truth the Lord esteems above the golden wedge of Ophir. An evil influence has a perpetuating power. I wish I could set this matter before God's commandment-keeping people just as it has been shown me. Let the sad memory of Solomon's apostasy warn every soul to shun the same precipice. His weakness and sin is handed down from generation to generation. The greatest king that ever wielded a scepter, of whom it had been said that he was the beloved of God, through misplaced affection became contaminated and was miserably forsaken of his God. The mightiest ruler of the earth had failed to rule his own passions. Solomon may have been saved “as by fire” [1 Corinthians 3:15], yet his repentance could not efface those high places, nor demolish those stones, which remained as evidences of his crimes. He dishonored God, choosing rather to be controlled by lust than to be a partaker of the divine nature. What a legacy Solomon’s life has committed to those who would use his example to cover their own base actions. We must either transmit a heritage of good or evil. Shall our lives and our example be a blessing or a curse? Shall people look at our graves and say: He ruined me, or, He saved me? 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 13

To the youth we need to give definite, oft repeated warnings to bring their gifts early to God as consecrated offerings. Had Solomon retained the heavenly gift of wisdom, God’s special endowment, had he with his ardent temperament been guided aright, his life would have been illustrious to its very close. But after a life of greatness and power, he fell because of uncontrolled passion. Had he continued to add virtue to his faith and his rich endowments, he would (have) stood forth a grand, noble cedar of Lebanon. But he surrendered to passion; and lust when it hath conceived bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 14

The lesson to be learned from the life of Solomon has a special moral bearing upon the life of the aged, of those who are no longer climbing the mountain, but are descending and facing the western sun. We expect to see defects in the character of youth who are not controlled by love and faith in Jesus Christ. We see youth wavering between right and wrong, vacillating between fixed principle and the almost overpowering current of evil that is bearing them off their feet to ruin. But of those of mature age we expect better things. We look for the character to be established, for principles to be rooted, and they to be beyond the danger of pollution. But the case of Solomon is before us as a beacon of warning. When thou, aged pilgrim who has fought the battles of life, thinkest that thou standest, take heed lest thou fall. How, in Solomon’s case, was weak, vacillating character—naturally bold, firm, and determined—shaken like a reed in the wind under the tempter’s power. How was an old, gnarled cedar of Lebanon, a sturdy oak of Bashan, bent before the blast of temptation. What a lesson for all who desire to save their souls to watch unto prayer continually. What a warning to keep the grace of Christ ever in their heart, to battle with inward corruptions and outward temptations. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 15

Brethren, we must have genuine faith which is the gold tried in the fire. We must cherish that faith which works by love and purifies the soul. Unless our faith has a purifying influence it is worthless. Such a faith leads the soul to God and expands the intellect while it purifies, ennobles, and sanctifies. Let those in youth, those in mature age, and the aged consider that their cases are soon to pass in review before God. What will be the record that they shall meet? At one time in Battle Creek the scenes of the judgment were presented before me. The books were opened, and all, both old and young, who claimed to be keeping the commandments of God were gathered about the throne. In the books were written the thoughts, the words, the actions of those who had received much light and enjoyed many opportunities; and yet their names were not clear, their life record was blotted and blurred. Great numbers were weighed in the balances and found wanting who knew for just what sins they were condemned. It was because of the lack of a virtuous character. Base animal passions had controlled them. Licentiousness and lust had been carefully cloaked from human eyes; but the Lord saw it, and their names were blotted out of the Book of Life. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 16

Many of these men claimed to be teachers of the truth; but their labor was not marked with holy endeavor. They had not confidence and boldness toward God. They could not lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting. And the words were pronounced to these sin-polluted souls, "Depart from Me ye workers of iniquity." [Luke 13:27.] Now is the time to obtain the white robe of character. Now is the time to confess and forsake sin, and come to God with contrition of soul, that your sins may be blotted out and your names retained in the Lamb's Book of Life. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 17

We must do something to stop this terrible tide of moral impurity. Self-abuse stands as the most degrading sin, polluting the whole character of the man. Unless those who are practicing this vice break off their sin and repent before God, they will find no place in the city of God. There entereth into that city nothing that defileth or maketh a lie. Such characters are living a lie continually. We are living in an age when iniquity abounds, and the special work of God's delegated servant must be to suppress this iniquity and to bring in righteousness. But those who claim to be the Lord's delegated ministers and yet corrupt their own ways before Him are guilty of great crime. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 18

“And He showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and stood before the angel.” [Zechariah 3:1-3.] Joshua here represents the people of God; and Satan pointing to their filthy garments claims them as his property over which he has a right to exercise his cruel power. But these very ones have improved the hours of probation to confess their sins with contrition of soul and put them away, and Jesus has written pardon against their names. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 19

Those who have not ceased to sin and who have not repented and sought pardon for their transgressions are not represented in this company; for this company vex their souls over the corruptions and iniquity abounding around them, and God will recognize those who are sighing and crying because of the abominations done in the land. They were not mixed up in these abominations. They had not corrupted their ways before God, but had washed their robes of character and had made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Satan pointed to their sins which had not yet been blotted out, and which he had tempted them to commit, and then reviled them as being sinners clad with filthy garments. But Jesus changes their appearance. He says, “Take away his filthy garments from him.” “Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment, and I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the Lord stood by. And the angel of the Lord protested unto Joshua, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; If thou wilt walk in My ways, and if thou wilt keep My charge, then thou shalt also judge My house, and shalt also keep My courts, and I will give thee places among these that stand by.”

[Verses 4-7.]4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 20

After the filthy garments have been removed, the subject changes, showing that this has its application in the future. If the people of God will walk in the ways of the Lord and keep His charge which is the ten commandments, then the promise is that they shall judge His house and have places to walk among the angels.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 21

Now the question is, Will those who profess the truth comply with the conditions? Will the characters of those who profess to believe the truth correspond with its sacredness? Satan's special efforts are now directed toward the people who have great light. He would lead them to become earthly and sensual. There are men who minister in sacred things whose hearts are defiled with impure thoughts and unholy desires. Married men who have children are not satisfied. They place themselves where they invite temptation. They take liberties which should only be taken with their lawful wives. Thus they fall under the rebuke of God, and in the books of heaven adultery is written opposite their names. There should be no approach to danger. If the thoughts were where they should be, if they were stayed upon God, and the meditations of the soul were upon the truth and the precious promises of God, and the heavenly reward that awaits the faithful, they would be guarded against Satan's temptations. But by many, vile thoughts are entertained almost constantly. They are carried into the house of God and even into the sacred desk.4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 22

I tell you the truth, Eld. Butler, that unless there is a cleansing of the soul temple on the part of many who claim to believe and to preach the truth, God's judgments, long deferred, will come. These debasing sins have not been handled with firmness and decision. There is roughness in the soul; and unless it is cleansed by the blood of Christ, there will be apostasies among us that will startle you. I ask myself the question, How is it possible for men who are opening the Scriptures to others; men who have abundance of light; men who have good ability; men who are living as in the face of the judgment upon the very borders of the eternal world, to give their thoughts and bodies to unholy practices? Well may the words of the apostle be repeated with emphasis: "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to heaviness. Humble yourself in the sight of God, and He will lift you up.” [James 4:8-10.] “Blessed is the man who endureth temptations; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him. Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: (some have argued thus and thought, that for certain reasons they have of their own, God would have them take the course they did) for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth He any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death.” [James 1:12-15.]4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 23

The work of overcoming must be done here in this life. By sincere repentance and forsaking of every sin, pardon will be written against your names. The thoughts will be pure if the heart is pure. If the fountain is corrupt, the stream will be corrupt. Shall men who are conversant with the Scriptures, and who are standing in vindication of the fourth commandment, be charged in the books of heaven with transgressing the seventh? Shall Satan be given occasion to taunt the angels of God with the filthy characters of those who claim to be Christians? Will they make Jesus ashamed to call them brethren? I address you who shall have this epistle brought before you, who are leaders, who may be termed princes, among the people, “Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord.” [Isaiah 52:11.] Humble your souls before God. Jesus is in the sanctuary. We are in the great day of atonement; and if the investigative judgment has not already commenced for the living, it will soon begin; and to how many are the words of the True Witness applicable: “I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I shall come upon thee.” [Revelation 3:1-3.]4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 24

are not confessed, their names will then be blotted from the book of life, and their lot will be with the adulterers and the fornicators, and deceivers, and those who love and make a lie. "Thou hast a few names yet in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with Me in white for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before My Father and before His angels." [Verses 4, 5.] 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 25

I am alarmed for our ministers who are hardening their consciences by continuing a course of sin. I fear that they will continue to fall under temptation until the word shall go forth: "He that is holy let him be holy still, and he that is filthy let him be filthy still." [Revelation 22:11.] I tell you that there must be a thorough revival among us. There must be a converted ministry. There must be confessions, repentance, and conversions. Many who are preaching the Word need the transforming grace of Christ in their hearts. They should let nothing stand in the way of their making thorough work before it shall be forever too late. Christ is coming. His judgments are abroad in the earth. And that God who is ever present, who was a silent witness to the godless, sacrilegious feast of Belshazzar, whose hand traced the characters upon the wall, is present where you think no eye seeth. Had you, Eld. Waggoner, an elder of the church, looked up, you would have seen yourself a spectacle to God and to the pure angels who veil their faces and turn away from your pollution of soul and body. My words seem tame as I pen them when I think of the wonderful truths we profess and the great light that shines upon us from the Word of God. The Judge of all the earth is standing before the door, and every case must pass in solemn review before Him. I inquire how can anyone with this light shining upon him dare in thought or word to deny the Lord God who hath bought him. Make haste, my brother, to cleanse your hands. Jesus is still pleading as your Intercessor. Commence the work of forsaking your sins without delay. Do not rest till you find pardon, for no soul can enter the paradise of God who has a single spot or stain in his character. Make thorough work for eternity. 4LtMs, Lt 51, 1886, par. 26

Bourdeau, A. C.

Lausanne, Switzerland

November 20, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in AH 307; 3SM 53.

Dear Brother A. C. Bourdeau:

I have a duty to do to you once more, and then I shall feel that I have said and done all that it is possible for me to do in your case. While I have seen and felt your danger, you have thought that there was no particular cause of alarm. For this reason and for others best known to yourself, all the letters that I have written to you have worked no reformation in your life. The experience of the last evening spent at your house was peculiar. The Lord unexpectedly rolled a burden upon me, His blessing being over us, and I felt it all through my body. I was urged by the Spirit of God to make supplication as I did, and to wrestle till the victory was gained or till you surrendered yourself to God; but you did not come to the point. You did not grasp the promises, neither did you gain the victory. I knew that after such a struggle, if you did not free your soul, you would be enshrouded in dense darkness; therefore for two hours I held your case before the Lord and before yourself, hoping that you would wrench yourself away from where you had moored, to the rock self-righteousness. But you did not. You are anchored there yet, just as firmly as ever the Pharisees were. Whenever I made an effort to help your wife, instead of looking to God for herself and grasping every ray of light, her mind was diverted from the point by your case. She wanted to set you free. But neither of you received that which the Lord brought within your reach.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 1

Now, Bro. A. C. Bourdeau, you are entrenched in the fortress of self-righteousness; and while there, neither God nor man can do anything for you. Through the help of God you could have broken down these walls that night; but you had so little experience in seeking God and wrestling with Him that you were like a child that knows not how to pronounce his A, B, C's. I never realized that you were so far from God. You seemed to have no knowledge of how to seek the Lord, nor how to surrender yourself to Him. I knew that the next morning would tell the story. If you felt a burden of your own case, you would not dare to sleep without a thorough work of the Spirit of God upon your heart. The next morning I waited to see what the influence of that meeting had been upon you. I knew if the arrows of God had pierced your self-righteous armor, we should know something about the matter before we parted. But not a reference was made by you to that solemn, important occasion. The burden of your heart, however, was soon revealed. You began about your son and excused his faults, repeating the same things you had told me no less than three times. I was too much pained and too thoroughly disgusted with your commonplace talk to say a word in reply. I was seeking to commune with Jesus, to welcome His presence, to say, "Abide with me and bless and keep me." I [had] had a very solemn experience, and I had no desire to thus engage in cheap conversation and lose the companionship of Jesus. 4Lts, Lt 52, 1886, par. 2

Your case looks exceedingly dark to me. I am now certain that the work must commence with yourself; you need to be a converted man. You are filled with self-conceit. You talk of yourself and of what you have done in the past until the Spirit of God is grieved and departs from you. You have much to say about the past, but what about your present experience? Have you no Christ for today? Have you nothing to say about what Jesus is doing for you now? Must self be the center, the alpha and omega? How can you expect to have the companionship of heavenly angels, and the presence of Jesus, when your thoughts and your words are mostly in reference to your own precious self. All the good things you have done are magnified by you, while your mistakes and the things you did not do, which God required you to do, are covered by your ingenious excuses. Your self-love has barred the way to your usefulness all through your Christian experience. You have not used your God-given powers in a way to please Him. In your conversation, in your preaching, and in all your efforts you have brought self to the front; you have talked of self, exalted self, and Jesus has been kept in the background. Your ways have been faultless in your own eyes. In the name of the Lord, I tell you that unless you are a converted man, you will never see the King of heaven. You need the transforming grace of Christ. Those who know you say that A. C. Bourdeau is a good brother, but he talks too much about what he has done, and the people become tired of hearing it. This is not the testimony of one or two, but all who have any acquaintance with you tell the same story.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 3

Christ said to Nicodemus, “Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.” [John 3:3.] In astonishment this ruler in Israel listened to these words. Was it possible that one so righteous as himself needed any such spiritual work done for him? The startled hearer could only utter the words scarcely above a whisper, “How can these things be?” [Verse 9.] He had been praised and exalted by men, but Jesus tore away his self-righteousness by telling him that his whole conceptions were wrong. Neither his benevolence, his many good deeds, nor his exalted position as a teacher in Israel was sufficient to entitle him to heaven. He must be born again if he would see the kingdom of God. But his comprehension was so dull that he took this in a literal instead of a spiritual sense. Jesus then explained to him that the divine Spirit must work a moral transformation in all who would have a part in His kingdom, a transformation which would lead them to seek the pure, the holy, and the divine as earnestly as they had sought things of an opposite character. They must be divested of self, that Jesus may receive undivided worship.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 4

You, my brother, are in no better condition before God than Nicodemus. You build yourself up in your good works and prefer to remain in spiritual darkness than to be disturbed. You are whole in your own sight, rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing. Your prayers are formal and spiritless. You live in a past experience instead of having a fresh experience daily. You seem to choose to be mixed up with common things. When you have writing to do, you seat yourself in the dining room, amid the confusion of the children’s voices, where it is impossible for your thoughts to be elevated and deep. You do not choose to take time to examine yourself, to test your own heart, to pray and wrestle with God as did Jacob. Secret prayer is neglected. In short, Jesus is not brought into your life, because you are so perfectly satisfied with yourself. When the Lord has sent you reproofs, warnings, and appeals, your first work has been to make excuses; to make your defects appear like something you cannot help, or rather like virtues to be praised. This is why you have not reformed. When reproved you have gone back over your past life and like the Pharisee thanked God that you were not as other men are, extortioners, adulterers, and the like; but you are a very liberal, kindhearted man, ever ready to do a good work, and always anxious to make friends of everybody, that you may have their praise and commendation. I has been brought in whenever there was the least chance, and Christ has been left out. You have not been where it was safe for the Lord to bless your labors. If He had blessed them, He would not have received the glory, but it would have been taken to yourself. You would have felt that it is I who has done all this. I have made this stir. When you see yourself as you are, when you are conscious of your weakness and will put forth determined effort to obtain divine aid, your soul will be filled with all the fulness of God. Your course of exaltation is abhorrent to Jesus. You parade yourself to notice and make yourself a subject of comment by your self-complacency and self-esteem.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 5

Now I shall have to make a report of the work in the Valleys, and what shall I say? I shall have to state the case as it is and then leave it. You set the two men who are with you in the field to traveling about to get the people to come to hear you preach, and then your discourses are dry and spiritless. Now this order of things must be changed. Let not these men work under your supervision, but let them gain an experience for themselves. The mold you are giving them is such that in many things they will need remolding. These men are used too much as your servants. The time occupied by them in getting the people out to hear you preach would be much better employed in doing their specific work. If you were left to create your own interest and to bring the people together by your own efforts, you would feel the necessity of keeping your own soul filled with the love of God and of giving them interesting discourses, fresh food from God's abundant treasure house. Then, too, you would better understand the real interest among the people. These colporteurs are holding you up, wearying themselves and using up precious time to no account, when they should be engaged in personal efforts themselves. I tell you there must be a different plan of labor in these Valleys. It will be much better for these two men to work in the fear of God among the people than for you to try to hold so many meetings in different places while they have to make so great efforts to get you a congregation. Your preaching will do but little good till you are a converted man, and the less there is of it the better.4Lts, Lt 52, 1886, par. 6

You need the vitalizing influence of the Spirit of God; you need a living connection with heaven. You do not study your Bible. You do not pray. You are far, very far from being the man God would have you be. Please reckon up the hours you have spent in bed during the last year and see how much of your time has been squandered. You are paid for your time, and to be just and honest with God, who has made you His hired servant. You are under obligation to make the best possible use of your powers and your time in His service. You are to cultivate habits of industry, to gather up the golden moments, and studiously dig for the truth as for hid treasures. If you lie in bed an hour longer than is necessary each morning, you gather no physical or mental strength, but have during the year wasted 365 hours; but you may safely reckon on two hours, which doubles the record.4Lts, Lt 52, 1886, par. 7

Every moment of this time is reckoned as wasted, when it should have been spent to sharpen up your mind, in directing your thoughts in the right channel, and in searching the Scriptures, that you may receive new and fresh ideas. Unless you change your manner of life, the very best course you can pursue is to go on to a farm and labor with your hands, and let the money that you would have received from the conference be used to put those in the field who will improve their ability to make themselves thorough workmen. Now you may call to mind special occasions when you have risen from your bed early, and you will no doubt go back and tell what you have done in the past. Now we want to hear no more of this. We want to know what you are doing now, not what you did once. You go by fits and starts. For a little while you will be fully active, and then back you go to the same self-indulgent habits. If you have had so remarkable experience in your past life, do show it by making advancement at the present time. Be a man, and do with thoroughness the work God has given you to do.4Lts, Lt 52, 1886, par. 8

You have never enjoyed mental toil, and however physically industrious you may have been through your past life, you are none too much so now. You are not even enough so for your own good intellectually; you are too lazy to read, to reflect, to study. You would delight to have a commanding influence, to be honored and respected; but you are too slothful to elevate the mind to high aims. Knowledge is power. It is elevating to the possessor and will command respect and influence anywhere. But you do not master circumstances and make it your earnest purpose to place yourself in positions where your mind will strengthen and expand. A prayerful study of the Scriptures will help greatly in developing the intellect. Others older than yourself, and who do not have as good health as you, arise early and in quiet, peaceful morning hours devote time to the improvement of the mind and to scriptural culture. But many a precious hour is lost by you, forever lost, by idly lounging in bed. And what is the result? A want of physical strength and a sluggishness of thought, a dulness of intellect. The mind is the glory of the man. The power of the voice and the expression of the countenance will be improved by quickening yourself and spiritualizing your thoughts. For years you could have been cultivating the intellect by studious habits, but instead of this you have been losing the vital energy of thought. You cannot bear to put your powers to the stretch, to tax them to the uttermost, to master your inclination and indolence and slothfulness. God demands of you that you cultivate diligently the reasoning powers He has given you. Oh, the opportunities that you have wasted through disorderly habits!4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 9

You need not boast of superiority in the past. It is now that you are to be tested and tried; it is now that angels are weighing moral worth. It is now that they are watching the development of character; and you will be judged according to what you might have been had you improved all the light and the privileges given you of God. It is your duty to dig after knowledge as men search for concealed goods. But you have not felt disposed to exert yourself sufficiently to put you on the right track of reading, studying, reflection, and execution. God has done His part for you, but you have neglected your part of the work in not making the most of your faculties.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 10

My brother, cease to preach until you are endowed with power from on high. Gird up the loins of your mind for the work of self-cultivation. Set a high price upon your morning hours and your leisure moments. There are precious, golden threads from which you are to manufacture thoughts that will stir your very being and expand your soul to a realizing sense of the great plan of salvation. Learn to reflect upon elevated things. Searching the Scriptures is essential for your success. It is as necessary for your spiritual growth as eating is for your physical strength. Your mind has been growing weak and seems to be paralyzed. Wake up, for Christ's sake, awake! Weigh every thought and motive. Under such a discipline the intellect will increase in strength. Let conviction chase your dormant soul; let your mind be driven from its narrow boundaries of common thought, and in the vastness of the subject of redemption let the moral perceptions unfold by dwelling on the matchless love of Jesus. It is impossible for your thoughts to be brought into contact with these great subjects without your awakening from the torpor in which you have been so long.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 11

You need more faith in Christ. Rest not day nor night until you have a knowledge of the mystery of godliness. You may be a spiritual, intellectual Christian. Your moral and intellectual powers will then grow in harmonious proportion. You will not be satisfied with a superficial love, but will have a deep, abiding, fervent love in your heart for God and His followers. You are satisfied with giving expressions of love to human beings, but seem incapable of giving devotion and affection to Him in whom your hopes of eternal life are centered. Your conscience must be quickened and you be purified, refined, ennobled. You must be upright in your character and firm and decided in your family government.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 12

I feel deeply that the truth needs to be planted more firmly in your soul. Then its principles will control your life. Unless it is stamped by God upon the soul, it will be constantly kept in the outer court of the soul temple. It is not brought into the soul. If the truth were an abiding principle in your soul, you would be full of grace to spread it. The truth must first be planted deep in your own soul, and then you will with wisdom, with intense interest, and living faith seek to plant it in the souls of others.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 13

Bro. Bourdeau, if your home is governed by the religion of Christ, then I am a stranger to its workings. The Father of the faithful said of Abraham, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." [Genesis 18:19.] Abraham cultivated home religion and caused the fear of the Lord to circulate through his tents. It is the voice of God that is to be heard. There is no hypocrisy on the one hand, no deception on the other. "I know him that he will command." There will be no betraying of sacred trusts, no flinching from the demands of truth, no yielding to human weakness. There is a law, and Abraham will keep it. Now this testimony cannot be borne in your case. Blind affection, a cheap manifestation of love, goes a long ways with you. To encircle the arms about the neck is easy; but manifestations should not be encouraged by you unless they are proved to be of real value by perfect obedience. Your indulgence, your disregard of God's requirements is the veriest cruelty. You encourage and excuse disobedience by saying, "My boy loves me." Such love is cheap and deceptive. It is no love at all. The love, the genuine love, to be cultivated in the family is of value because it is verified by obedience. Parents and children alike are to be ruled by Him who is unerring in counsel. This will prevent parental oppression on the one hand and filial love on the other. God has given us rules for the guidance of all, and from these rules there can be no sinless swerving. God's will must be paramount. The love and fear of God must be brought into the home. The love you seem to cherish and talk so much about is not worth a straw. It is outside show. It is the same in nature as the love the Christian world claim to have for God when they do not obey His commandments. I hope that your eyes will be anointed with eyesalve that you may see that you are tampering with sacred responsibilities. Your house needs to be set in order. I hope that no one will imitate your example and bring into his home such government as you have exercised. I fear that you have become blind, and that you have so long walked in the light of your own eyes, that you will never have the mist and fog removed. 4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 14

of God is open before him. Let him ask, What has God spoken? What is the rule from which neither waywardness on the part of children nor engrossment on the part of parents can excuse them from departing from its injunction. Eli's case is similar to yours. He remonstrated with his children. He said, "My sons, why do ye so wickedly?" [1 Samuel 2:23.] He did not restrain them. He failed to command them. Sr. Bourdeau can exercise her authority with a poor grace when your indulgence and failure to command and restrain are constantly before her. If you love the souls of your children, bring them into order. But abundant kisses and tokens of love blind your eyes, and your children know it. Make less of these outward demonstrations of embracing and kissing, and go down to the bottom of things, and show what constitutes filial love. Refuse these manifestations as a fraud, a deception, unless backed up by obedience and respect for your commands. You are not clear in the sight of God. You will be held to an account for the lessons you are giving your children in disrespecting your authority because, like Eli, it is your weakness to be indulgent. If this is the way you allow your children to disobey your commandments you are teaching them to disregard the commands of God. With Eli the way of the Lord was not observed; and when men choose their own way, what can the end be but sorrow and ruin?4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 15

I write this for I dare not withhold it. You are far from doing the will of God, far from Jesus, far from heaven. It is no marvel to me that God has not blessed your labors. You may say, God has not given Sr. White a vision in my case; why, then, does she write as she does? I have seen the cases of others who like you are neglecting their duties. I have seen many things in your case in your past experience. And when I enter a family and see a course pursued that God has reproved and condemned, I am in grief and distress, whether the special sins have been shown me or the sins of another who has neglected similar duties. I know whereof I speak. I feel deeply over the matter. I say, then, for Christ's sake make haste to come on the right ground, and harness up for the battle.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 16

I will now bring my epistle to a close by saying that it is much to be lamented that Jesus, the world's Redeemer, is kept apart from your life, that while preaching the most solemn truths to others, you are almost a stranger to His love and the power of His Spirit. If our experience is of the right quality, our knowledge of Christ Jesus will increase more and more. Our faith in Him will become perfect through our intimate acquaintance with Him, and we shall by this experimental knowledge be in every sense a partaker of the divine nature. The more we view the character of Jesus, the greater will be our consciousness of our necessities. Man if left to himself is blind, naked, and alienated from the life of Christ. He does not know Christ or feel his need of Him. He cries to his own soul and to others, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Erroneous ideas of his own merits and of his God lull him into carnal security. True, he may have seasons of misgivings. Oh, that at such times the earnest cry might come from the agonized soul, "Lord, save or I perish."4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 17

I fear, my brother, that you will do as you did that night when my soul cried out in agony for you. In the place of trusting, as you might have done, wholly in the merits of Christ, and casting away your own self-righteousness, you console your poor soul with resolutions to make some few changes and set everything right. You make promises and break them as easily as they were made, and yet you fail to discover your own insufficiency and helplessness, that you may found all your hopes on Christ. I write these things to you in the fear of God. I call for no answer, no excuses, no dwelling on what you once did, or once were. I tell you that God is displeased with you, and you need to empty yourself of your self-esteem and self-righteousness before He can manifest Himself unto you and work with your efforts. The only way we can reach the people amid the moral darkness that covers the world is through God. Self must be crucified and Christ alone be glorified.4LtMs, Lt 52, 1886, par. 18

Dear Willie:

Received letters this morning; ere this you have received mine, I suppose. It is evening after the Sabbath. I spoke this morning, interpreted into German and French. We had a good social meeting. Several came in from about twenty miles, intelligent, nice-looking people. We had social meeting, and excellent testimonies were borne. Elder Ings spoke in afternoon. I was to speak this evening, but I spoke last evening and walked back and forth from the hall, and today Sister Ings thinks that as I have to speak tomorrow evening I should rest tonight. Brother Ings will speak tonight and will have a meeting tomorrow afternoon also, giving instruction on missionary work.4LtMs, Lt 52a, 1886, par. 1

Monday we leave here for Bienne.4LtMs, Lt 52a, 1886, par. 2

I spoke of the carriage coming down; but as neither Brother nor Sister Ings seem to think it best, it need not come.4LtMs, Lt 52a, 1886, par. 3

I send you, as Daniel says, "My Best Effort" to help Elder A. C. Bourdeau. Please set this in order, for I shall use it for general matters and shall get out another testimony some time. Send a copy as soon as possible to A. C. Bourdeau. I have written it today, besides speaking. I hope you will get it to him as soon as possible, for he needs it. I am surprised at his condition spiritually. My soul is distressed with his ways and manners. Will you please send Gilly the Great Controversy, vols. 2 and 3, and Life of Paul to the minister in connection with him? Brother Ertzenberger will tell you his name—and send to him the sketch of travels in Europe. I want to be in their good favor if I can consistently, and it will help matters with the church in Nimes.4LtMs, Lt 52a, 1886, par. 4

I think I shall have got through with A. C. Bourdeau this time and forever.4LtMs, Lt 52a, 1886, par. 5

Babcock, Brother and Sister

Lausanne, Switzerland

November 24, 1886

Dear Brother and Sister Babcock:

For some reason your case is urged upon my mind this morning as if you are in great peril and are being overcome by the temptations of the enemy. In a dream I saw you, my brother, gradually sliding back into your old habits of intemperance. In my dream I conversed with you and prayed with you. You did not repulse me, but repeatedly declared that you believed the truth as firmly as you ever did, but that you could not control your appetite.⁴*LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 1*

Now, my brother, I dreamed of telling you some very plain things which I shall write to you at this time. All your life long you have allowed yourself to be controlled by appetite and by hasty temper, and now you are weak in moral power to resist inclination. You should not at any time trust to your own strength and place yourself in the company of the ungodly nor of those who smoke and drink. You are in many respects a very weak man, and you need all the help that you can obtain from earnest prayer and the society of those who love and fear God.⁴*LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 2*

You have not done those things to help yourself which you might have done. You have not been willing to put yourself under the restrictions that were necessary in order to gain strength. Jesus has died to bring salvation within your reach, but there is a work that you must do if you are saved. Instead of having your way and following your own will and evil habits, you should be willing to walk in God's way; you should wear Christ's yoke; you should die to self; and do those things which you know will please God. You have a perverse, crooked nature, but Jesus will give you His Holy Spirit to aid you in the work if you ask for it with a humble heart and a sense of your own weakness. Instead of feeling your weakness, you pride yourself in your old ways, as though it were a virtue in you to possess these oddities. Your droll words and actions and manifestations of your hasty temper are not becoming to a follower of Jesus; and if you will try more earnestly to copy the Pattern, you will see how displeasing these things are to Him and how you dishonor His name by indulging in them.4LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 3

What you need, my brother, is rest in Jesus. At present you know but little of this peace. But Jesus invites you to enter His school. He says, "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your soul." [Matthew 11:29.] You need to weave into your character more of the meekness and lowliness of Christ. We are in the antitypical day of atonement, and you need now to consider, as you have never done before, how your case will stand in the judgment. No longer seek to carry out your own way, but yoke up with Christ. Angels are looking upon you with pity and with yearning tenderness. They see your conflicts with a strong appetite, and they are ready to help you if you will only humble your heart before God and seek divine aid. Your soul is precious, but it must be refined and purified. It must be cleansed from all defilement by the blood of Jesus. I am sorry to say that you are not a Christian. Your character in no way represents the character of Christ; but notwithstanding your weakness, there is help for you in God, if you will place yourself where you can receive this help. Unless you are converted and cease to rely upon your own strength, you will certainly lose eternal life. If you continue the course that you have been pursuing in the past, your nerves will be completely shattered. You will become a physical wreck and will descend lower and lower in self-debasement. Will you not now before it is eternally too late sign the pledge which I send with this? Perilous times are before us. What position will you occupy in the stormy future? Will you be a humble child of God, a follower of the Lamb, or will you stand under the black banner of the powers of darkness?4LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 4

You will find temptations on every side, voices everywhere will call you to do evil. You need not of necessity fall. Had you years ago become a thorough temperance man, you might today stand forth in your God-given, manly powers a victor. Had you brought yourself to task, had you repressed the appetite for eating and drinking those things which are injurious, you would have had power to withstand temptation to indulge in stronger stimulants. When your appetite has clamored for indulgence, you have too often indulged it. You have allowed yourself to use strong coffee, which has an injurious effect upon the nerve powers, and slowly poisons the springs of life. Now, in order to seek and obtain the prize of eternal life, you feel the need of a power that you cannot command, a soul energy that you do not possess. When you cast yourself at the foot of the cross, realizing the perversity of your own heart and the weakness of your own strength, and ask the Lord to help you, believing that He will do it, you will be a new man in Christ Jesus. Your fretful, impetuous temper will seek for the mastery, but you will not allow it to control your reason. You will think of God, of heaven, of Jesus who gave His precious life for you, and you will not speak and act in that stormy, uncontrollable manner that you have done. You will look to Jesus in supplication and say, "Save, Lord, or I perish," and you will not look in vain. Remember that if you are lost at last it will not be because of any fatality in your case, but because you would not use your powers in controlling your unchristlike temper and perverted appetite. Your peril at the present time lies in your suffering passion to exercise lordship over reason and conscience. Passion and appetite have been strengthened in you by indulgence, while reason and conscience have been enfeebled. Your heart seems a volcano of conflicting feelings. The tempter plans to lead you to break down the barriers of principle and self-restraint and to transgress against your conscience and against God, and you walk unconcernedly into snares. Here lies your danger of becoming a moral wreck. What can I say to stimulate your hope, to excite your courage to take hold upon the strength of Jesus, and to empty the soul temple of its defilement?⁴*LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 5*

You are in great danger, my brother, of losing your soul. Make the decision now without delay that you will be a better, holier man than you ever have yet been. Keep yourself away from temptation. You do not realize your soul's peril. In the name of the Lord you must yourself put up the barriers to appetite. You must not indulge in drinking coffee, or tea, or wines, or stimulating drinks of any kind. In the strength of Jesus you must be a strictly temperate man. God will then unite with your human efforts His divine power, and in Christ's name you may conquer and be a blessing to yourself, to your family, and a blessing to the cause of God. Arouse then with heroic spirit and gird yourself for the moral conflict. Make a decided change on the point of appetite. You must do this if you would be a child of God. Satan is seeking through the medium of appetite to destroy your soul. Shall he triumph? Shall he gain the victory, and Christ be compelled to blot your name out of the book of life? Satan has subdued thousands and tens of thousands, but thousands have also subdued him and gained the victory through the Captain of their salvation. You, too, may conquer in that name. 4LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 6

My brother, you must stop and reflect. I know that you dislike to think. To meditate makes you feel that you will lose your senses. But think you must, and then do not act rashly. Do not fail to avail yourself of your only chance of salvation. Your soul is precious. Shall Christ have died for you in vain? Shall we not meet you around the great white throne? Shall we not hear your voice in anthems of praise to your Redeemer in the heavenly courts? I know the conflict will be hard. It will be a daily crucifixion of self for you to overcome your appetite and passions, nevertheless it is your only hope of eternal life. For some reason the Lord has rolled the burden of your case upon me, and in the name of Jesus of Nazareth I call to you across the broad waters of the Atlantic and the Rocky Mountains of America, "Escape for your life." [Genesis 19:17.]4LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 7

While mercy lingers, cast yourself at the foot of the cross, and make thorough work this time. Give to God your whole heart, and He will accept it. He will wash it, refine it, ennoble it, and fit you for the refined and holy society of the heavenly angels. To you the present opportunity is more precious than gold or silver. Jesus has bought you with the price of His own blood. Will you give to Him your sin-polluted soul, that He may cleanse it from every spot and stain? In doing this you only give Him that which is His own. Heretofore you have failed in making a full surrender to God. You have reserved the privilege of getting impatient and of indulging the appetite whenever you pleased. But this is a kind of service that Jesus will not accept. Will you bring Christ into your life? Will you learn lessons of humility from His life and character? Will you talk of Jesus and His love, instead of praising your own poor self? Jesus is your only hope, “For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.” [1 Corinthians 3:11.] He is the foundation of every noble character, of every thing that is truly good, virtuous, and holy. Saving faith in Jesus is your only hope. Without this you will never make a success in overcoming. I love your soul. I have not slept since three o’clock, and while others were sleeping I arose, and after earnest prayer to my heavenly Father for wisdom, have written you these lines. May they be blessed to your good is my sincere prayer. 4LtMs, Lt 53, 1886, par. 8

Portions of this letter are published in TDG 103.

Sr. Stewart:

Both your letters were received. Your supposition was right in regard to the first letter's not having sufficient postage. We receive quite a number of such letters, because they do not understand that it requires more postage coming to Europe than on letters in America. We very frequently have to pay from six to twenty cents extra because of deficient postage.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 1

You express a desire for me to describe the things concerning the New Jerusalem. I positively decline to do anything of the kind. My powers would be inadequate to do this or even make an approach [to] it, and I advise you not to make any attempt to have a particular representation which will carry the impression that it is the representation of the New Jerusalem. The most eloquent representation of the New Jerusalem is [but] to make [an] attempt to present it.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 2

Any one who is dealing with the future unseen world may best describe its untold glories by quoting the words of Paul, "Eye hath not seen; ear hath not heard; neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God has prepared for those that love Him." [1 Corinthians 2:9, 15.] I feel that many approach sacred things as though their finite powers were capable of taking them in. "And it came to pass when Joshua stood by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold, there stood a man over against him with His sword drawn in His hand: and Joshua went unto Him, and said unto Him, Art Thou for us or for our adversaries? And He said, Nay; but as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and said unto Him, What saith my Lord unto His servant? And the Captain of the Lord's host said unto Joshua, Loose thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standeth is holy. And Joshua did so." [Joshua 5:13-15.]4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 3

There are so large a number that tread on holy ground with unsanctified feet that we are very cautious even in statements that we present to them in regard to sacred and eternal things, because finite and common ideas become mixed with the holy and sacred. Man may try with his intrusted and cultivated powers to represent something of heaven, and he will make a blunder of the whole thing.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 4

Your power as an artist will, when stretched to its utmost capacity, fall down faint and weary in seeking to take in the things of the unseen world, and yet there is an eternity beyond. With these statements you will excuse me from attempting to portray before you anything concerning the works of the great Master Artist.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 5

Let the imaginations of the people be on the highest stretch to contemplate the glories of the New Jerusalem, and yet they have but just entered upon the borders of the eternal weight of glory that shall be realized by the faithful overcomer. Put off thy shoes from off thy feet for the ground whereon thou standeth is holy. This is the very best answer I can give to your question.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 6

My health is improving.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 7

Yours with respect.4LtMs, Lt 54, 1886, par. 8

Butler, G. I.; Haskell, S. N.

Basel, Switzerland

December 8, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 12MR 318-328.

Dear Brethren Butler and Haskell:

For weeks I have not been able to sleep after half-past three o'clock. My mind is deeply exercised in regard to our condition as a people. We ought to be far in advance of any other people on the earth because we have greater light and greater knowledge of the truth, which lays us under increased accountability to advance that light, and not only [to] profess to believe the truth, but to practice it. When we do practice the truth, we are then following Jesus, who is the light of the world; and if we as a people are not constantly elevating, becoming more and more spiritually minded, we are becoming like the Pharisees—self-righteous—while we do not the will of God.⁴*LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 1*

We must have a greater nearness to God. Much less of self and much more of Jesus Christ and His grace must be brought into our everyday life. We are living in an important period of this world's history. The end of all things is at hand; the sands of time are fast running out; soon in heaven it will be said: "It is done." "He that is holy, let him be holy still," "he which is filthy, let him be filthy still" [Revelation 21:6; 22:11].⁴*LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 2*

Let our testimonies be sharpened up; let us have a firmer hold on God. I cannot refrain from prayer at one, two, and three o'clock in the morning for the Lord to work upon the hearts of the people. I think of all heaven's being interested in the work that is going on upon the earth. Ministering angels are waiting about the throne to instantly obey the mandate of Jesus Christ to answer every prayer offered in earnest, living faith. I think of how many who profess the truth are keeping it apart from their lives. They do not bring its sanctifying, refining, spiritualizing power into their hearts. I think how this grieves Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 3

I think of His great sorrow as He wept over Jerusalem, exclaiming, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not” [Luke 13:34]! God forbid that these words shall apply to those who have great light and blessings. In the rejecting of Jerusalem, it was because great privileges were abused which brought the denunciation upon all who lightly regarded the great opportunities and precious light that were entrusted to their keeping. Privileges do not commend us to God, but they commend God to us. No people are saved because they have great light and special advantages, for these high and heavenly favors only increase their responsibility.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 4

The more and increased light God has given makes the receiver more responsible. It does not place the receiver in any safer position unless the privileges are wisely improved, prized, and used to advance God’s glory. Christ said, “Woe unto thee, Chorazin! Woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes” [Matthew 11:21].4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 5

When Jerusalem was divorced from God it was because of her sins. She fell from an exalted height that Tyre and Sidon had never reached. And when an angel falls he becomes a fiend. The depth of our ruin is measured by the exalted light to which God has raised us in His great goodness and unspeakable mercy. Oh, what privileges are granted to us as a people! And if God spared not His people that He loved because they refused to walk in the light, how can He spare the people whom He has blessed with the light of heaven in having opened to them the most exalted truth ever intrusted to mortal man to give to the world?4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 6

We are far from being the people God would have us to be, because we do not elevate the soul and refine the character in harmony with the wonderful unfolding of God’s truth and His purposes. "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people" [Proverbs 14:34]. Sin is a disorganizer. Wherever it is cherished—in the individual heart, in the household, in the church—there is disorder, strife, variance, enmity, envy, jealousy, because the enemy of man and of God has the controlling power over the mind. But let the truth be loved and brought into the life, as well as advocated, and that man or woman will hate sin and will be a living representative of Jesus Christ to the world.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 7

The people claiming to believe the truth will not be condemned because they had not the light, but because they had great light and did not bring their hearts to the test of God's great moral standard of righteousness. The people who claim to believe the truth must be elevated by living it out. Real Bible religion must leaven the life, refine and ennoble the character, making it more and more like the divine model. Then will the home be vocal with prayer, with thanksgiving and praise to God. Angels will minister in the home and accompany the worshiper to the house of prayer.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 8

Let the churches who claim to believe the truth, who are advocating the law of God, keep that law and depart from all iniquity. Let the individual members of the church resist the temptations to practice evils and indulge in sin. Let the church commence the work of purification before God by repentance, humiliation, deep heartsearching, for we are in the antitypical day of atonement—solemn hour fraught with eternal results.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 9

Let those who teach the truth present it as it is in Jesus. Under the subduing, sanctifying, refining influence of the truth of God, they are as clean vessels. Let them be leavened with Bible religion, and what an influence would go forth from them to the world! Let the individual members of the church be pure, steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the love of Jesus, and they will then be a light to the world. Let the men standing as watchmen and as shepherds of the flock proclaim the solemn truth, sound the notes of warning to all people, nations and tongues. Let them be living representatives of the truth they advocate, and honor God's law by strict and holy compliance with its requirements, walking before the Lord in purity, in holiness, and a power will attend the proclamation of the truth that will reflect light everywhere.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 10

God never forsakes people or individuals until they forsake Him. Outward opposition will not cause the faith of God's people, who are keeping His commandments, to become dim. The neglect to bring purity and truth into practice will grieve the Spirit of God and weaken them because God is not in their midst to bless. Internal corruption will bring the denunciations of God upon this people as it did upon Jerusalem. Oh, let pleading voices, let earnest prayer be heard, that those who preach to others shall not themselves be castaways. My brethren, we know not what is before us, and our only safety is in following the Light of the world. God will work with us and for us if the sins which brought His wrath upon the old world, upon Sodom and Gomorrah and upon ancient Jerusalem, do not become our crime.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 11

The least transgression of God's law brings guilt upon the transgressor, and without earnest repentance and forsaking of sin he will surely become an apostate. You inquire in regard to the course which should be pursued to secure the rights of our people to worship according to the dictates of our own conscience. This has been a burden on my soul for some time, whether it would be a denial of our faith and an evidence that our trust was not fully in God. But I call to mind many things God has shown me in the past, in regard to things of a similar character, as the draft and other things. I can speak in the fear of God it is right we should use every power we can to avert the pressure that is being brought to bear upon our people. I know that were our people spiritualized by the truth, the greatest love would be maintained.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 12

[We are] not to provoke those who have accepted this spurious Sabbath, an institution of the Papacy, in the place of God's holy Sabbath. Their not having the Bible arguments in their favor makes them all the more angry and determined to supply the place of arguments that are wanting in the Word of God by the power of their might. The force of persecution follows the steps of the dragon. Therefore great care should be exercised to give no provocation. And again, let us as a people, as far as possible, cleanse the camp of moral defilement and aggravating sins. When sin is making its march upon the people who claim to be elevating the moral standard of righteousness, how can we expect God to turn His power in our behalf and save us as a people that did righteousness?4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 13

All the policy in the world cannot save us from a terrible sifting, and all the efforts made with high authorities will not lift from us the scourging of God just because sin is cherished. If as a people we do not keep ourselves in the faith and not only advocate with pen and voice the commandments of God, but keep them every one, not violating a single precept knowingly, then weakness and ruin will come upon us. It is a work that we must attend to in every one of our churches. Each man must be a Christian.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 14

Let the sin of pride be put away, let all superfluities of dress be overcome, and repentance toward God be exercised for the highhanded robbery toward Him which has withheld money which should flow into the treasury to sustain the work of God in its mission fields. Let the work of reformation, of true conversion, be set before and urged upon the people. Let our works, our deportment, correspond with the work for this time, that we may say, Follow me as I follow Christ. Let us humble our souls before God by humiliation, fasting and prayer, repentance of sin, and putting it away.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 15

The voice of the true watchman needs now to be heard all along the line, "The morning cometh, and also the night" [Isaiah 21:12]. The trumpet must give a certain sound, for we are in the great day of the Lord's preparation. All the struggles to carry our appeals to the highest authorities in our land, however earnest and strong and eloquent may be the pleas in our favor, will not bring about that which we desire, unless the Lord works by His Holy Spirit in the hearts of those who claim to believe the truth. We may struggle as a mighty man in swimming against the current of Niagara, but we shall fail unless the Lord pleads in our behalf. God will be honored among His people. They must be pure, they must be divested of self, steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. The Lord will elevate the humblest soul that trusts in Him. He will unite His power with human effort, if that man will honor Him as did Daniel. But as a people we need the beauty of righteousness, holiness, and truth. The most harmonious theory will not save us. The God that ruled in Babylon is the same God that rules now. There are many doctrines current in our world. There is many a religion current that numbers its thousands and tens of thousands, but there is but one that bears the superscription and the stamp of God. There is a religion of man and a religion of God. We must have our souls riveted to the eternal Rock. Everything in God's world, both men and doctrines and nature itself, is fulfilling God's sure word of prophecy and accomplishing His grand and closing work in this world's history.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 16

We are to be ready and waiting for the orders of God. Nations will be stirred to their very center. Support will be withdrawn from those who proclaim God's only standard of righteousness, the only sure test of character. And all who will not bow to the decree of the national councils, and obey the national laws to exalt the Sabbath instituted by the man of sin to the disregard of God's holy day, will feel, not the oppressive power of Popery alone, but of the Protestant world, the image of the beast.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 17

Satan will work his miracles to deceive; he will set up his power as supreme. The church may appear as about to fall, but it does not fall. It remains, while the sinners in Zion will be sifted out—the chaff separated from the precious wheat. This is a terrible ordeal, but nevertheless it must take place. None but those who have been overcoming by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony will be found with the loyal and true, without spot or stain of sin, without guile in their mouths. We must be divested of our self-righteousness and arrayed in the righteousness of Christ.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 18

The remnant that purify their souls by obeying the truth gather strength from the trying process, exhibiting the beauty of holiness amid the surrounding apostasy. All these, He says, "I have graven ... upon the palms of My hands" [Isaiah 49:16]. They are held in everlasting, imperishable remembrance. We want faith now, living faith. We want to have a living testimony that shall cut to the heart of the sinner. There is too much sermonizing and too little ministering. We want the holy unction. We need the spirit and fervor of the truth. Many of the ministers are half paralyzed by their own defects of character. They need the converting power of God.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 19

That which God required of Adam before his fall was perfect obedience to His law. God requires now what He required of Adam, perfect obedience, righteousness without a flaw, without shortcoming in His sight. God help us to render to Him all His law requires. We cannot do this without that faith that brings Christ's righteousness into daily practice. Dear brethren, the Lord is coming. Lift up your thoughts and heads and rejoice. Oh, we would think that those who hear the joyful news, who claim to love Jesus, would be filled with joy unutterable and full of glory. This is the good, the joyful news which should electrify every soul, which should be repeated in our homes, and told to those whom we meet on the street. What more joyful news can be communicated! Cavilling and contention with believers or unbelievers is not the work God has given us to do.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 20

If Christ is my Saviour, my sacrifice, my atonement, then I shall never perish. Believing on Him, I have life for evermore. Oh, that all who believe the truth would believe in Jesus as their own Saviour. I do not mean that cheap faith unsupported by works, but that earnest, living, constant, abiding faith, that eats the flesh and drinks the blood of the Son of God. I want not only to be pardoned for the transgression of God's holy law, but I want to be lifted into the sunshine of God's countenance. Not simply to be admitted to heaven, but to have an abundant entrance.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 21

Are we so insensible as a peculiar people, a holy nation, to the inexpressible love that God has manifested for us? Salvation is not to be baptized, not to have our names upon the church books, not to preach the truth. But it is a living union with Jesus Christ, to be renewed in heart, doing the works of Christ in faith and labor of love, in patience, meekness, and hope. Every soul united to Christ will be a living missionary to all around him. He will labor for those near and those afar off. He will have no sectional feeling, no interest merely to build up one branch of the work over which he presides, and there let his zeal end. All will work with interest to make every branch strong. There will be no self-love, no selfish interest. The cause is one, the truth a great whole.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 22

Well may the question be asked with earnest, anxious heart, Is envy cherished, is jealousy permitted to find a place in my heart? If so, Christ is not there. Do I love the law of God, is the love of Jesus Christ in my heart? If we love one another as Christ has loved us, then we are getting ready for the blessed heaven of peace and rest. There is no struggling there to be first, to have the supremacy; all will love their neighbor as themselves. Oh, that God would open the understanding and speak to the hearts of our churches by arousing the individual members.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 23

The Lord appoints and sends forth ministers not only to preach, for this is a small part of His work, but to minister; to educate the people not to be fighters, but to be examples of piety. There are workers in every department appointed to do their work. When Jesus ascended on high He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers. Some have entered the work with a human commission rather than the divine. They have educated themselves as debaters, and the churches under their care show the character of their work. They were not ready, they were not fitted for the work. Their hearts are not right with God. In short, they have a theory, but not true conversion and sanctification through the truth. The great issue so near at hand will weed out those whom God has not appointed, and He will have a pure, true, sanctified ministry prepared for the latter rain.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 24

Our prayer should ascend to the throne of grace with fervor for the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into His vineyard. My heart aches as I look around upon the mission fields and see so feeble efforts to get the truth before the people. No censure can be attached to our leading men. I believe, brethren, you are one with me in heart, in sentiment, in regard to our great need, and in the earnest desire and earnest efforts to meet the mind of the Spirit of God in these things.4LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 25

Those who are at ease in Zion need to be aroused. Great is their accountability who bear the truth and yet feel no weight or burden for souls. Oh, for men and women professing the truth to arouse, to take on the yoke of Christ, to lift His burdens. There are wanted those who will not have merely a nominal interest, but a Christlike interest, unselfish—an intense ardor that will not flag under difficulties or cool because iniquity abounds.⁴*LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 26*

I want to speak to the ears of our people in America in every church. Awake from the dead, and Christ will give you life. Souls are perishing for the light of truth as it is in Jesus. We are standing upon the very borders of the eternal world. Fair-weather Christians will not be wanted for this work. The sentimental and tasteful religion is not needed for this time. There must be intensity brought into our faith and in the proclamation of truth. I tell you, a new life is proceeding from satanic agencies to work with a power we have not hitherto realized. And shall not a new power from above take possession of God's people? The truth, sanctifying in its influence, must be urged upon the people. There must be earnest supplications offered to God, agonizing prayer to Him, that our hopes as a people may not be founded on suppositions, but on eternal realities. We must know for ourselves, by the evidence of God's Word, whether we are in the faith, going to heaven or not. The moral standard of character is God's law. Do we meet its requirements? Are the Lord's people bringing their property, their time, their talents, and all their influence into the work for this time? Let us arouse. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" [Colossians 3:1].⁴*LtMs, Lt 55, 1886, par. 27*

Butler, G. I.

Basel, Switzerland

December 13, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in Ev 373-375.

Dear Brother Butler:

I wish to make a statement in reference to the subject of rebaptism. I cannot write as fully as I would at this time upon this subject for my eyes are troubling me. In our past experience in connection with the work and cause of God, there have been several of our ministering brethren who manifested much zeal in making prominent and elevating of equal importance the subject of rebaptism as the Sabbath. A testimony was given me several times upon special occasions for these brethren. I was shown that they were making a mistake in presenting in the front and urging upon those newly come to the faith the subject of rebaptism. It requires much heavenly wisdom to present the truth to souls as it is in Jesus.⁴*LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 1*

The subject of rebaptism should be handled with the greatest care. After the truth is presented upon the Sabbath question and other important points of our faith, and souls manifest the moral courage to take their position upon the truth, they will see this question in the Bible light if they are fully converted. But by some these questions have been handled unwisely, and God has sent reproof many times upon this point. Those who place the subject of rebaptism in the front, making it of as much importance as the Sabbath question, were not leaving the right impression upon the minds and correctly representing the subject. It requires great discrimination to bring in kindred truths with the Sabbath, rightly dividing the Word, giving to each his portion of meat in due season. Those who lift the cross of the Sabbath have a tremendous battle to fight with self and with selfish interests which would interpose between their souls and God. Then when they have taken this great step and their feet have been planted upon the platform of eternal truth, they must have time to become accustomed to their new position and not be hurried upon the question of rebaptism. No one should become a conscience for another or urge and press rebaptism.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 2

This is a subject which each individual must conscientiously take his position upon in the fear of God. This subject should be carefully presented in the spirit of tenderness and love. Then the duty of urging belongs to no one but God; give God a chance to work with His Holy Spirit upon the minds, so that the individual will be perfectly convinced and satisfied in regard to this advanced step. A spirit of controversy and contention should never be allowed to come in and prevail on this subject. Do not take the Lord's work out of His hands into your own hands. Those who have conscientiously taken their position upon the commandments of God will, if rightly dealt with, accept all essential truth. But it needs wisdom to deal with human minds. Some will be longer in seeing and understanding some kindred truths than others—especially will this be the case in regard to the subject of rebaptism; but there is a divine hand that is leading them—a divine spirit impressing their hearts—and they will know what they ought to do and do it.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 3

Let none of our zealous brethren overdo this matter. They will be in danger of getting before the Lord and making tests for others which the Lord has not bid them to make. It is not the work of any of our teachers to urge rebaptism upon any one. It is their business to lay down the great principles of Bible truths; especially is this the case in regard to rebaptism. Then let God do the work of convicting the mind and heart. Will you please to present this that I have written to Brother Kunz? I have been shown that our brother will have to learn in the school of Christ many lessons that are essential before he can be a successful teacher. He carries too much of the burden of self, and manifests too little of the meekness and lowliness of Jesus, and he is constantly in danger of moving unwisely in presenting the subjects of truth. He needs greater wisdom from heaven and more of the love of Christ and the spirit of forbearance and patience brought into his work. Then he will have greater power to win souls to Christ and to the truth.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 4

In regard to rebaptism he should not place this on a level with the Sabbath. He needs to treat this subject with great caution. If any one comes to him for knowledge upon this subject, he should not create a controversy but in meekness give the light that he has from the Bible and then let the Lord do all the pressing and urging. Every honest soul who accepts the Sabbath of the fourth commandment will see and understand his duty in time. But it will take time for some. It is not a subject to be driven and forced upon those newly come to the truth, but this subject will work like leaven; the process will be slow and quiet, but it will do its work if our ministering brethren will not be too fast and defeat the purpose of God.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 5

Those who have long looked upon this subject see it quite clearly and think all others should see it just as they do. They do not consider that with some newly come to the faith this matter looks like denying all their former religious experience. But in time they will come to regard the matter differently. As the truth is constantly unfolding to their minds, they will see advanced steps to be taken; new light will flash upon their pathway; God's Spirit will work upon their minds, if men will not interfere and seek to drive them to the positions which they think are truth.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 6

Now let it be distinctly understood, from time to time, all through our experience, God has given me testimonies of caution to our brethren in regard to handling the subject of rebaptism. Our good Brother Bates and several others of our ministers I was shown were making a mistake at some point in their experience in putting in the front and making a test question of rebaptism. This is not the way that the subject should be treated. It is a matter to be treated as a great privilege and blessing, and all who are rebaptized, if they have the right ideas upon this subject, will thus consider it. These good brethren were not bringing those newly come to the faith along step by step cautiously and guardedly, and the result was that some were turned from the truth, when a little time and tender, careful dealing with them would have prevented all such sad results.4LtMs, Lt 56, 1886, par. 7

Rice, Brother; Gibbs, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

December 17, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in CD 211-212; 7MR 370; 9MR 113-114.

Dear Brethren Rice and Gibbs:

I have been so anxious to have things move wisely and in God's order at the sanitarium that I wrote you a long letter and still feel anxious that nothing shall come in to that institution that will leave a wrong impression upon the minds of those who patronize it.4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 1

While we recognize this institution as an instrumentality of God, we feel a most earnest interest that all connected with it who claim to believe the truth will correctly represent our faith by having work corresponding with its holy character. There will be some who will not leave the best and most correct impression upon the minds. They will be inclined to narrow ideas and plans and have not the least idea of what constitutes health reform. They will take the testimonies that have been given for special individuals under peculiar circumstances and make these testimonies general and to apply in all cases, and in this way they bring discredit upon my work and the influence of the testimonies upon health reform.4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 2

Now if these individuals who take the extreme meaning of these special testimonies for individuals begin their work of application, they will do me harm. They will give wrong impressions in regard to my work and will certainly create great confusion in the Health Retreat. Brethren, be on your guard. Give no place to any influence which will misrepresent our position and faith as a people.4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 3

I highly esteem Brother Lockwood, but he takes extreme views of health reform; and I do not want that he should make his ideas prominent and give his mold to what constitutes health reform, for he will close the door to those who would patronize the Retreat.4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 4

Brother and Sister Rogers carried the matter of indulgence in eating to extreme, and the institute became demoralized. Now the enemy would push you into the opposite extreme if he could to have a poverty-stricken diet. Be careful to keep level heads and sensible ideas. Seek wisdom from heaven, and move understandingly. If you take extremely radical positions, you will be obliged to back down; and then however conscientious you may have been, you have lost confidence in your own sound judgment, and our brethren and unbelievers will lose confidence in you. Be sure to go no faster than you have positive light from God. Take no man's ideas, but move intelligently in the fear of the Lord. If you err, let it not be in getting as far from the people as possible, for then you cut the thread of your influence and can do them no good. Better err on the side of the people than altogether away from them, for there is hope in that case that you can carry the people with you, but there is no need of error on either side. You need not go into the water or into the fire, but take the middle path avoiding all extremes. Do not let it appear that you are one-sided, ill-balanced managers. Do not have a meager, poor diet. Do not let any one influence you to have the diet poverty stricken. Have your food prepared in a healthful, tasteful manner; have your food prepared with a nicety that will correctly represent health reform. The great backsliding upon health reform is because unwise minds have handled it and carried it to such extremes that it has disgusted in place of converting people to it. I have been where these radical ideas have been carried out—vegetables prepared with only water and everything else in like manner. This kind of cookery is health deform, and there are some minds so constituted that they will accept anything that bears the features of rigorous diet or reform of any kind. My brethren, I would have you temperate in all things, but be careful that you do not strain the point or run our institution into such a narrow channel that it comes out to a point. You must not fall into every man's notions, but be level-headed, calm, trusting in God.4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par.

Again, do not let the idea prevail that the Health Retreat is a place where the sick are healed by the prayer of faith. There are instances when this will be done, and we need to have faith in God constantly. Let no one think that those who have abused themselves and taken no intelligent care of themselves can come to the Health Retreat and be healed by the prayer of faith, for this is presumption. I see so little wisdom, so little good common sense exercised by some of our brethren that my heart is sick, sore, and distressed. They do not have sensible ideas and do not honor God. They have need of a divine touch. If the idea should once prevail that the sick can come to the institute to be cured by the prayer of faith, you will have such a state of things there that you cannot now discern even if I should point it out to you in the best English language I could command. We need more of God, brethren, greater humility. 4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 6

I will caution you upon another point—taking feeble ones to work for their board and treatment. Do not do this. Do not gather any such help, for they are the most expensive help in the end. Just when you need them most they drop out, throwing extra labor upon some other; and when you have such help, it fills the place of healthy helpers. Do not think that it is wisdom to get the ones who will work for next to nothing, for their work will be next to nothing. Do not get those who have fits and keep them about the institution, for the report goes out from there and will keep away some who otherwise could come. You must have foresight in this. After your help has had fair opportunity to have a knowledge of the truth, if they show no disposition to receive it, let them not remain longer, for Satan will use them to work against you. You want to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, but do not have anyone about you that will not be a credit to the institution. Be careful how you take these objectionable ones. God help you is my prayer to work in all wisdom. 4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 7

Dr. Gibbs and Brother Rice, you must not restrict your diet; you must have food that will nourish you. Do not depend on graham mush or on such kind of food. Do not give up meat altogether. Use it sparingly, and use your own judgment, not some one else's mind. I hope you will have discretion in all things. 4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par.

Now, my brethren, in regard to Sister Clase: I entreat you not to let her bear too many burdens in that institution. If you have not helpers that can do the work, Dr. Gibbs, as a physician, I call upon you to prescribe for her to leave for a time, where there will be no danger of her overdoing. Elder Rice, having so many things to care for, would not get around to look after all these things. Sister Clase should have help that will not fail up on her when most needed. When [those] come to you for the permission to take treatment because they are sick and then offer to work their way, tell them No, for they will be care-makers instead of care-takers, the most troublesome ones you have in the institute. They will feel entitled to more attention than those who pay for their board and treatment. They will be the greatest tax, and through them will come the greatest temptations because of their imperfections. Get help that you can depend upon and that will stand to their post of duty. The peevish, the faultfinders, the complainers who claim to believe the truth will be the greatest curse to that institution unless they are thoroughly converted. I know whereof I speak, and I want that you should not, Brethren Gibbs and Rice, be spoiled in disposition and have your patience worn out and become discouraged because of this inconsistent, unchristian class who know not themselves. 4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 9

You need not think this letter is unnecessary, for I know whereof I write. I know that you need this letter. I know complaints will be made of Elder Loughborough not furnishing money to get needy things for the institution; but I think if a call is made on him, and the situation of the needs laid before him, that he will attend to it. But Brother Rice is superintendent. Let him magnify his office. 4LtMs, Lt 57, 1886, par. 10

Loughborough, J. N.

NP

December 20, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother Loughborough:

Last Friday I mailed copies of letters to you, and yesterday I received letters from Eld. Haskell, with one from you enclosed, giving the information that Bro. Church had sold out half his interest in the ditch. Bro. Haskell has no doubt written to you that he fears he will invest largely in the Health Retreat while other missions should have attention. Now, Eld. Loughborough, you will have to take considerable responsibility in this matter, and you need much wisdom from God that you do not make a mistake. The Health Retreat has been bound about for want of means to work with as well as ability to manage it wisely and run the institution in a manner well pleasing to God. We hope that a wrong mold will not be given to the institution, but that God will stand at the helm and that He will manage the matter after His own will and that every helper will fall into line.⁴*LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 1*

We think that improvements should be made, the very first in the building now erected as your letter names: an elevator, a heating apparatus, and in the cooking department. This should be done at once before the ones whose help we appreciate shall become so worn out with "makeshifts" to get along that they will break under the strain. Let there be efficient helpers, good, strong, decided workers under a managing head, and let it not be named of accepting weak, sick girls, women, or men to work their way and pay for treatment. Our physicians can see that the treatment, if it does them any good, is sufficient tax to the system, as they will frequently pass through changes or a crisis demanding all their physical powers under the best condition to maintain the taxation of treatment. I have seen the result in our sanitarium at Battle Creek of taking such subjects. At the very time when their help is needed most, they are among the missing.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 2

We want that this institution should prosper and that the helpers should not be overworked. Sr. Clase is precious help, and she will be of great service as one to tell others what to do, but should never be left with inefficient help that under pressure of circumstances she must do, or things will not be done. She has a frail hold on life.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 3

I would speak more fully in regard to Bro. Church. He must not consider that if he puts money in the Health Retreat that he must be manager over the whole concern. This cannot be; but if he will invest means to erect a more commodious building or enlarge the one already built, carry it up another story, it will be a wise outlay of means that ought to have been done the past year. I mean the old part. Do not encourage an outlay of means to make a new road until other necessary arrangements are made in the buildings and on the immediate premises. If the institute feel that they want my cottage, they can have it if it is for their interest to possess it, and I will build next to Bro. Roger's. I would want to make a division of the land that is connected with it. It lies so closely to the main building that it may be needed.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 4

Now you must move wisely with Bro. Church. Influence him to pay every pledge that he has made before he donates anything, then be wise in arrangements about the institute. Let his donations build up that institution, for it needs it. It has been a shabby affair. It has received the very last and least notice in everything. A donation should be secured for the college and something for foreign missions. But I would not want to introduce too many objects, fearing that you will fail to secure anything for any one of them. If his heart is open to do a liberal thing for the institution, let him do it.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 5

But he must not be left to extravagant plans and outlay of means so that he will feel it his prerogative to control it himself. Take all these things into consideration. I think Eld. Haskell is about right in his suggestions in not making an extravagant outlay of means on the institute when the missions are in so great want of means. But will these missions succeed in receiving means from Brother Church? I fear not. But if you could influence him to appropriate a portion to our college in Healdsburg, for that is one of God's instrumentalities. Home missions demand attention as well as foreign missions. If one and another strikes in eagerly demanding means, I fear that Bro. Church will become weary and hold on to his means. Oh, that God would direct in this matter. The Holy Spirit coming into his heart will make him a wise steward to do with the means in his hands that which would bless His cause and advance His name's glory. We want constantly the subduing, softening grace of God which will melt out of the heart all selfishness.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 6

I send you a copy of the letter that I sent to the sister in Idaho which will give you an idea of how much we need means to work within these missions. She sent me fifty dollars, but it only got as far as the Pacific Press. I wish all such means would be forwarded to me, for I need to use it at once in these missions. They need not send that now, but if they had sent it right on it would have come in a good time. When we could not tell where means were to come from, [we] were put to our very wits' end to know how to get money to defray our family expenses; but we have drawn from the Review and Herald so that we have means and will not need to have the money sent. I have to hand out nine dollars here, five there, two in another place, and so it goes for those who really need something to relieve their wants. This is done from my own purse.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 7

We need to greatly humble ourselves before God and to seek Him earnestly that we may have special grace to help us in every time of need. I greatly desire help from God in doing the work I have to do. We must be men and women of prayer; we should have devout piety and a determined purpose to glorify God and to make earnest efforts to be representatives of Jesus Christ. He will be our Helper at all times. We must devote to God all that there is of us. A living Christian grows, his character is fashioned after the divine model. We must be continually elevating in our life and becoming more noble in our character.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 8

Write to us as often as possible.4LtMs, Lt 58, 1886, par. 9

December 20, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in Ev 449-451.

Dear Sister Hubbel Smith, Fayette, Idaho Territory:

It was a surprise to me on opening a letter from the Pacific Coast to find a letter from you, one whom I had never seen. The words as well as the little donation were appreciated. My heart was touched with the evidence that I have tender friends in the faith whom I have never seen whose sympathy and prayers are following me in my travels. Will you, dear sister, permit me to use this little donation from your hand to help forward the work here in this mission field. I have many opportunities where I could help but am powerless because I have not the means in my hands. When laboring in Nimes, France, we made it our work to save souls. There was a young man who had become discouraged through the temptations of Satan and through some mistakes of our brethren who did not understand how to deal with the minds of the youth. He gave up the Sabbath and engaged to work in a manufacturing establishment to perfect his trade in watchmaking. He is a very promising young man. My watch needed repairing, which brought us together. I was introduced to him, and as soon as I looked upon his countenance, I knew that he was the one whom the Lord had presented before me in vision. The whole circumstance came distinctly before me. 4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 1

He was connected with a little church in Switzerland, and among the believers had come in a spirit of criticism or faultfinding, which was displeasing to God. When the youth made mistakes, they were not treated with tenderness and love, but a censorious spirit was manifested toward them, and love and sympathy which have been given to the erring was withheld, and the result was three young men wandered away from God and from the truth. This young man of whom I speak is one of them. 4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 2

He attended the meeting when he thought I would speak and would sit with his eyes riveted on me through the entire discourse, which was translated into French by Bro. Bourdeau. I felt a duty to labor for this young man. I talked two hours with him and urged upon him the peril of his situation. I told him because his brethren had made a mistake that was no reason that he should grieve the heart of Christ who had loved him so much that He had died to redeem him. He was the purchase of the blood of Christ, he was Christ's property, and by withholding himself from His service, he was robbing God of the time, of talent, and of influence; and the records made in the books of heaven since he had given himself to the service of Satan was that which he would not be pleased to meet in the judgment, for he would have no excuse for turning from Jesus because he had not been treated wisely. Had Jesus withheld His tender, compassionate love, had Jesus dealt with him unmercifully in the light reflected from the cross of Calvary, what would be his condemnation. I told him I knew the history of his life and his errors (which were the simple errors of youthful indiscretion) which were not of a character that should have been treated with so great severity. I then entreated him with tears to turn square about, to leave the service of Satan and of sin, for he had become a thorough backslider, and return like the prodigal to his father's house, his father's service. He was in good business, learning his trade; if he kept the Sabbath, he would lose his position. As yet, while learning his trade, he had received only two dollars per week and his board; but a few months more would finish his apprenticeship, and then he would have a good trade. But I urged an immediate decision.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 3

We prayed with him most earnestly, and I told him that I dared not have him cross the threshold of the door until he would, before God and angels and those present, say, "I will from this day be a Christian." How my heart rejoiced when he said this. He slept none that night. He said as soon as he made the promise, he seemed to be in a new channel. His thoughts seemed purified, his purposes changed; and the responsibility that he had taken seemed so solemn that he could not sleep. The next day he notified his employer that he could work for him no longer. He slept but little for three nights. He was happy, so thankful that the Lord had evidenced to him His pardon and His love.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par.

But now I had something to do. This young man after purchasing some necessary clothing had no means left. I wished him to go to Basel, Switzerland, and connect with Elders Ertzenberger and Conradi who were giving a course of lectures to the Germans. He could be learning the truth more perfectly and become better acquainted with the work of colportearing and unite his labor with these brethren, but how would he get to Basel without means? I told him to work with Elder Bourdeau and soon he would have means to take him to Basel. We had only a limited supply of means, but I placed in the hands of Elder Bourdeau nine dollars to defray his expenses, and we made our means lengthen by riding in the third-class cars. Eld. Ings, his wife, and I saved enough in this way to pay this young man's fare to Basel. 4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 5

It was true we had not conveniences, we had to be exposed to tobacco smoke, to be crowded in with emigrants, but we were happy in doing this. We found in most cases when we requested them not to smoke they were respectful and favored us. We traveled to Valance, France, and held two meetings there. We had but a small company. Here was another young man, the only son of a widow, and although there was a pouring rain without and a few in a private house, the Lord gave me much freedom. I spoke to the half dozen with all that interest and fervor I would speak to ten thousand. This young man was also backslidden, but through our labors in Christ, he also came back to his father's house. 4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 6

I wish to give you a sample of the condition of those here in Europe who will obey the truth at any cost. The house in which our meeting was held was rented by a family consisting of mother, daughter, and son. The daughter has a finished education but cannot teach school on account of the Sabbath. She works out in different families, sewing for twenty cents per day and her dinner. The son is a fine young man of excellent appearance, has learned the bookbinder's trade. He receives three dollars per week and out of that boards himself. The mother of my age, 59, works from early morn till night in the field as a man and receives twenty cents per day. This is a fair sample of the wages that the workers in Europe obtain. It is much higher living here than in America. Wood sells by the pound. Now such families as these we want to help into some position where they can better help themselves. They are firm in the truth. We think if they could come to Basel they could be connected with the work in some way. They will need a little help to get here.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 7

We passed on to Torre Pellice, Italy, and made it our home with A. C. Bourdeau. They have to live very close, and we felt that we could not be an additional expense so that we paid our board while we stayed with them. Here we saw two men, one Italian and the other French, both laboring with all their powers to get the truth before the ignorant, benighted souls of Italy. They traveled fifteen miles on foot to attend the meeting. They cannot afford the luxury of riding in the cars and paying fifty cents. They hold meetings in the stables with the cattle all around them. There they open the Scriptures to the people who listen with interest. They walk seven or eight miles right up in the narrow gorges of the mountains, precipices on either side of the path. They speak to the people, give Bible readings, and return on foot the same night.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 8

Now these men are poor. The treasury of mission funds is empty, and they have a cold winter before them. We have tried to help them some by sending them clothing and have sent to England to purchase blankets for them to keep them comfortable this winter. Now these workers are no cheap class of illiterate men, but they are intelligent as any of our workers. They have the truth at heart and are devoted to the work. They go poorly clad, subsist on cheap food, and get along any way, practicing great economy. If you will not object, I will use this money to help these men to go out literally into highways and hedges to hunt for souls, holding meetings in stables and open the Scripture to those who eagerly listen to words of truth. I see that if the work goes in these places we must have means to make it go.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 9

I attended meetings in Torre Pellice, in Villar Pellice, seven miles from the former place we climb, climb up the steep ascent among the mountains, where pilgrim feet have trod, and there in a small room called a hall, we had a congregation packed in as close as possible—women with their white caps or bonnets and blue calico dresses, their faces showing intelligence. Men also come and listen with eagerness to the words of truth. Who can but feel intensely in such a place. My heart is stirred to its depths. I have to speak to them through an interpreter, but they come after meeting, eager to shake hands with me, thanking me for the words of comfort and light which they have heard.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 10

We visited St. Germain. The hall was filled, and many had to go away because there was not room. We believe the Lord has a people in the Piedmont Valleys, and we believe that a company will be raised up to stand in defense of the truth. But because of poverty, we fear the work goes slowly, and we fear the workers will become worn out with privation, exposure, and overwork. I could write volumes upon this matter, but I stop. Please receive my thanks for this donation. I will not use a dollar of it for myself, but to help those whom I see need help so very much. Thus you will make me your steward to lay up for you a treasure in the heaven.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 11

I will send you a sketch of our work in Europe.4LtMs, Lt 59, 1886, par. 13

Portions of this letter are published in Ev 84-85, 340; UL 373; EGWE 249; 5MR 328-329; 6MR 64, 196.

Dear Children, John and Julia:

We received a letter from you while at Basel last Thursday. We were glad to hear from you and to learn that the good work was still progressing in Australia. The work is still moving forward here in Europe. Some additions are being made to our numbers in every effort that is put forth to open the Scriptures to the people. The truth is like leaven; it will work silently in some hearts. We find it so here. The truth will have its transforming power upon those who are honest in heart. 4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 1

Brethren Conradi and Ertzenberger are two good workmen. They have been laboring here in Basel the past two months. The hall they have hired is filled, and some evenings a small room adjoining the hall is filled. Brother Ertzenberger told me last evening that sixteen had decided to keep the Sabbath. This is very encouraging to us all. Those who are gained here will be better situated to be cared for than in many places where there is no church or meetinghouse and no fold for the sheep. 4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 2

I think our laborers are in danger of making mistakes upon this point. They do not make the most thorough efforts where a church has been raised up, but they go at a distance and work far off; and then if some souls take hold of the truth, they are neglected. Some new field has been entered, and there are many small companies brought out into the truth and left for the wolves to come in and devour them. It is wisdom to choose fields where there is a church established that these fields can be cared for, and those newly come out into the faith can be encouraged, led along until they become established, rooted and grounded in the present truth. I think wise generalship is needed in the selection of fields of labor. Plans should be made before a field is entered, how these souls are to be cared for. Who will minister unto these who shall take hold of the truth? They have accepted an unpopular truth. Who will educate them after they have learned their ABC's? Who will give the spiritual mold to their experience? To labor at considerable expense to bring out souls into the truth and then leave them to fashion their own experience according to false ideas they have received and woven into their religious experience would leave that work far worse than if the truth had never been brought to them. To leave the work incomplete and to ravel out is worse than to wait until there are plans well devised to take care of those who do come into the faith.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 3

It is poor policy to leave a few here and there, unfed and uncared for, for devouring wolves, or to become targets for the enemy to open fire upon. I have been shown that there has been much of such work done among us as a people. Promising fields have been spoiled for future effort by striking in prematurely without counting the cost and leaving the work half done. Because there has been a course of lectures given, then stop the work, rush into a new field to half do the work there, these poor souls who have but a slight knowledge of the truth are left without proper measures being taken to confirm and establish them in the faith and educate them like well-drilled soldiers how to meet the enemy's attacks and vanquish him.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 4

Where there are missions established, gather everything possible surrounding them. Make effort after effort and [do] not stop with one course of lectures; the second is needed far more than the first and will establish points. Peter addressed his brethren in regard to practical godliness, teaching them that they must live upon the plan of addition, constantly climbing heavenward, adding grace to grace, as the only security for them to keep them from shipwreck and ruin. And by thus climbing round after round of the ladder of progress, looking to God above the ladder, clinging to Christ, climbing up by Christ's help, they have the assurance that they would never fall, and the pledge from God is that He would multiply unto them His graces as they should perseveringly, and by giving all diligence, act upon the plan of addition. "For," said he, "so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." "Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of His majesty." 2 Peter 1:11-13, 15, 16.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 5

If those who knew the truth and were established in it were indeed in need of having its importance kept ever before them, and their minds stirred up by the repetition of it, how important that this work is not neglected for those newly come to the faith. Everything in the interpretation of the Scripture is new and strange to them, and they will be in danger of losing the force of the truth and [of] receiving ideas not correct. In many efforts that have been made, the work has been left incomplete. One man alone should not commence this work or finish it, for one man becomes too weary to follow up the pulpit effort and teach and minister; but two should be connected in this effort. And if their manner of labor is not the same, this will be all the better, for then one man's mold and ideas will not have too great power upon the minds of those for whom they labor. It should be after the order Christ established, sending forth the laborers two and two, then the labor will be divided; for the coming close to the people out of the pulpit, explaining Scripture to them, talking with them, praying with them, and showing the spirit of Jesus in all meekness and patience, bearing with their ignorance, and that patiently and with the spirit of Christ, bearing with their opposition and objections will tell more than all the arguments and discourses given aside from this personal labor.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 6

This personal effort is that which the people must have. Heart must be brought close to heart, and in every soul we are to see one whom Christ died to save. This work is not pleasant to all, but it is a work that is to be done; and it is essential in the formation and building up of a church and in educating you to become able ministers. When the arguments for present truth are presented for the first time, it is difficult to fasten the points upon the mind. And although some may see sufficiently to decide, yet for all this there is need of going all over the very same ground again and giving another course of lectures.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 7

New ones will be added to the hearers and the second series of discourses fastens upon the mind, and by Bible readings and a more definite explanation of the truth more souls will be gathered and established there that have taken their stand upon present truth. This is the only work that should be accepted as giving “full proof of thy ministry.” [2 Timothy 4:5.] Many love to preach, but they do not love to minister; but this is the work which is really more essential than preaching alone. There is to be practical instruction given in regard to the daily Christian life and duty. We are to present in our own life patience, meekness, and forbearance, long-suffering, cheerfulness, joyfulness in the truth—but not a love for controversy.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 8

Then if the teacher shall represent Christ in words, in character, that he is seeking to reach the highest elevation of Christian character after the divine standard, God will bless his effort to present to others the Bible specifications of what constitutes Christian character. The Bible may be opened, the perfect standard of human character presented, and a perfect guide under all circumstances of life. But those presenting sacred truth must be backed up by the example of the teacher. Thus God would have us become living epistles known and read by all men. All our passions must be under the control of the Spirit of God. Christ must be an abiding presence by faith in our own hearts. Our conversation then will not be trivial, but in heaven, our thoughts refined, our words select and well chosen, for are they not registered in the books of heaven? There is a precious, holy work to be back up and the truth exemplified in a holy life, that we may be examples to the flock. Thus we are representing Jesus to others around us. Oh, that God would help us to work in His order, with His Spirit, and not take any glory to ourselves, is my prayer day and night.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 9

How thankful I am that we have a loving Saviour to whom we can go in our great need. We often lack wisdom, and we scarcely know ourselves or understand how liable we are to depend on our own finite judgment. I know that if we should have greater earnestness to seek God, greater earnestness to subdue self and work intelligently, we should see wonderful results. Oh, my heart cries out after the living God! I want daily, yes, hourly, a renewal of His grace and His salvation. I must have power from on high, else I cannot be a living channel of light to the world. I tremble, for I have reason to know great trials are before me. I do not want to be surprised by the enemy.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 10

I am so glad that the work has started in Australia, and when I think of what a power those who have taken hold of the truth may become, what light may flow through them to others, I am filled with rejoicing and think that every one who truly believes the truth will be workers for God and that through them the light is to be communicated to others, I am led to praise God with pen and heart and voice. But the exceeding great and precious promises are held upon condition of obedience. We may be exalted to heaven in point of privileges. We may have great light, precious opportunities for doing good, and yet fail to make God our dependence. The warnings God has given in His holy Word through His prophets, the great and heavenly illuminations reflected from the cross of Calvary, will not prevent souls from falling away from the truth for the reason they trusted to their own hearts, sparks of their own kindling, and did not make God their strength, and they lost that which was sacred and valuable—the Spirit of God witnessing with their spirit. Their sins were not put away, and He hid His face from them. He would not hear their prayers. The Lord did not forsake them nor suffer His faithful ones to fail, but they departed from Him and separated themselves from His love and forfeited the fulfilment of His promise in which they trusted. They trusted in forms of doctrine as their saviour and did not do the works of Christ or glorify His holy name.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 11

We are exalted very high. The Word of God has been opened to our understanding; we see the precious light shining forth from Calvary, giving divine illumination to the whole Jewish economy and giving force and power to the prophecies that open before all future events to the close of time. In this age of Bibles and great light, immorality and ignorance are without excuse; and those who retain depraved hearts and unholy practices are without excuse. They are guilty before God. There was a time when men could be ignorant without sin. But in the flood of light now pouring upon our world, ignorance becomes a sin. Now God commands us to seek wisdom and to obtain knowledge. We may be wise or ignorant, but its results, its consequences, will surely follow. God has given us intelligent minds. This is God's precious gift to man, and He demands of us the full improvement of this gift to search His Word for ourselves. 4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 12

As we are exalted very high in point of privilege, if we do not respond to the light given and render corresponding obedience, keeping our souls in the love of God, abiding in Christ, that which to us would become a blessing becomes a curse. It is the deceiver, not the Spirit of truth, that makes us believe that we cannot become pure and holy, a powerful people separate from the world, united in love and union with one another through Christ. We need not expect any other portion than that which was given to our Lord. According to the heart service given to God will be the enmity of Satan against the followers of Jesus; and the children of God are more wise and powerful when the wisdom and influence of the world are arrayed against us than when they are engaged in favor and fellowship with them. 4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 13

My brother, if reproach did not come to me, I should question whether I were a child of God or not and doing His work. I have plenty of this kind. The Jewish temple was built of hewn stones, and at great expense of time and money and labor these stones were cut out of the mountain and fitted for their places in the building before they were collected together, so that when the building was completed there was not the sound of an ax or hammer heard in its upbuilding. The stones which are in God's sacred temple are not collected from the mountains of Judea, but gathered from the nations, kindreds, and tongues and people. They are not lifeless material that must be prepared with hammer and chisel, but living stones which emit light. The great cleaver of truth has taken them from the quarry of the world and placed them under the hand of the great Master Builder, the Lord of the temple; and He is polishing them in His workshop, which is this world, that all the rough edges and crookedness may be removed and they hammered and chiseled and squared by the truth of God, polished and refined, ready to fill their place in God's spiritual temple, that they may grow up a holy temple for God.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 14

Now we are in the workshop of God, and the process is going on in these hours of probation to fit us for the glorious temple. We cannot now be indifferent and negligent and careless and refuse to depart from sin, but we must be dying to our defects of character and expect to become pure and holy and fashioned in character after the similitude of a palace. When Christ shall come, it is then too late for wrongs to be righted, too late for the character to be changed, too late to obtain a holy character. Now is the day of preparation; now is the time when we can have our defects removed; now is the time when our sins must go beforehand to judgment, be confessed and repented of, and pardon written off against our names. May God help us who teach the truth to be patterns of piety, full of meekness and good fruits, examples to the flock of God. We must be thus if we win our way to hearts. If we are all that God would have us be, we shall be spotless and undefiled. We will be patient; we will reveal the subduing, softening influences of the Spirit of God. But if we retain our defects, we are not Christlike and are not abiding in Christ and Christ abiding in our hearts by faith.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 15

We are about to commence another year, and the increased light and privileges call upon us to make a new and entire consecration to God. One year nearer home, nearer to the great white throne. One year nearer the mansions Christ is preparing for us. I long to see Jesus; I long to be with Him, to be changed to His image, and have eternal life where I shall enjoy His presence forever. I long to see God's people coming up to their high privileges in oneness with Christ. The exceeding great and precious promises on record for us we are to claim as ours. We are to live by them; by them we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust. We must present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service. We are to be constantly pressing heavenward. We are to be filled with all the fulness of God. Our heavenly Father requires of His people according to the grace and truth given them; He will not accept less. His demands must be fully met.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 16

The salvation of sinners requires a great outlay of positive power. God expects His workers to do something; to let light shine forth in good works that flash light upon the pathway of the sinner and turn his steps from the gates of hell. Every true believer is under the direction of God to hold forth the Word of life. We are not to wait until we are importuned for counsel, not to be so delicate and modest. We can now sound the note of warning and take right hold of the hand of the sinner and seek to urge his steps from the path of ruin. Let the luster of our piety, the energy, the earnestness of our faith, the practical godliness brought into our life and our own souls subdued by the love of God lead us to expostulate and entreat to save the soul from death. If we neglect this personal effort and do not habitually and perseveringly urge upon the sinner his danger, we are guilty before God. Human language is not sufficient to express our guilt of neglect.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 17

God is the Helper of each individual member of the church. Our only safeguard against failure in our God-given work is found in our earnest reliance upon God, in unreserved piety. Without this we shall do infinite harm to souls and fail in our highest responsibilities. Our light must shine forth in good works, sending forth bright and steady rays. If we live in the light, walk in the light, unconsciously to ourselves that light will be shining forth to all around us. The sons of God are to represent Christ and the elevated character of the truth which they claim to believe in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation. Would that the members of the church would feel their true heavenly calling and feel, as I have been shown they should, their duty to be living, acting, working members of the church.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 18

The Lord will use all who will become channels of light through holy consecration. The consistent religious life, the holy conversation, the stern, unswerving fidelity to truth and uprightness, the active benevolence, the godly example of the true disciple are making their impressions upon the unbelievers. Then let each Christian shine and be as bright beams of light, and they will shine in the dark pathway of others. The Lord will work if we will co-operate with Him.4LtMs, Lt 60, 1886, par. 19

May the Lord be near us and guide us, is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 60,

Church, Brother

NP

December 12-20, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in CD 289; TMR 296-297.

Dear Brother Church:

I have received good reports from the camp-meeting in Woodland. I am glad that you were present and that you have a prospect of selling out. I hope sincerely that you will succeed, that the Lord will open the way before you. I learned that you proposed to pay all your pledges. I hope that this will be your first work because a pledge is as sacred as a note, and our brethren do not regard it in the right light. They will frequently invest means that come into their hands in some enterprise where they think they can make more money and forget that which they owe to God and His cause. Thus His work is left to suffer for the want of the means that they pledged to support it. My brother, I hope that you will feel that you are under the most solemn obligations to God to pay Him that which thou owest Him. Do not invest in anything until this is done. I cannot remember how much you pledged to the college. I hope you will not neglect this branch of the work. It takes students at so low a figure that it is impossible to make it pay. It will be a missionary branch of the work. It has done great good, and it will continue to do a good work for the Master. Do not then forget the college. As the Lord's steward, seek wisdom from Him. Do not follow your mind and judgment, but seek to know what the will of the Lord is in the matter. Leave your heart open to the teachings of the Spirit of God. If ever you needed an unerring counselor, you need Him now. 4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 1

I learned that great gratitude is awakened in your heart because of the work that has been done for your wife. I learned that you propose to largely help the Health Retreat. This is worthy of your attention. I have been pleading earnestly with God that He would open the way for help to come to that poor, neglected institution. It is one branch, and not the least, of the work of God. I was shown years ago large building on that hillside. People were coming and going. Cottages were built, and there was a great and good work being done for the suffering and for those who had no knowledge of the truth. Therefore I have worked, I have planned, I have prayed over that institution that it might be prospered and that Satan might be defeated in his plans to destroy it. God's eye is upon it.4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 2

I am glad we connected Elders Loughborough and Rice with it, for these men have given the people confidence, because they are cautious men and would not involve the institution in debt and would not consent to have a wrong mold given to the institution. These are men of experience in religious things. They are men who love the truth, men who fear God and who work righteousness. It was the best move that could be made to connect these men with the institution. They would not rush their improvements so fast without the prospect of funds to carry on their enterprises. But this important instrumentality of God I knew would not always go crippled and feeble. God would look upon it with favor. And I am so glad that you have it in your heart to use the means that our heavenly Father has entrusted to you to help this branch of the work. I have heard recently of its being shabbily furnished with facilities in the household department. As the patronage increases, they must have additional bedding, dishes, stove-room, and so forth, and the best quality of all sorts of healthful food.4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 3

Those who have been in the habit of indulging the appetite with every luxury, if they come to the Retreat and find at their first meal a meager diet, the impression is made at once on their minds that the reports which they have heard concerning the Adventists living so poorly and starving themselves to death is true. One meal of short rations will do more to the discredit of the institution that all the influences in other directions that can be made to counteract it. If we ever expect to meet the people where they are and bring them up to a sensible health reform diet, we must not begin by setting before them a radical diet. There must be placed upon the table nicely cooked dishes and an abundance of good, palatable food, else those who think so much of what they eat will think they shall surely starve to death. We want to have good dishes nicely prepared. We want no pork, have a limited supply of flesh meats, such as beef, mutton, or poultry, and use these things with discretion. We must have eggs, cream, and milk to take the place of meats. We must be very well furnished in the eating line, or you will not be able to keep patients or visitors long. The inside of the house must be thoroughly fitted up [to] make patients and visitors comfortable. Then the outside needs to be attended to. The large main building, I thought, was to be raised last summer or a new building erected. There must be commodious rooms to accommodate those who come. Now if you can furnish means as a thank offering to God to make necessary improvements, I believe your means will be well invested and that you would never regret it. In regard to the new road, let the essential things be done first and then the road a second consideration.⁴*LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 4*

My brother, I have sent letters to Eld. Loughborough that I wish you to read. Our European missions are opening for laborers in every direction, and there are not means in the treasury to support men in the field. My heart aches day and night so that I can seldom sleep later than half-past three o'clock, thinking of the cities of Europe to be entered while the angels are holding the four winds for the message to go to all nations, tongues, and people. If you could only see how poor the people are in Europe you would know just what to do with some of your means. There is not a man in all the European field that has means to help us out when we get into a straight place, not one that we can call upon. It is not so in California; it is not so in the States. We are in need of means, and may the Lord teach you just how to apply yours wisely. Let there be no extravagant outlay of means, no elaborate plans made in any place to consume means unless positively necessary for the progress of the work and cause of God. This is a hard field because of its poverty, and those who embrace the truth have a hard test; starvation seems to stare them in the face. All in the office work for limited wages, not over six dollars per week and room and board themselves. This is considered good wages. But, my brother, I leave these things with you. I received a letter Dec. 19 stating that Brother Church has sold his ditch property. I felt like praising the Lord. Now do not invest this in earthly treasures. You have an opportunity to lay up your treasures in heaven. The end is near.

Christ is coming. We want to do with men, with voice, with means, the very work that God would have us do to advance His cause.4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 5

The work is nearing the close. Let us make haste to get our treasure before us into heaven. I hope you will read carefully the sketches of travels and the work in Europe. No one can tell or understand the real situation of this mission field unless he stays long enough to get the inside view of the matter and the workings of the people. Such efforts are made to suppress the truth by the ministers as you would hardly think credible. Brethren Ertzenberger and Conradi are making an effort here in Basel. They have a good attendance, and six have already embraced the truth. Many more are deeply interested. The ministers called upon one man thirteen times to get him to not attend the meetings. He told them that they were only listening to the Bible explained in a plain, clear light. Said the minister, You must not read the Bible and try to understand it. You must let the ministers explain the Scriptures. These were Protestant ministers. Is not this a ray of papacy?4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 6

Well, the Lord bless you and yours. I stop abruptly for I have already written twenty-nine pages today.4LtMs, Lt 61, 1886, par. 7

Formerly Undated Ms 81. Portions of this letter are published in 14MR 26-30; CTr 354. +NoteOne or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg:

Last Tuesday night at eight o'clock we reached our temporary home in Basel, after an absence of six weeks. We were glad to get home again. We visited at Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, spending about two weeks in each of these kingdoms.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 1

The Lord has favored me greatly; my health is improved and my heart is filled with gratitude to God. While in Orebro, Sweden, I was very nearly a cripple. I had to ride three nights and two days on the cars and steamer, and the seats in the cars were hard and without springs, and lying upon them seemed to have a bad effect upon my hip.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 2

But in Christiania I was able to walk around considerable, and W. C. White and I walked quite frequently to the King's palace and in his broad, extensive gardens. They are very beautiful grounds, but I let my mind dwell upon the purified new earth where all things would be made new, and there would be no more curse.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 3

How happy the thought that I was the daughter of God; member of the royal family; child of the heavenly King; heir to the pure and holy everlasting kingdom. I love to see everything that is beautiful in nature in this world, and I think I would be perfectly satisfied with this earth surrounded with the good things of God, if it were not blighted with the curse of sin. But we shall have a new heavens and a new earth. John saw this in holy vision, and he says, "I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, The tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them and they shall be His people, and God Himself will be with them and be their God." [Revelation 21:3.] Oh, blessed hope, glorious prospect! "I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be My son." [Verses 6, 7.] I am, I hope, waiting and watching for the appearing of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 4

Those who enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb will be those who are pure and holy here. We have no time now to talk of unbelief or to enshroud our souls in an atmosphere of doubts. Jesus loves us and wants to make us happy. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 5

I would so love to be in America again, but I do not care to go until my work here is done. If I know my own heart, it is to do the will of God to the very letter. I am willing to be a pilgrim and a stranger here, for I am seeking a city whose builder and maker is God. It is only for a little while that we shall have to work, and we want to do our work with diligence. We want to make sure of eternal life. We do not want to follow our inclinations or our pleasure, but just do the will of God and wait for His salvation and the final reward. I have peace and joy in my Saviour. I am looking to the great beyond; and if the Master says, "Well done" [Matthew 25:21], I shall be entirely satisfied. I love Jesus, I love to do His will. I ask not position or honor or ease or convenience. I want to labor together with God, practicing self-denial and self-sacrifice and be a partaker with Christ of His sufferings, that I may be a partaker with Him of His glory. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 6

I should much like to hear from you. We see the need in these institutions of being strong in the Lord and the power of His might. We see that it requires watchfulness and prayer to resist the enemy, and to be victorious. We are now seeking to draw near to God. We see the need of His grace. This morning we commenced to hold meeting here in Basel from half-past five to half-past six A.M. I speak about twenty minutes, and then others express their minds. These are called morning talks to help those who are

The Lord helped me to speak last Sabbath twice. We felt that we were as a church becoming indifferent, formal, prosy, and were not making that improvement that we should make, and we are seeking now to come up to a higher plain of action. The Lord will help us if we are striving earnestly to war the good warfare. Satan makes these institutions his special points of attack because he knows that if he can allure any one soul to unfaithfulness and slothfulness; he will through that one influence others. Oh, how my soul desires to see those who are connected with our publishing houses, our colleges, and health institutions, making improvement through the wise use of every power the Lord has given them. Every faculty belongs to God and is to be used to His glory. The worthier the Master, the more efficient service should we render as servants.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 8

Those who are connected with the work of God to benefit humanity should honor God by rendering to Him the best that they are capable of doing. Half-hearted selfish work He does not accept at all. He claims of us that every power He has lent us shall be put to active exercise, that it may receive strength and culture.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 9

In ancient time men were not allowed to lay on God's altar the maimed, the halt, the blind, and God is no better pleased with the poorest offerings today. He requires the best. If we offer to God weak and feeble intellect and ill-trained movements, faculties clogged and weakened by disuse, and then be unable to do good service, God cannot be pleased with such offerings. The workers for the Lord in special service were well-trained, picked men; so should those be who are connected with any department of the Lord's work. They exercise judiciously every faculty, rejoicing in the vigorous use of all their powers.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 10

We should study how to render to God the most perfect service by constantly seeking to reach perfection. In the day of God it will be seen that while many have carried heavy loads of care and weighty responsibility, that have cut short their usefulness and their life, this sacrifice was because there were so many who were not doing their work which God had left for them to do. There are so many slothful servants. If they had educated and trained their powers, they could have proved themselves to be trustworthy servants, true standard-bearers, and there would be no question about placing responsibility upon them. Heroic effort and patient endurance is necessary to be cultivated by every son and daughter of God, that when called into active service they will not faint or fail. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 11

No one would think of entering an army in time of war, hoping to have ease and self-indulgence and a real pleasant and profitable time. They know that hardships and privations are the liabilities; and as long as the war lasts, they will have coarse food and often short rations, long weary marches by day, enduring the heat of the burning sun, camping out at night in the open air, exposed to drenching rains and chilling frosts, venturing health and life itself as they stand as targets for the enemy. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 12

The Christian life is compared to the life of a soldier, and there can be no bribes presented of ease and self-indulgence. The idea that Christian soldiers are to be excused from the conflicts, experiencing no trials, having all temporal comforts to enjoy, and even the luxuries of life, is a farce. The Christian conflict is a battle and a march, calling for endurance. Difficult work has to be done, and [for all who] enlist as soldiers in Christ's army with these false ideas of pleasantness and ease, and then experience the trials, it often proves fatal to their Christianity. God does not present the reward to those whose whole life in this world has been one of self-indulgence and pleasure. 4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 13

It is time that men and women have some true idea of what is expected of a true soldier of the cross of Jesus. Those who serve under the blood-stained banner of the Prince Emmanuel are expected to do difficult work which will tax every power God has given them. They will have painful trials to endure for Christ's sake. They will have conflicts which rend the soul; but if they are faithful soldiers they will say with Paul, "These light afflictions which are but for a moment worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; looking not at the things which are seen but at the things which are unseen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal.” [2 Corinthians 4:17, 18.]4*LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 14*

An army would be demoralized if it did not learn to obey [the] orders of the captain. Each soldier must act in concert. Union is strength; without union, efforts are meaningless. Whatever excellent qualities a soldier may possess, he cannot be a safe, trustworthy soldier if he claims a right to act independently of his fellow comrades. This independent action cannot be maintained in the service of Christ. The soldiers of Jesus Christ must move in concert, else it were better that they do nothing. For if one speak one thing, and another present ideas and doctrines contrary to his fellow laborers, there is confusion, discord, and strife. Therefore the apostle charges that all who believe on Christ be of one mind, one faith, one judgment, each moving in concert, influencing one another beneficially, because they are both obedient to the precious truth of the Word of God, attached to one Saviour, the great Source of light and truth.4*LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 15*

Spasmodic, disunited efforts of professed Christians are like a span of horses, both strong and active, but yet they do not pull together; one tries to start the load, the other settles back in the harness, and both do not pull at the same time. God would have His workers pull together, not one pulling in one direction and another in opposite direction, for all such efforts are worse than wasted.4*LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 16*

Those who prefer to act alone are not good soldiers; they have some crookedness in their character which needs to be straightened. They may think themselves conscientious, but they do not the works of Christ. They cannot render efficient service. Their work will be of a character to draw apart when Christ’s prayer was that His disciples might be one as He was one with the Father.4*LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 17*

There are those who think it a virtue to be firm, set and determined in some peculiar ideas of their own plans and notions that lead them away from unity and concert of action. They take a firm, set will to be of Christian forming when it is in them a too-high appreciation of their own wisdom. They do not consider that there is a possibility of their being deceived in the interpretation of Scripture and their duty.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 18

Self-restraint is essential to be exercised by every Christian if he answers the prayer of Christ. He is not a good soldier who will not submit his own judgment and his own ideas to preserve unity of action. We have a noble Captain and every soldier must obey orders. The meekness and lowliness of Christ always leads to unity and hence to strength in united action.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 19

Write me how things are getting along at the sanitarium. Are Dr. Maxson and his wife put into practice? Are they obtaining increased experience by practical work? I think there is good material in them and they need to be carried up into practical work.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 20

Much love to Brother and Sister Hutchins, Brother and Sister Sawyer, and to all the brethren and sisters.4LtMs, Lt 62, 1886, par. 21

Brethren Having the Responsibilities of the Work of God

Basel, Switzerland

November 28, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 16MR 136-142.

Dear Brethren Who Have the Responsibilities of the Work of God:

I wish to present before you some things which burden my mind. From time to time, I have felt urged by the Spirit of the Lord to bear a testimony to our brethren in regard to the necessity of procuring the very best talent to work in our various institutions and in the numerous other departments of our cause. Those who are thus connected with the work must be trained men, men whom God can teach and whom He can honor as He did Daniel with wisdom and understanding. They must be thinking men, men who bear God's impress, and who are steadily progressing in holiness, in moral dignity, and in the excellence with which they labor. If they are growing men, if they possess reasoning minds and sanctified intelligence, if they listen to the voice of God and seek to catch every ray of light from heaven, they will, like the sun, pursue an undeviating course, and they will grow in wisdom and in favor with God.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 1

Heretofore the best ability has not been brought into the work of God. The Publishing Department is an important branch of that work, and all connected with it should feel that it is ordained of God and that all heaven is interested in it. Especially should those who have a voice in the management of the work be men of breadth of mind and thorough intelligence. They should not waste their Lord's money by thoughtlessness or lack of business tact, neither should they make the mistake of seeking to cheapen the work by introducing narrow plans and trusting the work to men of small ability.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 2

I have been repeatedly shown that all our institutions need to have a different class of minds connected with them. They need to be managed by men who are spiritually minded and who will not weave their own defective ideas and plans into their management. This work should not be left to men who will mingle the sacred with the common and who will regard the work of God as being upon about the same level as earthly things and to be managed in the same cheap way that they have been in the habit of managing their temporal affairs. Now until there can be those connected with our institutions who have breadth of mind and who can lay broad plans in harmony with the growth of the work and its exalted character, the tendency will be to cheapen everything that is undertaken, and God will be dishonored through it. Oh, that all who have responsibilities to bear in connection with the cause of God would come up into a higher, holier atmosphere, where every true Christian should be. Then both they and the work which they represent would be elevated and clothed with the sacred dignity that heaven has ordained, and they would command the respect of all connected with the work in any of its branches. There needs to be more thinking, more praying, men—men who will come up into the mount after God and view His glory and the dignity of the heavenly beings whom He has ordained to have charge of His work. Then they will, like Moses, follow the pattern given them in the mount, and there will not be a constant study to cheapen the work done for the God of heaven; but the mind will be constantly on the alert to connect with that work the very best talent.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 3

There have been among those employed in our institutions men who have turned from the true Counsellor and manifested marked defects of character by not conforming to the great principle of right which God has laid down in His Word. As the result, the greatest work ever committed to mortals has been marred with man's defective management, whereas, if heaven's rules and regulations had been made the foundation principle, perfection would have marked the work in all its departments*4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 4*

Those who are placed in leading positions in connection with our institutions should be men who have sufficient breadth of mind to respect those of cultivated intellect and who will recompense them proportionately to the responsibilities they bear. True, those who engage in the work of the Lord should not do so merely for the wages they receive, but to honor God, advance His cause, and to obtain imperishable riches. At the same time we should not expect that those who are capable of taking hold of a work that requires thought and painstaking effort, and of doing it with exactitude and thoroughness, should receive no greater compensation than the less skilful workman. A true estimate must be placed upon talent. Those who cannot appreciate true work and mental ability should not occupy the position of managers in our institutions, for their influence would tend to bind about the work, to erect barriers to its progress, and to bring it down to a low level.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par.

If our institutions are as prosperous as God designs they shall be, there must be more thoughtfulness and earnest prayer, mingled with unflagging zeal and skillful labor. To connect this class of laborers with the work may require a greater outlay of means. But while it is essential that economy be exercised in everything possible, it will be found that the efforts of some narrow minds to save means by employing those who will work cheap, and whose labor corresponds in character with the cheapness of their wages, will result in the end in their loss. The progress of the work will be retarded and the cause belittled. You may economize, brethren, as much as you please in your personal affairs, in building your houses, in arranging your clothing, in providing your food, and in your general expenses, but do not bring this economy to bear upon the work of God in such a way as to hinder men of ability and true moral worth from engaging in it.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 6

In the Olympic games to which the apostle Paul calls our attention, the racers were required to make most extensive preparations. For ten whole months and sometimes longer they were trained by different masters in physical exercises calculated to give strength and vigor to the body. They were restricted to that class of food which would keep the body in the most healthful condition, and the clothing was to be such as would leave every organ and muscle of the body untrammelled. Now if those who were to engage in running a race for earthly honor were obliged to submit themselves to such sever discipline in order to succeed, how much more necessary it is for those who are to engage in the work of the Lord to be thoroughly disciplined and prepared if they would succeed in that which they undertake. Their preparation should be as much more thorough, their earnestness and self-denying efforts as much greater, than those of the aspirants for worldly honors, as heavenly things are of more value than earthly. The mind as well as the muscles should be trained to put forth the most diligent, persevering effort. The road to success is not a smooth way over which we are borne in rail cars, but it is a rugged path, filled with obstacles which can be surmounted only by patient toil.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 7

It should be the constant study of all connected with our institutions to know how they can become more intelligent in the work in which they are engaged. None should rest in ease and inaction; but they should seek to elevate and ennoble themselves lest by their deficient understanding they should fail to realize the exalted character of the work and lower it to meet their own finite standard.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 8

My brethren, there has not been one half the care taken that there should have been to impress upon those who could labor in the cause the importance of qualifying themselves for the work. With their powers all undisciplined, they can but do bungling work; but if they can be trained by godly teachers and by the power of God, they will not only be able to do good work themselves, but will give the right mold to others that are connected with them.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 9

Our institutions are doing a great and final work for the world and should have in their employ the very best talent to be obtained anywhere. I was shown the great deficiency there is in keeping the accounts in the various departments of the cause. Bookkeeping is and ever will be an important part of our work, and those who have become intelligent in it are greatly needed in all our institutions and in all parts of the missionary work. This branch of the work has been neglected shamefully, and altogether too long. It is a shame to allow a work of such magnitude to be done in a defective, bungling manner. God wants as perfect work as it is possible for human beings to do. To do His work in a cheap, imperfect style is a dishonor to the sacred truth and its Author. We should feel that it is necessary for those who are to connect with the work to receive an education for it. Bookkeeping is a subject that needs to be studied in order that it may be done with correctness and dispatch and without worry and taxation.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 10

I was shown years ago that there will be dissension and a lack of harmony and unity of action among the workers in our institutions unless all are subject to the authority of God. He will stand as Commander if each will obey His directions; but there must also be a visible head who fears God. The Lord will never accept a careless, disorderly company of workers; neither will He undertake to lead forward and upward to noble heights and certain victories those who are self-willed and disobedient. The soul's progress means the Saviour's rule. The heart through which He diffuses His peace and joy and the blessed fruits of His love is the heart which becomes His temple and His throne. "Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." [John 15:14.] Our institutions are far beneath what God would have them, because those connected with them are not in fellowship with Him. They are not growing men. They are not ever learning of Jesus, therefore they are not becoming more and more efficient. If they would come close to Him and seek His help, He would walk with them and talk with them; He would be their Counsellor in all things and would grant to them as He did to Daniel heavenly wisdom and understanding.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 11

Years ago I was shown that our people were far behind in attaining that knowledge which would qualify them to take positions of trust in the cause. Every individual member of the church should put forth efforts to qualify himself to do work for the Master. To each has been appointed a work, according to his ability. Even now, at the eleventh hour, we should arouse to educate men of ability for the work, that they may, while occupying positions of trust themselves, be educating by precept and example all associated with them.4LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 12

There has been with some a selfish ambition to keep from others the knowledge they could have imparted. Others have not cared to tax themselves by educating any other workers. But this would have been the very best kind of work that they could have done for Jesus. "Ye are," says Christ, "the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.] For this reason we are to let our light shine to others.4LtMs, Lt 63,

1886, par. 13

I feel certain that if all the Lord has spoken in reference to these things had been heeded, our institutions would occupy today a higher, holier position. But men have chosen a low level. They have not sought with all their might to rise in mental, moral, and physical attainments. They have not felt that God required this of them, that Christ died that they might do this very work. As the result, they are far behind what they might be in intelligence and in the ability to think and plan. They could have added virtue to virtue, and strength to strength, and thus have become strong men in the Lord. But this they failed to do. Let each go to work now with a firm determination to rise. The present need of the cause is not more men, but more man.⁴*LtMs, Lt 63, 1886, par. 14*

1886

Portions of this letter are published in ChL 55; 11MR 300-301.

Dr. Kellogg

Dear Brother:

I feel somewhat anxious about you. I dreamed that you were telling me some of your trials, and I said, My brother, if you had possessed the same spirit that Moses had, you would have thorough workers with you. When Moses was much burdened, the Lord raised him up in Jethro an adviser and helper. The advice was taken and the burdens that had come upon him were divided with others and a twofold object was gained; Moses was relieved and he had a better chance for his life, and men were learning to bear responsibilities to qualify them to do work in positions of trust so that Israel should not learn to look to one man and trust in one man and think that no one could do any thing for them unless it came before that one man. Now it is hard I know to let go some responsibilities and give others an opportunity to get hold with all the advantages and counsel of your knowledge to help them. Unless this is done, they will ere long have to carry an unwieldy load without the instruction and counsel which now it is their privilege to have. 4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 1

I have been shown the true position and bearing of things. I have mentioned these things to you and if I mistake not have urged your attention upon these things. My husband might have been alive today if he had learned to do the very things I am urging you to do. You must never take the position that because you have an experience in your calling and practice that others have not, and for this reason every one must meet your exact measurement in all particulars before you can take them by your side, and teach them all you know yourself, and have them obtaining a practical knowledge of everything essential for the work, that you can leave the sanitarium. Visit Europe and California, and give instruction to our young institutions there.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 2

Dr. Gibbs is doing good work as near as I can learn, but you might help us in California in many suggestions about building, for buildings will have to be erected. And also get up a little more enthusiasm on health reform with your lectures, which would be a good thing. The change would help you, not only the change of work, but also the climate. We want your life spared to us as long as God may see fit. But it depends in a large measure upon yourself how long that shall be. Unload, unload, Dr. Kellogg. Give that active brain of yours some period of rest, else it will rest entirely, whether you choose it or not. I write to you as I would to my own sons. I tell you God would have you do much less in some directions and more in other directions. No one will tell you the things I do, and therefore I feel the burden upon me to tell you.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 3

When Moses complained before the Lord of the heaviness and increased burdens coming upon him, the Lord divided the burdens and placed them upon seventy men instead of one. Now, my brother, I was shown that if you continued to tax the brain with writing, with all the increasing responsibilities you will become nervous. You have so active an imagination that when the mind is worn, the brain nerve power forbids to do its work healthfully. You will be constantly inclined to be suspicious of your brethren without a cause, and you will suspect your very best friends that they are no longer your friends, but your enemies.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 4

Now, my brother, I write to you as one of my own sons. Just stop and consider that you are a mortal man with the infirmities and errors of mortality. All that you may think or do you must not regard as perfection, neither feel disappointed if others do not regard them as needing no amendment. There is not one of our leading men that is infallible to my view. You may view things from one standpoint, they from another. You have been wonderfully successful in your career in doing a special work. God has raised you up as a man of opportunity to do this work. But if at any time you take the credit or glory to yourself, then the Lord will not work by you or through you. Whatever you have done that is good has been because the Lord has blessed your efforts. Whatever you may do will be because the Lord will still bless your efforts. You are His instrument to be handled by His divine power. Of yourself you can do nothing.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 5

All your powers, all your capabilities are from God. Then clothe yourself with humility. Walk in dependence and faith in God, putting no confidence in yourself alone without the aid of God. All your capability of usefulness is the intrusted gift of God, talents to be put to the highest service, but not to be abused by overuse and thereby weakened and become crippled. Our heavenly Father is not ignorant of your cares, your burdens, and if He sends you cautions and instructions as He surely will by His servants, do not turn from them and choose your own way, although that may appear right unto yourself. There is no one of God's servants infallible. You are liable to errors and mistakes as other men, and you need to be corrected. It will not answer for you to walk alone, lest your feet stumble upon the dark mountain of unbelief.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 6

I was so rejoiced to read your letter that you were drawing nigh to God, because the promise is, "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you," and when Jesus comes nigh to us, He says, "Peace be unto you." [James 4:8; John 20:19.] The Lord is our helper, the Lord is our shield; just trust in Him and believe in Him. Unless His arm supports you, you will quickly fall. We have much to learn yet in the school of Christ that we have not learned, and we shall not cease to learn when we exchange earth for heaven. Our religion must have solid rock for our foundation. The truth must be firmly believed and the dependence be wholly upon God.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 7

How thankful I felt when I read from your pen which traced the lines that you were enjoying more of the Spirit of God. No one would appreciate the blessing of God daily [more] than yourself. No one could estimate the knowledge of sins forgiven and the reconciled countenance of your Redeemer more than yourself; and this precious evidence and light from above will make you constantly a channel of light, a source of blessing to those with whom you are brought in contact.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 8

I am so desirous that you should come off conqueror, that you should have the eternal weight of glory. I want you to live, not for this life, but for the future immortal life. You have transmitted to you traits of character that are not the most hopeful, or helpful to you in the religious life, but these may be overcome. Now is our time to fit for eternity. You have a battle to fight with your own individual temptations and your marked traits of character which will seek constantly for the supremacy.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 9

I want to see you again and to see you far in advance in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. If you pursue a religious life undeterred by the difficulties which beset you, you will be gaining victories over self every day. If you work for the Master from principle, emptying yourself of selfishness in the matter, God will make a record of this in His books. If you work in darkness that enshrouds you as well as in the light, in gloom which sometimes besets the soul as well as in the sunshine, you will have a firm, solid experience which will stand the test of trial. Your feelings and imaginings will be often against you, exaggerated by trivial circumstances that the enemy takes advantage of. But if you have treasured up in your heart and incorporated in your being the truth as it is in Jesus, settled and grounded so that no temptation or argument can induce you to leave Christ and His wisdom out of your life, you cannot fail as you are situated from having a masterly influence over all with whom you are connected, that they shall not live for themselves, but for Him who gave His life for them.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 10

You will in all your undertakings and associations recognize an everpresent spectator who is cognizant of every act and hears every word and is acquainted even with the desires and intents and purposes of the heart and being as in the sight of God. Here day by [day] the soul becomes familiar with looking to God, trusting in God, relying upon God, and angels of God will be round about; and you, living under the tremendous realities of the unseen, will have a knowledge of the existence and attributes of God, and you can approach Him with the endearing name as Father.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 11

Oh, make God your help! Make God your strength. The little time left us here, put the very best and perfect material into the character building. Faith must be cultivated, then you will feel that God never designed that you carry your responsibilities alone. You will feel that you are beset with angels and a loving God is with you, that you are the object of His wise and loving care; that you by faith can draw from His infinite resources, and that all events are in His hands, and that you are working out His plans. He has power to do what He will. May the Lord bless you and comfort you and make you strong in His strength.4LtMs, Lt 64, 1886, par. 12

Chapman, Sister

NP

December 31, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 5T 542-549.

Dear Sister:

My heart is drawn out in love and sympathy for you, because your mistaken ideas have created a state of things which has brought about the sure results, and the end is not yet. You have not seen the danger of your associating so freely with your relatives. They have had far greater influence to mold you and yours than you have had to mold them. Because they are your relatives makes them none the less dangerous and makes them no less transgressors of God's holy law. Their course is fully as offensive to God as any others who refuse light and truth and will not listen to any evidence. Injurious impressions have been made upon your mind and influenced your course of action. I have sought most earnestly to treat on general principles when you have been present in order to meet your case, and I think you have felt over the matter for the time being. I have not felt urged to make to you personal appeals until the Spirit of the Lord should impress my mind upon the point. Well this time has come. God has made every provision to bring salvation within our reach. He will not thrust it upon us against our consent. He has laid down conditions in His Word, and we are to diligently, interestedly, with heart and mind set to the task of finding out the condition lest we shall make some mistake in this matter and not secure our title to the mansions above.⁴*LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 1*

We cannot serve God and love the world. We cannot center our affections on worldly relatives who have no desire for truth. We may seek in every way while associated with them to let our light shine to them. Our words, our sentiments, our deportment, our customs and practices should not in any sense be molded by their ideas and customs. We are to show forth the truth in all our relation with them.

If we cannot do this, the less association we have with them the less harm it will be to our spirituality. We have a heaven to win, and it is on conditions of obedience; and if we place ourselves in right positions and unite in drawing about us associates whose influence has a tendency to make us forgetful of the high claims the Lord has upon us, we invite temptation, and we become weak in moral power to resist temptation. We partake of the spirit and cherish the ideas of those pleasant, intelligent good friends, and we come to place sacred and eternal things below the ideas of our good friends. We are in short becoming leavened just as the enemy of righteousness designed we should be. And the young brought under these influences are more affected than those older. Everything leaves its impress upon the minds of the young—the countenance they look upon, the voices they hear, the places they visit, the company they keep, the books they read. It is impossible to overestimate the importance for this world and the next what associations we choose for ourselves and more especially for our children. The first years of youth are of more value than any after period.⁴*LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 2*

Now advances will be made decidedly in a right or wrong direction. There are any amount of frivolous attainments that may be made and any amount of solid, valuable knowledge in practical life in becoming acquainted with God. Much useful knowledge may be gained in the first fifteen years of one's life in solid education, in knowledge how to strengthen every faculty that God has given them in trust. The most important and essential for our present and eternal good is the knowledge of divine truth revealed in the Word of God. We are living in a period when everything that is false and superficial is exalted above the real and natural and enduring. The mind must be kept free, not encumbered with trashy stories that have no influence to strengthen the ideas or give power to memory or mental talents. Keep the mind free from everything that will bias it in the wrong direction. The thoughts will be just of that character as the food we provide for them. A knowledge of the true guide, the Word of God is essential for our salvation. The time devoted in needless, little unimportant things would be strengthened in contemplating the wonderful mysteries of the plan of salvation, and to bend every God-given power to know the ways of the Lord, that our feet may not stumble upon the dark mountain of unbelief or stray from the path of holiness cast up through infinite sacrifice for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in. The strength of intellect, the substantial knowledge gained in this are acquisitions which the gold of Ophir could not buy. The price of it is above gold and silver. It is this kind of education that the young generally do not choose. They will urge their wants and their likes and dislikes and their preferences and inclinations; but if the parents have correct views of God, of the truth, of the influences of associations, they will feel their God-given responsibility to take the lines of control and firmly guide the inexperienced youth in the right way, knowing that which they sow they will also reap. 4Lts, Lt 65, 1886, par. 3

Could my voice reach the parents all through the land, I would warn them not to yield to the desires of their children to choose their companions or associates. Little do parents study and little do they consider that injurious impressions are far more easily made upon the minds of the young than are divine impressions, for Satan is constantly at work to efface the right ideas and correct principles by urging in false ideas and erroneous principles. Therefore the associations should be the most favorable for the growth of faith and the establishment of the heart in the truth revealed in the Word of God. If children are placed where the conversation is upon unimportant, earthly things, their minds come to the same level. If they see the principles of piety are slurred at and our faith disrespected and belittled, and sly objections to the truth are dropped in their hearing, these things fasten upon the mind and are molding the character. If they fill their minds with stories, be they fictitious or true, they occupy the room which should be given to substantial reading and scientific studies. What havoc with the mind has this appetite for reading brought about; how it has cut up the very roots of sincerity of principle and true godliness which lie at the foundation of the formation of a symmetrical character. It is like a slow poison taken into the physical system, and which sooner or later will reveal its bitter fruits. The mark is made not on sand, but on enduring rock. The associations formed are of a character to withdraw them from every influence that would interfere with or break up their health-destroying habits. They are impatient if they cannot have their own way. The advice of Christians is distasteful. They are traveling the road to hell, and any influence which seeks to lead them in an opposite direction stirs the worst impulses of the human heart. They are creatures of circumstances. The weaving into their life these early ties unfavorable to religious impressions powerfully controls every subsequent step.⁴*LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 4*

With the youth, the company they keep, the principles which they adopt, the habits they form will settle the question of their usefulness here and their future eternal interest with a certainty that is infallible. Let the youth be placed in the most favorable circumstances possible. Let the parents not consent and concede to the inclinations of the children, but let them go on in the plain path of duty to which God has called them, restraining, denying with kindness yet with firmness and determination the wrong desires, and lead with earnest, prayerful, persevering effort the steps of their children not in the path of the world, but away from the world upward to heaven. Children should not be left to drift into whichever way they are inclined, and go into avenues which lead away from the right path and which are open on every side. None are in as great danger as those who apprehend no danger and are impatient to words of caution and counsel. It is because I feel your danger, my sister, that I write you now as I do. While there may be many to flatter you and enjoy your hospitality without seeking to impart a blessing in right counsel, I must warn you of unseen danger which will imperil your present and eternal happiness. We are approaching stormy times, and we want to study the true foundations of our faith. We want to search the law book to see if our title to the immortal inheritance is without a flaw.⁴*LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 5*

Our people have been regarded as too insignificant to be worthy of notice, but a change will come; the movements are now being made. The Christian world is now making movements which will necessarily bring the commandment-keeping people of God to notice. There is a daily suppression of God's truth for the theories and false doctrines of human origin. There are plans and movements being set on foot to enslave the consciences of those who would be loyal to God. The law-making powers will be against God's commandment-keeping people. Every soul will be tested. Oh, that we would as a people be wise for ourselves and by precept and example impart that wisdom to our children. Every position of our faith will be searched into; and if we are not thorough Bible students, established, strengthened, settled, the wisdom of the world's great men will be too much for us. The world is busy, anxious, and devoted. All are in the pursuit of some course that God has no part in. Evil is eagerly pursued as though it were righteousness, error as though it were truth, and sin as though it were holiness. Darkness is thickening, covering the earth, and gross darkness the people, and shall God's peculiar people at such a time as this be asleep? Shall those who hold the truth be silent as if paralyzed?4LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 6

Infidels declare that if they believed what Christians profess to believe, they would be far more in earnest than they. If we believe that the end of all things is at hand, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Every soul who believes the truth will have corresponding works. They will be earnest, solemn, and unwearied in their efforts in seeking to win souls to Christ. If the truth is first planted deep in their own souls, then they will seek to have it planted in the hearts of others. The truth is kept altogether in the outer court, sister. Bring it in, plant it in the heart, and let it control the life. The Word of God should be studied and obeyed, then the heart will find peace and rest and joy. The aspirations will be for heavenly things, but when truth is kept apart from the life, in the outer court, cold and shivering, the heart is not warmed with the glowing fire of God's goodness.4LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 7

The religion of Jesus is by many reserved for certain days, certain occasions, laid aside and neglected. The abiding principle of truth is not merely for a few hours on the Sabbath or for a few days of charity, but it is to be brought into the heart, refining, sanctifying the character. If there is a moment when man is safe without the special light and strength from heaven, then he may dispense with the truth of God which should be his counselor and guide. God's pure, holy Word must be a controlling power upon the life. The Bible is giving forth its lessons to us if we will take them to heart. Abraham was in favor with God. The Lord said, I know Abraham that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment. Abraham was honored of God because he would cultivate home religion and cause the fear of the Lord to circulate through his tent. It is God that speaks and says, "I know him, that he will command." [Genesis 18:19.] There will be no betraying of sacred trust on his part, no yielding to any but one guide. There is a law. Abraham will keep it. No blind affection will cloud his sense of right and interfere between God and the souls of his children. That kind of indulgence which is the veriest cruelty will not lead Abraham astray. Parents and children are God's property, to be ruled by Him. By combined affection and the influence of authority, Abraham ruled his house. God's Word has given us our rules for guidance. These rules form the standard from which there can be no swerving, if we keep the way of the Lord. God's will must be paramount. The question for us to ask is not what have others done, what will my relatives think, or what will they say of me if I pursue this course, but what has God said? Parent nor child can prosper in any course excepting in the way of the Lord. 4LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 8

I am thankful that you have noble sons who are seeking to walk in the ways of the Lord, and I hope you will discern more clearly in path of duty in respect to your associations and the associations of your children, and this will determine whether you grow spiritually or be dwarfed in the religious life. Obedience to the stern dictates of conscientious convictions must be met even though it may be difficult, yet you gain moral power. Duties are often crosses which we must lift. Prayer and praise to God are not always offered without a struggle. Self-denial and the cross-bearing lie directly in paths that we must travel if we reach the gates of the city of God. Jesus has led the way, will we follow? We must be workers together with God; not alone in our own salvation, but in doing all we can for the salvation of others. Thus we become partners in the great plan of redemption and will be sharers in the eternal weight of glory by and by. God calls upon you to press your way to the mark of the prize of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus. [Philippians 3:14.] May the Lord bless you is my prayer. But remember if united with Christ you are a co-worker with Christ. Our piety and religious duties will become narrowed down to our own interest unless we are partakers of the Spirit of Christ daily. Interest for the souls of others is calculated to give breadth and depth and stability to Christian character. 4LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 9

The Lord is coming. We are nearing home, and we want to take large inspirations of the heavenly atmosphere, then we will become identified with the Saviour in all His plans. We shall be elevated and shall be able to elevate others, and shall be efficient in good works. I love you, and this is why I have written so largely.⁴*LtMs, Lt 65, 1886, par. 10*

My Brother Laborers at Lausanne:

I hope that you will be constantly learning in the school of Christ, that you may be better and better prepared to engage in the great, the solemn work for this time, that of presenting the truth to the world. You must not mingle self in your labors; keep self out of sight, and work in humility and with wisdom. Make the most of your opportunities, and harmonize with your fellow workers. Do not say, This is my field in which I am to work, I do not want you to come into my field. This is a wrong course to pursue. Just do your work with fidelity. Sow beside all waters. Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. The Lord has not appointed to any one man a special territory in which to work; for in every effort, in every place where the truth is introduced, there is need of different minds, different gifts, different plans and methods of labor being united. All should make it a point to counsel together, to pray together. Christ says, "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven." [Matthew 18:19.]4LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 1

No one worker has all the wisdom that is needed. There should be a comparing of plans, a counseling together. No one man should think himself sufficient to manage an interest in any place without helpers. One man may have tact in one direction, but may be a decided failure upon some essential points. This makes his work imperfect. He needs the tact of another man's mind and gift to blend with his efforts. All should be perfectly harmonious in the work. If they can work with only those who see just as they do and follow just their plans, then they will make a failure. The work will be defective because none of these laborers have learned the lessons in the school of Christ that makes them able to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. All should be constantly improving. They should lay hold of every opportunity and make the most of every privilege until they become better fitted for their great and solemn work.⁴*LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 2*

But God has set in the church different gifts. These are all precious in their place, and all are to act a part in the perfecting of the saints. "And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that henceforth we be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."⁴*[Ephesians 4:11-16.]LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 3*

This is God's order, and men must labor according to His rules and arrangement if they would meet with success. God will accept only those efforts that are made willingly and with humble hearts, without the trait of personal feelings or selfishness. There should be no habit of indolence with the true worker. I do not wish these words to be any encouragement to Bro. Daniel Bourdeau, for he has been several times reprov'd for writing too much and talking too loud, too frequently, and at too great length. He has been warn'd not to commence an effort alone, for it would not be in God's order. It would not only be a tax to his strength, but would not be the best for the people. One man's ways and manner of address may seem to himself to be quite perfect, when they are far from it. The Lord does not lay these extra burdens on our brother, for God is a God of mercy, and He does not willingly grieve or afflict the children of men.⁴*LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 4*

Had Eld. Andrews received the advice and counsel given him of God in regard to his laboring wisely, and with reference to his talking and dwelling upon himself, not allowing his feelings and imagination to be a controlling power, he would have been alive today. He imagined that his brethren were his enemies and that if he died they would be responsible. He was not right in this. He violated the laws of life and health and died prematurely.4LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 5

Brother Daniel is not pursuing the right course. He refuses to rest. He gives nature no chance to recuperate, and in the place of warnings and statements of the result physically and mentally of such a course, he continues to plan as in the effort at Geneva for a great amount of work to be done by himself. He is committing suicide. We cannot sanction such a course in any of the workers. But while Bro. Daniel is working his brain too much, there is danger of some erring on the other hand and doing too little. Now, my brethren, the Lord wants you to preserve your health. Do not rob yourselves of sleep when it is possible to rest, for it is not God's will to work a miracle to prevent the sure result of a wrong course pursued healthwise. He who robs himself of sleep will surely pay the penalty. Every one of the workers must bear in mind that he is mortal, and that he must work intelligently, rest intelligently, and take good care of his own body, that he may render to God perfect service. Many of our workers have died because they do not work as God would have them, carefully regarding the laws of life and health.4LtMs, Lt 66, 1886, par. 6

Dear Brother Laborers at Lausanne:

I feel so earnest that something should be done in Switzerland. I have felt that the enemy would withstand every effort made to let the light in upon the people. He will dispute every inch of ground. We must keep the armor on, and in the name of Jesus press back this determined, powerful foe. We must do what we can and then leave the result wholly with Him whom we love and whom we serve. He loves souls more than we are capable of loving them. And when we place ourselves in right relation to God, we shall be channels of light.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 1

Jesus would have His workers cultivate the graces that dwell so richly in Himself, that they may be able to win souls. All harshness must be put away. These abrupt manners, which are so natural to some, must be softened, subdued, and all the rough edges taken away. "He that winneth souls is wise." [Proverbs 11:30.] I am very desirous that the young men connected with the laborers at Lausanne should have the molding influence of the Holy Spirit, that they may start in right and feel the necessity of being thoughtful, courteous, tenderhearted, and pitiful.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 2

I hope that they will all be constantly learning in the school of Christ, that they may become better and better prepared to engage in the great, solemn work for this time—that of presenting the truth to the world. You must not mingle self in your labors; keep self out of sight, and work in humility and with wisdom. Make the most of your opportunities, and labor in harmony with your fellow workers. Do not say, either by word or action, "This is my field of labor. I do not care to have you enter it." Just do your own work with fidelity. The Lord has not appointed to any one man a special territory in which he is to do all the work alone; for where the truth is introduced, there is need that different minds, different gifts, different plans and methods of labor be united. Christ says: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven." [Matthew 18:19.] No one worker has all the wisdom that is needed in introducing the truth in a new place. There should be a comparing of plans, praying and counseling together. One man may have tact in one direction, but be a decided failure in others, even in some essential points; and hence his work is imperfect. He needs another man's gifts to blend with his.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 3

Let not any of the workers think that they of themselves can do anything; Christ must work with their efforts. Jesus must abide in their hearts by faith. They must have a sense of their weakness in order to feel their need of the help that Jesus alone can impart. They must do what they can, and with fidelity, and then trust Jesus to do the rest. Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increase. The Lord knows our weakness, and He can impart to us strength and make us His polished instruments; but we must work with His efforts; we must seek to reach the highest standard of perfection, to cultivate every faculty, that all may be used to the glory of God.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 4

I feel deeply the need of our workers cultivating personal piety, having their spirit, their thoughts, and their words under subjection to Christ. There should be, on the one hand, no shirking of responsibility, and on the other, no laboring for supremacy, but a most devoted zeal in every one, to do his best. The Lord will not be pleased to have one carry a heavy load and another go lightly loaded. He would not have one eased and another burdened.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 5

God has set different gifts in the church. Each is precious in its place, and all are to act a part in the perfecting of the saints. Ephesians 4:11-16.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 6

This is God's order, and men must labor according to His rules and arrangements, if they would be successful. God will accept only those efforts that are made willingly and with humble hearts, without the taint of personal jealousies or selfishness. No true worker should be guilty of habits of indolence.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 7

I do not wish these words to be any encouragement to Bro. [D. T. Bourdeau], for while others are doing too little, he is doing too much brainwork. He has been reprov'd several times for this. He has been warn'd not to commence an effort alone; for it would not be in God's order. It would not only tax his strength, but would be injurious to the people. A man's ways and his manner of address may seem to himself to be quite perfect, when in the opinion of others, they are far from good. The Lord does not lay these extra burdens on our brother, for He is a God of mercy and does not willingly grieve or afflict the children of men.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 8

Had [Eld. J. N. Andrews] acted upon the counsel given him of God in regard to laboring wisely, and with reference to his talking so much about himself, allowing his feelings and imaginations to control him, he would have been alive today. He imagined that his brethren were his enemies, and that if he died, they would be responsible. He was not right in this. He violated the laws of life and health and died before his time. Disregard of the laws of life and health has resulted in the death of many of our workers.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 9

Brother [D. T. Bourdeau] is not pursuing the right course. He refuses to rest, giving nature no chance to recuperate; and in the face of warnings as to the result of such a course, both physically and mentally, he continues to plan, as in the effort at [Geneva], to do a great amount of work himself. He is virtually committing suicide. We cannot sanction such a course in any of our workers.4LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 10

Now, my brethren, the Lord wants you to preserve your health. Do not rob yourselves of sleep when it is possible to rest; for it is not God's way to work a miracle to prevent the sure result of a wrong course. He who robs himself of sleep will surely pay the penalty. Every one of the workers must bear in mind that he is mortal, and that he must work intelligently, rest intelligently, and take good care of his own body, that he may render to God perfect service. May the

Lord imbue the workers in Lausanne with His own spirit of wisdom and give them tact and skill to win souls to Jesus.⁴*LtMs, Lt 66a, 1886, par. 11*

Dear Brother and Sister Bourdeau:

I am happy to write to you that I am improving. I think I shall recover from this cold without serious difficulty. The baths I enjoyed in Geneva [have] done me great good.4LtMs, Lt 68, 1886, par. 1

I spoke to the church in this place yesterday because Brother Whitney was much afflicted with lameness. It wearied me more than usual, but this was because of this cold. Brother Ertzenberger came to Basel sick. He had chills and fever. Willie has been giving him treatment, and the report yesterday was that he is better. He will give him treatment I think today. I hope he will not be kept long from his field of labor. I feel so earnest that something shall be done in Switzerland. I felt that the enemy would withstand every effort made to let light in upon the people. He will dispute every inch of ground. We must keep the armor on and press back in the name of Jesus this determined, powerful foe. But Christ is our only helper. I feel deeply the need of our workers cultivating personal piety, having their spirit, their thoughts and words under subjection to Christ. There should be no shirking responsibilities, no laboring for supremacy, but a most devoted zeal to do each one his very best. And the Lord will not be pleased to have one carry the heavy load and another go lightloaded. He would not have one eased and another burdened. It is your privilege, my brother, to unload and to seek to be rested that you may gather back vigor that has been lost through overwork and overanxiety. Christ says, My peace I give unto you [John 14:27]; this is the element you want to come in to your life, the peace and rest that is in Jesus. You want to repose in God, reap the comforts derived from the trustful faith in Jesus. Now, my dear brother, may the Lord imbue you with His Spirit. May the atmosphere around your soul be heavenly and your meditations of Jesus' love and mercy, purity and excellence, be strength to your soul, vigor to your faith and wisdom, sanctification, and righteousness. O then how precious will be your experience. "If ye abide in Me and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples. As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you. Continue ye in My love. These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." [John 15:7-11.] Then let not a restless, confused spirit be cherished.⁴*LtMs, Lt 68, 1886, par.* 4

Jesus wants us to be happy, trustful, peaceful. This is genuine faith. Let this mind dwell in you which was always in Christ Jesus. Be cheerful, reflect light. Let the beams of Christ's righteousness dispel all gloom and be all light in the Lord.4LtMs, Lt 68, 1886, par. 5

Brethren in New York

Basel, Switzerland

December 27, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in PH039 3-13.

Dear Brethren in New York:

Several times it has been shown me that you are living far beneath your privileges you do not meet or appreciate your responsibilities. God has given you great light and precious opportunities to know His will and to do good. He who neglects these does harm to himself as well as to others connected with Him. It is not a praiseworthy act to decline responsibility; it is a great dishonor to your Maker, who has entrusted you with talents of means and of influence which would constitute you channels of light to the world if you were faithful to your trust. All your powers and all the means which God has lent you are to be put to wise improvement; because you are trading with intrusted capital. You are not your own, you are bought with a price.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 1

No one should live merely to get gain to himself. The world's Redeemer has said: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also;" but, "lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven," in "bags which wax not old." [Matthew 6:19-21; Luke 12:33.] How can this be done? By constantly regarding your property as the Lord's and by anxiously watching, like faithful stewards of God, to see what you can do in any direction to help advance His cause.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 2

This is God's work, and you are His servants, intrusted with His goods. If you use your means for your own personal benefit, rather than for the advancement of God's work, you are using that which is the Lord's in a selfish, worldly manner, and are withholding from His cause that which was committed to you for its support. Now the reason why the funds in the treasury are so low is that those whom God has made stewards of His means are unfaithful to their trust.

God's money is used for selfish purposes, and the means which the cause of God needs to advance His work in the earth is kept flowing in a worldly channel.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 3

It has been presented to me that you are not doing what God has a right to expect of you in advancing His cause. All the means is the Lord's; why do you withhold from Him that which is His own? You are not doing one-hundredth part of what you ought to do. You have so little faith that God cannot do much for you. Small faith and narrow plans are circumscribing the work in your state. God will work for us just in accordance to our faith.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 4

At the slow rate our people in many states are advancing, it will take a millennium to warn the world. Angels are holding the four winds, that they may not blow until the world has been warned and a people have decided for the truth and have been converted. The power, influence, and means of those who are truly converted will flow in the missionary channel. Those who put out money in this way to the exchangers may present to the Master their talents doubled in the ingathering of souls to Christ. Some wealthy farmers act as if they thought that in a day of judgment the Lord will only require of them to present to Him improved, enriched farms, with building added to building. If the acres of their farms and their buildings were so many precious souls saved to Christ, then He could say to them, "Well done, good and faithful servants." [Matthew 25:23.] But none can take their improved farms into heaven.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 5

The fires of the last day will consume them. If you invest your talents in means in these earthly treasures, your heart will be on them, you will be anxious to improve them, and your tact and skill will be cultivated to serve earthly purposes, instead of being directed to heavenly things.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 6

Some of you have looked upon the means invested in larger plans to extend the work of God as so much capital lost, which would bring no return. This is a great mistake. While the heart is on earthly treasures, it can have no true estimate of heavenly things. The testimonies of such have been heard in your meetings, continually cautioning against advanced moves which would call for means to help carry the light to the world. They are so buried up in earthly things that they have no right estimate of eternal riches and would not prize heaven if it were given them. Their tastes, their pursuits, their inclinations have all been of a worldly character. They are fully occupied just as Satan wants them to be, and the heavenly is eclipsed by the earthly.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 7

There are many who work as though their salvation depended upon their wonderful economy in investing means in the cause of God, and as though the less money they invested in plans and efforts to broaden and to build up His work, the more virtue they would possess. Do these men know that they are enveloped in selfishness? Do they know that they are robbing God every day of their lives? Do they know that they are devoting their time, their physical and mental talents in laying upon the foundation wood, hay, and stubble? All the improvements of years will be consumed by the fires of the last day; and if they themselves are saved, it will be only as by fire. Their whole lifework will be in ashes. The reward that they might have gained had they been faithful stewards is eternally forfeited; and the host of souls that they might have saved are lost, and all because of their neglect.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 8

God has given them all their powers to see whether they will prove worthy to be intrusted with eternal riches. We are required to develop our abilities by exercise until they have reached the highest standard in doing—your farming? your building? No, but God's work, as stewards of His grace. All who take God's intrusted talents, and employ them for selfish, worldly purposes, and neglect His work in winning souls to Christ will be counted unfaithful servants.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 9

It is a fearful thing to take the powers of the body and mind, which are given to be employed as a blessing to the world, and use them in such a way that God is not honored. It is also a fearful thing to fold up the talent in a napkin and hide it in the earth; for God will demand its return with usury. All these talents must be employed to bring glory to the Giver.4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 10

God calls upon you who have the precious light of truth no longer to devote your time and talents to selfish purposes, but to accept your

God-given responsibilities, and take up your cross, denying yourselves, that you may be disciples of Christ. God did not design that you should devote brain, bone, and muscle to earthly employments; He intended that you should improve your talents, that you might fill some grand and noble place in His plans and in doing His work. Selfish thoughts and feelings have withered up the nobler aspirations of your souls. You are as destitute of the Spirit of God as were the hills of Gilboa of dew or rain. Grand opportunities are being lost, and you are shriveled and dying, because you make no use of your talents. You cannot fulfil your solemn responsibilities toward God unless you are transformed in character. Through your lack of spirituality, your unconscious influence is saying to those around you, "My Lord delayeth His coming." [Matthew 24:48.] You are planting and building, and your works testify that you are not looking and watching and waiting for your Lord's appearing. You will reveal to the world all the faith you have. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 11

How will you who are blessed with so great light, such high and sacred privileges, render an account to God of why you have been so remiss in fulfilling life's grand work? God lays the responsibility upon you of educating and training all your powers to do His work with an efficiency that shall earn for you the "Well done, good and faithful servant." Wherein does this faithfulness consist?—in your withdrawing your interests, your time, your influence from the work of God, and from seeking to send the truth to every city and village in your state, and devoting all your powers to earthly, selfish purposes? No, the blessing will be pronounced upon those who unite with Christ in doing His work. "We are laborers together with God." [1 Corinthians 3:9.] 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 12

You are not compelled to go to heathen lands. There are souls right within your own borders that are just as precious in the sight of God as your own. And how few, very few, workers are employed in giving the message of warning in the large cities! What excuse will you offer for this terrible neglect of your God-given responsibilities? These souls, perishing within your reach, will confront you in the day of judgment. You worshiped your farms and your money; you prided yourselves upon your wisdom as financiers in worldly affairs; but how much does all this weigh with God? He said to the rich man, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee. Then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" [Luke 12:20.] Now the application, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." [Verse 21.] The Lord has given you light in testimonies of warning, reproof, and counsel, but you do little in accordance with the light given. The words of Christ are explicit, but you are not doers of His words. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." [Luke 16:13.]4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 13

Some do not realize that their influence reaches into eternity. In every life there are opportunities to accomplish much good. We are leaving impressions upon those around us either for good or for evil; we are directing the current of their thoughts into a heavenly channel, or in an earthly direction. As preachers to the world, we bear testimony in works, in words, and in deportment as to whether or not we believe the truth. By our works we are either confirming or denying our profession of faith. "By their fruits ye shall know them." [Matthew 7:20.]4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 14

Are you, my brethren, testifying to the world that you are preparing to move to a better country? Do your works show that you are waiting for your Lord? Is the heavenly country the theme of your conversation? Do you act in the presence of the world as though you cared more for their souls than for your cattle, your houses, and your lands? Do you remember that Christ sacrificed His majesty, His honor, and His glory to bring salvation within your reach, and within the reach of every son and daughter of Adam? "He for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich." [2 Corinthians 8:9.] When He ascended on high, He left His work to be carried forward by His followers, as He gave the example in His self-sacrificing life. Do you follow his example? Does your own business seem of greater importance than the precious souls Jesus came to save? O that I could open the eyes that Satan has blinded! O that pen and voice could have an influence to arouse you from paralysis! O that you might see that you are doing nothing, while all Heaven is intensely active in preparing a people to stand in the great day of God!4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 15

Study the message to the Laodicean church; for it applies to many in New York. You need to buy of Christ gold, white raiment, and eyesalve. You need to be zealous, and repent. Please consider:

zealous does not mean a few feeble prayers and half-hearted confessions; it means an earnest, determined effort to conquer worldly, selfish love, and to be consecrated, devoted Christians, shedding a tender warmth and love wherever you may be. You must awake and obtain heart-culture, or you will fail of heaven. Christ is coming. Are you ready? Are you waiting? Are you loving His appearing? What wondrous love Christ has shown for us! And He said, "Love one another, as I have loved you." [John 13:34.] 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 16

You need purity, truth, helpfulness, and the love of Christ, which sanctifies the heart. You must be full of Christ, and then you will estimate worldly things as God estimates them; and when at work upon your farms or engaged in your business vocations, you will not be separating your souls from God; because you will labor with the true purpose, recognizing God as the owner of all you possess, and will seek wisdom to use His goods in advancing His cause. You should not be slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. If this spirit actuates you, the lives of others will be blessed through your influence; your mind will be on heavenly things, and you will diffuse light to all around you. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 17

To live a true Christian life will cost thoughtfulness, searching of the Scriptures, and most earnest, persevering prayer. It will not be prayer without point and purpose, but it will be intercession of a heart burdened for poor sinners out of Christ and longing to do service for Jesus in personal effort for the salvation of souls. Christ made great sacrifices for these souls. Many of you who have been in the truth for years have not advanced in spiritual and divine life, because worldly business has been exalted above the heavenly. The work of God ever calls for self-sacrificing men, and every soul who has the knowledge of the truth is under obligation to communicate the light to others, cultivating all the graces of the Spirit, that he may do his work to God's acceptance. Your lifeless, heartless efforts are not acceptable to God. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 18

There is no excuse for your doing so little for Jesus when He has done so much for you. God says, "I know thy works." He witnesses the heart service and He marks also the mere lip service. 4LtMs, Lt

We are in perilous times. Had you kept pace with the opening providences of God, and made the most of the light and privileges granted you, you would today be a power in the world. You would not need these words I now write you, because you would be accepted of the Lord, and divine power and glory would be manifested in your gatherings. According to your faith, so shall it be unto you; if your faith claims little, you will receive but little. If you by faith saw the great work to be done in the harvest field, you would also see that there are too few laborers, and you would fall upon your knees, praying the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the harvest field, and promising to do all in your power to sustain those who should go forth to work in the cities, in the highways and hedges with the compelling message. You would work to the very best of your ability to reflect light upon your neighbors and upon the members of the church; and your prayers would ascend in faith that the laborers might be as sharp sickles in the harvest field.⁴*LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 20*

We have solemn work to do, which must bear the test of the judgment. We are called to greater faith than God's ancient people because of increased light. "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." [James 4:4.] The times in which we are living call for you who believe the truth to arouse and put on the armor. The more we do, the more knowledge of truth and the more experience in heavenly things we shall have. The more firmly we walk in the path of faith, the greater will be our separation from the world and from darkness, and the closer will we come to the great Light of the world. Will you consecrate yourselves, soul, body, and spirit to God? Will you lay upon His altar that which belongs to Him? Will you cut loose from the world and give evidence that you believe the truth?⁴*LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 21*

In a dream not long previous to this writing, a large congregation was before me, and I was talking with you who were assembled. I talked, wept, and prayed; but some seemed to be as unimpressible as the granite rocks. Then there was a mighty revealing of the Spirit of God. Jesus walked through the midst of us, touching one, and another, and still another, and how their faces lighted up! They praised God with joyful hearts. But some poor souls were passed by. Light was shining everywhere, but they shrank away into dark corners and did not try to come to the light, and Jesus looked upon them with pity. Others rushed from the darkness as though it were life or death with them, and the cry went forth as I never heard it before, "What shall I do to be saved?" [Acts 16:30.] It seemed as though the people were reined up for final judgment. There was confession of sins; there was rejoicing over sins forgiven. But all did not participate. Some had not been walking in company with Jesus, but apart from Him, and therefore did not realize His presence, but seemed to think it was not Jesus. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 22

It is surely time to awake out of sleep, to arise from the dead, that Christ may give you life. O that we may sit together in heavenly places! "The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." [John 1:5.] God forbid that we should lose the heavenly blessings because we do not comprehend the light. We must be God's peculiar people in good works. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 23

Where there is one man laboring in New York, there ought to be one hundred. The Lord has given the light of truth, but men who have means are encouraging covetousness, and I fear it will prove their ruin. Brethren, it is too late in the day for this kind of work. The things which have been freely given to us of God were not given to Sodom or Gomorrah, or they would not have perished in their sins. We have superior advantages and shall be judged according to the light and privileges of the times in which we are living. God will not give judgment in our favor because, like Capernaum, we are exalted to heaven in point of privileges. What use have we made of God's blessings? Are we walking in the light, and working in accordance with the holy character of the truth which we profess? 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 24

There is a great work to be done in home missions. Laborers in America do not have the difficulties which are met in foreign lands. God wants men to work for Him who are sanctified in heart and life, elevated and ennobled by the greatness of the truth. He wants men who will have the true enterprising spirit, who will walk humbly with God, and who will strive to push the triumphs of the cross of

Christ. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 25

May God help you to do a much greater work in the Lord than you have done, to put away darkness and come to the light. 4LtMs, Lt 70, 1886, par. 26

Matteson, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

January 2, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 79.

Dear Brother and Sister Matteson;

I have attempted to write you several times, but other matters pressed in demanding immediate attention, and I did not complete a letter to you commenced at Christiania. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 1

After I reached Basel, I found an urgent call for me to go to Torre Pellice, Italy. I went; Mary White accompanied me. We did hope to save Brother Mallon. We heard he was writing a tract against us. We attended meeting in the hall—his hall hired and used for meetings by our people. I spoke in regard to the Sabbath's distinguishing us from the world and that it was a sign, a test, and then spoke of the martyrs who suffered for the truth's sake. Meanwhile Mallon came into the meeting, and as I was near the close of my discourse interpreted by Brother Bourdeau, Mr. Mallon arose and interrupted me and expressed in strong terms great anxiety for his soul and wanted to know whether he would be lost if he did not keep the Sabbath. Say, Yes or No. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 2

I told him, that was a question not for me [to] answer. I could say that if light came, we would be judged according to the light the Lord had permitted to reflect upon our pathway. This answer made him very impatient. Yes or No, he was determined should be my answer. I told him very much depended upon Yes or No, and I would have to lay out general principles and then leave the matter where the Bible left it. Blessed are they that do His commandments for they shall have right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city. He then began to read a manuscript which he had written which he threatened to have published. He just amplified around there to a great rate. He produced the same objections, going over the same ground which had been answered about one thousand times, and seemed to feel proud of his exploits. When he had read his objections to the Sabbath, he said that Christ broke the Sabbath. I said, Bro. Mallon, I hope you will not place yourself on the side of the cavilling, plotting Pharisees. Then he seemed to be enraged. He fairly jumped up and down. I said, You asked me to answer your arguments, and when I attempt to answer, you get up and become so excited. You do not know one word I say. I say you will not give me a chance to say anything. I have answered some questions in the French paper.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 3

He worked until the meeting was about to break up in confusion, and we closed with the benediction. He would not publish our appointment that night for next day, would not publish notices of the meeting, and the next day he came into meeting, and while I was speaking made display of himself in gesticulating like a crazy man, throwing his arms about wildly and talking aloud, and finally arose and called Elder A. C. Bourdeau an impostor. We went calmly on, taking no notice of the interruption. He snatched his hat and rushed out of the hall, and when we left the meeting had a crowd gathered around him, talking in a very excited manner. Before the next meeting we had notices out and what was our astonishment next day to find notices pasted just above our notices for meetings on the very evenings and days that we had out our appointments. Cocorder and Elder Miles Grant began their work which at first was a tract against me and the visions. You can imagine how I was situated. I had no real hold on the people. They were unacquainted with me. I pled with the Lord most earnestly for Him to give us wisdom and grace that we might take a course that He would approve. The Lord did help us. We had Mary attend his meetings with Elder A. C. Bourdeau and take notes. But we decided not to make the least reference to Elder Grant's tirade, but have our appointments come on a different hour than Grant's meeting and I would talk on practical subjects. We had a very fair attendance. Elder Grant took the position there was no Sabbath at all to be kept, there was no law, and he placed me in the company with the law and swept us away together.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 4

I was glad I was in such good company. He claimed that the law of God was a yoke of bondage; if we kept it, we were fallen from grace. Then he presented me and my work in as ridiculous a light as possible, bringing forward the testimony of those who had twenty-five and thirty years ago manufactured the lies which you have heard oft repeated, no doubt, which Elder Grant had loved so well and repeated so often. It seemed so truly to represent the dragon spirit in this effort. And the dragon was wroth with the woman and went to make war with the remnant of her seed who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 5

Cocorder is a preacher, an “Age to Come” man, and he is a licentious man. He is an adulterer and has a very smooth tongue, but truth and honesty are not his companions. This kind of a man is the one Elder Grant yoked up with, and with satanic zeal they tried to do their work. But their efforts were to provoke a discussion, to create an excitement, but we kept right along, doing our work as though they did not exist. We did considerable praying about that time. We felt that if we trusted in God, all things would work together for our good. The one of the Vaudois came to Grant’s meeting and went home stating to their people there were two parties of Adventists [who] came to quarrel with one another, that the people ought not to go to the meetings of either party. These things made it difficult for us, although we had no quarreling to do. That is Grant’s business. He loves this work of picking up hearsay and peddling it out as truth. We have not such a work to do. We do not go from place to place to speak of myself and vindicate my character. I had testimonies sent me from Basel that would contradict every statement Grant made, but his was not my work. I left myself in the hands of God and just talked of Jesus Christ and Him crucified.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 6

We had some of the best class to hear us. The question was asked when we would leave. I told those who inquired, I would stay as long as Elder Grant stayed, if it were till spring, [lest] he should add to his other lies that he drove me from Italy, that I dared not stay after he had exposed my work, etc. Well we stayed until after Elder Grant left. We had some very precious meetings on Sabbath and Sunday especially. A Baptist minister came three miles on foot from St. Johns. His brother and his brother’s son also came. The son interpreted for me on one occasion. These men seemed to be much interested. The Baptist minister visited me, and I had an opportunity to explain to him somewhat in regard to my work. We had a profitable season of prayer together. One has embraced the truth since I left Italy, but Italy is not an easy field by any means in which to labor. The churches are closed against any preaching unless it be of their own sect. There are halls to be had, but frequently these are small. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 7

After we left Mallon's hall, we rented one under Cocorder's, so Grant's meetings were above, ours below. A man had rented all the building, including the hall of the owner, and then in his turn rented out these buildings. Brother A. C. Bourdeau rented the hall of the man that hired it, but Cocorder told the proprietor he would give up his hall if we were permitted to occupy the room below his hall. And the owner of the building found that he could by law turn us out of the hall and so informed Brother A. C. B., so that there seemed to be a hedging up of the way on all sides. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 8

We looked at several halls, but one they wished to sell, another they did not wish to rent unless they could rent the whole flat, several rooms on the same floor. So Elder A. C. Bourdeau has devoted one of his rooms to a hall. It will hold about fifty. It looks like a hard field, but the standard of truth has been raised there, and it does not look like policy to give up the field until a more thorough effort is made. It is so hard to do much for a people whose habits are so that you cannot reach them. They, nearly all rich and poor, go right into their stables; and to reach them in evening meetings where they are, the gospel must be carried into these stables. There are cows, goats, hens, calves, and donkeys in the stable—the heat of the manure filling the stable with a strong scent that is hard exceedingly on the lungs. There is no ventilation except one pane of glass or a little slide about six inches square. There are no floors to these stables, and dry leaves or old refuse straw is brought in and covers the earth. In this place fifty or sixty assemble to hear the Bible opened to their understanding, and there are among these hearers men and women of intelligence—those who want to hear the truth and are astonished at the strange and new things that are taught them. In these places our brethren have to go from three to five miles in an evening up in the mountain gorges and then walk through most dangerous places in the dark. It is not safe for one to go alone, for if anything is said that one of these Italians takes offense at, in his irritation he might do anything that would endanger life. While some may be glad to hear, others will be enraged. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 9

Brother A. C. Bourdeau went about one week ago to attend one of these meetings. There were about twenty-five or thirty to hear, and the ministers of the churches had warned their people not to go to hear these people, for they taught heresy. These have their supper very near the time meetings commence, and they expect the minister will partake with them. They take a basket of bread hung from a rafter and some cheese and milk that has had all the benefit of the stable atmosphere and pass it to their guests. Bro. A. C. B. partook of this, for in doing so he opened his way to the hearts of the people. Now you can see what kind of a field that the laborers in Italy have. There are churches all through the mountain steeps like a city set on a hill, and there are large settlements in these mountain gorges and on the mountain sides, rich vineyards, chestnut groves, and cultivated lands. They may have meetings in the valleys, but how are these mountain settlements to be reached. They will not, while they have no interest, go into the valleys to the halls, for it is a very laborious process, so missionaries must reach them where they are, and if they can get access to them; then they may become informed in regard to the unhealthful manner of living in the stable with their cattle in winter to secure the advantages of the heat without the expense of fuel, for the wood is very scarce. They plant mullens and cut off the sprouts, some no thicker than your finger, and sell these in little bundles for one cent per pound. They also use all the sprouts and every limb they can spare of their chestnut trees. All the trimmings from the grapes are treasured and used for fuel. How these people are to be educated in regard to the healthfulness of the air they breathe is a perplexing question. It is impossible for the people who live in this way to have healthful lungs and to have pure blood, but how can we make them believe this? Habits and customs have confirmed them so firmly in this way that they do not know any better way. 4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 10

Well, this is the work that is now being done in Torre Pellice, Italy, and just such a work will have to be done in other places in Italy.

There are very nice cities. Turin is one where we tarried all night, but it is almost thoroughly Catholic; and there are several places near Torre Pellice, small settlements—some are Protestants and some are almost wholly Catholics. The cities in the Alpine certainly ought to have much done for them, but how shall it be done? Shall we leave them to perish? or where are the missionaries who will go to work in such places? May the Lord God of Israel look upon these cities and valleys in Italy whose sod pilgrim feet have trod, where martyrs' bones have been buried, where there will come up from caverns from the craggy rocks a host of precious ones who gave their lives, but would not yield their faith. Certainly the prayer should go up to God that He would raise up laborers to go forth in the harvest field.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 11

I feel very solemn as I think over this matter and see the condition of the people in such amazing ignorance of God's Word and amazing ignorance of how to preserve their bodies in the best condition of health. Here we are shut away from the higher classes by the men professing to be shepherds of the flock, who feed themselves, but who feed not the flock of God. Every church is refused to those who would preach any other doctrine than that which their denomination believes, and the halls will bring out numbers to hear; but the very ones who need the words in the message of warning, it does not reach these. Well, the Lord of heaven has a care for His own, the purchase of His blood.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 12

When I came back to Basel, I was thoroughly exhausted. I had spoken ten times, Sundays twice in the day, and the anxiety and burden carried me very near the borders of breaking. I had a tremendous taxing labor at Christiania. It seemed the burden on my soul would give me no rest day nor night, and the journey was severe home from Christiania to Basel. Without rest, I went in answer to their call immediately to Italy, and the harassing time was a trying one; and when we reached here we found work. Edith was dying. We labored and prayed with her, and the Lord heard our prayers. The afflicted one was comforted, relieved, and the peace of Christ came into her heart; and we have not a question but she has fallen asleep in Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 13

Well, I am again coming up from great weakness, and I am able to write and speak again to the people. I shall put my trust in God and not be discouraged. If the Lord permits Elder Grant to follow on my track and hedge up my way, I will go right on doing my best. He can make the wrath of man to praise Him. I have had on the night before, New Years, a most precious dream. I thought I went into a room to pray, and my burden was the state of things in Europe. What could we do to improve matters? How could we arouse the people to do what they could do with their influence to help build up the work? While I was telling the Lord about this matter, a voice spoke to me in a distant corner of the room. I looked up in surprise and I thought it was Jesus. What a glow of happiness I felt. He assured me that He was not a great way off when I was in sore perplexity, that He was nigh, and He told me that I might ask great things and the Lord would answer, that He was not willing that His people should be disheartened, that they did not have the simplicity of faith, and with most comforting, loving words, He blessed me and told me I might confide all my troubles to Him, and I might draw by faith from Jesus the very things I needed. I felt so thankful that I implored at once that I might have greater wisdom, that I might give wise counsel, that I should not in any instance mislead one soul. I asked that the presence of Jesus and His light and power would go with me as I bore the message. He said, I will answer your prayer. O how happy I felt when I awoke. I was so free and all peaceful.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 14

I have had many letters to write—one matter of a very perplexing character was in regard to courtship and marriage. A young man was urging his attentions upon Brother Albert Vuilleumier's daughter. I had letters to write to him and have sent the general part of it for Review. You will see it.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 15

I have many things I would like to write, but I cannot now. I will state that one young man from the theological school, a native German, has taken his stand fully on the truth. He is a man of excellent mind. He is now at work in the office. His coming out as he did without having personal labors for him has aroused the attention of the teachers in the school and the students, for this young man stated plainly his faith. They all bribed and urged him to remain in school and study. Would arrange that he should keep the Sabbath and yet carry on his studies, but he said, No. I cannot conscientiously do this, for if I believe this truth, I must act a part in proclaiming it.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 16

Brother Whitney has received letters from two in France who have come out on the truth by reading. They sent money for the volumes of the French Signs, so the work is moving slowly.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 17

Yesterday, Sabbath, Kristine took her stand fully with us and was baptized. Oh, how thankful I felt for this. She is a precious child. We like her very much, and I think she is perfectly contented. Elder D. T. Bourdeau writes that three have embraced the truth in Geneva, and many others are interested. So we will look upon all the things the Lord is doing for us and take courage.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 18

Write me how you are getting along. I want to hear from you. I want to hear about your boy's hand. How are your wife and daughter?4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 19

May the Lord bless you all with health and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 72, 1886, par. 20

White, W. C.

Basel, Switzerland

January 4, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 149-150.

Dear Son Willie:

Mary just received a letter from you. We are always more than glad to hear from you. Brother Whitney just came in, making the statement that he missed reading the last page of your letter in which you speak of Wischoack [?]. Brother Whitney thinks he had better come by all means if he can be a help as you state. I do not know him, so I cannot say anything in reference to the matter.⁴*LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 1*

Well, Mary and Elder Whitney did what they could in getting out an appeal in regard to the holidays. Brother Whitney pronounces it a grand thing. The letter from you came too late to do anything for Christmas, and the afflicted Edith dying at that time made it impossible to do anything before New Year's. No appeals were made, just the matter read, and it had an excellent reception. They took selections, the very best that were applicable for this people. Brother Albert Vuilleumier says it was just the thing and took well where he was. The church at Basel, you know, are all poor, but the selections translated into French were read, and in a few moments envelopes, which were prepared before, contained pledges of one hundred forty dollars as a New Year's donation to be used for the purchase of tents, also seven dollars for a sick sister who had no one to look to for help, and they subscribed for one hundred thirty-five copies of Les Signes.⁴*LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 2*

Brother Vuilleumier writes that at Bienne, where all are poor, they made an offering of fifty dollars on New Year's for the purchase of tents. Their tithes amounted to sixty-four dollars beside this, and they subscribed for eighty-six copies of the Signes, French paper. Letters are coming in from places where there is no church with two dollars, five dollars, as their offerings. Brother Whitney feels so pleased over this, and it is indeed a wonderful thing for these poor brethren to do.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 3

There are but about two brethren in Switzerland who own the houses they live in; all have to pay rent. Of those who work in the office here, the highest wages they receive for their labor is one dollar per day. That is six dollars per week, and they work early and late and board and room themselves at these wages. Others have less.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 4

I can see a spirit of sacrifice on the part of our people here, far ahead of that which is seen in America. They believe the testimonies and accept them as the voice of God to them, and they will, of their small wages, do all they can do to advance the cause and work of God.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 5

I cannot see how we can get away from here as soon as spring. Here we can get one of my books printed at much less expense than at the Review office or at the Pacific Press, and the office here has to be heated, has to have hands employed, all the same with a small amount of work as a larger amount, and had we not better try to do more here that needs to be done? I only suggest this. I was urged to Europe, and in Europe I shall stay until I feel that I can be released to return. Now, my son, look these things all over and tell me what you think, and lay your plans accordingly. I am in no hurry to return unless the Lord says, Go to America. We have scarcely begun to mold things here. I am glad I came, for the Lord has sustained me.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 6

Sarah is here to help in running the calligraph and in taking my talks and writing them out, Mary to prepare matter for publication, but she has too much to do altogether. Kristine does well. She opened her mind to me last Friday with deep feeling. She was baptized last Sabbath, so I think we are well calculated for working here if we think best. You can do as you think best about my Marian. I do not want her to be used up anywhere in any kind of work or overtaxed in any kind of study.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 7

Willie, be careful healthwise. Eat moderately and preserve your health. I have had some dreams which trouble me in regard to your health, but above everything, my son, be constantly near the Saviour, that whether you live or die, it will be well with you. Be careful and prayerful in regard to your return to Europe. Ask God to guide you. We pray for you every day and greatly desire to see you again when your work is done in America. Every day on your voyage pray, and do not let yourselves be careless. Be as God's true missionaries.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 8

We are comfortably situated. My health is very good now again; I am so glad. I wish we had a filter. I told Brother Kellogg to see in regard to getting one in London, but no word comes from him yet, whether he made any purchase or not. I think the swelled necks are more the result of the water they drink than anything else. I think it would be well to bring a small filter. Talk with Dr. Kellogg. I understand he purchased a filter in London. The soft water here is a treasure, I assure you, and now that we can keep warm, my health is as good in this climate as in California, perhaps better.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 9

But I want you to think seriously over this matter in regard to publishing. I wish I had the matter, "Mother's Influence." I would have it got out here in Basel. We could help them for they would take the matter and translate it into French and German. We want many things so much, in French, that they do not have. We need short, practical subjects in the French paper, and then they could put it in tracts, then in books. Much can be done here that has not been done yet. Matter is needed and someone to see it put in shape for the papers. I think God will work for us if we have self-denial and faith in the matter.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 10

I send with this a package of letters, that you and Edson may read them, and then they can go to Elder Butler. I am doing much writing. I have written a long letter to Brother Hansen and one to Brother Matteson—good, encouraging letters with no reference to anything that will make them feel bad. I have written two letters to Brother and Sister Oyen.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 11

Well, I am determined to trust fully in God. Take good care of yourself. If sick, telegraph me without delay. Much love to Edson and Emma.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 12

Mother.

You can tell whether it is best to get our work done here or in America. You know it has cost me heavily to get anything published in either of the offices. It may be I am misinformed about the cost.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 13

Mary and Ella are well, both busy as can be in their different branches. Brother Ings writes me that he was always in poor health in England. His rheumatism troubled him very much, and he proposes that Brother Starr and wife go to England. I believe this would be a good thing. Brother Ings has all he can do in California, so you can take this matter into consideration and tell the brethren who are deciding these matters that unless Brother Ings has the best of care, he is an invalid. I think under these considerations he ought to be released.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 14

Willie, they are in suffering need of a man to have oversight of the work. Brother Whitney cannot do it. If you can get an overseer, one who understands the business of printing, it would be gain in every way to the office. Brother Kellogg said, and Sarah, that everything is taken backhanded. If there were one to educate who had experience, to set them here at work in the right way! Elder Whitney is no printer. Time and money are being lost for the want of this kind of help here.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 15

Get a thorough workman if you can, if he does not stay over six months. But if he can stay longer, it would be economy to the work and office here. Brother Whitney has so many matters to see to that everything drags, and then he does not know himself what ought to be done and how to do it.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 16

Think of this matter. I have written these items as they come to my mind.4LtMs, Lt 72a, 1886, par. 17

Butler, G. I.

Basel, Switzerland

January 16, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in TSB 184-185; 10MR 388.

Dear Brother Butler:

Your letter came to hand last Tuesday. I have been a little perplexed to know what to write you, and in order to know this, I have a request for you to mail to me as soon as you can, all the letters I have sent to you in reference to Brother Cudney and New Zoark and any other place that implies censure to you. I have spoken quite freely upon some things. I thought I had to do this. Am inclined to say I will hold my peace henceforth, but as I am not my own and as I am mightily wrought upon at times to write, I dare not say this. I have but one object in view, not only the present but future good of the cause and work of God. Should I resist these impressions to write, when I am so burdened? I cannot now promise. I must ponder these things in my heart. I must pray about them and obey the moving of the Spirit of God or withdraw myself from having any connection with the work.⁴*LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 1*

The Lord knows I am not pleased with this kind of work. I love and respect my brethren and would not in the slightest manner demerit them, cause them pain; but I have tried to move with a single eye to the glory of God. I feel a sadness now upon me and confusion that I cannot see clearly my duty. I wrote some things to Elder Waggoner. He wrote me that it was just as I had stated the matter. I was so burdened with a dream I had that I arose at three o'clock and wrote to Elder W. that he had not kept his promise, that while he was engaged in teaching the commandments of God, he was breaking them, that he was giving attentions to Sister Chittenden which should be bestowed only upon his wife. I wrote very pointedly to him. He admitted my statements, said he had prayed over the matter and felt that his course was wrong, but did not say he would cease this thing forever. He says, "Your strong condemnation of me is only just, that I know and feel the difficulty with me was this. It was so hard for me to realize the sinfulness of my course. My reason, my judgment, the testimony, and the Scriptures all combined to teach me that it was wrong. Yet it had such a hold of me that I failed to realize it as I should. I could not bring myself to feel the extent of my wrong, and gradually it proved a snare to me.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 2

“But I had been making it a subject of special prayer sometime before I received your last letter, that God would enable me to see it in its proper light and to feel over it as I should, and I have reason to believe that my prayer was answered. If I know anything of the blessing of grace, I know that I was blessed in the effort I greatly needed, this blessing to enable me to do the work aright, which was put upon me here. It was expressed of all that I was helped of heaven to write the report on the matter of the arrest of our people for working on the Sunday and other important writings which it fell to me to do.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 3

“But I am painfully conscious of my weakness and that my only safety is in constant watchfulness such as I did not exercise before. I see now that it is a question of life and death with me, and shall strive to act accordingly.”4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 4

I have not more to write on this case. But just where my duty comes in, I am at some perplexity in the matter. I want to do only my duty.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 5

That which you quote of being another’s shadow was not for you; and why you should think it was, I cannot determine. I must have the letters then. I will take this matter up and interview myself critically. I have been writing to the brethren Bourdeaus in reference to their plan of labor. I thought it my duty, but stopped where I was.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 6

Augustus has been doing nothing of any account for a long time. Home matters engross his whole mind, but I will not add to my sin of accusing if I have been guilty in this direction. I am done. Perhaps, I have not understood my work and should have carried the weight of the burden and spoken to no one. I tell you, frankly, I am perplexed.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 7

There was laid out before me a state of things in New York, just as I wrote to you. Who put it before me? There was laid out just such a state of things in Nebraska, as I stated. Who gave it to me?⁴*LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 8*

That Brother Whitney has made a mistake, I do not question. That Brother Cudney has made grave blunders, I am sure he has, but I leave this matter for the judgment to decide.⁴*LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 9*

In regard to the missionaries and ministers' filling their houses with children in this time has been laid open before me as a serious wrong, as I wrote to you, and this has no reference to you; but I felt distressed over the condition of things and thought you would have wisdom to manage the matter so that it would begin to be heeded. Shall I begin to confess my error in this matter here? What shall I do? I am resolved, my brother, that I will not trouble your soul with any such communications, for you think I mean you, if they come to you. I will now make any acknowledgments that I dare to make. I am free to confess I am sorry beyond measure that I have, in anything I have said, brought discouragements upon you. Will you forgive me? I have the tenderest feelings toward you and the fullest confidence in you as a chosen servant of God. I cannot afford to have the books of heaven reveal a difference or disunion or variance between us. My prayers have gone up to God for you most earnestly, and I know not of any lack of confidence in you, although I have thought and written plainly where I thought you might be in danger.⁴*LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 10*

I am thinking I ought not to say anything as I did to Bro. Boyd. Well, well, I will say nothing to any one, if I can do so and please God. Perhaps I have felt too much responsibility over matters connected with the cause and work of God. I am distressed, in perplexity. I am glad you wrote plainly. I have written too many letters. I will now stop and, God helping me, will seek for peace and rest. I have felt the coming of the Lord was near, so near, and I have seen so much to be done and the need of workers that would mold the work as it should be. I felt so pained in New England to see that Brother Robinson was a shadow of Brother Haskell. Now I love and respect Brother H. as a servant of Jesus Christ, but I will say no more. I will have but little to say to my brethren ministers, unless I am obliged to do thus.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 11

Please send the letters I mentioned, and oblige your sister in Christ.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 12

I have no time to copy this; please read and return to me this letter.4LtMs, Lt 73, 1886, par. 13

Dear Sister:

I commence this letter not knowing as I can finish it because of pain in my eyes. If not, I shall have to dictate, which I would rather not do because it is of that character I wish to not entrust to another unless compelled.⁴*LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 1*

Several years ago I talked most earnestly with you in regard to your encouraging the familiarity which was apparent to many in Oakland. This matter became a byword. "Where is Brother [J. H.] Waggoner?" "I do not know unless visiting Sister Chittenden." We were on the ferry boat coming from San Francisco to Oakland. I conversed freely with you, warning you in regard to this matter. Then again I have written under the pressure of a burden to Elder Waggoner. Twice he assured me that the offense should cease, but I know it has not ceased. You promised me you would move from Oakland. I went to see you the second time after I had conversed with you in Oakland, but you were away. But I do not feel clear in reference to this matter. Both you and Elder Waggoner said you would break this spell by confessing prudently to your husband. Had this been done I think I should have heard something about the matter. But I have not the slightest evidence it has been done. And now you have both pursued the same course as heretofore.⁴*LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 2*

I was determined to keep this matter as private as possible, for I have had respect for you both; but notwithstanding our labors you have not broken your intimacy, and you are both an offense to God. I feel it is now my duty to tell it to the church, for I think nothing that I may say, no testimonies I may bear, will have sufficient weight with either of you that you will cease your unlawful lovemaking to one another, and God's frown is upon the office. God's frown is upon the church until we do all in our power to rid the church and cause of blot and stain. It is fully as grievous a sin as was that of Achan, who hid a golden wedge and a Babylonish garment. He dissembled. You are both working under a deception. You are transgressing the commandments of God you profess to revere—coveting and stealing the affections and property that belong to another. And I fear the cause of God will be disgraced by our enemies' getting hold of the matter, and then what a handle they would make of this—a man of gray hairs, a man whose religious life has been devoted to proclaiming the sacred claims of the law of God, with great responsibilities upon him. He is handling sacred things. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," is enjoined upon God's servants who minister in sacred things. [Isaiah 52:11.]4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 3

I cannot tell what to do next in order to clear my soul. I am satisfied neither you nor Elder Waggoner believe the testimony of warning that God has sent to you. And if you did, how dare you sin against so great light? God will let this reproach fall upon us from our enemies if we do not do what we can to put sin out of the camp. God has borne with your perversity for years, but He will not always bear. I shall feel it my duty to lay the matter open to your husband and to the church. It is the love and respect I have had for you both that has kept me silent.4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 4

It is the case of M. E. Cornell repeated. Testimony after testimony was borne to him. Every one he acknowledged, and he was so bound in the bewitching snares of Satan that he had not strength to break the spell and did not see the sinfulness of sin. Is it not so with you both? You flatter yourselves that this is not so wrong after all.4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 5

David thought only of his pleasure when he stole the wife of Uriah from her husband. But Nathan, a servant of God, lays the charge of his sin heavily upon him, without glossing over the matter at all. You are not at all excusable, and there is sin and only sin in the course you are pursuing. The position Elder Waggoner occupies in close connection with the cause of God makes his crime far greater than even that of Elder Cornell. Elder Cornell never had the talents and entrusted capital of intellect and acquired ability that Elder Waggoner has had. His playing the lover with you, and the liberties he has taken with your person, register you both in the books of heaven adulterers; and now, while I feel the deepest sorrow for you both, I must act. But I will not say anything to expose this matter till I hear from you. You have gone on Satan's ground, and I saw he was exulting over you both, pointing to your filthy garments. Why should he have control over you both, to cause you the deepest affliction and misery? What can you, either of you, say when the books of heaven reveal not only covetous thoughts, but words and deeds? Then shall we keep this thing cloaked? Shall we say nothing? Shall this offense rest upon the church?4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 6

Elder Waggoner should blush with shame, and so should you. You have both unfitted yourselves to be guardians of youth, to be guardians of families or guardians of the church.4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 7

While I love your souls, I hate your sins with a perfect hatred.4LtMs, Lt 74, 1886, par. 8

Brethren

Brethren:

I cannot be at rest in my mind. I receive some letters that make me feel very sad. There is much said about Elder [E. P.] Daniels, as though there are two different parties, one Elder Daniels' friends and still another party who are distinct from him. I beg of you not to breathe one word of this character. I understand this perfectly. There have been some mistakes in Elder Daniels which might have been easily corrected had a proper course been pursued; but I have not the least hesitancy in saying that you have not pursued toward him the course you would wish to have pursued toward you. There are those who cannot see in Elder Daniels the cause for the course that has been pursued toward him, and that leads those who have not been wise and judicious in their feelings and course of action to feel that their course was not sustained to draw themselves apart from Elder Daniels: and they will thus show their distrust and criticism and speak it and act it, and this will make two parties if nothing else will. 4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 1

I tell you that if wisdom had been exercised, there might have been an entirely different state of things. And if there are two parties, some others will be to blame as well as Elder Daniels. I do not doubt but that there was and ever has been a class of men and women in Healdsburg who ought to be elsewhere. They can be no help to the church, and these very ones will press to the front. You will always have the tares with the wheat, the bad and good fish in the net together; but it needs the wisdom of Christ to know how to manage the matter. There are those who will have to be tolerated and who will be as thorns to the church all the way this side of heaven. They are unsanctified, self-sufficient. The church was always in difficulty with these unruly elements before the school was established at Healdsburg. This element Satan uses just as soon as any good work is begun. But the trouble these make should not be charged upon Elder Daniels.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 2

I hope God will give Brother Daniels wisdom, for he is not evenly balanced: he moves impulsively. If there is a division of the church, I shall attribute it not to Elder Daniels alone, but to those who have had the management of these matters, who greatly lack discernment and a tact to deal without prejudice or without personal feelings. Self is interwoven altogether too much in the work and in the management of the church. I am perfectly sick of this management.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 3

Have you not been so zealous to make it appear that Elder Daniels' course was wrong, that all the fanatical movements have been in your judgment the fruit of his labors? Now I do not believe this. I believe that a good work was begun in Healdsburg, and the stopping of Elder Daniels from preaching was occasioned by the position Elder Waggoner took on his case. Then after the first steps had been taken, there must be an effort made to maintain that the course pursued toward him was right, and I do not, cannot believe it. I believe the very beginning was wrong, and that Elder Waggoner or any other elder had no delegated right from God to stop the meetings in Healdsburg, and that evils have grown out of this and will grow out of it still more until you shall, on both sides, stop your criticizing and be at peace and draw in even cords. This will bring harmony to the church.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 4

If our good brethren had come in to work and wisely molded things without putting their hands on Elder Daniels, a work would have been done that would have extended to other churches. My brethren, if you act and talk all the time as though there were not union, you will shape matters so there will not be union. You can establish yourselves in the confidence of the Healdsburg church if you will move wisely, discreetly, but not by trying to magnify Elder Daniels' wrongs and seeking to fasten blame upon him.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 5

Were there not matters made public before unbelievers that opened before them the defects of the church? Oh, how carefully should this matter have been handled, and how carefully should it now be handled! The very ones the most desirous to do good, the very ones who are the most zealous, will miss the mark and, unless they are wise in Christ, will show greater weakness and mistakes than Elder Daniels has done.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 6

Say nothing about Elder Daniels' popularity, say nothing about the danger of disaffection in the church. Just see if you who are children of God, workers with Him, will not take hold on the arm of infinite power and silently work for a change for the better, for the upbuilding of the church. You can never make those persons whose hearts have been softened and subdued into confession by the Spirit of God think that they were deluded, that it was the spirit of fanaticism that wrought this. I am pained as I see in men who ought to be strong men in God that their own hereditary and acquired traits of character bear sway in important matters, that prejudice and personal feelings act a prominent part in decisions and movements, that there is a self-sufficiency, a feeling of superiority that bears sway.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 7

Oh, for more of God's Spirit and less of man's decisions and moldings. We want much more of God and far less of the human in the solemn work before us. Let there be earnest self-examination. Try your own motives that prompt to action. Is the eye single to the glory of God? Prove your own selves, test yourselves frequently. God is measuring our characters and our attainments. The infallible standard must be met. We must try ourselves by this standard.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 8

If there is a want of sincere piety and of firm, determined purpose to lead a self-denying, pure, holy life, then there are deficiencies that exclude one from the work of the ministry. I believe that Elder Daniels is unwise in some things, and yet when I look at the history of our ministering brethren, I see that they have at times manifested much deficiency and amazing defects, and they should be very cautious how they are ready to find fault and sit in judgment upon another man's work, of his ability. Both the understanding and the heart need to maintain the closest connection with the pure, sacred springs from which they receive their light and inspiration. In the great questions of humanity, morals, and religion, there is needed in these last days a depth of piety, a discernment, an enlightenment which comes from God Himself in order to decide righteously.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 9

Habits, opinions, or authority are not enough to qualify one to judge another's character. Men or ministers of Christ must live hourly in contact and earnest communion with God, and the principles of truth and righteousness and mercy must abide in their hearts. We must drink deeper of the Fountainhead and love the Lord our God with all the heart, with all the soul and all the mind, and our neighbor as ourselves. The tastes, the appetites, the habits, the passions must all be under the control of the Spirit of God. Then faith, meekness, temperance, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, love, joy, and peace will be the fruits that will appear.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 10

They who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. They have the heavenly endowments with whatsoever things are honest and lovely and of good report. Brethren, drink deeper from the living Fountain. Receive illumination from above. With the name of Christ on your banners, exalt the cross of Calvary.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 11

I have felt that I must write this to you and I must repeat, I see not by your own letters the hand of God in all your works at Healdsburg. I do not know what you can do now without making matters worse, but you should know how you are moving at the very beginning of such a crisis. I would not cry "Fanaticism" to such a work as I believe was done in Healdsburg. I would rather remain in silence. That fanaticism was there I believe, but O what a nice job it is to deal with such matters! You need much of God and little of self.4LtMs, Lt 75, 1886, par. 12

Waggoner, J. H.; Loughborough, J. N.; Jones, A. T.; Waggoner, E.
J

NP

April 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 21MR 147-149.

My Brethren Waggoner, Loughborough, A. T. Jones, and E. J. Waggoner:

I wish to say some things in reference to the revival at Healdsburg.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 1

I wish to say I am not in harmony with your treatment of this matter. That there were fanatical ones who pressed into that work I would not deny. But if you move in the future as you have done in this matter, you may be assured of one thing, you will condemn the work of the latter rain when it shall come. For you will see at that time far greater evidences of fanaticism.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 2

I believe the work at Healdsburg to be genuine. I believe there were the deep movings of the Spirit of God. I believe unconsecrated, unconverted ones urged themselves to the front. The enemy always works through those of unbalanced minds and imperfect characters. I do not believe that Elder [E. P.] Daniels moved wisely in all things, and it would be a new chapter in the experience of workers if there were not a mistake made in some things. Has not God presented before you the defects and want of wisdom in your ways and in your management? If Elder Daniels erred in some things, who of you dared to tell him to preach no more? Who of you dared to stop the work because in your finite judgment everything did not appear to meet your ideas? Every time I think of this matter, I am so pained I try to put it out of my mind at once.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 3

When an effort shall be made in the work of God, Satan will be on the ground to urge himself to notice, but shall it be the work of ministers to stretch out the hand and say, This must go no further, for it is not the work of God? I believe that God was giving the people in Healdsburg a warning, and I believe that some would have taken hold of the truth; and I believe you had no right whatever to lay your hand on that work, but should have joined yourselves to it. If you saw errors—as there must have been errors—then you should have corrected them in as private a manner as possible and put no arguments or excuses in the minds of the opposers of truth to resist the truth.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 4

I wish you could see what a delicate, dangerous matter it is to meddle with the work of God unless you have light from heaven to guide you in your decisions. I have not the confidence in Elder J. H. Waggoner's judgment in these matters that you have. I know that he needs his soul as well as lips touched with live coals from off the altar that shall refine and purify the uncleanness from his lips and from his soul. I fear you have grieved the Spirit of God. The fruits were good in the work at Healdsburg, but the spurious was brought in as well as the genuine. Then it needed men of discernment, of calm, well-balanced minds, to come in when there were peril and indiscretion, to have a molding influence upon the work. You could have done this. You had no moral right to stop the meetings and to stop Elder Daniels from going right forward with the work and making the very most of the interest started, to gather outsiders into the interest if possible.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 5

I cannot sanction your course. I cannot see that while you were working to correct evils, as you might have done, that you should stop the work. If this is the way you manage when God sends good, be assured the revivals will be rare. When the Spirit of God comes, it will be called "fanaticism," as on the day of Pentecost. "These men are filled with new wine," was the saying of those who took no decided interest in the work. [Acts 2:13.]4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 6

Now Elder Waggoner's prejudice came in, causing him to pass his judgment on the work, and others followed in its wake. I verily believe you had but little of the Spirit of God in your camp meeting, for I cannot see how God could work with your efforts, and at least with some who were leaders in the meeting, because they were not where the Lord could bless their efforts. I beseech of you, brethren, to study more thoroughly in the school of Christ and be sure that self and personal feelings do not mingle with your judgment of the work of God. We must have more spiritual power, individually, and when you see persons confessing their sins, let the current of the Spirit of God flow and wash out and cleanse the moral impurities. We are very destitute of the quickening influences of the Spirit of God because, as in the case at Healdsburg, we would not recognize God, but, like Jacob, think it was an enemy that visited us.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 7

In regard to Elder Daniels, he is finite; he is not infallible. But there is such a disposition to judge others. They do not keep in view that God works by whom He will. Christ is to be seen as officiating through the delegated servant. The great evil is that the mind becomes narrowed and loses sight of the chief Worker; it gets on the instrument and decides the people cannot be advantaged unless the manners and the habits of the worker meet their own pattern exactly. They regard the speaker as a man, merely, not a messenger whom God may use to deliver a message or do a certain work. God has chosen man to do a certain work. His mental capacities may be weak, but then the evidence is more apparent that God works. His speech may not be eloquent, but that is no evidence that he has not a message from God. His knowledge may be limited, but in many cases God can work with His wisdom through such an agent, and the power be seen of God, more than through one possessing natural and acquired abilities and who knows it and has confidence in himself, in his judgment, in his knowledge, in his manner of address.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 8

But Elder Daniels is an acceptable speaker and, as I have been shown, a man of not the deepest judgment, one who needed a counselor, but he is a man who could come close to the hearts of the people and one who possesses sympathy in personal efforts that would penetrate the barriers built up about the soul that resisted the influence of the truth. God works in and through frail instruments, and He is not discerned.4LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 9

Now with the fruits of a good work evidenced before your senses, that you should feel competent to come in and hinder the work or to be sufficient to say, Thus far shall you go and no further, is a work I would not have dared to do, unless God had given me a message direct from His throne. I tell you plainly, I have no confidence in Elder Waggoner's decisions or feelings. His son would naturally take his view of the case and seek to make his decisions appear true and righteous, because these decisions must be maintained.⁴*LtMs, Lt 76, 1886, par. 10*

Butler, G. I.

April 5, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother Butler:

I have been much burdened over matters in Healdsburg. I have had many solemn dreams and have been in their midst and heard things spoken and seen the spirit manifested, and then the result has been shown me. I have written letters addressed to Brn. Jones, Loughborough, and Waggoner. I have sent other letters, one to Bro. Ings, and I want you to see these letters. If you have a meeting in Healdsburg, I hope you will have wisdom. There is a tangle there that need not to have been. Had there been less of the iron bedstead principle—cut a man off if he is too long, stretch him if he is too short. If my brethren knew how offensive this spirit is in the sight of God, they would want to clothe themselves with sackcloth. I think the only safe course to pursue is not to justify the course of our brethren in their condemnation of the work that started in Healdsburg, [but] to take off their hand of oppression from Brother [E. P.] Daniels. They have not only hurt him, but themselves more than they have hurt him.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 1

When I see his judges who have far graver faults than he has, so ready to condemn him, I know these men will have to repent before God, [including] this pressing, crowding spirit He always condemned. [It is important that] the church now will not try to dwell upon matters of difference, [and that] there will be [the right] efforts made by the men who have been so willing to stop the work where there was the least evidence of the manifestation of the Spirit of God. When you read the letters sent to my brethren, you then may understand better how to act in the meetings you will hold in Healdsburg.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 2

Some will talk one way; some another way; and while some will hunt up everything that may have an objectionable feature, they will pass over very many things that bear the stamp of the Divine. I pray the Lord to give you wisdom and sanctified judgment, for you will meet with a tangle in Healdsburg that will try the soul. But I venture to suggest that you [will] dwell upon general principles and will make special efforts to have humility come in and make them see the sin of disunion and difference. May the Lord help in this matter, that the church may heal [her] wounds by mutual confessions and repentance, seeking for the forgiveness of God. They have had continual preaching, but not enough personal effort. Now if they can have personal effort, I believe something can be done. I have my fears that the Spirit of the Lord that evidenced itself has been slighted and rejected; that Satan has a firmer hold of the minds of many than ever before.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 3

It has been the most difficult thing to arouse the church to personal effort. Outside of the church they seem to need instruction on this point. I have been shown that the church must be made to feel the necessity of individual responsibility. Where there is great light there is great responsibility, and if this light is not responded to by corresponding advancement in spirituality, then there is a hardening of the heart against the impression of the Spirit of God in the presentation of light and knowledge.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 4

I felt so glad that the church was at last aroused to action, that I longed to be with them to help them; but unless there is a work of union, I shall not dare to reside in Healdsburg. I will go into some place where there is no church. I will not be where I will have to hear and see dissension and strife which [are] death to me.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 5

Dear Brother Butler: Your letter received. I think that the letter to the board went down in the Oregon as we have heard from other letters sent at that time that went down in the great deep and were afterward brought up and reached their destination. My brother, I feel sorry that burdens accumulate so heavily upon you. I am sure it is better for you to step from under and not be crushed, prepared to carry burdens very important in the future. I wanted to write to you, but there were some things [that] came in hindering me. Letters had to go to Norway and other places, therefore I sent the testimony sent to Daniel Bourdeau, hoping these principles might in some way influence you to be more careful of your strength and not do so much. I believe with all my heart that the Lord will be with you in California and bless you.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 6

I think as you do in regard to Elder Waggoner, as you will see by my letters—the letters written on buff paper [that] I did not send him, because after I had written them, I went to Oakland myself in the place of sending them and talked all these things to him. The letter written while at Great Grimsby did not go because I thought I might discourage him when he had so many responsibilities upon him; but I sent him the letter from Basel and have been sorry I did not send it before. His answer I will also send you. His course is beyond my severest stretch of comprehension—his standing in as prominent a position as he does. I do not think he should come to Europe without there being so marked a change in him that there can be no doubt that God accepts him.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 7

He has always written as though he were in so important a place that God could not do without him. Of course, this was not his language, but it was his spirit. I have been reading some things in the history of Napoleon Bonaparte. The statements show he was a very passionate as well as a licentious man. When he was remonstrated with in regard to his course, he flew into a rage saying [that] that which would be crime in others was not a crime in him. He was no common man and that he, as a remarkable man, had a right to indulge himself as he pleased. What think you of such arguments as this? I tell you these men who occupy responsible positions should be the most circumspect of any men on the earth. I have not a particle of faith in pretense and hypocrisy. May the Lord have mercy upon us.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 8

I think you had better be very plain with Elder Waggoner; and if you do not feel it best and fitting for him to come to Europe, do not sanction his coming by any means. I send you his last letter in response to these letters which I last sent him. Ask Bro. Jones to let you see the letter I sent to Mrs. Chittenden. It is no use to be discouraged over these things, but I must say I am wonderfully perplexed over them and ashamed that these who profess to be children of light should be found to be children of darkness. I am glad you sent the letter to Bro. Fargo, for I shall write him directly. Did I send you a copy of a letter I sent to Bro. Henry—a personal letter? If not I will send it to you.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 9

In regard to policy, equality or not, I am in no doubt what my position [is] on this point. I am not favorably impressed with the gymnasium building, for then all prospect of trade learning is at an end; but it may after all be the best. I do not know. In regard to Bro. Fargo, I would advise him to change climate—go to California, spend some time at St. Helen. He must have [a] change. He has asked me if I thought this would be right for him to make this move. I certainly do think it would be well. I feel sorry for him, for I love the man as a Christian, but there must be a man with a different make-up.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 10

Do you think Van Horn would push things? I can answer my own question. No! unless he has reformed in every way. But has he learned the lessons he might and ought to have learned ten years ago? Canright will not do. He would push but you know how.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 11

In regard to C. Prescott, his past habits of eating have not been good. Disease is the result, and where are the men to fill the place in the college at Battle Creek and take charge of important interest connected with the school?4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 12

Bro. Sisley is suffering from want of nutritious food, while Bro. Preston is suffering through indulgence of appetite, putting anything and everything into his stomach. Bro. Sisley is suffering for want of real nourishing, well-cooked food, and he may never recover. Bro. and Sister Starr will be on the invalid list ere long. Sister Sisley is a poor cook, a thorough economist, but its principles brought to bear on the life are killing. When will our people be wise? These things are verity and truth. Bro. Sawyer might be alive today if it were not for the strained economy and starvation plan. This is not God's way nor will. What can we do for these extremists? It seems that we have to pull one out of the fire, another out of the water.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 13

I will not seek to give the impression that our good and merciful heavenly Father is not willing that his employed servants shall have comfortable clothing, healthful food, and comfortable lodgings at this stage of the advanced growth of the cause. Well I have had to lay down my paper more than three times for something else to be considered.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 14

Bro. Ertzenberger is at home sick; just visited him. We will pray for him this evening. He is so much needed in Lausanne.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 15

It is thought advisable for us to go to Italy this week and remain two weeks, then attend meeting in the halls, and as we return spend some time in Lausanne and Vienna. We leave next Thursday.4LtMs, Lt 77, 1886, par. 16

Ings, Brother and Sister

Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland

May 26, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in 21MR 312-314.

Dear Brother and Sister Ings:

We have been traveling among the churches with my own team. Left Basel May 20 and journeyed two days to Tramelan. Oh, what scenery! No one can tell what Switzerland is unless they have traveled over the road by horse and carriage. I spoke three times in Tramelan. There is a goodly number there. Eleven came from this place, and we had a good meeting. Brother John Vuilleumier was my interpreter.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 1

Monday we drove to Bienne in company with Mary Roth and her brother Oscar and Sarah McEnterfer. We rode fifteen miles over the most beautiful road and viewed the most majestic scenery my eye ever looked upon. But this letter is not to describe scenery, but to state a few things.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 2

I spoke at Bienne in the missionary meeting, then W. C. White spoke. Mary Roth was our interpreter. Today we have come thirty miles, and the scenery was such as to delight the senses all the way. For miles we were steadily climbing until we could view the landscape from the elevated point where we now are. I am glad we have a good, strong horse and a good, easy, convenient carriage. I am being much benefited by my journey.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 3

I started in this letter to say that as yet we have spent but a very little time in England. We design to start in two weeks for Sweden and Norway and then shall go to England. The plan now is that our European conference will be in England. We shall stay some time and labor in England. Then if you come, Brother and Sister Ings, we purpose to have a family together and unite our interests and will have a comfortable home, convenient food, and try to help one another. I must spend considerable of my remaining stay in England if I can endure the climate. If I cannot, shall go where I can, but I am desirous to work in England. I long to speak without a translator. And if I spend much time in England shall take my horse and my carriage with me.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 4

But I will say, do just that which the Lord directs. Do not move upon anyone's light, but study duty. You are on the ground, and you can know the situation. Ask God for light, and then do your duty with an eye single to His glory.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 5

E. G. White.

We would not urge your coming, but we do feel that it would be in the order of God for you both to visit Europe at this time. We cannot advise Brother Ings to come without his wife shall accompany him. He needs her, and we will try to make up a family, for I cannot see any better way to do than to be independent of all families, cook as we please. We have had a good girl to cook for us and do all housework. We will have a good girl in England, and you will be free to ride with me, walk with me, and help me in many ways. Then when your husband is not well, or when he shall rest, he can have a home to come to. If we do not stay in England long, still we will have a home where our interests will be connected.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 6

When we go to America I want to have Sister Ings in my family, and I shall locate myself somewhere or in some place where there is land to pasture a cow without so much trouble.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 7

Now my dear brother and sister, I have not lost my interest in either of you, and I want we should be one family. I think you had both better come at once to England, and by the time you arrive we will be making our way from Norway to England. There we will meet, there we will talk over our plans. There are good locations we can obtain in England. We shall secure the most healthy place we can to make a home, and we want you to connect with us.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 8

Mary K. White does not find time even to ride with me or travel with me. Sarah is either taking dictation or writing on the Calligraph, and Marian—you know how she begs off. You can help me and I can help you and you can go with me to different churches. Now come, both of you, and remain as long as it shall please the Lord. When we leave England we want you to go in company with us.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 9

In my dreams I am with Sister Ings. She fell on my neck and said, “O Sister White, I never wanted to leave you. You made me leave you and I want to be with you. The Lord blesses me when I am with you.” I said, “Sister Ings, from this time our interest shall never be divorced. We will stand shoulder to shoulder to the close of time.”4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 10

I want when you shall come that you will bring all the matter in regard to mothers’ influence, all letters from my children. You can help me much in some of these matters. I would not bring but a limited supply of clothing, as you can obtain it here better than there, but you need not I should inform you in regard to this.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 11

You have filled a good place in the institution, and now it is well that there should be a change. Therefore come, Sister Ings, with your husband. We will be more than glad to see you. I can say no more in regard to this matter. The Lord help you to decide aright, is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 12

No one would be more happy to see you than every one of our family; but after saying this I can say more, all would receive you most heartily. I do not know what the duty of Sister Ings is. I believe that it was in the order of God that she took her position at the Health Retreat. I believe she has been the right one in the right place, and I think her to be qualified for the position and that she will be a blessing to the institution. I look forward to the time when I will see my old home again and Sister Ings be with me if she can be cut loose from the Health Retreat. But my pleasure, my wishes, shall not come in to be a controlling power.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 13

In regard to you both, I have the same tender interest in you both, and nothing would give me more keen sorrow than to find you in any place where you would not be happy or where you would be sufferers healthwise. If Brother Ings should come to England, we shall feel the same interest in his welfare we have felt in America.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 14

Our interest must be bound up together. If Brother Ings has the blessing of God, he may do a good work in England; and I wish he could spend some time there. It would please us much. If the Lord wills he should come, we will be glad; and if it is found that rheumatism affects him, he could spend some time in Basel or other sections of the country where it would be more favorable. You are not to come with the idea that you are to be fixed in England. It is only for a time to do a specified work and then return again to California as soon as we will return to America.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 15

Now we do not feel that it is our province to make duties for either of you or to do anything further than to suggest. If Brother Ings feels it his duty to remain in California, then let him follow his convictions. I believe the Lord will lead those whom He entrusts with His work. But it seems to us, as we survey the field, that he should come.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 16

We are pleasantly situated in Basel, but shall be prepared to leave in one year. I look home to California often, but not in the same way Lot's wife looked back to Sodom. But I have left home and all its comfort and all its attraction. I consider the cause of God and its workings of greater consequence to me than anything that I possess. I will not worry about home; but just as soon as my work is done, I shall go back willingly. You will see by this letter that I want you both to move understandingly and with a consciousness that the Lord is leading and guiding. I cannot tell either of you your duty or where you shall go or what you will do. Let the Lord lead and guide you. I believe He will. With much love, I remain,4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 17

Your true friend.4LtMs, Lt 78, 1886, par. 18

Littlejohn, Brother and Sister

Orebro, Sweden

June 28, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother and Sister Littlejohn:

We left Basel June 15 to come to this place, to our Swedish conference. There were more here than we thought possible to get together, and much good has been done in these ten days. There were some promising young men who are seeking to qualify themselves to work in the cause. There are some fitting themselves to enter the ministry, but there is a large field of labor, and Sweden I believe to be the best field in Europe to work.⁴*LtMs, Lt 79, 1886, par. 1*

Church at Healdsburg

Christiania, Norway

July 9, 1886

Previously unpublished.

I would address the church at Healdsburg, for I am troubled much in regard to matters in Healdsburg. Brother Butler wrote me a very good account of things there and I was pleased with the report, but he expressed in his letter the favorable part of the outlook. That night I had presented to me the dangers. The Spirit of the Lord led me through different scenes at Healdsburg, and I am more troubled and fearful now in regard to Brother [E. P.] Daniels than at any previous time since he has been in California. He is in need of an influence to balance him constantly. When engaged in anything relating to business matters, his ideas are so exaggerated and he has the faculty of presenting the matter in an exaggerated light before others. He talks strong and raises hopes and expectations that can never be realized and then the disappointment of those who have been deceived by his glowing representations is sometimes very great. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 1

Elder Daniels enters so heartily into matters, he puts so much confidence in what he can accomplish, that he will not realize his own expectations, and he will certainly injure himself and become involved and drag others with him into difficulties that he cannot extricate them from. The experience which he had in Michigan I fear is being repeated. Now there are many things I may say in the future. At present, I will say to the church, Be careful. Do not ruin Elder Daniels by placing great confidence in his judgment. He moved unwisely in Michigan and was full of ardor that he could gain means, and he mercifully was hedged up in his way. If he had succeeded, it would have been to the ruin of his soul. If he succeeds now in his enterprise, it will endanger his soul's eternal interest. I know whereof I write. And I would say that it was because Elder Daniels was having a hard time I tried to help him in advising his coming to California; but as I view the outlook now, had I the ground to go over again with the aftersight I now have, I would not have encouraged his coming to California. Elder Daniels should be in the field laboring if he has tack as I have tried to impress our brethren in regard to laboring for the salvation of souls. Then let him go to work and be out in the field where laborers are very much needed.4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 2

I have not felt that it was in God's order for Elder Daniels to set up a school in Healdsburg of any description. The result will not be as the beginning. I have been taught by the Spirit of the Lord how these movements are affecting the school in Healdsburg, adding nothing to its strength, but drawing away from the college, and the result which will not be good on either the students or upon those who engaged in this business. If Elder Daniels is moving without due forethought, he should now consider, for he will not be able to carry through that which he has undertaken. Should he attempt to carry out his plans, he will for a time seem to prosper; but he is not a safe financier, and those who are drawn in by his glowing, high-toned descriptions will surely be disappointed, and before the world Elder Daniels will be regarded as a man who has made false statements, as a man who is a schemer, as dishonest. Now this would reflect on the college, make it suffer, and bring us into disrepute in the eyes of the community in Healdsburg, and a state of things would exist that would be detrimental all around. He will have gained only hatred and ill will from many, his motives be misjudged, and the cause of God would gain nothing but to be branded with the defects of one of its ministers.4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 3

I know what I am talking about. Let all the strength that is needed be attached to the college and make it complete as possible, but let not a branch of education be started on an independent plan. I would discourage everything of the kind, and I would urge that Elder Daniels go into the field to his work as a minister, and I would advise that our brethren and sisters should not place great confidence in his management of business, for they will not only injure Elder Daniels, but will injure the college. The Lord has shown that a college should be established in California, and this has been done according to the Lord's directions in Healdsburg as the most proper place. Many appeals have been made to engage the interest of our people to send their youth to the college. Now any enterprise that shall be started to weaken the college or lessen the interest in it, or to draw away the students, is not after God's plan and would not result for the best interest of the church. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par.

I feel deeply in regard to matters in Healdsburg. I am afraid of the elements that are at work under the inspiration of Elder Daniel's glowing anticipations. It is here he needs the judgment of well-balanced, experienced minds. It is here that we want to move guardedly, and it is here Elder Daniels should consult with those who are engaged in the interest of the college at Healdsburg. It is not merely the educational advancement that is required to make a successful school, but it is the spiritual and the moral tone that is to be preserved. It is the education essential to qualifying men and women as workers in the cause of God; to have Elder Daniels present glowing advantages to be gained will work upon certain minds to think they can gain means much faster. These descriptions are like air-castle building; it is like a blown-up bubble which expands, soars about grandly for a moment, bursts, and is not. Here is where Elder Daniels needs to be restrained. If he is for mammon, then let him go into the wide world and get it. If he is to encourage a spirit in others that they cannot work without high wages, then let these go into the world and work out their ambitious projects. But those who would engage in doing good, in seeking to be a blessing in doing work for the Master, then let them show a disposition to unite all the powers God has given them to the building up of Christ's kingdom. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 5

I tell you, Elder Daniels today is in great danger because of the unwise confidence some have regarded him, and he is in financial matters a weak man. He knows not where and when to bind about his desire for things that come into his mind or appear to his sight. He would find a way for unlimited means to do some wonderful thing that exploded in its getting up. We must be very careful what influence we have before the world, else we be stigmatized as sharp, calculating men and women. Be careful how you build structures upon a false base. The world cannot be our criterion. We cannot connect with worldly men and yet be found faultless before God. In the world it is considered a matter of course to prevaricate, to boom everything; and pretentious deceptions are practiced, lies are spoken, lies are acted, deceptions practiced, and the conscience is silenced with the idea such things are common; but with those who are engaged in giving the last message of mercy to our world, they should keep clear of all things of this character. I could name some who are in danger in Healdsburg, if they make any trade of false representations. They have records in the books of heaven they will be ashamed to look upon—dishonesty in business transactions, breaking the commandments of God. The father of lies takes possession of mind and soul when engaged in a business transaction. They wrong their brethren by false representations, and not only their brethren, but those not of our faith. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 6

Religion is never in a single instance to give way to business; such dismiss the Word of God from their counsels. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not covet; thou shalt not bear false witness—all are violated in a dishonest action. He has in thus transgressing laid his soul a victim on the altar of mammon. He has through cupidity, through love of making the most out of the occasion for himself, deliberately set aside one of the plainest, simplest injunctions of the Word of God. The god of traffic is the god of fraud. Adventists should stand free from the slightest stain of reproach. We can see nothing so calculated to make religion an offense and the truth of God a matter of scorn as to give the impression that Adventists will take advantage of you if they can. “Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.” Romans 12:11. “Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus.” Colossians 3:17. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 7

The church in Healdsburg may stand forth as the light of the world. One pursuit, one passion, one object of interest after another sways the heart, and if these objects are not after the Bible rule, [they] involve the ruin of some one. If the eye is single to the glory of God, the object will tend to dignify and ennoble, for it is pure and holy. 4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 8

The Word of God does not repress earnestness, zeal, and activity, but opens before the worker true and holy channels through which his zeal may flow which shall not only save his own soul, but the souls of others. All who wish to advance and to rise, the Bible puts in their hands a light; and if followed, they will rise to become heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 9

The Bible points to heaven where are unsurpassed riches and treasures that cannot be estimated. To those who want happiness the Bible points to Jesus who offers peace such as the world cannot give or take away. It is the peace of God. Men have not too [many] aspirations, but they need to be directed not suppressed. Nothing that God has given to man is to be extinguished. All is to be sanctified, refined, purified, ennobled. Then let every power, every faculty be employed in the fullest sense to the glory of God, not to the glorifying of any mortal man. Praise no man, flatter no man, but praise Jesus and talk of His love and tell of His power.4LtMs, Lt 80, 1886, par. 10

Oyen, Brother

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 23, 1886

Previously unpublished.

Dear Brother Oyen:

I have felt much troubled in regard to the matter of Cecelia's going to America with you and your wife. I know that your wife is much attached to Cecelia and that you think much of her, and I am troubled over this matter. I know that the appearance is not as it should be, your work brings you in close companionship, and there are dangers in this close relationship in your work that neither of you discern. The injunction of the Word of God is to abstain from the very appearance of evil. I am now writing to different individuals who have moved blindly until they are infatuated by the devil and so ensnared that it is most difficult to recover themselves from the snare of Satan.4LtMs, Lt 81, 1886, par. 1

I consider Cecelia in great peril, and you are also in peril. You have been gaining an experience, and if you walk humbly with God, He will make you a man of usefulness, but your soul is in danger. I was shown years ago about the time of your marriage that you would fall into temptation and the grace of God alone could keep you from falling under its power, and it was through the affections and undue attachment for another Satan was making efforts to ruin you. But, my brother, you may come off conqueror. You may feel provoked with me for telling you. I shall urge Cecelia not to accompany you to America. You think too much of her, and she thinks too much of you. I am sure that it is altogether best for our brethren to find young men and educate them to labor as helpers with men. I have been shown that moral power is too feeble with many, that it is unsafe to connect men with women and girls with men, married or unmarried. If there is no evil work, there is the appearance of evil which you can and should avoid for Christ's sake.4LtMs, Lt 81, 1886, par. 2

Your wife does not seem to know or understand how to avoid temptation. She should not urge or encourage Cecelia to go with you to America. Things will transpire which will make her feel badly. Your connection in your work will arouse suspicion and excited talk. Should the mother of your wife see anything that looked as if you thought too much of Cecelia, she would make a troublesome time for you both.4LtMs, Lt 81, 1886, par. 3

It is now that you want to show yourself a man. Your wife is a sufferer, and let nothing take place which will increase her sufferings. Treat her tenderly. She is your wife; her frequent sickness is a tax to your patience, and your home is not as it should be if she were well and cheerful; but then think, I know you do much of the time, how miserably oppressed her life is with disease, and with a feeble religious experience. She cannot exercise that faith, that trust in God, so that she can derive consolation from God. Her life has been almost devoid of faith. She has sown doubt and as the sure result will harvest that which she has sown. She loves you and has confidence in you. Do nothing that shall give her the least cause to think that you do not love her. But as you value your soul, keep yourself free from the charms of every girl or woman. Make your wife as happy as you possibly can, but let no hasty, sharp words escape your lips. Bear every trial with Christian patience, cling closely to the arm of Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 81, 1886, par. 4

You will not be a free man, neither will Cecelia be a free woman, until this undue, ensnaring affection is broken entirely. It will prove a snare to you both which will, if allowed to go on, ruin you. You both have been unguarded and given occasion for remarks that your good should be evil spoken of. But for your soul's sake and for Christ's sake, do not have Cecelia go to America. I know how it would be if you would have her name ruined by being associated with you, then encourage her to go to Battle Creek.4LtMs, Lt 81, 1886, par. 5

Decker, Brother

Basel, Switzerland

February 10, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in TSB 204-206.

Dear Brother Decker:

No impurity or anything that defileth shall enter into the kingdom of God. Elder Decker, I have much distress of soul for you. I fear, yes greatly fear, you will never enter into the kingdom of God. I have much pain at heart as I consider your case, standing in the light of the delegated servant of Jesus Christ, yet so clouded with defilement that holy angels cannot come near you. It is no new thing that your thoughts are corrupted by impure desires and imaginings. You have not dismissed unlawful desires and lustful thoughts. When you met me in Healdsburg and told me that you had gained the victory, you told me a falsehood, for you knew this was not the truth.4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 1

Your past life had been presented before me as one who had no internal strength to resist evil if it puts on an inviting aspect. You have obtained the confidence of women in you as a man of piety and righteousness, then you have taken advantage of this confidence to take liberties with them—kissing them and going just as far with them in seductive, lustful practices as they would allow you to go, not only with Sister Stillman, but with others. And I am pained to the heart when I consider that you have tainted and polluted more than one or two or three or four with your insinuations and your fawning and caressing which have led souls to dissipation and vice. And you a watchman, you a shepherd!4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 2

Many have permitted these things in you that they would have repelled in another. You have made evil and lustful practices appear harmless, and some have been led away with their own lust and enticed because they had not moral courage to rebuke you, a minister, for your iniquitous practices. There have been not a few who have sacrificed conscience, peace of mind, and the favor of God, because a man whom the people have set as a watchman on the walls of Zion has been their tempter—a wolf in sheep’s clothing. And these who have been uncorrupted fall into the snare Satan, through the bad shepherd, has set for them under different pretenses and excuses. You have hid your evil heart of deadly opposition to purity and holiness. The fly enticed into the spider’s web, the fish which is lured on by the bait on the hook, has been ensnared and taken.4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 3

You have by your course of action debased sacred things to the level of the common. Many have come near being ruined who have, as it were, been plucked as a brand from the burning; but the performance of yours to break down the barriers which preserve the sanctity of the family relation between husband and wife, the arranged plans to make the wife communicate to you the secrets of her married life, induce those who are yielding in disposition, who have become captivated with you, to open their heart to you as to a Catholic confessor; and you encourage in them the thought that they have made a mistake in the married life.4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 4

In every family there are at time misunderstandings. There are thoughts and feelings expressed that Satan takes advantage of, but if both husband and wife will resist the devil and humble their hearts before God, then the difficulties soon will be healed without leaving ugly scars. But you have done a work to encourage alienation in the place of healing the difficulties; and peace of mind, harmony, and the usefulness not only of women, but of men, have been destroyed, and the seeds of licentious practices that you have sown have produced a bitter, bitter harvest. The wanderings from God in this way are common, but the fact is so few return.4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 5

The coy, complying disposition of women or girls to the advances and familiarity of men, married men, leads them to be easily entrapped. The man who should watch for souls in order to save them watches for opportunities and occasions to ruin them. There are so many who have little fixedness of principle, who come into contact with the men who preach the truth; and some of these educate and refine iniquity before them, clothing it in angel robes; and as their own hearts are not garrisoned with fixed, unswerving principles, the work of ruin is speedily accomplished. The sacred is brought down and so interwoven with lust and impure, unholy practices that the victim is confused and the soul temple becomes a sink of iniquity. At first the unsuspecting only listen; they receive the liberties of preference shown them; then the education goes on until “as an ox going to the slaughter or as a fool to the correction of the stocks” (Proverbs 7:22), they follow in the steps of the tempter and go fully as far as he would lead them. 4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par. 6

Thus the work has been and is still going on. Evenings are spent with married women and girls by married men who tell a pitiful story of unrequited love. The companion he has vowed to love and to cherish till death is represented as not appreciating his worth, his aspirations, and he leads the victim to imagine, oh, how happy they might have been if they had only been united. This is not a solitary case, but they are numerous. The men who should stand in Christ in their God-given manhood educate themselves to consider themselves as greatly abused. They have filled their houses with children for the wife to care for and manage; and yet they will, as they see her impatient, careworn, because of this great tax brought upon her, center their thoughts upon themselves. They do not have her companionship and petting and her attentions as they desire, and in the place of putting their broad shoulders under the load themselves, they shake this off and imagine they have a hard time. Now if these men had been considerate of the wife of their choice, they would not have placed these taxing burdens on the wife, and she would have fewer children and more time and strength to give to the education and training of the children. 4LtMs, Lt 82, 1886, par.

Charles:

I feel an interest in your case because Jesus died for you. Shall He have died for you in vain? Will you from this time be a Christian? Are you pleased and satisfied with the service of sin? That which ye sow ye shall also reap. What kind of a crop are you sowing? And what will the harvest be?⁴*LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 1*

“Wilt thou not from this time cry unto Me, My Father, Thou art the guide of my youth” (Jeremiah 3:4)? No halfway work will do in your case. You cannot be half on the Lord’s side. He requires all the heart without reserve. You are going in the path where Satan is leading you. You are selfish, blinded, and enslaved by sin. You have had good impulses, but have not yet experienced the regenerating grace of Christ. You are exposed to ruin, imperiling your soul, selling your soul to Satan. The powers God has given you, you are corrupting.⁴*LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 2*

A full and free salvation has been purchased for you at infinite cost, even the agony and death of the Son of God. And to those who will repent and will have true contrition of soul, forsake their sins and accept Christ as their Saviour, He will be very precious. Jesus died to draw men to a pure and holy life. A full and free pardon is offered to all who will accept it on the terms proposed; and if this salvation is neglected and despised by you, as it has been, then your case is hopeless. You are losing much every day that you occupy the position you now do. You are a channel of darkness through whom Satan works to bring others into as miserable a position as yourself. I urge upon you immediate action, that you break off your sins at once, that you leave the ranks of Satan and come under Christ’s banner.⁴*LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 3*

You have so long been instigated and controlled by Satan that nothing but a determined effort will do for you now. Be not ashamed to take your position decidedly without delay. Sign the pledge of total abstinence; leave off drinking beer, wine, or anything of the kind. Your thoughts are not pure; your heart is polluted. Your soul temple is defiled; God's name is dishonored. The evidences of a Christian life are not found in you. Should you die now, you would be lost. Make no delay. It is not too late now to perfect a Christian character, but it rests with you whether you will be in the service of God or in the service of Satan. You are either in one army or the other; there is no middle ground.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 4

Will you now see your life as it is—miserable and corrupt? Will you take your stand on the Lord's side boldly, heartily, promptly? Will you come under the Lord's banner? He will accept no halfway work. Your life hitherto has been almost an entire failure. Sin has been chosen, righteousness and godliness discarded. But if you will now turn, change your course decidedly, and seek the grace which Christ freely imparts to those who really desire it, you may yet be a true child of God, and Jesus will write pardon over against your name.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 5

God keeps what we call a reckoning with the nations and with every individual. There is a point beyond which His forbearance will not reach. It is decided by the degree of light given. God takes an account of the light and the resistance and disregard of that light; and when God's mercy has been so abundant and is despised and rejected, this mercy of God—being rejected—is changed into wrath, and His long-deferred vengeance comes upon the disobedient, unthankful, and unholy. I wish you to distinctly understand that there are limits to the forbearance of God, and it is folly and madness to pursue a course of sin as you have been doing.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 6

Do not lose sight of the principles in God's dealings with men, that a register is kept of the sins of every individual, and that with unerring accuracy of the great God, the Ruler of the heavens and of the earth. With some the figures are rapidly accumulating. God has borne with you and has given you privileges and opportunities to obtain a knowledge of His truth, of His will, and of His requirements.

But you have withdrawn yourself as much as you dared from these good influences, you have given your heart up to evil practices, and the figures in the books of heaven are increasing against you. If God does not shield you as He has done, how easily will you, in a reckless manner, which is a fault with you, expose yourself, and the protecting angels withdraw their guardianship and you lose your life.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 7

There was one who was of our number believing the truth, to whom I sent warnings and reproofs just as I am sending to you. He apparently accepted them, but did not make a decided change. Wrong habits were corrupting his soul temple, and his influence over others was not to lead them to virtue and the keeping of God's commandments. Three times I warned him. He was a man who had high aspirations and large talents for usefulness. The Lord had done much for him. Had these qualities and powers been sanctified, he would have been a bright, shining light to lead others to heaven, but he sometimes went on the enemy's ground, gratifying his own inclinations. While on a pleasure excursion he ventured to travel on the Sabbath, thinking he would attend a meeting, and thus he made an excuse. The cars came in collision, and he was killed without a moment's warning.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 8

We can none of us realize how much we need the guardianship of heavenly angels. When anyone will persist, against light and knowledge, to pursue a course of sin, God withdraws His protection from him and leaves him to the control of Satan who will gladly take him away in his sins. You are in positive danger of eternal ruin. Whose side will you be on? The time has come when your obstinacy, your determined spirit to pursue a wrong course, must be given up and you make an entire surrender to God.4LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 9

Charles, there are good qualities in you, but you are smothering them. Your success in life depends upon yourself. Accordingly as you build your own character will you stand or fall. Lay the foundation well. Let God be your wisdom and your trust. Your only safe foundation is Jesus Christ. Everything else is sliding sand. Build for time and for eternity. You want to cultivate manliness, strict fidelity, gentleness, thoroughness, perseverance, and obedience to the Word of God. Cultivate industry, and ever be faithful and true wherever you may be employed. Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well. Study the guide, God's Word, which teaches you the way to heaven.⁴*LtMs, Lt 83, 1886, par. 10*

Elder Butler and Elder Haskell

Dear Brethren:

I arise this morning when all are sleeping, being unable to sleep since half-past two o'clock. Many things urge themselves upon my mind which it is difficult for me to drop. We received your letter written from Portland, Maine, last evening. We are always glad to hear from either of you because we expect to learn the real condition of the cause.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 1

I was glad to learn of Elder Butler's taking rest. You have lost nothing by this, and the cause of God will be much better served in your so doing, for you will go to work with much better vigor than if you had kept on and on constantly, as in a treadmill. Elder Haskell should also have had the same rest.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 2

That which you write in reference to South Lancaster I admit is a little perplexing, but much of the perplexity might be avoided. If the old hands there who are troubled and perplexed would not hold so tenaciously to their own ideas and plans as infallible, the Lord would have some chance to do something for them by His Holy Spirit's power. I see no reason why the lessons that God would have these learn cannot be accepted now, just now, as to wait and wait, and go on in a course that they cannot maintain. I believed that Professor Ramsey would be enabled to correct some things that if permitted to go on would run out your school in South Lancaster. The plan of continually watching the students as if you had no confidence in them, as if they had no principles, will certainly bring about the very things you would avoid. I do not believe in this way of management.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 3

I do not believe in making the table a place where all are under suppression, but a place of cheerfulness, a place where gratitude and kindness and love should flow out spontaneously toward each other. I do not believe in putting the youth into straightjackets. I am against all these things. It is because I know of the inability of some connected with the school to place a right mold on the work—although they would die martyrs in making it prosper—that I felt sure a different element would need to be introduced into the school to prevent a state of things which was coming in and which was not a correct stamp to give to the students and the work.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 4

This is why I thought Professor Ramsey would work in an opposite direction and save the school from becoming that which it should not be, narrow and finally extinct. I see no reason why Professor Ramsey cannot serve you well, but the way to work with him is not to find fault with him, but to bring the truth to bear upon his conscience and convince him religiously of the errors that may endanger the school in becoming a worldly institution. The talent Professor Ramsey possesses, balanced by religious principle, is of great value. Without the controlling influence of the Spirit of God, it will take on the worldly mold. But if you expect ever that Professor Ramsey will bring himself into the ideas and the ways and plans of some of these good souls in South Lancaster in the running of the school, you might just as well give it up, for he will never do it—and I hope he never will. While Professor Ramsey is in danger of having the religious element subordinate to the educational, unless controlled by the Spirit of the Lord, those who have managed are in danger of becoming and maintaining a pharisaical narrowness, a sharp, critical spirit, which will make that school anything but that which God would have it.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 5

Here are two extremes, and both need the direct, melting, subduing Spirit of God; and when Christ reigns in the hearts of its managers, angels of God will minister in the school. But so long as there is a spirit of jealousy and evil surmising, suspicion and distrust will prevail, and this is the kind of seed that will be sown; and it will yield an abundant harvest. We see in the life of Christ that He met the people where they were and took them with Him in His way. He did not denounce them, but He sought to come as close to them as possible, that He might reflect light upon them. There must be a happy vein running through all our religious experience if we expect to be a channel of light, if we expect to win souls to Christ.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 6

There is far more pharisaism among our people than they suppose. This has no Saviour in it. That makes us in danger of being rigorous and gloomy, as though Jesus were still in Joseph's tomb. We want our attitude in the religious life to be one of peace, happiness, and joy. Jesus is not dead. We have a living Saviour, One who is making intercession for us and who bears our cases by name before the Father. We want to cultivate more joy and bring attractiveness into the religious life, everything testifying that we have a risen Saviour, a living Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 7

There are those who have never studied human nature, those who know not how to deal with human minds, those who act as though it were a sin to smile and to show joy and gladness. This is the spirit that is separating them far from the youth, that they cannot understand them. This is what I have been shown, and I know it is truth, but I had hoped that general principles laid down would correct the evils that seemed to be steadily growing. This order of things I knew must change.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 8

I should feel sorry to have any one of the old, tried hands disconnect from the school, because they will have their lesson to learn and might as well learn it first as last—that there is with them altogether too much criticism, too much watching the youth, too much expected of them, and too little pity and sympathy for them who have inherited tendencies to evil and who have had a wrong education and training. All these need careful, patient study of character and need to have those deal with them who have a large stock of grace and forbearance, sympathy, tenderheartedness, and love. The most erring are the very ones they ought to seek to help the more earnestly, because they are the most needy. Seek to bind their hearts to your heart by the tenderest cords of affection. This work done for them, and done well, will be putting out the talents to good interest, for one scholar educated by precept and example, with right instruction, with correct habits, with gentleness, with love and courtesy, will influence many others both by precept and example, and the labor in talents invested will accumulate.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 9

The great lessons to be learned are how to bind them to your heart, then how to hold them by affection and love. Once obtain their confidence and let them see you are interested in them, and they will be much more likely to obey and come into subjection. Let them think you are suspicing them and that you have no confidence in them, but must watch and restrain and command, and they will have no confidence in their teachers.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 10

I believe Professor Ramsey and the old hands can harmonize. Let them remember the words of Christ, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." [Matthew 9:13.] We are working in the establishment of schools that give proper instruction to reform characters. We are dealing with those who need everything done for them after the similitude of Christ's work, and this work of reformation can be done only by faith and love.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 11

Now, should our old hands leave the school, God will surely bring them into other positions to learn the lessons they will need to learn, which I know they must learn, in bringing into their management more of the love of Jesus and far less suspicion and criticism.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 12

I like not these complaints which you make of Sister Harris. I believe her to be a woman who understands many things better than some would give her credit for. I hope you will, Brother Haskell, be careful how Sister Harris' judgment and counsel are treated. God loves her, although she, as well as the rest in South Lancaster, may err.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 13

Things may be framed in the mind of Elder Haskell that, as the circumstances arise and matters develop, will make a change in his ideas because he is impressed by the Spirit of God at the right time. But if Elder Haskell or Elder Butler lays out a program which teachers must work to carry out, these teachers may not be clear-sighted to discriminate the effects of such a program, and the necessity of modifying the training principle in some respects, as he would do himself if he had the work to do.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par.

If Elder Haskell were on the ground under all and every circumstance, then I believe he could counsel and advise. But when he marks out a plan to work [toward] and is away himself, and those who are doing the work have a prescribed plan that he has fashioned for them, they do not use their own reason, but use the mind and plans of Elder Haskell, which may not always be safe to follow because God is constantly at work in His providence, and a change may be necessary. Were Elder Haskell on the ground, he might steer the ship so that it would clear the breakers. But those who have submitted to do just as other minds have planned can never be trusted in an emergency, for they will make mistakes in following laid-down plans [and] prescribed rules, to the letter, which may bind about the work. 4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 15

I wish to impress some things upon your minds. Our teachers and the preceptor of the school need the transforming grace of Christ. They do not know that self holds a large place in their experience. Christ must be enthroned in every heart, else self will be seated upon the throne. I have been shown that there has been a principle cherished, not designedly but ignorantly, that every sin of students may be forgiven but the one of casting any criticism or censure upon the teachers. The slightest deviation in this line is treated as the sin which cannot be atoned for. [But] the Majesty of heaven was spoken against, derided, insulted, mocked, and charged with having a devil. [Yet] He did not cast off those poor souls. He loved them. He labored for them. He saved the erring. More of Christ, brethren, and less of self. 4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 16

I feel so humiliated over the great estimate even some of my best brethren have in regard to my work in this respect. I think I will not take the least notice of their surmisings that my burden has been gathered up from what someone has told me. They must have a wonderful faith in my mission and my work. Those matters I have sought to correct have been urged upon my soul by the Spirit of God. 4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 17

In regard to Albert Harris, I have but little confidence in the conjectures and the position my good friends take in this matter. I find in place of our brethren and sisters seriously thinking they may not move wisely in all things, and that there may possibly be a necessity of change in their plans, they put all their powers to work to see who it is that is their enemy that has prejudiced Sister White. Do my friends in South Lancaster think their work is perfect? I think if they would just heed the light God has given them, and admit that their ways and plans may possibly need remodeling, then all this terrible burden and fearful discouragement would no longer exist. But when the Lord would correct some of our ways, and mold us as clay is molded in the hands of the potter, there is a surprising protest; there is an unwillingness to be molded. Self asserts its right to remain just as it is. What is wanted is more meekness, more lowliness, less of self, and a great deal more good, sweet, humble religion. When the Spirit of God melts us over, then self will be hid in Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 18

When Elder Canright began in Worcester, after he had started the work there and had it well going, two tents might have been run just as well as one with but little extra expense. But our brethren could not take in the situation. They could not plan, because Brother Haskell could not be there to plan for them. I saw that a much greater work might have been accomplished, perhaps treble, but men who had the entire charge of the work were not broad in their plans. They had been accustomed to following Elder Haskell's plans. They could do nothing aside from his counsel. When deprived of this, they could not show tact to make the most of the opportunity.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 19

It is these things the Spirit of the Lord would seek to correct. Men must have wisdom from God daily and give God plenty of room to work and plan for them and not get in the Lord's way. Until we have men who will have brains and will use them, we shall find difficulties.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 20

Our labor since we came to Europe has been to break up, if possible, the idea of one man's mind and plans and stamp being placed on the several branches of the work. It has been hard work to change this and bring in a different order of things. Elder Daniel Bourdeau was determined to mold everything among the French; and after we have gained a victory on this point in every field, the battle has to be fought all over again. I might write a volume upon this matter since I came here. The facts of the case are, the potter must mold the clay, not the clay take any shape it chooses and then want every vessel to meet its exact dimensions and form.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 21

In England Brother Wilcox and Sister Thayer set their heads together to carry everything their way. We found the girls in the office standing upon their feet to fold and to stitch, to do all their work, because Elder Wilcox and Sister Thayer said they must not sit down because it made them do their work lazily. These girls were ready to faint with weariness. The tables were made high on purpose to put them to the necessity of standing. To some it was torture in their work. I thought then and since, What fools some people will make of themselves if they just have a little managing to do and others under their control! All these cast iron regulations show a narrowness of mind that to me is contemptible. Mercy and the love of God seem to be dropped out of their nature and their character.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 22

Jealousy—I find here in Europe a plenty of it! All it needed was the sight of our own eyes to understand a reform was needed. These dear souls, so free to control and so free to manage, were the most unwilling to be managed and controlled themselves. If their course was questioned, then it was intimated that some one had told us. Brother and Sister Lane had been talking about them and wanted to shove them out.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 23

Sister Thayer told me she had decided to go to America, and when I commenced to urge that she could not be spared if Brother Wilcox went, then she showed that her purpose was unalterable. She should go to America. And when it was decided she could go—thinking it would be the best thing, taking all things into account—and Brother Wilcox would stay another year, then she said she had changed her mind; she did not want to go to America, and she acted as though she was being pushed out. And Brother and Sister Lane and Willie White have the credit of being at the bottom of the matter. Nothing could be more wide from the truth.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 24

But I think we are all more or less grown-up children. Manhood or womanhood comes slowly to some, and those who are apparently the most conscientious need the melting, subduing spirit of Jesus before they can be of great worth in the noble work in which we are engaged. Weakness crops out on every side, showing a selfishness that is alarming and a want of the spirit of Christ in all that they do. What is wanted is more of Jesus and less of self. Oh, that all would see they must wash their robe of character and make it pure in the blood of the Lamb.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 25

In Denmark, Sweden, and Norway we found the same thing. Elder Matteson was molding and fashioning everything; and as we began to correct things, there was a stir in the camp. Sister Matteson charged upon one and another that they had been reporting to Sister White. Brother Hanson's case was and still is critical, because Brother Matteson had linked with him, sustained him in a wrong course, and they stood together. Brother Matteson would go to Brother Hanson when reproved, and when reproved, Brother Hanson would go to Brother Matteson. I have written most clearly pointed letters. The result has been what might be expected. Neither Sister Matteson nor her husband believed the testimonies, and yet I consented to go to labor in their kingdoms again. Elder Matteson was determined to throw off every responsibility, and I talked with him in private a long time. I told him I would not advise him to take that course. "Why," he says, "if I have placed a wrong mold on the work and I am, according to the testimony, leaving everything unfinished and imperfect, the sooner I am out of the way, the better." I said, "Not so, Elder Matteson. The sooner you get rid of the peculiarities which Elder Matteson has fastened upon the work, the better. If you balk in the harness now, you will be a ruined man. If you want to see your imperfections and put them away, just as the Lord has shown you that you must do, then you will be a more useful worker for God than you have hitherto been. But you never should have been under the necessity of being a manager alone. You have worked hard. We know that you love the work. We want you to triumph with the success of the truth. But I tell you, every word in the testimony is true in regard to you, and God wants to save you, but you must be molded as clay is molded in the hands of the potter. I shall not abate one jot of the plain reproofs now or in time to come, but I shall cling to you, I shall pray for you, I shall feel kindly and tenderly toward you. I look upon you as a man who has worked hard, but is full of defects that God would take away from you if you will let Him.”4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 26

I just labored as a mother would labor for her children—just as I have labored for my own sons. And after I had told him the most cutting things, then I treated him and her with all the deference and respect and tenderness possible. He would stand by my side and translate. On some occasions the power of God was so manifestly upon me that Elder Matteson was almost overwhelmed himself. Once, when speaking of the plan of redemption, for two or three sentences I forgot that the words must be translated. I seemed to be in the very presence of Christ before the throne of God. I think these things have had a marked impression upon Elder Matteson. I have held him firmly by faith. None but God Himself knows the battles we have had to fight, but we were driven to prayer and to God for counsel.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 27

I believe I have not shunned to declare the counsel of God in these difficult cases. And just as soon as my work is done here, I believe I shall be only too happy to return to America. What the Lord has for me to do in the future I do not worry about at all. I just take up my duty for today, and I feel a sweet confidence and trust in God that passes my understanding. I feel no concern for home losses that may occur; this does not trouble me. All my anxiety is to do my work by the day in such a manner that God can accept me and my work.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 28

I am glad if Elder Matteson will come out decided on the testimonies. I told him he did not believe them, that his wife did not believe, but that did not separate me from either of them—that I should be true to them till the last.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 29

I believe the very best thing that Elder [D. A.] Robinson can do is to go into some place where he will work under no man’s directions. His burden has been heavy, fearing that he should not carry out to the letter the orders given to him. May God help him, for I believe him to be a sincere, honest man, and he should never have been manipulated by another man’s mind. He needs to be in the hands of the Potter, to be molded in some things. Sister [Maria L.] Huntley I believe to be an excellent sister, but neither of these, with their present mold, is fitted for the work connected with the school. Brother Ramsey needs a daily experience in the things of God. Then he can do a good work in the school.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 30

I hope there will be no enlargement of buildings in South Lancaster until there is an enlargement of ability and capability to manage; and if our good brethren and sisters there have decided that they cannot be molded in any way and cannot change their course, if they regard their own ways perfect and needing no reform, if they cannot connect with the school at South Lancaster and broaden and widen and outgrow their narrow plans and management, one of two things must be done. They must be separated from the school, or it must be closed up. Consistency is a jewel, but I am more pained than I can express to see the real outworkings of the reputed faith of our own people. In my work and testimonies I see that when self is interfered with, the faith is very tottering. Men hold to their ways, their plans, their ideas, and then question where I have received my ideas in reference to themselves.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 31

Well, so it is; so it was in Christ's day, and so it will be. Self, self is not dead yet. Christ is not controlling yet. And the work is bound about and crippled just because Jesus is not brought into the everyday life. Pharisaism is thought to be genuine piety. Oh, the love of Christ—how it needs to come into the heart and into the life and into the character! I am alarmed for our brethren and sisters, for I see they need the converting power of God. The very ones who could do the most good, the very ones who could be the greatest blessing, need less pharisaism and more mercy and the love of God. I will seek the Lord; I will watch unto prayer; I will not exalt self, for I see so much of this my soul is sick and distressed.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 32

I sent you a letter to be read to Elder Waggoner, and I hope you will see this case fairly settled before you leave him. We need just such a man as God wants Elder Waggoner to be. We want a man that has his capabilities, his experience, and not his weaknesses. Save him if you can, brethren. Satan is trying hard for his soul. He has nearly made shipwreck of his bark; but, oh, if he will let Jesus take the helm, then he will right up his bark, that it shall not be wrecked. We must not give place to the devil. We must not become discouraged. We must not faint by the way. We must cling with both hands to Jesus. Talk faith, live faith; hold fast to Jesus, and He will hold fast to us. A great work is to be done. We must keep strong in spirit and not let Satan have any victory. I tell you, brethren, the truth will finally triumph, and we want to pursue such a course that we may triumph with it.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 33

I am much blessed of the Lord, although very much burdened, and I love Jesus with my whole affections. I think our warfare must be nearly ended. I think we are nearing home. I am rejoiced to think the rest will soon come, but even here in this hope I am not in a hurry. I want to do all my work with patience and fidelity day by day, and there are many souls to be saved, and we will be glad that the coming of the Lord is delayed to give them a little more opportunity to get ready. But once saved in the kingdom of God—only think of it—once beyond the temptations and warfare of this life, once in the haven of rest, in the presence of our adorable Redeemer—what will it be! These light afflictions, Paul says, which are but for a moment, “worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen.” [2 Corinthians 4:17, 18.] God help us to look at the brightness of our Saviour’s countenance, and clouds will be dispelled. We must have more faith.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 34

The bell has just sounded for breakfast, and I have written sixteen pages.4LtMs, Lt 84, 1886, par. 35

Children

Great Grimsby, England

Previously unpublished.

Dear Children:

We arrived here today at half-past ten A.M. The night we left Basel we did not any of us sleep much. At midnight—at Delmo, I think it was—we had to all go to the custom house for our things to get a mark upon them. They were not examined.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 1

The seats were very hard, and every bone in my body ached. I was the only one who could lie down. I partially straightened myself. Sarah says she did not sleep much. Brother AuFranc [?] we know did not sleep scarcely any. He was sightseeing by moonlight. He testifies Sarah slept with her mouth wide open and that she looked very curious. We took a good breakfast and dinner from the telescope. It was all good, but how I did wish Bruno had the meat. He would have appreciated it. We did not. It seemed dry and tough and tasteless. The tomatoes were excellent.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 2

We went on the boat, glad that it was to be but a two-hour trip, but we had a very stirring east wind which did not agree with our stomachs. Sarah, I believe, was the first one who behaved badly. She began to throw up. I sweat and held firm for nearly one hour. Men and women were sick—no accommodations for them, but to sit up and just bend to the task of emptying their stomachs, which was the easiest job of the kind I ever did. We just rolled and heaved and pitched. Sarah lay down flat on the floor with her head on a box, and she slept some. I envied her the privilege of lying down, but there was no possible chance for me to lie down. I was sick, earnestly sick—lost both breakfast and dinner.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 3

We had to undo the roll, but none of us had sufficient energy to put it together again. It was an astonishing-looking bundle; looked some as though we had a child smuggling through. Brother AuFranc was sick, and yet when he saw the sorry-looking bundle, he had force enough left to get it into decent shape. This delayed us so that we were near the very last to step from the boat. When we sought for a compartment, all the second class was full. The conductor opened one of the finest first-class compartments, placed our baggage in, and helped us in. I think we were a pale, wretched-looking set that touched his heart with sympathy, and he told us to stay in that car. He would make it all right, and he watched us as faithfully as a mother watches her child until he saw us off the train and had a porter bring us our trunk. In this softly cushioned car we slept some and rested much.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 4

Brother AuFranc was like a boy taken up with what he could see. Sarah was sufficient for the occasion, as usual. She spoke for a four-wheeled cab, and all our belongings were taken in it, and we drove to the Great Northern depot, deposited our trunk, sent a dispatch to S. H. Lane, and drove across the road to the Great Northern Hotel and there ordered hot drink to our room. We had excellent beds and everything clean and sweet. Had to pay for our drinks and a plate of English thin-sliced bread, buttered as usual, fifty cents. Twelve shillings for our lodgings.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 5

We slept quite well. I awakened at three, and at four Sarah awoke. She looked at her watch and said it was five o'clock, but her watch did not tell the truth. The cars left quarter after five. We had our things on "Strase" (Street) and were doing up the bundle when she found out it was the watch that was wrong. We had to change cars at Peterborough and Boston. We were on the fast train as far as Peterborough. Then the train stopped at every way-station, and we went quite slow till we reached Grimsby.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 6

Sister Ings and Brother Wilcox met us. We were glad, I tell you, to see them. We are here all safe, not exactly straight in our feelings yet. We took our breakfast on the car, and I ate one of the turnovers and a couple of rolls and relished them. The rolls were so good, never tasted as good before. The turnovers were good. Thank

Marian for brightening our metallic clasps; they looked very nice.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 7

We find all of good courage here. I have not as yet had much talk with Brother Wilcox and H. S. Lane, but they do not seem to be at all discouraged. Brother Olsen will not be here, or Brother Oyen, until week after next. So they will not have any help from these. I told them you would not be here until next week. They are anxious to have you come as soon as you can conveniently.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 8

Mary, please to get my medal in the drawer of the commode and send to me by Willie. I think it would be well to bring my small writing board. Sarah says she wants that skin she cleans her machine with.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 9

It is cold here. We have a fire in our room, a stove, so we can keep comfortable. It is sunshiny and pleasant today. I may think of something more to send for tomorrow.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 10

My head is not as clear as I could wish. I have felt grateful to God for His mercy and loving kindness to us, and I want to have strength to do the will of God from the heart. This morning when I awoke at three o'clock, I felt comforted and blessed and grateful and happy.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 11

Mary, I beseech of you to take the very best care of yourself. You need to be cautious and not be imprudent in any way. Do not drive the horse alone down street; have someone with you. Be cheerful and happy. Well, this is a poor kind of a letter. Hope to have something to write about next time.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 12

Much love to all in the family, especially my little Ella.4LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 13

Mother.

This letter should have gone out last night, but we were not soon enough. Look out and have clothing for raw, cold climate. We had a sunshiny day yesterday. I think it will be pleasant today. I shall walk considerable and see if I cannot obtain physical stamina and shall keep myself in as good condition as possible.⁴*LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 14*

Willie, I did not take any of those books with my pieces pasted into them, morning talks and other articles. I think you had better bring them. We may find time to work at them some.⁴*LtMs, Lt 84a, 1886, par. 15*

Lt 85, 1886

Smith, Uriah

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 24, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in UL 219; 6MR 144.

Dear Brother Smith:

I received your letter while at Basel, and be assured I was much pleased to hear from you from Colorado; and I am pleased every time I hear from you away from your home engaged in labor, because I believe your discourses are needed and that they will do much good.⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 1*

I was pleased with the news contained in your letter. When so far away from America and with friends who cannot speak your own language, every epistle from old friends is as cold water to a thirsty soul. I think of you and your family, especially your wife, and pray for you that the blessing of the Lord may rest upon you all. Our acquaintance commenced many years ago, more than thirty years, I think; longer with your wife, about forty years. We can review the work, then small and bound about with poverty, and yet the word has come to us again and again, "Go forward." [Exodus 14:15.] Amid discouragement and financial embarrassment of the cause, the same word has been sounded to us, "Go forward." And now we look back and see all the way the Lord has led us step by step in advancement these many years, and yet the same voice is making itself heard, "Go forward."⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 2*

We have as a people been singularly led. There have been apostasies, there have been threatened dangers, there have been the deep plots laid by the adversary of souls, but still we are on the move "Forward." There have been sins among us as among ancient Israel, but thank God we have had an open door which no man can shut. Men may say, "I forgive all the injuries you have done to me," but their forgiveness would not blot out one sin; but the voice sounding from Calvary—My son, My daughter, thy sins be forgiven thee—is all efficacious. That word alone has power and awakens the gratitude in the grateful heart. We have a Mediator. There is but one channel of forgiveness and that channel is ever open, and through that channel a rich flood of divine mercy and forgiveness come pouring down to us. “The cleansing stream I see, I see,” and the greatest criminal may find pardon.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 3

Many have expressed wonder that God demanded so many slain victims in sacrificial offerings of the Jews, but it was to rivet in their minds the great and solemn truth that without shedding of blood there was no remission of sins. A lesson was embodied in every sacrifice, impressed in every ceremony, solemnly preached by their priests in holy office and inculcated by God Himself—this great truth that through the blood of Christ alone there is forgiveness of sins. How little we feel the force of this great truth as a people! How little, by living, acting faith, do we bring this great truth into our lives—that there is forgiveness for the least sin, forgiveness for the greatest sins.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 4

I wish I could present this matter before our people just as I view it—the great offering made in behalf of man. Justice asked for the sufferings of a man. Christ, equal with God, gave the sufferings of a God. He needed no atonement Himself. It was for man—all for man. All His sufferings were in our behalf, and accessible to us is His free pardon. The sufferings of Christ corresponded with His spotless purity. His depth of agony was proportionate to the dignity and grandeur of His character. Never shall we see and comprehend the intense anguish of the sufferings of the spotless Lamb of God until we feel how deep is the pit from which we have been delivered, how grievous the sin of which humanity is guilty, and by faith grasp the full and entire pardon.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 5

Here is where thousands are failing. They do not really believe that Jesus pardons them individually. They fail to take God at His word. He has assured us that He is faithful that hath promised to forgive us and be just to His own law. His mercy is not wanting in anything. Were there one defective link in the chain, then we are hopelessly ruined in our sins. But I would if I could sound the glad note to earth’s remotest bounds, “If any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.” [1 John 2:1.] His mercy is full. The chain is perfect in all its parts. There is not one flaw in it, not one missing link. Oh, precious redemption! Why do we not bring this great truth more fully into our lives? How broad it is that God for Christ's sake forgives us—me, even me—the moment we ask Him to, in living faith, believing that He is fully able to do this. He delights in mercy. Glorious truth: “If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.” [1 John 1:9.] Just to His own law and yet the Justifier of all them that believe. Well may we exclaim with the prophet, “Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of His heritage? He retaineth not His anger for ever, because He delighteth in mercy.” [Micah 7:18.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 6*

I wish that those who are so often in gloom, gathering the clouds of darkness about their souls, would just make it a business one hour of each day to search the Scriptures and string together the precious promises, as if they were precious pearls. Let them dwell especially upon the mercy and the forgiveness of sins. I think many who have walked under a cloud all their lives would open their eyes with amazement and view the channels of mercies from God rather than the clouds loaded with denunciations and wrath.⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 7*

We need, as a people, greater faith in Jesus Christ. We need to bring Him into our lives. Then we shall have peace. We shall have joy. We shall know by experience the meaning of the words of Jesus, “If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments, and abide in His love.” [John 15:10.] Here our faith must come in to claim the promise that we abide in the love of Jesus. “These things I have spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is My commandment, That ye love one another as I have loved you.” [Verses 11, 12.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 8*

Precious opportunities and privileges are granted to us to be a light and blessing to others, talking to them, revealing to them that you gather the sunbeams from heaven to your own soul by believing just what the Lord says. These precious rays of cheerful hope and peace and fulness of joy we can bring into our lives and in so doing into the lives of all with whom we associate. We will inspire hope in the place of strengthening unbelief. 4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 9

It is my privilege to feel that I am forgiven. It is the privilege of all who comply with the conditions to have an experimental faith, to know for themselves that Jesus does pardon. When we confess our sins, His word is pledged that He will forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Put away unbelief, put away the suspicion that God does not mean these promises for you. They are for every sinner that repents, and you dishonor God by your unbelief. Let us pick up the precious pearls of promises in God's Word, and in thus doing eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of God. "My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed." "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." [John 6:55, 63.] "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." [John 1:14.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 10

Let those who have been in doubt only believe the words of Jesus fully, and henceforth there will be rejoicing in the blessedness of sins forgiven. They will have a practical experience of what it is to rely upon the sure Word of God. Having confidence toward God, relying upon the riches of mercy, we show that we honor God. And He declares, "Them that honor Me I will honor." [1 Samuel 2:30.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 11

We keep the Saviour too far apart from our lives. We want Him abiding with us as an honored, trusted Friend. We want to consult Him in all things. We want to tell Him all our trials and then let His peace into our souls, and let our joy be full as we contemplate that this Jesus is our Saviour, that He has said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." [Matthew 28:20.] Let the peace and joy of heaven into our hearts, and let them be expressed by our lips. Let us make melody to God, and the sunshine of heaven will be reflected to others around us.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 12

I have arisen early, have written these four pages, and yet all are sleeping. I did not think to write just as I have done, but some way my heart is full of this matter. It comes right out without effort. I have had more peace and confidence in God and real heavenly joy within a few months than at any other period in my life. I know not as I shall ever see my home again in California. I do not know what is before me, but I have no anxiety. I trust my all—soul, body, and spirit—in the hands of God. He will keep that which I have committed to His trust against that day. I feel now that I want to lead every soul to that confidence, that faith, that will lead to the honoring of God by bringing all the heaven possible into their lives. The cold shadows have passed away; the precious light shineth. The Lord is good; His mercy endureth forever, are the words that are treasured in my heart and find utterance from my lips.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 13

The prophet of old asked, “Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before Him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.” [Micah 6:6-8].4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 14

In the light of divine revelation, through the atoning sacrifice we may see the glorious plan of redemption whereby my sins are pardoned and I am drawn near to the heart of Infinite Love. We see how God can retain all His justice and yet pardon the transgressor of His law. He can retain all His holiness and reveal it to us in greater glory in cleansing us from all sin. We are not simply forgiven, but accepted of God in the Beloved.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 15

The plan of redemption is not merely an escape from the penalty of transgression, that we may be tolerated in heaven as a forgiven culprit, pardoned and released from prison, one who is barely tolerated, but not admitted to friendship and trust. We are not to be thus in heaven—merely admitted. Such a reception would be all that we deserve, but unsatisfying. We want to be taken back to confidence and love, not only to be rescued from the curse, but to be welcomed as accepted children, to be blessed of God. And we shall be amply satisfied. The sacrifice of Jesus Christ has made ample provisions for every repenting, believing soul. We are saved because God loves the purchase of the blood of Christ; and not only will He pardon the repenting, believing sinner, but He will take us back—not only barely permit us to come into heaven, but He, the Father, will wait at the very entrance to welcome us, to give us an abundant entrance to the mansions of the blest.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 16

Oh what love, what wondrous love! In the gift of His beloved Son, the Father has shown His love for the fallen race, and through this sacrifice made a channel for the outflow of His infinite love, that all who will believe on Jesus Christ may be restored again to His favor.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 17

The parable of the prodigal son represents the way that God will deal with the erring who come back in repentance to Him again. Have we not grand themes for thought and a solid foundation for our faith? What more can we ask of God than that which He has given us? Love, infinite love in Jesus' being our sacrifice. Believing on Him we will be obedient to all of God's commandments, and we have life in Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 18

Oh, what joy should fill the heart of the Christian, and what expressions of love should be heard from his lips! Jesus has died for me, making it possible for me to keep the law of God, His filling in the perfection where I cannot supply it. He is making an atonement for me, that I may be one with the Father. Then if I accept by faith this wonderful salvation, I shall never perish as a guilty transgressor of God's holy, immutable law. Then why should we not have that earnest, living faith, that perfect confidence that in Christ we shall have eternal life?4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 19

Many fail to act upon this faith, and therefore God is dishonored. They go forth in the world, as if under a weight of woe and condemnation, when they might have peace and comfort, hope, and fulness of joy. Jesus brought into their life would make them happy indeed. Oh, why will we, when we have such expressions of God's love to us, act as if we were continually suspicious of God? Well may He ask, What more could I do for My vineyard that I have not done in it?4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 20

Let us honor God by believing His Word implicitly. We have not a Saviour in Joseph's new tomb and a great stone before the door of the sepulchre. Jesus is not dead. We have a Saviour who has risen from the dead, who is ascended up on high and ever liveth to make intercession for us. Be not weeping, like Mary, because they have taken away our Lord and we know not where they have laid Him. We know where Jesus is—in the presence of the Father to make intercession for us. We have a living Saviour.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 21

How can men live in transgression of God's law and yet think that they can claim the virtues of the atoning sacrifice? Why cannot those who claim to understand the Scriptures see that the requirement God makes in grace is just the requirement that God made in Eden—perfect obedience to His law? In the retributive judgment, God will ask those who professed to be Christians, Why did you claim to believe in Jesus and continue to transgress My law? Who required this at your hands, to trample upon My rules of righteousness? "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." [1 Samuel 15:22.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 22

The gospel of good news was not to be interpreted by you, that henceforth man might live in continued rebellion against God by transgressing His just and holy law. The gospel is not law diluted or done away. The New Testament is not the Old Testament standard lowered to meet the sinner and save him in his sins. God requires of all His subjects obedience, entire obedience to His commandments. He demands now, as He has ever demanded, a perfect righteousness as the only title to heaven. Christ is our hope and our refuge. His righteousness is only imputed to the obedient. Through faith we must accept the righteousness of Christ, but no one will have any right to claim that righteousness who has dishonored God by trampling upon His holy law. Oh, that we might view the immensity of the plan of salvation! As obedient children to all God's requirements, resting, believing, we have peace with God through Jesus Christ, our atoning sacrifice.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 23

We have been here in Copenhagen one week. The Lord has strengthened me to speak to the people twice at length and five times for one half an hour in our morning meetings for the benefit of those who anticipate giving themselves to the missionary work. Although I have to speak through an interpreter, yet my soul is often blessed, and I feel the power of the truth upon my own heart, and the blessing of the Lord rests upon those who hear. We have social meetings after prayer, and morning talks. The testimonies are interpreted to us, and I can see that these people have a similar experience to those in America. Some I think appreciate these simple talks as highly as do our brethren and sisters in America, although they do not come to them directly in their own language.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 24

Several have embraced the truth since we visited Copenhagen last fall. These we consider valuable if they only continue to follow on in their search of the Bible for the truth as it is in Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 25

Day before yesterday the Lord blessed us indeed with His Holy Spirit, as I made remarks from these words: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." [Romans 12:11.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 26

One intelligent-looking gentleman, a Dane, arose and made remarks like this: he said he had not found much good in Copenhagen. He had not visited Copenhagen for nine years, but he praised the Lord that he was permitted to be in this meeting. He had never heard such wonderful things before. He thought the time had come that is spoken of by the prophet, "I will pour out of My spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions." [Joel 2:28; Acts 2:17.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 27

This man's wife had kept the Sabbath for years, and was a devoted Christian, and he had opposed her bitterly. He stated he wished to be with this people. After meeting, his wife came and spoke to me in Danish, pointing to heaven. I could not understand her, but she grasped my hand and held it firmly. She kissed me again and again, thanking the Lord. Sister Matteson came as an interpreter and told me that she said she had manifested this freedom because she was acquainted with me through my writings which had been a great blessing to her. She hoped to meet me in heaven.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 28

We feel grateful for these tokens of good. There are precious ones who believe, here in Copenhagen. There has been a good interest from outsiders to attend our meetings. The hall has been filled evenings. We were glad to see the spirit of labor upon some here newly come to the faith. Some expressed great anxiety for the work in this large city. They appealed to us not to leave them and let the present interest die away. They importuned for someone to remain who would continue to present the truth. We know this should be thus, but who? Brother Matteson had his work arranged to go to Stockholm, that great city, to do what he can for them. Elder Olsen is to commence an effort with the tent in connection with his brother Edwin Olsen. This meeting is to be a special means of instruction to those who are just commencing to preach and do missionary work.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 29

I have been shown that much has been lost to the cause of God in not giving the workers thorough instruction as to how to do their work in a most thorough manner, freeing from the work all eccentricities and the peculiar traits of character of the worker, that a wrong mold shall not be given to the character of others who embrace the truth. If Elder Olsen can, with his experience and with the blessing of God, do this important work of teaching from five to ten men how to labor in a thorough, correct manner, then wherever these men shall labor, they will give to others the same lessons that have been given them, and the cause of God will be in a much more favorable condition every year. If one half of the strength and time expended in sermonizing had been devoted to thorough, systematic training of those who act any part in the work, there would be much greater success attending the efforts made by the workers, and the cause of truth would stand higher by fifty per cent than it stands today in many conferences in America.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 30

This work should be taken hold of as it has never been done heretofore. God will bless the efforts made in this direction. God is not pleased with some who have felt competent to enter the harvest field. Their own souls are defiled with sin, and God will not work with them, and He will not bless them. They are not diligent students of the Scriptures. They have no vital connection with God and are a curse to the cause of God. They mar God's work whenever they touch it. They need the converting power of God, a cleansing of the soul temple. They need to understand the Scriptures. They have a runway of a few discourses, but that is all. We want special efforts made in these kingdoms to give the sacred work of God the divine mold by educating and training workers before they shall go out to labor for others.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 31

Elder Matteson has consented to remain and work here for some weeks. This is a great city, and how are they to be warned? This is the problem, with no more workers than we now have. It is a constant study, How shall we get the truth before the people in Europe? Why, we inquire, do not some of these nationalities who have received the truth in America become burdened over their countrymen and become missionaries for God? "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." [Daniel 12:3.]4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 32

I have much more I desire to say, but will not weary you with my already long epistle.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 33

With much love.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 34

If you can use any part of this for the paper, you may do so.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 35

We would not love to live in this country, for the first of July the sun did not set before 9 o'clock, and rises at three. It is scarcely really dark all night. We do not feel like going to bed in broad daylight and remaining in bed when the sun shines brightly in the heavens, so our nights are cut short at both ends. In the winter we found the same difficulty with the shortness of the days. The sun set at little past three, and we did not see it in Christiania till about nine o'clock A. M.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 36

Six o'clock P. M. We have returned from meeting. The Lord gave me great freedom in speaking to the people. There were about seventy-five present, mostly Sabbathkeepers. Today has been a precious day to them. They seldom have such privileges. Many of them live twenty-five miles or more in the country. After I had spoken to them, many excellent testimonies were borne which were translated to us. Since we were here last fall, there have been four intelligent, substantial men who have come into the truth. Two have their families with them. One is a widower. One is a sea captain that I mentioned to you. He has borne today a good testimony. With quivering lips and tearful eyes he thanked the Lord for the blessings and light which the Lord had sent them from America. He said the light had gone from the east to the west, and now it was reversed; it was coming from the west back to the east. He said he thought he had light and was serving the Lord; but this truth had come to him, and it was greater light. And since this series of meetings had been held, he had received still greater light. The thought that Jesus would come personally to our world and we should see Him with our eyes was wonderful. It seemed a great truth and too good to be believed, but it must be so. He was grateful to God for His blessing.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 37

The one I mentioned who had opposed his wife spoke again today. He said he had attended the Sabbath school, and he never saw anything like it before. He had been a Baptist many years, but he never heard such ideas as since coming to these meetings, and when he returned home he would tell his Baptist brethren all about them. And then the words that had come to him through Sister White from America were wonderful. The power of God was in these meetings. Similar testimonies were borne by many. It was a feast to me to hear these intelligent testimonies.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 38

I am glad I came to Denmark the second time, although I did dread it so much. The Lord has blessed me every time I have spoken, and His blessing has rested on the hearers. We know now better how to help them here in these kingdoms.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 39

This letter was enveloped to send to you, but we had such a precious meeting, I wanted to tell you of it.4LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par.

P.S. This sea captain seems very much like Brother Bates, intelligent, noble in appearance.⁴*LtMs, Lt 85, 1886, par. 41*

Dear Niece Addie Walling:

I was pleased to receive your interesting letter and should have answered it before, but I have not been well. I came home to Basel from Italy completely exhausted. I could not write and was not able to speak or do any work; but notwithstanding I did keep my fingers busy about a little knitting, for I was destitute of stockings. But I have knit feet to one pair and just this moment completed a full pair of seamed hose for me. I have written during the past three days about fifty pages, so I am going again some. Had an ill turn yesterday, but am much better today. I was much encouraged by a beautiful dream I had last night.⁴*LtMs, Lt 91, 1886, par. 1*

I dreamed I saw Jesus, and He conversed with me and told me that I had the privilege of asking the things I needed to encourage me in my work. He assured me He was ever as near me as I then saw Him and He would be a helper to me always if I followed Him in humility. I turned to Jesus and said, "Precious Saviour, give me wisdom that I may ever act wisely and be a blessing to others. I need Thy light and Thy presence to go with me, then I will never feel sad in any trials. I want to be the means of saving souls." I awakened greatly comforted. The peace of Jesus was in my heart, and the softening, subduing influence of His Spirit has been with me through this first day of the New Year. The old year is in the past, and a new year is before us. Day by day the record will go up to God. What history shall I make? Oh, that it may be such a record as I shall not be ashamed to meet in the judgment. I want to have Jesus with me every hour. My dear child, I hope you will be careful to have a daily experience in the divine life and grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth. Do not neglect to pray. Jesus will be very near you and loves to help you. I do not forget to pray for you. I greatly desire that you shall become more and more as Jesus will have you to be, perfecting a Christian character. It is not that we should be anxious that others should think well of us, but our great anxiety should be to be right in the sight of God, to have heart holiness, to be sanctified thru the truth, to reflect the image of Jesus, to do all in our power to live the truth, to be constantly learning in the school of Christ, to be meek and lowly of heart.⁴*LtMs, Lt 91, 1886, par. 2*

Do not indulge in vanity. Do not seek to imitate in dress or manners any one. Just act your own self, humbly seeking to reveal Christ. Be modest, be pure. Do not be free with young men. Set even older ones a good example in this respect. Think more of the approval of God than the praise or flattery of any human being. Seek for a fitness for the future life, for we know not how long ... [Remainder missing.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 91, 1886, par. 3*

Dear Niece Addie:

Why is it you do not write me? I am left to conjecture many things, and my mind is troubled. Whatever you have to do, my dear child, whatever studies you have, can be no excuse for your silence. If sick, there is someone who can pen a few lines to me, that I may not remain in uncertainty. If you are usually well, I cannot excuse your silence. You are the same to me as my own child. I have performed for years, since you were six years old, the duties of a mother. You have become interwoven with my life, a part of me, and if you are in trouble, if you have wants, if you need means, I expect you to come to me as if I were your mother.⁴*LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 1*

I hope that the purpose of my adopting you as my children will be realized—that of seeing you both useful women, children of God, forming characters for the mansions which Jesus has gone to prepare for those who love Him. I greatly desire you should make this the aim, purpose, and pursuit of your life. This character building is a most important work. It is not a work that ends in this life, but which tells in the future life. What you make of yourself here through the merits and grace of Christ will be retained through eternal ages, and I am most earnest that you should not meet a low standard. “Learn of Me,” says the Great Teacher. “I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your soul.” [Matthew 11:29.] The peace that Christ gives will never, never bring sorrow with it. I am anxious that you learn daily in the school of Christ. I am hoping much from you.⁴*LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 2*

Do not become entangled in love affairs; do not be ready to yield your affections easily. Lay these things open to me ever, and if I see that you would be happy by taking this step, I would not throw obstructions in your way. But be very guarded. You will see articles in the Review and Herald upon the subject of marriage. This was written for a young man who was paying his addresses to Brother Vuilleumier's daughter against the wishes of her parents. He was very ardent in his attachment, but he had not shown due respect to his own mother. He was self-willed, critical, arbitrary; and yet he did not reveal this side of his character to her. I wrote him this letter upon courtship and marriage with more personal instructions. Brother Albert Vuilleumier brought his daughter to this office. The letter written decided the matter. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 3

This letter was written in January. A card comes to us from Italy that the young man now is about to marry Sister Beaver's daughter and has been paying his addresses to her since last June. There is a great deal of this work going on. Leland, who is at Oakland, is one of this kind who has two or three that he is vacillating between. He is not a man to be trusted, and I hope he will not obtain the affections of any worthy girl in Oakland, if she has any regard for her happiness. We may be spared. Do look closely to your motives, and be not deceived. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 4

We have attended the deathbed of Edith Andrews. She was petted, beloved, and worshiped by her young companions; but, Addie, she was unprepared to die. I labored with her, prayed with her, talked with her, and feared that after all she would not be able to see herself as she really was. She had been self-deceived, and when tested she was found wanting. She had encouraged the sympathy and attentions of young men, and they became infatuated with her ways, thought her very amiable; but she had not drawn them to God and revealed in her character the love of Jesus and the sanctifying power of divine grace. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 5

After I returned from Italy she was quite low, but I talked with her and I had written her plainly. She had made confessions and diligent work for repentance, and she was greatly blessed; in answer to prayer, light and peace came into her heart. I prayed with her, and the blessing of God came in rich measure upon us. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 6

But how sad I felt to look upon Edith and know that the work that should have been done in preparation for heaven had to be done on her deathbed. "Oh," she would exclaim, "how hard to concentrate my mind. How difficult to think and act when so weak." 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 7

Addie, God forbid that you, my dear child, will ever have such an experience. You want to be getting ready now to meet your Saviour in peace or to die with the consolation you lived the truth, you loved the truth, you were willing to deny self to lift the cross in health, you gave to Jesus the very best of your life, you sought for heart religion, and you knew when sickness should come that you had surrendered all to God. Be sober and watch unto prayer. Critically examine yourself and make earnest work. Be sincere. Ever feel that you are in the presence of God and holy angels, that the Lord is to be pleased and honored and glorified. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 8

Be sure to write often to May and give her good counsel. I write to her about as often as I do to you. Addie, make your aim to be a noble woman, a sincere Christian. Have the truth at heart. I do want you to know for yourself the preciousness of a Saviour's love. If Jesus is formed within, the hope of glory, you will surely reveal Christ in speaking of Him; if His peace is in your heart, you will surely express the same in your words and in your actions. Be true to yourself and be humble. Be not forward in speech, but be modest; never praise yourself, but think less and less of self and talk less of self, and lay all your burdens upon Jesus. May the Lord help you to win eternal life. Watch unto prayer, and set an example to others in not seeking and accepting the company of young men. In much love. 4LtMs, Lt 92, 1886, par. 9

Dear Brother and Sister:

I have suffered severe attacks of sickness since I came to Europe, but I have not been situated so I could do much for myself; and I could only pray, urging the necessity of my case to my heavenly Father. My eyes gave out by constantly using them. I suffered intense pain in the back of the ball of the eye. I could not write, but the Lord was my physician. I put forth all the strength of the soul in grasping the hand of infinite power. I dared not do anything for fear I should do something that would make them worse, but the Lord heard me. I know He heard my prayers. I was indeed blessed, and health came to my eyes. Next I was attacked with malaria caused by overwork and anxiety. I was unable to sit up for one week and was feeble much longer. Again my trembling faith grasped the promises of God. I knew that Jesus understood all about my feebleness. My prayer was answered. I was healed and was filled with gratitude to God. Next my broken ankle began to swell and my lame hip to trouble me again. I sought the Lord and urged my case to the throne of grace. I was a cripple for a number of weeks. Could not walk out of doors at all, but the Lord heard my prayer and I can now walk with a rubber bandage bound about my ankle.⁴*LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 1*

I spoke last Sabbath, standing on my feet. For the first time in my life I had to speak sitting, followed by two interpreters. I have proved the Lord on this journey to be a present help in every time of need. What a privilege is prayer! How sad and lonely should we be if in our sufferings we could not go to Jesus and tell Him all about it. O if every one would only know by personal experience how much of heaven's promised rest can be found in, secured for the soul even now, by prayer. If he has not learned the lesson, every other lesson of life [had] better be unlearned till he shall learn in the school of Christ how to master this lesson. We want a new and living experience every day. We want to learn now to trust Jesus, to believe in Him and confide everything to Him.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 2

Jacob was raised from a man of feebleness and sin through faith in God in prayer to be a prince with God. He prevailed through faith.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 3

God is omnipotent. Man is finite. In converse with God we may lay the most secret things of the soul open, for He knows it all. We want more faith, greater trust, more firm reliance. The conflict which was waged in Scotland which gave her greatest victories was not gained in Holyrod Palace, neither in the contest of armies, but in the secret chamber alone with God men prayed all night. One man was crying in agony, and in the desperation of his faith he exclaimed, "Give me Scotland or I die."4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 4

We are often brought into strait places with uncertainties, and then, O then, we must pray. I believe as I have done for years that the health of our people will be much improved if we will make God first and last and best in everything—appetite, taste, and habits to be carefully guarded. If we put God out of sight, if we sink principle into policy plans, we will have the frown of God and not His blessing. I see in the near future success to our institutions. I see if they will only let God preside in the councils in the publishing house and [medical] institution, the physicians will succeed in tact, in skill, in marvelous wisdom, if they will honor Jesus as the Physician in Chief. Let no man glory in his wisdom, but let him glory in this, that he knoweth God; and if he will make God first, angels of God will minister to those in that institution who have the care of it. God is at work for us. Let Him mold us as clay is molded in the hands of the potter.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 5

We are now contemplating a journey to Italy again. We should visit the churches. They are calling for us loudly. They call for us again to visit Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. These places demand much hard work and I dread it, but I may feel that I must go. Jesus lived not to please Himself. I do not know as we will get away from here this winter. May the Lord direct. It is now beautiful weather. The grass is a lovely green. Trees are leafing out, and the birds are caroling forth their songs of gratitude to God, and my heart is filled with gratitude to God. I will make melody to God in my heart.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 6

This is a hard field. Poverty meets us on every hand. I do not want to stay here one hour longer than duty demands. I want to be just where the Lord would have [me] to be and work with all the strength and power God has given me. There is a great work to be done here. Men are convinced, but poverty stands to bar the way. I wish someone who had means would come into the truth and open some manufacturing establishment to give work to those who keep the Sabbath.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 7

Well, we must pray. The mightiest man on earth is the man who prays in the sincerity of his soul. He grasps the arm of Infinite Power.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 8

In much love to your children.4LtMs, Lt 92a, 1886, par. 9

Dear children:

Sabbath day I spoke to a goodly number from this text—2 Corinthians 5:10. “For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.”4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 1

I spoke to the church with great plainness of our dangers and perils of being in no better a condition than were the Jews. They had great light and were favored with many privileges and spiritual advantages and did not respond to these, but were full of forms and ceremonies, but destitute of vital godliness.4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 2

I then presented before them what were the fruits of true godliness. I called for those who wished to come upon a higher plane of action to be not only hearers, but doers of the Word, to come forward. All in the house responded, and we had a solemn season of confessing and seeking the Lord.4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 3

In the afternoon I spoke again from Colossians 3:12-17. I exalted the standard and impressed upon those who were connected with the work of God the necessity of their being Christlike and doing the words of Christ. If those now engaged in the work are not Christians in the Bible light, they will be no blessing to the office, but a curse. There is some deep feeling here now. Some have been in a very low state spiritually. We have been gone to Italy and to Tramelan and other places, then six weeks to Denmark, Sweden, and Norway.4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 4

Brother Whitney has been to Nimes and to several places. They have not had much labor. I have now consented to engage in a series of meetings in the morning for all the office hands, and as many of the church who wish to attend half-past five o'clock in the morning, and will speak to them about twenty minutes. We will have a social meeting. Thus gave them instruction in short talks as I have done in the morning meetings in General Conference. I see that there must be greater efforts made to bring Christ into the hearts of the workers.4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 5

There should be in our offices of publication special seeking of the Lord to know His way and for His grace to be able to resist the enemy. He will come into our institutions at times like a flood and it seems that he would sweep everything before him, but earnest supplications to God in faith will bring heavenly angels near and is the only defense we can have against the wily arts of Satan to entrap and destroy. The simple fact is we have most precious, wondrous light which we do not improve, showing by our lives we think we are well enough off as it is.4LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 6

Christ is knocking, knocking at the door of our hearts with no answering welcome, Come in and abide with us. The love of Christ is not abiding in the soul. When hearts yield to the demands of God's commandments fully, there will be distrust of self, there will be an earnest yearning of spirit for divine enlightenment, tumultuous passions will be quelled, sin will be hateful to the soul. Jesus will be exceedingly precious. Has the truth been lodged in the [soul]? Is that mind that dwelt in Jesus dwelling in our hearts? Is the law of God our guide? If so, heavenly peace will be in the soul. There is peace with God and joyfulness of spirit. Then every true Christian will be seeking the best good of those connected with him. I see and feel deeply over the condition of our people. I long to speak to my American brethren. I am addressing the workers in the Berrien office. I am addressing you in stirring words to attend to the soul's interest. Now is your time, your day of opportunity and privileges, to be a missionary for God. Let all with whom you associate see that you fully believe the truth, that you are seeking daily for perfection of Christian character, that you are a channel of light. You will meet with rebuffs, you will have to pass through conflicts, you will see and realize envious feelings, jealousies, hatred, but this is no more [than] Christ received; and only prove yourself to be obedient to God and then let the conflict come. Stand firm, be true to Him who has bought you by His ... [Remainder missing.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 93, 1886, par. 7*

I spoke Jan. 23 to a good congregation. Two interpreters followed me, one in German and one in French. The German has his hearers separated from the congregation as far as he can get them. He stands by them while the French interpreter stands by my side and interprets to the French portion of the congregation.⁴*LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 1*

I had a most important subject on redemption and the rebellion of Satan. I had great freedom. I know the Lord blessed me in bringing out the subject. All were intensely interested. Sister Whitney took it down in shorthand, and it was very straight. It is not an easy matter to stand and talk and have two interpreters both talking at the same time to the hearers.⁴*LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 2*

Last Sabbath, I spoke again upon the test brought upon Cain and Abel, showing who was the one who bore the test and who refused to bear it. I had freedom, and the congregation was intensely interested.⁴*LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 3*

Well, we are in every discourse getting subject matter to be used. I have been unable to write except by dictation for above one week. I have been afflicted with congestion of the head and eyes. My eyes have been very painful. I have sought the Lord most earnestly, and in faith, and His blessing has certainly come upon me. I am improving, but have to hold myself in check continually. I think these sun-gas lights are bad for the eyes. I shall be so thankful when it will come daylight at six o'clock. I arise every morning at four or at the latest at five with an occasional exception.⁴*LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 4*

Yesterday, Sabbath, a telegram came from W. C. White that they were at Queenstown, had a pleasant passage. This was good news to us indeed. They reached Liverpool today at ten A.M. They will probably be in London, Tuesday. We shall see them the last of this week.4LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 5

Brother and Sister Conradi came with him, [and] Jenny Harns, Mary, Richard Cogswell, Marian [Davis] came with W. C. White. This settles the question that we shall remain in Europe during the best portion of the year 1886.4LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 6

We shall prepare books here and have them published here.4LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 7

Well, my child, I feel much disappointed in not hearing from you. What does it mean? I hope such a mistake will not occur again.4LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 8

Tell Byron and Sarah I have not forgotten them. If my eyes had been right, would have written them. Tell Sarah I appreciated her letter and will soon try to answer it.4LtMs, Lt 94, 1886, par. 9

Dear Niece Addie:

Your letter was received today, and I need not tell you I was glad to hear from you. I have been very sick. Had a hard chill yesterday. W. C. White, Mary, and I walked to the city. It is quite a walk. I did not know I was so weak. I soon began to feel chilliness which did not leave me from morning until noon. We called a hack, and Mary and I rode home. The water in bathroom pipes was hot, which is seldom the case. I took a hot bath and lay in it as long as I dared, then went to bed. My headache left me in a great measure. 4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 1

This morning I am so grateful to be able to do something on my writing. Marian and Mary are now getting up a book of reports of travel and the morning talks to be published. Sarah makes a good reporter, so all the discourses have been reported and most of them are written out. I have several articles which we send at once to Eliza for the Signs. I wish someone would tell us how Eliza's health is. Please mention this in your next letter. Please pick up all the items of interest you can. Please tell me where is Sister Scott. Is she in Oakland? Is she sick? Is she contented? I want you to answer these questions. 4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 2

Today Willie's goods, Jenny Harns' goods, Brother Conradi's, and Sister Roberts' all came safely. 4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 3

I should be so glad to be where the people understood English. They call me a good speaker—easy for a translator. But I long to talk to those who understand English. I am going to write a little every day, and by and by you will get a letter. 4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886,

February 17

I am enjoying a much more comfortable day than I feared. My prayer is going up to God day and night for physical and mental strength. Marian and I walk out a short distance when there is a pleasant day. The streets are filled with baby carriages and women walking with infants in their arms on a pillow. They seem to be far more painstaking than in America to give their children fresh air and sunshine. Mothers act more like mothers than many in America who devote much time to dressing their children. The children are dressed plainly, but they are not dirty and their cheeks are rosy. Women in the coldest weather in January and February go bareheaded; not all, but very many. I have been able to write today. Am pleased that I could do anything.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 5

February 18

Dictated a letter which Sarah took down in shorthand to Dr. Kellogg. Have sent matter to Eliza—three packages. Hope she receives it. We can send mail Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Had a long consultation with Elder Whitney in regard to labors in Switzerland. Brother Ertzenberger has been laboring in connection with Adamer Vuilleumier and his brother Albert. Fourteen embraced the truth as the result of this effort. They say Brother Ertzenberger is an able preacher in German or in French. He has a little son about two weeks old. He has one fourteen months old. Brethren Ertzenberger and Conradi go into Lausanne, a very important field. Brethren Bourdeau are laboring there now.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 6

February 19

We are all busily at work. I have to write mostly by dictation, something I always declared I could not do, but I can, when I have to, do most anything. Elder Whitney and W. C. White have gone to New Chatel where Brother Albert Vuilleumier lives. They are there to try to buy me a horse. I cannot work much because of my lame ankles and hip. All think I should have a horse and carriage and ride out when it is pleasant. It will cost me about four hundred dollars. I feel bad to take means when the cause needs it so much. Mary,

Ella, and I walked down into the city to see the dentist to have a tooth filled. I endured the walk very well. I have faith I shall improve in health. I have urged my case before the Mighty Healer. He will give me health, I believe it. I need health so much. There is much work to be done, but my faith does not waver at all. I shall see the salvation of God.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 7

We were not a little thankful to receive some of the dried fruits from our own orchard in Healdsburg. They tasted very nice. All kinds of fruit can be obtained here in their season. Well, I will now stop and finish after the Sabbath.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 8

Since writing the foregoing I received a letter from you that has relieved me somewhat, but I am still some troubled. I think Reuben [Tapeley]—I hope that there is no attachment between you. I should feel very sad if you had given him any decided encouragement. I like Reuben. I consider him an honesthearted young man, but not one I would want to give you in marriage to for several reasons. One is, he is a consumptive, of a consumptive family, and I know too well what it is to have to battle with this terrible disease. We buried Nathaniel and Annie White with consumption. We buried Luman Masten, foreman of the office, with consumption. We buried Robert Harmon, my next oldest brother, with consumption. We buried Sarah Belden with consumption. I would not favor, as you regard health and happiness, your connecting with one who is predisposed to consumption. His mother has escaped consumption because of a scrofulous swelling in her side. She has no health, but is liable to die any time. His mother's father Samuel McCann died of the long, lingering consumption, and my sister Harriet, his wife, took it of him, and her suffering was extreme. She died. Sarah, the eldest daughter, died of consumption. Melville, the next eldest son, died of consumption. Lucy Ellen next died of consumption. Mary, the next, died of consumption, and only two of the children now live. It is the worst kind of consumption, and we feel deeply the need of care in this matter of connecting our interest with those whose blood is tainted with this dread destroyer.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 9

As soon as I looked upon Reuben I knew he was marked. He will not live long. His slim neck, his large head, tell the painful story that his life is short. Now, Addie, there is still a more painful side to this question. While they are having a feeble hold on life, only one of this large family was religiously inclined; that was Sarah. Lucy Ellen made no preparation for heaven till on her deathbed; then with her expiring breath she called upon God. Melissa is religious. She has had all the light upon the Sabbath, yet has not kept it. This is Reuben's mother. Melville neglected religion just as Reuben does. Did not oppose when he was dying. His last breath was agonizing prayer. So, also, May neglected to give her heart to God till her very last dying days.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 10

Now this is worse to me than the dreaded disease of consumption. But I could not consent to have there be an attachment between you and Reuben. It is just and right that you should open your mind freely to me on this subject of courtship and marriage, for this concerns your happiness more than any other event of your life, and you need counsel and advice here more than on any other point. I hope to hear from you often.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 11

My health is better. I have prayed most earnestly every day for the blessing of health, eyesight, clear intellect, and physical strength. I am receiving blessings from the Lord. I hope to be faithful to my trust.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 12

Please write me in your next in regard to Sister Scott. I have not heard a word from her. Is she contented? Is she happy? I hope she is both. W. C. White and Brother Whitney left this morning for Lausanne to be gone until Monday. Richard Cogswell and Jenny Harns will be married on Monday. It is the law that the magistrate marries the parties, then if they want the marriage blessed they have this ceremony performed by the minister. This comes off Monday.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 13

We are all as a household usually well and things are moving off as well as can be expected in the office.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 14

I hope, my dear child, to meet with you again if the Lord spares my life. We may leave here in time to attend the General Conference, but I cannot tell how this will be. May the Lord direct us. We have much writing to do. Many letters I have to pass by although from

dear friends, but I cannot possibly devote much time to letter writing, for there are so many papers to keep supplied. We have sent to Eliza several packages of matter. Hope she will write whether they are received. With much love to yourself and dear friends.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 15

Your Aunt Ellen.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 16

Addie, please send me the pattern of your basque and the length of your skirt. I want a correct pattern, for if I bring you any dress, it must be cut and basted together. Do this without delay.4LtMs, Lt 95, 1886, par. 17

Dear daughter Addie:

We left Basel, March 19, for Bienne in company with Elder Whitney, W. C. White, and Mary K. White. The scenery was very striking—really too grand to be described by pen or voice. I did make an attempt to mention a few points and left in Sarah's hands to copy, but W. C. W. has dictated to her several letters to go tonight, so you will not get some interesting items I meant you should have. I think I will get them to you at some future time.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 1

The church in Bienne number thirty; and although no appointment was given out in the paper, as soon as we wrote that we were coming, six churches were represented.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 2

Bienne has twenty thousand inhabitants and is a very pretty place. We made our home with Virgil Vuilleumier. Ademar was on the ground as our interpreter. Ertzenberger was also present. We were treated with great courtesy by all our brethren and sisters. Meeting room was full to overflowing. I spoke Friday night while all listened with deep interest. I spoke again Sabbath forenoon and Brother Ertzenberger in the afternoon. Then we had a social meeting. The testimonies borne were excellent, right to the point. These churches have not had that kind of labor our churches have had in America upon personal experience. They need much more instruction on these points, and they plead for me to go from church to church and attend meetings and instruct them. I intend to do this when I shall get off some of the pressure of my writings which at the present time is not small. We are getting out a book for the benefit of the believers in Switzerland. The morning talks I gave at the council and conference and some of the sermons are to be published for the special benefit of this people. This makes a pressure of work now to get this all in right shape. The Lord has heard my prayers and is blessing me with health; to His name alone shall be the glory.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 3

I spoke to the people in Bienne Sunday forenoon upon unity. We left at three o'clock for Lausanne. We here labored with the workers. Lausanne has about fifty thousand inhabitants. It is a beautiful place. After doing what we could to help the workers, we accompanied Elder Daniel Bourdeau to Geneva on the steamer, three hours' ride. The water was still scarcely a ripple. We [had] a very pleasant ride. Brother B. pointed out places of interest as we passed along as we kept very near the land on one side and stopped for taking in and letting off passengers to the several cities which we passed.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 4

Basel, March 30. Our stay at Geneva was short as a severe cold came upon me, making it necessary for me in order to avoid exposure to return to Basel at once. Took two very hot baths in Geneva at the bathhouse which was just across the road from Brother Bourdeau's. I am improving now. Geneva is considered the most wealthy and beautiful place in Switzerland. We saw Mount Blanc from here, rising grand and cold among the mountains. From the one mountain alone water comes from the eternal snows enough [to] keep or feed the whole Mediterranean. I shall visit these places all again if the Lord will.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 5

We have a gentle, strong horse that I can drive anywhere. We have a very good carriage, strongly made, covered; cost when new three hundred. We paid one hundred and ten. It is very easy. It is so constructed that it needs greasing only two or three times a year. We shall drive our team to visit the churches when we get this book we are now at work upon off. If ever a people were in suffering need of help, it is this people.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 6

Be assured, my dear child, if I should consult my feelings, I should say come to Europe; but I am anxious for your good that you learn your trade, then I shall feel that you can make your own way in the world. If you should be brought into a strait place, you may draw from the office on my account.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 7

Your letter was a great relief to me. Mind, Addie, I am not in a hurry for you to marry, but I am not one that [would] stand in your way, if I saw your happiness would be increased by taking this step. I love you and want your future to be a happy one.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 8

I have bought you and May very nice little watches.4LtMs, Lt 96, 1886, par. 9

Dear Children:

We have just stepped on board the train for Geneva. We are usually well, but tired from want of sleep. I spoke last time in St. Johns. Last Tuesday night had a good audience and spoke with plainness upon the binding claims of the law of God. I do not think plain truth about the law takes at all with those who have received the ideas of Grant and Cocorder. I did not dare to leave the valleys without elevating the standard of truth that all might understand my position. This ended my labors in Italy. 4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 1

Wednesday we rode fifteen miles to Penerolo. The son of one of the Mr. Malcus who has attended our meetings rode with us. He understands English. We had our lunch in a field by the wayside. In Penerolo we went into a Catholic church six hundred years old. It had been, I think, quite antiquated-looking church, but repairs were going on and improvements being made which were putting out of existence its ancient appearance. There were several confessionals, but worshipers were going and coming with their strings of beads; and some were kneeling, saying their prayers. There were images and paintings of Christ, and the Apostles and the Virgin Mary. How we pitied the poor, deluded worshipers bowing before their patron saints. There were several of these. 4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 2

Well, we were not sorry to leave the old stone building which seemed like a prison. We rode Monday to Angrogno; definition—the valley of groans. The first village was reached by constantly climbing a narrow road. On one side were embankments and fields, rocks and now and then a dwelling house. On the left was a deep ravine, a very narrow valley. Bro. Bourdeau had us step out and on a beautiful plot of ground, grass of living green, trees and orchard. A Vaudois was there and gave us the desired information. He led us to the end of this beautiful green where it went down abruptly hundreds of feet. Over the brink were jagged rocks. There in the place he told the Catholics set fire to a nice village and surrounded the people and drove off hundreds off this embankment to a horrible death. Some hung upon the rocks by their clothing for two weeks. They died there of hunger. The Catholics have a large church and monastery now on the high elevation reached only by foot. The Protestants have a modest little church. Our informer, a venerable looking Vaudois, told us this church had been burned three times and rebuilt again. Now it is protected by an iron fence set in stone two feet in depth. A Catholic dignitary asked why they built a stone wall about the church. The answer was, "You Catholics have burned this church three times. We want to do all we can so that you will not burn it again." Said he, "I wish it were burned. It ought to be burned." This church and scattered houses in the mountains are all that are left of Protestants, while the Catholics are crowding themselves into these valleys and mountain heights to obtain command of the situation.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 3

We have in this ride a very beautiful scenery, more interesting and striking than anything I have yet seen. There are green patches of land and dwellings upon the mountainsides to the very summit. Bro. Geymet has walked seven miles and back to attend evening meetings in Stables. W. C. White accompanied Bro. Geymet. It was a walk for him, and he did not arrive at home until twelve o'clock. We enjoyed this ride. Several places of the road were like this: [An s-shaped line was drawn in the original.]4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 4

This was a place of deep interest to us. Here the Catholics came from Turin to persecute the Waldenses in these valleys and mountains. Our informer told us that thousands upon thousands of Protestants have been thrown from the precipice I have mentioned. What a scene will these mountains and hills present when Christ, the Lifegiver, shall call forth the dead! They will come from caverns, from dungeons, from deep wells, where their bodies have been buried. They will come forth with the sound of the trumpet and the voice of God at that last great and terrible day of the Lord.4LtMs, Lt

Geneva, Switzerland. Apr. 30, 1886. We arrived here last night after a very pleasant and favorable journey. We had to change three times which was not as pleasant as if we could have gone through with less change. We expect to speak here tonight. Tomorrow morning to go Lausanne, speak there in the forenoon and evening after the Sabbath, and Sunday, part through French interpreter and part through German interpreter. I am just now awaiting the visit of a man in Geneva who is a learned man. Bro. Bourdeau is acquainted with him and told him I would be here, so will finish this after the visit. 4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 6

The gentleman, Mr. Bust, visited us, and we had a very pleasant interview with him. The first-day Adventists had sent him the smut and blacking in which they deal so freely, and he wished to see the woman that was thus talked about. I had but little to say. I told him that my work was not to hunt up and catch these reports and vindicate my own case. I would have no time to do anything else but to attend to this branch of the work. He is a musician, composes music and songs. I gave him Volume 4, and he seemed to be much pleased with the gift. We had a little sing, and he joined heartily with [us]. I spoke that night to a room full in Bro. Bourdeau's house. The president of the temperance society was one of my hearers. He could understand English, and several others understood English. I had the special blessing of God while addressing the people, and all listened with intense interest. Quite a goodly number of outsiders were present. We must sow beside all waters, not knowing what will prosper, this or that. A Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. 4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 7

Sabbath morning we took the train for Lausanne and went directly from the cars to the hall. We found a goodly number assembled together to worship God upon His sanctified, holy day. I spoke to them from the last verses of the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah. "And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places." Isaiah 58:12. All listened with intense interest, and we felt that Jesus was in our midst and that to bless us. After the discourse we had a social meeting, and many good testimonies were borne; good experiences were related by those who had just embraced the truth, and the Lord strengthened three more to decide in reference to keeping the Sabbath.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 8

Much labor has been put forth in order to reach these results. As soon as an interest is started anywhere, then the people—church goers and church members—immediately send for teachers or ministers to come to do their best to create some kind of an excitement to draw the people to them and to warn and terrify the people by their reports. I tell you in this country there are heaps of teachers who are united on one point to make of none effect the truth of God, but nevertheless twenty have already decided to obey, and Bible readings have done more to bring about this result than anything else. This is the only way in this country to preach the truth—by teaching it from the Bible from house to house. There are efforts being made, but how few the workers! Limited means, bound about constantly for want of money—it is pinch here and pinch there, and that kind of plain diet that in America they would think they would be going on the starvation plan. Many and most of their meals are bare bread and hot milk, and frequently the bare bread. The dress of all is severely plain; and yet how much easier working now than when the blood hounds of persecution were upon the track of every one who dared to differ in sentiment from Rome, and afterward from the State Church. The latter difficulty exists still in a greater or less degree to bar the way to the progress of truth.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 9

There should be one hundred workers in this field where there is now one, but where are they? It has been our effort since we have been here to have organized effort. Once get this established and much will be accomplished, but habits and customs and manners have to be remodeled. But the effort in Lausanne has been more after the American plans. Twice we have been to Lausanne to help them to get the workers into unity of action, and were it not for this I think their labors would not be productive of much good. I feel deeply grateful for the success that has attended the efforts thus far. But we will keep at work to do all we can in the strength of God, to mold the work here. We shall not see America under one year, but as soon as the work we want to see done is finished, thru the help of God, then we are ready to go. Calls come very earnest from Australia for us to reach California by sailing to Australia. God only knows what our course will be. I just wait and pray and watch for any indications of the Spirit of God.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 10

When I saw them in Lausanne in a small hall, boards without backs for seats, I then thought of how much good a little means might do that is squandered upon attractive garments or extras in diet and furniture by so many in America. My heart aches. I so long to see the example of Christ followed in self-denial, in self-sacrifice. So much little and large means [are] expended needlessly while the missionary efforts are crippled on every side in these countries. O let us pray most earnestly that the Lord would awaken His people to feel the same earnest love for souls that Jesus had and has given them an example of in His life.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 11

I have had to get me a horse and carriage because I am too lame to walk, but I held back a long time on this. I tried to think I could get along without, but when laid by at last, unable to walk without a cane, then I ventured to get this horse and carriage. Now I can walk without a cane and can take short walks out of doors by leaning on W. C. White's arm. But every time I think of the three hundred fifty dollars expended for secondhand carriage and for an ordinary horse, I think how much this means might have done to the mission.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 12

May the Lord put the missionary spirit upon those whom He has blessed with great light. May the Lord give no rest, day nor night, to those who are now careless and indolent in the cause and work of God. The end is near. This is that which Jesus would have us keep ever before us—the shortness of time. I have, since coming here, sold one set of furniture and carpets and various household stuffs, that I could hand means to those who were engaged in the missionary work. I am making every exertion now [to] settle my indebtedness with the Review office. I shall cut down in everything like real estate just as fast as possible. I have offered all for sale but one little house in St. Helena. These debts are to me like a nightmare, for I know I should be just before I am generous. I do not feel like expending upon my own self anything that I am not absolutely obliged to have.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 13

We get along in that which you would think is a very cheap way, but it must be done; and I think if our people in America would bind about their wants more, very much more, and use the margin of this means in the missionary field, very great blessings would come to them, and they would be following the example of Jesus Christ. I know these lessons are to be learned by our people and practiced by them too. There are so many that need to economize, from principle, and make earnest efforts to save souls for whom Christ died. He, for our sakes, has become poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich; and it would be the most profitable lessons we can learn to economize, to bind about our wants, to spend nothing, not one penny for to gratify the lust of the eye or to gratify the taste, but remember that Jesus was bound about with poverty while He was engaged in this world in His great mission.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 14

While I think of these things my heart is sorely troubled. I knew if there were greater piety among those who profess to believe the truth for these last days that there would be less gratifying of self, less personal wants, and the value would be placed upon means for the good it will do in carrying forward the work of God. I know that it has cost much to establish our missions in Europe, but more, much more [will] be needed before the work can go in any way as it should. But then, when I commenced this letter, I did not expect to go on in this strain, but what I have written lies near my heart and it had to come out.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 15

There is much of interest I might write, but today I want to get this in the mail. For some reason I feel that you are in need of encouragement. It seems to me I see you oppressed, worn down with cares and perplexities and trouble, but I do not know how to help you, only to direct you to the Burden Bearer and entreat of you to not let that active brain of yours invent too many things that will be eventually to you a burden and hold you in fetters so that you cannot be free to work in the cause of God.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 16

Only live, my dear children, with an eye single to the glory of God. I hope Emma will learn daily lessons in Christ's school. She needs deeper piety, a stronger hold from above. God has spared her life. Let that life be devoted to His service. Let not the precious hours of probation granted to her be spent in a frivolous manner. Every one has work to do for the Master, and Emma, dear Emma, whom I love as if she were my own child, bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh, must not become self-absorbed. Jesus has work for all to do. Sit at His feet, Emma, as did Mary of old, and learn of Jesus. Your life God has given you. Use it not to self-pleasing. Shun not responsibility in bearing burdens for the Lord. God help you is my earnest prayer.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 17

Mother.

P.S. I am praying for you. Look to Jesus constantly. Be zealous to repent of every wrong. God will lighten you. This was written on the cars.4LtMs, Lt 97, 1886, par. 18

My very dear Children, Edson and Emma:

Although I wrote you last in answer to Emma's letter, yet I feel inclined to write to you again before waiting to hear from you. I have been pressed with writing.4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 1

I returned from a journey to Italy last Monday. I spoke eleven times while absent and had much better success in obtaining a hearing in Italy this time than before. I spoke at three villages—Vallar, five miles from Torre Pellice; at St. John's, three miles from Torre Pellice; and at Torre Pellice. I spoke also at Geneva and at Lausanne; was away two weeks and a half.4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 2

Found many letters when I returned home, but looked in vain for one from my children. I know that Edson is full of work and care. Emma is not, and I shall expect to hear from her and will try to answer. I have dreams about you. In my dreams I see Edson perplexed, and I saw Christ looking pityingly upon him, saying, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light. In Me you shall have rest and peace." [Matthew 11:29, 30.]4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 3

Emma, do your best to help Edson, and both of you cast your burden upon the Lord. Bind about, my poor boy, bind about your mind, your business. Your inventive mind is planning something whereby you may extricate yourself, but these things only bring greater pressure by requiring more means. Economize, economize. Do not move impulsively, but from principle. I hope you will not enlarge your business, but bind it about. This is the lesson you have to learn. You carry too many burdens. Now begin to unload. These things wear more than you think they do, but remember, Mother is praying for you and the Lord will help you.4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 4

There is not one, with the exception of Emma, that has any sense of the loads you are carrying, and Emma has but little sense of it herself. I know what I am talking about. May the Lord give you clear discernment to see how you can unload. If it is possible for you to get Brother Eldridge to connect with you permanently and help to untie your hands, do so. I feel deeply that someone is needed with clear head that can look upon all sides of matters. If he would be a great loss to the office, I would not suggest this. My the Lord direct in all things. But economize.4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 5

I felt badly when I heard that Frank and Hattie and your family were together. Frank will be no help to you in any way. He has less economy than you, and you and Emma need someone of different element to help you. No doubt it is very agreeable to your feelings to be together, but do you help one another or hinder?4LtMs, Lt 98, 1886, par. 6

Dear Children, Edson and Emma:

We left Basel June [15] and arrived at this place early this morning. W. C. White, Elders Whitney and Conradi visited Leipsic, leaving Basel Monday morning. Sarah and Christanna and I remained until Tuesday. We stepped on board the train at 10 p.m.; rode all night. Changed cars once in early morning before reaching Frankfort. We changed again at Frankfort. We hired porters to take care of our baggage, transferring it to and from the cars.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 1

The cars in Europe have no regular sleeping coaches attached as in America. Some compartments are arranged so that the seats can be adjusted and the sleeping arrangements are then very good, but you have to provide your own wraps and make yourself comfortable if you choose to do so.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 2

We changed again at Hamburg. There W. C. White joined us. We were transferred to the boat at midnight. We were much troubled after Sarah found her satchel missing. We hustled our goods out of the car, then upon consideration we thought we would not be detained twenty-four hours for the worth of the satchel and its contents, so the train was held for us until we had our baggage stowed away again in the car, and in about one hour the satchel appeared.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 3

We reached Copenhagen at about 11 o'clock a.m. Were taken in a hack direct to the steamer and were soon on our way to Malmo, where we ate our dry lunch and then stepped on the train again. We did some excellent sleeping. We had been broken up in sleep, being out two nights, and we were to ride all night Thursday, and

Friday morning we reached this place and received a hearty welcome. We were rejoiced to meet Elders Olsen and Oyen again, and Elder Matteson. We do hope the Lord will reveal His presence to us at this meeting. We need more than human wisdom, and without this wisdom we might as well be still.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 4

I am as well as and better than I could expect to be after riding three nights and two days with only the hard seats without springs. I hope after one night's rest to be in working order.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 5

I hope the Lord will bless you with His grace, and I hope that you will not become impatient of criticism and faultfinding; but if it comes, consider that you are not perfect, that errors are liable to occur, and that many mistakes made in a lifetime occasion suspicion, although the very ones who criticize have similar errors in their experience. Many do not think of this, and as a result they are unmerciful to others, judging others by themselves to have the same or worse weaknesses than they themselves have. But we must individually preserve a course above retaliation.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 6

We shall show the greatest wisdom when we pass along, doing our work with fidelity, not swerving to the right hand or to the left, keeping a straightforward course, having our eye single to the glory of God. It is not how much feeling we manifest over injustice in treatment that evidences strength of character, but it is the self-control, the firm check put upon a strong emotion, that evidences strength of character and the spirit of Jesus. The tree of life in the midst of the Paradise of God is to be given to the overcomer. It is the reward given to conquest, to toil and self-sacrifice, to the working Christian who will fight the good fight of faith. We must be nobly striving and fighting for the victory. The grace of Christ will be given to all who fight lawfully.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 7

Now, my son, take as little notice as possible of what people say. Let them say what they will, but do not by word or deportment show the rising up of self. The Lord would have you pursue such a course that you will be considered worthy of trust and confidence. You have abilities calculated to do good to others if you do not allow yourself to be carried away by impulse. If you evidence that you have a firm reliance upon God, you will gain respect and confidence, and then you will exert an influence for good. You will let your light shine forth to the best advantage. You will seek to represent Jesus. You know our Saviour was reviled, but He reviled not again. He was despised and rejected of men; and can His followers expect anything better in this life? May our gracious heavenly Father impart to each of us more grace, and may we rejoice in His love.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 8

The truth, how precious to our souls! It sanctifies, refines, softens, and subdues the soul. We are not to be faithless, but believing. I hope you will have divine aid in all your efforts and recommend the truth which we profess. Do not let anything plague you, harass you, but just look to Jesus for help and believe in Him to help us. I long to be altogether what the Lord would have me to be.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 9

My son, work for God. You are His employed servant to do His will. Be Christlike, be sober and watch unto prayer. Be not turned aside from your duty, for Satan will try every means to have you diverted from doing God's will; but if he sees you firmly connected with Jesus Christ, he will see his attacks are in vain. May the Lord help you and endue you with power from on high. Great blessings may be yours, great light will shine round about you, if you will only believe and trust your heavenly Father implicitly. Watch unto prayer.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 10

I want you both to possess the great treasure of eternal life. Let it be seen that you believe the truth by revealing the same in spirit and in deportment. Think of God, talk more of Jesus and of heaven. Talk of the blessed hope and be in earnest to win the crown of life. We are not half in earnest. We have not that intensity of desire for eternal life proportionate to the value of the object we are in pursuit of.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 11

Go forward, Edson and Emma. When tried, believe that Jesus lives and wants to save and wants you to be free in His love, full of joy, full of gratitude, full of praise to God. Great blessings are in store for you. Will you grasp them by faith?4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 12

Mother.

Send the watches to Addie Walling, Pacific Press, Oakland, saying she may have her choice, and as the eldest it is her right. May can have the other. Both are very excellent watches.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 13

Mother.

P.S. Edson, I want two more copies of the little pamphlet got off at the sanitarium. I want to cut up the two to make general articles. One I wish to keep as it is.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 14

Your cranberry sauce came in very nicely on this journey.4LtMs, Lt 99, 1886, par. 15

Dear Children:

I will write you a little day by day as things transpire. We have received a letter from Edson. I was glad to hear from you. I sent you a letter from Basel about two or three weeks since and another from this place last Friday, so I will not try to answer directly your last letter which was most gratefully received.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 1

Our ten days' meeting is in the past; and although everything was not done we would be pleased to have seen accomplished in future plans, a decided advancement has been made, and still we urge them, "Go forward." [Exodus 14:15.] There have been young men preparing for to go out as colporteurs, canvassers, and to engage in the ministry, and the Lord has blessed in the meetings.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 2

I spoke last—yesterday—at 6 P.M. to a hall full to overflowing. I spoke from Revelation 20:11-15. We had a very solemn meeting, and there seemed to be much feeling—some weeping. It was my last discourse. I have now done what I could, and the Lord will do that which I cannot possibly do—water the seed that has been sown. But speaking through a translator loses—taxes me; but when you read the reports—they come to you about as they are spoken—good is done, and many testimonies are borne, stating the impressions that have been made so that I know my labor has not been in vain in the Lord.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 3

I have spoken now eleven times, given five discourses since June 18, spoken six times one half an hour in each occasion in morning meetings and in conference meetings, and I have written seventy pages of important matter in letters and articles to revise book on Sanctification. So you see I have done considerable work in ten days.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 4

I thank the Lord that He has given me physical strength and mental clearness that I could do this. It requires double tax of the mind to speak through an interpreter to keep the subject matter connected, and I do want so much to labor in England where I can speak in my own language. But there is important work to be done here, and the effect will not appear so clearly now as in the future of the work. As my writings come to the people in their own language, then they know they have seen the writer and heard her speak and know for themselves what manner of spirit she is of.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 5

All seem to have the greatest confidence in me, if I am allowed to be any judge, and I seek in every way to help them what I can and get near hearts. Sweden is a good field of labor, but O so much is to be done and scarcely any one to do the work. It seems as though I could scarcely contain myself when I think of the many honest souls in this kingdom who have never so much as heard that there was a third angel's message or a second and first angels' messages. When I get wrought up quite beyond endurance, then I take it all to the Lord. I say, "Lord, this is Thy work. This is the people for which Thou hast died. We want [to] act the part Thou hast given us to do in seeking to save these souls. Open the way before us. Raise up laborers to work in the fields already white to harvest," and I feel that I can only drop the burden upon the great Burden Bearer and wait to hear His voice, What to do next. If some were brought into the truth who had means to help—but there are as yet only those who are poor; but as we made an advance move to organize a tract society and establish systematic giving even in their poverty, they entered into the work heartily, cheerfully, and hopefully.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 6

There is a brother C. G. Hedin who resides at Grythytted where we visited last fall. He was an intemperate man when the truth found him. He had two children by his first wife who was a wealthy woman, but he squandered all her property and was worth nothing and in debt. He married again; has four children by his second wife.

This family number ten. His wife's sister lives with them. After he embraced the truth, his God-given manhood came back to him, and he saw that he had so very limited room he could not entertain the ministers and hold meetings in his house. He went zealously at work, built him a good, convenient, nice house—nearly all their houses in Sweden are built of logs—then after a year or two they side them up and make very nice-looking houses. The wealthiest build in this fashion. Well, he built his house on borrowed capital, and when we visited them he took us up one flight of stairs. There was a large, square room where the stairs entered—at the left; he showed Bro. Matteson and W. C. White in a nice, well-furnished, small room with two beds in it and a large porcelain stove reaching to the ceiling, table, chairs, and every convenience, plain but serviceable. He told them to make themselves at home. He conducted us through the square room where the stairs enter, and there was a room precisely like the one given to Matteson and W. C. White furnished the same. Then at the head of the stairs opened a door into another room—large, square room, seated—[a] meeting room when only this one church assembled. They have a union free meeting hall where large congregations are called out. They have the same rooms below as above which were the living rooms for the family. He has a very nice barn, an excellent cow, and everything is nice, orderly, and in the best of order. 4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 7

Now all this he has accomplished since he embraced the truth about six years since. The property is almost free from debt. He is an excellent workman, a first-class painter. Now he tells the story with tears, although he does not mention his dissipation. He feels much pained about it, but rejoices in the Lord. He pointed me to a small spool of thread. Said when he received the truth he was not worth that spool of cotton, and now with prosperity, one year more he thought would make him all clear from debt. The truth has done much in every way for others, and all [that] is needed is to get at the hearts of the people. The clergy of old state church hold them as in a vice and visit them with all kinds of persecution, if they see any prospect of their receiving the truth. They seem so hopelessly bound as in slavery to the state church that they do not see how it is possible for to leave them and endure what the consequence will be. It is wonderful, hardly to be credited, unless one is on the ground and can see and understand by the relation of past experience that it is not overdrawn.4LtMs, Lt 100, 1886, par. 8

Dear daughter Addie:

I received your letter while in Christiania and was glad to hear from you. I hope that you will not sacrifice your health in order to do much work. I am glad that you are trying to become educated in proofreading, for I would be much pleased could you be qualified to prepare matter that I may have for publication. I shall have plenty of work to do. We have some plans that are not yet fully matured. Had it not been for the education you are now receiving, I would have had you come to Europe with Brother and Sister Ings; but I considered the matter carefully in regard to that which was best for your future good in connection with me and my work, and the importance of your having a thorough knowledge of preparing manuscript for the press.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 1

I hope that you will be imbued with the Spirit of the Lord, that you will catch the spirit of the testimonies that shall be written out. I do not want you [to] feel that you must do this, but I should be pleased could you do it.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 2

I am some troubled in regard to my work and my workers. Marian is not able to do much, although that which she does do is valuable; but she has to be guarded all the time lest she will overdo.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 3

Eliza, they have thought of going to Australia. I have given my consent to this and the next dependence is Mary K. W., but she will have to be released from much of this work and have a complete rest. I am very lame in regard to workers. So, my child, you may advance as fast as you can surely and thoroughly. Learn how to form sentences and punctuation. I think you can do this.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 4

Since coming to Copenhagen, I have been enabled to walk twice a day one half a mile and back again, passing over the road four times and speaking once twice a day.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 5

We are situated in the fourth story of a boarding house; directly opposite our windows is the botanical garden. In this are trees, plants, and flowers of all description. There are several large nursery buildings in the enclosure. There is an artificial lake; a high eminence where many rocks are gathered and classified. In this garden are seats, and all may enter it that choose and explore all they please. W. C. White and I walk over the grounds nearly every day. Close by this garden is the hospital for invalids.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 6

We have had very pleasant weather since we came here. No clouds, no rain. On the street close by us is the barracks, and every day in the early morning the soldiers march through the streets with knapsacks and guns, I think going to the parade grounds for drill.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 7

There are many things that make the place one of great attractiveness. There are so many public grounds for resort in the very heart of the city, beautifully arranged, with lakes, swans in them, and fitted up with great taste. The street we walk upon to go to the hall to meeting is one hundred feet wide. On either side of the street next to the buildings are sidewalks paved with stone, then carriage roads on either side with block stone; then on the right is a large, broad street for the cavalry, horseback riding, and then a broad street for foot passengers. This is grand and safe and convenient. But I look away from this to that city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. There the broad streets are paved with gold, and there entereth into it nothing that defileth.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 8

W. C. White, Elder Brorsen, and I went into the tower that composes part of a large church. This tower has a broad street within, paved with stone, and it winds round and round, ascending as it rises nine stories high. We went to the very top and obtained an extensive view of the city and surrounding cities and inlands. I did not take great pleasure in looking down from such a height. It is said that Peter the Great and King Frederick with horse and carriage rode up to the top of this tower and when at the top he said to King Frederick, Which of us has soldiers who if the King told him would throw himself from this tower? King Frederick answered he had no soldiers that would do this, but he was not afraid to sleep in the house of the poorest subjects in his kingdom. Noble man! Noble answer!4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 9

You cannot tell how I long for retirement. The noise of carriages on the stone pavements, the clatter of wooden shoes, the people coming and going constantly on foot, the baby carriages, the women, men, boys wheeling their hand carts, screeching out their merchantable goods, is so confusing. You scarcely know where you are. Surely all this will have an end. Jesus is coming. I long to hear the trumpet sound and the dead come forth from the graves.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 10

Well, Addie, I would be pleased to have you get your picture taken and write to May to do the same. I will settle the bills. I want to see the faces of my children once more.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 11

You may write to May to get this done at once and send to me. In regard to your Father, I will say you must follow your own convictions of what is right. I do not consider he has any claims upon either you or May. You are my children and all the expense of years has been upon me which is not less than three thousand dollars, and now my greatest desire is to see you both connected with the work of God which has been the aim and purpose of my work for years in the past. I want God shall have your service, and nothing ought to come in to divert you from this work. I write you this much, thinking it may be a help to you in your decisions of duty in being tested and proved on this point. I want you both to be earnest Christian workers in the cause of God. I love you both as my own children.4LtMs, Lt 101, 1886, par. 12

Well, Addie, I must close this letter for we shall have to leave in a short time. Write me often. I have a pair of gloves for you and May which I will either send by letter or in a paper soon.4LtMs, Lt 101,

My very dear children:

What a pleasure it would be to me could I visit with you, but I shall not probably see you under one year from this time. If the Lord spares your lives and our lives, we will meet again. If this is not my heavenly Father's will, then let it be as He wills, not as I will.⁴*LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 1*

We see work to be done and that we can do here in Europe, and we are not to choose our field of labor, to let the Lord choose for us. If the Lord will only accept such labor as we poor mortals can give Him, we will only be too glad. I can think of no greater honor that can be granted us than that of winning souls to Christ. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." *Daniel 12:3.*⁴*LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 2*

Since writing the above I have been out to dinner, and we have [had] a long consultation with Brethren Matteson and Oyen, Olsen, Brorsen, in regard to the distribution of laborers. The brother we visited is a first-class carpenter and has embraced the truth, but because he is so good a workman, he got work, keeps the Sabbath, and is permitted to work on Sunday. He and [his] wife are both in the truth.⁴*LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 3*

We see so great a destitution of money and of laborers that we are perplexed to know how [to] fill the calls. The fact is they cannot be filled without more laborers shall take hold of the work. O that we had men who had the missionary spirit. Certainly those who believe the truth cannot be doing all their duty or there would be something done in these new fields. There are good fields to work in. They are more slow to move here, but they move slowly and surely when they do move. I speak once more in this place, then my work is ended for the present. We leave here tomorrow at 9 o'clock, and we shall not be sorry to leave these premises, although the location is good. It is a very lame hotel. We have miserably dirty beds, and it sickens us to sleep in them. We have not had a pillow case since we have been here, but a sheet is spread over the pillow which is dirty enough. Directly opposite us is the botanical gardens which is city property with artificial lakes, greenhouses, and almost every kind of trees and flowers; but I long for the Paradise of God when I shall not see poverty and misery.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 4

There are many costly buildings, but with all much poverty. Two thousand were fed last winter at the expense of the city, and these workmen who cannot get work have been selling off everything—beds, furniture—and lie on the naked floors; and what will these do in the winter in their poverty? Wealth and extravagance on every hand and poverty to match.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 5

Fifteen hundred carpenters cannot get work now, and last winter there were uprisings and revolt and crime. Hunger is a hard master. It will lead to doing desperate things. Copenhagen is a stronghold of the militia. There is a long string of blocks, the soldiers' barracks, and a strong force is on hand constantly to be called upon to put down any riot or quell any violence. There was a strike here when we were here in the fall with the blacksmiths for higher wages. One leading blacksmith would not unite with the strikers, and a large body of soldiers was appointed to conduct him to his shop and from his shop and guard him while at work, else the strikers would have murdered him. There are fifteen hundred, in this city, worthy workers who are idle. Some help was given last winter to the very destitute. Some men came in, in the prime of life as well as the men of gray hairs, famished for the want of food. They had been unwilling to receive charity, but were driven to it by hunger. This winter will be worse. Work has been less, and men made desperate with hunger will do terrible things. Oh, how glad shall I be to see Jesus, our Deliverer, come and this terrible misery to come to an end.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 6

I think we should feel thankful that our home is in America, but we are not safe unless God protects us even there. For these men who are dissatisfied with kingly rule and heavy taxation are emigrating to America and are making their riotous speeches in cities there to arouse the working class to make a raid upon the rich and rob and plunder those who have property. These uneasy, dissatisfied elements are increasing in power. Every year the swellings of wrath, tumults, and fierce riots are increasing in Europe. The signs of the times tell us we are surely in the last days. This know also, that in the last days, perilous times shall come. We can see these perils more distinctly here in Europe. Things are rapidly developing. All are ranging under their respective banners; all are preparing for some great event; all are watching for the morning. One class is watching and waiting for their Lord, while the other class is waiting for what Lucifer may perform of his wonder-working power. Kingdoms are in uncertainty, one watching jealously the other. Soldiers are being drilled constantly, preparing for war. There is a rending apart of kingdoms. The stone cut out of the mountains without hands is surely to smite the image upon the feet. The King of Prussia, I think it is, dare not go out of his domain unless the whole passage of his journey is barricaded with soldiers. He seems to be a prisoner in one sense in his own kingdom. Other kingdoms are in jeopardy. They dare not travel for fear of their lives unless in the very heart of a bodyguard of armed soldiers.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 7

Where, we ask, is the happiness in such a life? The Lord is our refuge. There is a defense in the midst of us, mightier than all the powers of kingdoms. The glory of the Lord, He will be our front guard, He will be our reward, our very present help in time of trouble. All things earthly will be dissolved, and the apostle asks, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?" 2 Peter 3:11, 12.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 8

The forces of the powers of darkness are mustering for the closing work of this earth's history. Oh, how earnest should we be to examine ourselves. We are in positive danger of losing our souls when we are criticizing others, remarking others' failures. We must "examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" 2 Corinthians 13:5.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 9

Now we should think of our state before God, how carefully should we seek to obtain a knowledge of ourselves from the Word of God. Where shall we stand in the future crisis that shall come? Shall we stand as children of God at His right hand or as disobedient, unthankful, and unholy at His left hand? The unsearchable riches of Christ should engage our attention now. The honor that cometh from God is above every earthly honor. Our souls must be securely riveted to the Rock of Ages.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 10

I feel interested for you and for the church in Battle Creek, that you shall all be strong in the Lord. I hope you will study your Bible. Whatever God has written, it is surely worth our while to study. We want to study the Bible. We want to know for our individual selves what is truth. The way to have clearness of perception, to distinguish truth from error, is to be searching the Scriptures daily. If we individually seek with all our powers to perfect a perfect character, then we will have a perfect church. The purity of our individual character, the piety of our daily life, will be the piety of the church. Each in his sphere is to do his work with persevering fidelity. God has left each of His followers a work to do for Him. All selfishness is to be laid aside, the honor of God to be kept constantly in view. Inward Christianity is what is needed. The vital forces are in the individual heart. It is not building up the church to have our names on the church record, but it is in being Christians. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, ceremony or form, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. We should all seek for unity, for love. All dissension should cease. The inward work is to go on in the heart. The Word of God is God's voice to us. The Word is to be studied, obeyed. It is spirit, power, and life to the soul, and yet how few are interested to search its pages. Light and trifling reading occupy the precious moments that ought to be devoted to the searching of the Scriptures. We want to pray for the Lord to teach us His truth from His Word, else our feet will be found standing on sliding sand.4LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 11

We cannot swerve from truth. We must hold fast our integrity. We must keep God's honor constantly before us. We want to make sure work for eternity. I hope, my children, that you will be imbued with the Spirit of Christ and be constantly drawing near to God, that God may draw near to you. Oh, what rich blessings are for us, [that] the peace of Christ may be brought into our hearts and we reflect the Spirit of Jesus to others. May the Lord enlighten you both daily. Do not rest unless you know that Jesus is indeed formed within, the hope of glory. Seek most earnestly for a deeper experience, a more devoted faith, the meekness and loveliness of Christ. Love to you, my dear children. Walk in the light as Christ is in the light.⁴*LtMs, Lt 102, 1886, par. 12*

Dear Children:

We left Copenhagen yesterday morning and after riding two hours took the boat at Corsia for Kiel. Usually we have only five and one-half hours' ride, but on this occasion the boat labored against a head wind which delayed us more than one hour. The water was rough, several were sick. I came so near being sick, I was very miserable all the way. Sarah was obliged to lie down and did not sit up during the eight hours' ride.4LtMs, Lt 103, 1886, par. 1

We were surprised to find upon the boat so many English-speaking people. W. C. White generally writes upon the calligraph on the boat and sometimes on the cars. While he was writing, there was quite a crowd of officials and gentlemen and ladies to see the letter-writing machine. One man and woman thought it was a knitting machine. After the wonder was over, then some had something else to do. One gentleman with a good-looking countenance, but a very red face, began to smoke, then another and another. After he had regaled himself with tobacco to his heart's content, then he called for refreshments. Beer was brought and large slices of fat pork which he and his lady devoured greedily. But we had a very strong wind and the water was some rough and soon the woman lay down on a platform on upper deck. I was sleepy and went below. I had been up since three o'clock in the morning, and after having a nap, I awoke just as near being fully seasick as I ever could be [and] not carry it out.4LtMs, Lt 103, 1886, par. 2

The lower saloon was musty, no sun could reach it. It was ventilated from above. I was glad to get up on deck by the side of W. C. White. Was rather giddy headed, he confessed. The wind blew strongly, but I would not venture to go below. The lady who ate her pork was very sick, white as a corpse she looked, but her good-looking, red faced husband was smoking. She motioned him that his cigar made her sick. He turned his head a little and smoked away vigorously a though his salvation depended on activity, poisoning the atmosphere about him. He had to take his wife below, yet he held firmly his cigar. There she lay retching and vomiting, crying and moaning, but he came on deck to finish his smoking.4LtMs, Lt 103, 1886, par. 3

We were not very level headed when we arrived at Kiel. We had two hours to wait and the waiting room was large, but filled with tables, and around the tables soon were seated young men and young women and entire families, sitting at these tables with foaming mugs of beer, and each goes through the performance of clicking the mugs together before drinking. They did not seem, many of them, to call for bread or solid food, but the beer which was placed to the lips of little children and women just as freely as the red-faced, beer-drinking husbands and fathers. Then next came the cigars; smoking, such earnest smoking and continuous, I never witnessed before. The husband and father would send forth clouds of poisonous incense upon the air, polluting it, while his family was around him and he would puff his smoke directly in their faces.4LtMs, Lt 103, 1886, par. 4

Dear Children:

We arrived home safe from our journey to Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. We had a very favorable trip, and speedily. We were on the cars and boat two days and one night, and we felt thankful to be at home again. I have not spent any time in visiting places for my own gratification. I have not allowed myself but one ride in a carriage for recreation. In Copenhagen, I was in much better health than at Orebro, for which I felt grateful to God. We feel so thankful to be home again. We would make no complaints, but we find many inconveniences and discomforts in traveling that are taxing to the strength and health. But soon we must go again to England and shall leave here in about six weeks. My whole burden is for the blessing of the Lord. If I can have the presence of Jesus, all is well.4LtMs, Lt 104, 1886, par. 1

The work is great and more and more solemn as we near the close of time. I want to do my work well, else I shall not hear the "Well done" from the Master. [Matthew 25:21.] I see these large cities like Copenhagen full of pleasure seeking and merriment. If we had a little of that [which] has been used in pleasing self, we might find so many places for to use it. I think of my carriage in Battle Creek. I wish it could be sold. I wish you would speak to Henry Kellogg about it. I feel that I need it—the means might go to paying my debt at the Review office. I see the statement of accounts showing your financial standing has come. There is a little advance which is good, but I wish it were better. I hope, my dear son, you will not become encouraged as you see that you improve a little and will launch out to go into new enterprises and obtain credit to invest more means. You have passed over this ground so often to afterwards feel the biting sting of financial pressure that I hope your lesson is learned not to have imaginary wants and let your imagination see a large field. You can manage, and all requires means. Bind about your desires. Work to the one point to become a free man. But Satan watches you with vigilance as he sees you making any success toward freedom. Then he has another pleasing, attractive scheme which will be presented, which he flatters you will only cost a limited sum to be invested which is like the thousand-dollar hand irons, requiring more and still more invested.4LtMs, Lt 104, 1886, par. 2

I have just read a note in the Battle Creek paper, "J. E. White will put a steamer in Goguc Lake for his own private use. It will be a fast boat and carry about twenty persons." I cannot think this is you, for in the first place you have not one dollar to invest in such an enterprise. Second, you would not do this because it would not have a good influence. I have too much confidence in your desire to avoid even the appearance of evil to do such a thing yourself and to encourage others to do this. We are responsible for the influence we exert over others. If we take a self-indulging course, we stimulate others to go still further than we. They will not generally stop where we may stop. We want to live as in the sight of the Lord. We want to be cheerful, kind and courteous, but have the true, dignified nobility of heaven. As sons of God, heirs of the kingdom of heaven, we should have our lives characterized with sobriety and yet true manliness, walking the earth as ever, looking beyond heavenward, communing with God as we walk by the way, as we associate with others, praying with faith to be kept from falling into Satan's snare, grasping the hand of Jesus that He may guide us over all perilous and difficult places.4LtMs, Lt 104, 1886, par. 3

Your work is not [to] be self-pleasing, but to draw nearer to dear Jesus, who loves you and who gave His life for you, catching His spirit, His manner of work, and your soul strong in His strength, firm in His courage. You may be happy, you may be favored of God in a marked manner. You may be showing forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light. Talk the truth, live the truth, talk faith, act faith. O it is your privilege to have your life hid with Christ in God, that when Christ who is your life shall appear, that you also may appear with Him in glory. Look to the great beyond. Let every thought, every action be in reference to the future, immortal life, that you will not be ashamed of the record that is kept by the heavenly messengers. Only a little longer to toil, only a little longer to fight the battles against Satan, then it will be victory eternal, complete, not to war any more, but peace and righteousness and joy be ours ever more. 4LtMs, Lt 104, 1886, par. 4

I want to meet you, my children, in the city of God. Happy, happy shall we be then with nothing to mar our peace. 4LtMs, Lt 104, 1886, par. 5

Dear Children:

I feel thankful to the Lord for His mercy and blessings to us all. I have been afflicted for nearly one year with a troublesome tooth; at times it would be quiet. I wished to save it, if possible; but for days together I have had most keen suffering and have just endured this affliction of two weeks, but yesterday I decided it must come out, and it did come out. The doctor said he could put it back again. I told him, No. I had seen and felt enough of that offending member, and now I hoped for a period of rest.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 1

We have been holding morning meetings, commencing at half-past five o'clock in the morning. I give them a morning talk, then we have a social meeting. We felt that something must be done to arouse the workers in this building and the church members to a deeper piety and a firmer faith and more decided effort to do the will and work of God. Our meetings are doing good. I wish there could be something of this kind every morning in the Review and Herald office, presenting before the people that which the Lord required of them in His Word. While the important points of truth are made of deep importance to be presented to the people, the lessons in the Word of God in regard to practical godliness are not impressed upon them as they should be. We need to have the matter kept before the mind and we be educated to think upon these things, feeling that we must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The Bible should be studied diligently and prayerfully. If light reading is allowed to occupy the mind, there is a growing disrelish for the searching of the Scriptures.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 2

Well, the Lord has furnished us in His Word with light, great light; if we do not care to bring this light into our hearts, we will be deprived of it. I feel deeply in earnest to obtain all the light I can.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 3

Edson, do you know of any one who is competent to take my articles and prepare them for the printer? Marian Davis is an excellent worker. Sister Eliza Burnham was a good worker, but both of these could not keep pace with my everactive pen. Eliza is on her way to Australia, and I am left with only Marian; and Mary has other work to do so that my help is very much limited. I have piles of discourses reported and copied, but no one who has time to prepare them.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 4

Another thing, Edson, will you get me two good fountain pens. I do not know whether I have asked this of you before, but I wish them much. You can charge to me.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 5

I am sorry you did not get your pattern here for clothing by a French brother. I cannot send unless made up. I send Emma a shawl which I hope will please her, also a lace cape. We have to be very particular what we send, as the custom house officers are very particular in their examinations. I am having knit for you both socks and stockings. How do you stand in reference to these articles to wear?4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 6

Aug. 12

Brother Schneppe I introduce to you as one who designs to give himself to the work of the Lord. We need him here in Basel, but he is obliged to serve in the army if he remains. In going to America, he loses his citizenship and can receive none of his father's estate which portion will go to the government; but with our faith he does not hesitate to go to America. He cannot enter the army. He can speak some English, and I want you to see him, and he will tell you about us here. He has been the one who has brought us faithfully our kindling and coal since we have been here. He is a worthy young man.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 7

We had a letter from Brother Ings. He is safe in England, and they had a pleasant voyage. I have just come from morning meeting. My text was "And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace.” [Ephesians 6:15.] I have now spoken seven times in the morning and three times on Sabbath in two weeks and two days. Two mornings we had Bible class. We have services every morning, and it has a good influence. It is giving them line upon line, precept upon precept, in short talks, and I believe it is doing them good. All these talks are reported.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 8

I see I have said nothing about our family. We are usually well. God’s special blessing is upon me, physically and mentally, and spiritually.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 9

Sarah is engaged writing, copying letters on calligraph and taking dictations. Mary is preparing history of travels and the morning talks and discourses for a book. Ella is playing earnestly with a little puppy. We brought her from Italy. She is not blessed as other children are with a mother who can give her her company and attention. Sarah has her room, small; it is her sleeping room. W. C. White and Mary occupy one small bedroom. They are just as full of business as they can be. Mary has worked too hard, applying herself too closely this winter, and she is not as well as I could wish.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 10

Kristine is busy with housework. Marian has her room a flight above in a small bedroom, busy as she can be. I have a good, large parlor. When we assemble night and morning for to seek the Lord, we read around and enjoy the exercise. Today we all for the first time since coming here go out to a place in the country to have a basket dinner, and I have promised to speak to them. I wish so much to see you. I long to be where I can speak straight English and not have two translators following me, but I am grateful to God that I can reach the people in this way.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 11

Oh, let us be grateful and happy; and the little time we have here, let us be fitting for heaven. The work of character building for eternity is to progress while life shall last. Children, you must reach a higher standard, and God help you to have daily home religion, deeper piety, deeper experience, more earnest faith, more of Jesus and less of self. It is too late to trifle, too late to be indifferent and frivolous. Be sober [and] watch unto prayer.4LtMs, Lt 105, 1886, par. 12

Dear Addie:

I learn Sarah mailed a letter to you which was not ready to be sent to you, but I am not able to write much now. Yesterday I was very sick. An acute attack of malaria, I think, was the cause. For one year I have been afflicted with a diseased tooth, but I have had it extracted, and I am really glad, although the pain in the lacerated gum was more severe than before the tooth was taken out.⁴*LtMs, Lt 106, 1886, par. 1*

I am doing what I can, and I hope to see our workers here in the office understand better what it is to be Christians. We have meetings nearly every morning, half-past five o'clock meetings for those specially seeking the Lord, and we have seen good results. When we know that Satan will make special attacks upon the ones who are employed in our institutions, then special efforts must be made to lift up a standard against him by elevating the characters of those who are engaged in the work.⁴*LtMs, Lt 106, 1886, par. 2*

I am very anxious—I fear too anxious—to get through here and return to America; but I have no will of my own, but I think I can glorify God by bearing my testimony among our people, the churches who need our help. They need a certain kind of help which they do not receive.⁴*LtMs, Lt 106, 1886, par. 3*

Addie, if you were only here and could help me prepare articles for the press, how glad I should be. I shall have to give up Mary. She will have all she can attend to soon. I wish you to keep this matter a profound secret, and I would not say a word to you about it unless we must have you get some things and send to her at once. She will want them the middle of November. I have been looking for a letter from you. I am really perplexed to know what to do with May Walling to complete her education and have her learn a good trade. Now, Addie, let not a hint of that which I have written escape you, for not a soul in America has the least intimation of this but yourself, from this letter.4LtMs, Lt 106, 1886, par. 4

Dear Daughter Addie:

I have delayed writing you, hoping I should receive some word from you. This long delay I cannot understand. If you are not able to write me a long letter, you could write me a few lines at least and let me know if you are well. Notwithstanding my much writing, I have not felt it would be right to neglect my children. I have received nothing from either you or May for weeks. I will not blame you, but I would be much gratified to hear from you. I know not whether you are well or ill, and I am somewhat anxious in regard to you. Will you be more prompt?⁴*LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 1*

I have been engaged most earnestly of late. I have not been able to sleep after half-past two for two nights in succession, and after pleading with the Lord and seeking to lay my burdens on the Burden-bearer, I have arisen and before breakfast written sixteen pages of important matter. Now I do not want you to be deprived of sleep as I have been, even if I receive no letter from you; but I do want you to write me once a week, if it is no more than two pages of note paper. If you can find time to write no more than this I will not complain.⁴*LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 2*

I cannot tell yet how our future course may be, whether we will go to Australia or spend next summer in England. We wait orders from our Captain. The Lord will teach us His will and I have no will of my own in this matter. Where I can do the most good, there I wish to be. My health is better than it has been in any summer since I was attacked with malaria. I feel grateful to the Lord for His mercy and His love toward me. I have worked hard since being here in Europe. Never have I done more active service, and the Lord has sustained me. I want the praise of God in my heart and breathed from my lips continually. I am sure the end is near, and all that I can do to help in the advancement of the work of God I want to do. The night is coming in which no man can work. Therefore we must work while the day lasts.4LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 3

I think of my home in Healdsburg sometimes, of its conveniences, of the fruit which I have not had for three years; and then I will not allow my mind to dwell on these things, for are we not pilgrims and strangers here? Are we not seeking for a city whose Builder and Maker is God? This world is not the Christian's home. It is not the Christian's heaven. We are only to tarry here for a little while; and how foolish it looks to me to see the judgment-bound inhabitants devoting so much time and money to beautify their homes and neglect the soul culture, the only thing worth taking with them into their heavenly home. My greatest and most earnest efforts are to have on the wedding garments of Christ's righteousness. I want to make every effort to overcome here, that I may be received into the paradise of God.4LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 4

I hope, Addie, that while you are obtaining an education to fit you for the useful, practical duties of life, that you will not neglect to learn in school of Christ. The time for us to prepare for the future life is now. We shall be most happy when we are walking in the plain path of duty, when we have the assurance we are doing the will of God. Then we will be happy. I hope, Addie, you are seeking daily to grow in grace and the knowledge of the dear Saviour. Heaven, sweet heaven, how much more beautiful than anything here in this world, and it will be our home, our own place of residence, if we are pure and holy. Then do not let us make any mistakes, but let us strive with all our God-given powers to win the prize—a crown of glory, an inheritance among the sanctified, an eternal weight of glory. I want you to be one of God's chosen ones. I want you to have a place among the redeemed. I want to have a place there. I want to be saved with an everlasting salvation.4LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 5

Well, Addie, we know not when we shall be brought together again, but we will not repine. We will draw nigh to God. We will watch and pray, and Jesus will be to us a present help, an enduring friend wherever we are. May the Lord bless you is my prayer. Yours with much love,4LtMs, Lt 107, 1886, par. 6

This letter is published in entirety in 17MR 75-82.

Dear Brother and Sister Foss:

Although many thousand miles separate us from you, yet we have not forgotten you. I have remembered you in my prayers many times. It was not my choice to come to Europe, but the General Conference urged my coming so earnestly, I complied. I am not sorry I have done this, for the Lord has especially blessed me at every step. I have been sustained in a remarkable manner. I have done a great amount of labor and written many pages. I have been here two weeks, have spoken in a hall twelve times and written one hundred pages. I arise at four o'clock and before the call to breakfast, I have written from ten to fifteen pages. I have reason to praise God with heart and lips for His mercy and His sustaining grace.⁴*LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 1*

This place is a large place, an ancient place, and there are many things here that make it worthwhile to see. There are the most ancient buildings I have ever looked upon. Elder D. T. Bourdeau is making it his home here with his family, and he is laboring among the French here. There are quite a number who have accepted the Sabbath and been converted—some from the Catholics. There are many Catholics in this city of two hundred thousand inhabitants. Here as in many other cities in Europe the market places are all open. The market place here was a large building where everything like produce is brought in wagons, on the head, in baskets, and a variety of ways to sell. It appeared to be anything but Sunday. There were hundreds of stalls where their merchandise was displayed. It was a perfect Babel of confusion, men and women crying their goods for sale and many in number were making their purchases as on other days of the week. In these countries where the Catholic element prevails, they are the lowest in morals and steeped in ignorance. Sunday is to them a festival, a day for sports, for all kinds of amusements. The people attend the service in church one hour in the day, then their religious observance of the day is at an end. Stores are open all through Nimes as on any of the other days that have no sacredness in their minds attached to them.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 2

We visited a building called the “square house” where was a large portico or piazza in front supported by immense pillars, very much after the style of some courthouse that I have seen built. This building was very ancient and stood as in the days of Christ. The Barbarians had invaded this city and made much destruction, and this building was buried beneath rubbish, but it has been dug out and stands exactly on the spot where it was built so many hundred years ago. We went in the building and saw many ancient relics and inscriptions as old as the days of Christ. The yard enclosing this building had many stones with ancient inscriptions piled up all around the building. This building was erected by Augustus Caesar for his sons. It would be a great curiosity for you to pass through these narrow, cobblestone-paved streets and find almost every building is a store or shop of some kind. You enter a dark little room, and there are the most valuable goods piled up on shelves and displayed on counters. There are many bazaars that have all kinds of goods and every conceivable kind of goods, all very cheap.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 3

Sabbath, I spoke twice in the afternoon and evening. Sunday spoke in the evening to an intelligent audience. Elder Bourdeau interpreted for me. I had much freedom in speaking. Brother Ings is now reporting my discourse.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 4

Sunday, after speaking, I was introduced to an evangelical minister, Mr. Gilley. He is preceptor of a school and one who has acted the most prominent part in building and making an asylum for orphan children and fallen women. Tuesday, we called upon Mr. Gilley and had a very pleasant interview. Wednesday, he visited us at the home of Elder Bourdeau by request and gave me some very interesting facts in reference to the ancient buildings and objects of interest, dating back as old as the days of Christ. This was valuable and interesting to me.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 5

Thursday, October 21, we held meeting in the hall in the afternoon. Some could attend at that time who were not able to come in the evening. After I had spoken with freedom for about one hour, we called Mr. Gilley who was at liberty, favored us with his company, conducting us to an interesting ancient castle, and gave us an explanation of many things that attracted our attention on the way. Here it was our work to climb up many granite steps, then a more gradual ascent higher and higher until we reached the remains of the old castle. It had in its day covered a large space of ground, but the stones were estimated of so high value they were removed and used for the material for other buildings. We entered the tower and began to climb the narrow stone spiral stairs in the tower until we stood at the top and were richly rewarded for our toil in the magnificent view which was presented before us. We could overlook Nimes and the olive groves abounding in and about Nimes, presenting a very beautiful picture.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 6

I thought while so high up of the temptation of Christ when he was beset by Satan. He was placed on the pinnacle of the temple and then invited and as well taunted to evidence that He was the Son of God by casting Himself down from the dizzy height. Disguising his true character, he quoted Scripture, showing that he was not ignorant of the Scriptures, "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down: for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee: and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest at any time, Thou dash Thy foot against a stone." Jesus answered him, "It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." [Matthew 4:6, 7.]4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 7

Failing here, "The devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." [Verses 8-10.]4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 8

From this eminence we had a broad, extended view, but nothing that was in comparison to the view of the kingdoms of the world,

spread out before the Son of God in most bewitching loveliness and richness; and sorrow came into our hearts as we were impressed with the fact that many bow down and worship anything and everything but the Lord God who created the heavens and the earth. 4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 9

How many Satan tempts to worship him who yield to the temptation. They do the very things Satan wants them to do which are to give attention and devotion to those things which separate the mind and heart from God. Beautiful were the kingdoms, and their glory spread out like a panorama before the sight of the Son of God. He was tempted in all points like as we are, but the beauty of holiness, the uncorrupted heart, was more to be desired than any of the glitter or tinsel of earthly things. If those who worship God only will place their feet upon one single text of the Bible and meet Satan with "It is written," they can effectually resist Satan. Wherever we are, be it in Paris, in Nimes, in Constantinople, in Venice or Rome, Babylon or London, place yourself upon the Lord's side. "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." [Exodus 23:2.] "As for me and my house," whatever other men may do, whatever they may serve and worship, "we will serve the Lord." [Joshua 24:15.]4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 10

The temptation will come, if I keep the Sabbath, the very day the fourth commandment has specified, I shall have [to] give up this source of gain. I shall have to close my business on Saturday, the busiest and most profitable day in the week; and when you hesitate to comply with a plain "Thus saith the Lord" because you will lose profit, and riches will not increase unto you, you continue in disobedience to God and bow the knee to Satan as he tempted Christ to do. If you gain a loftier place and are in favor with the transgressors of God's law, you may escape some inconvenience and opposition and reproach, but you have bowed the knee and acknowledged Satan's supremacy. You have chosen his way and his will to be your way and your will, but have refused God's claims and made yourself liable to suffer the penalty of the transgression of His holy law against all disobedience. 4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 11

The impressions made upon my mind upon this occasion will never be effaced. This tower has stood for ages upon a most commanding eminence. Could we only know the history of these ancient buildings, what revelations would be made to us. I appreciated the information given us by Mr. Gilley.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 12

Oct. 23, Sabbath

Elder Ings spoke to those assembled with profit. In the afternoon I talked to the people, and then we had a social meeting, and many good testimonies were borne which were translated to me. There was one converted from Catholicism, some from [the] Methodist and Baptist, and one from a life of dissipation. The testimonies had the true ring. Here were the few who had separated themselves from the many to obey God and serve Him, refusing to worship the prince of this world, for he is the prince of darkness. For to be singular for singularity's sake is positively detestable, below the dignity of a Christian; but to be singular, because it is necessary to be so as the result of worshiping God and Him only, places heaven's dignity upon man. We must not be afraid of being singular when duty requires us to be thus, to exalt and honor God, and we must bear in mind that the work of Christ is specified. "Who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus 2:14.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 13

"For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. The Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people." Deuteronomy 7:6-7.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 14

We must not be afraid of being singular. Do not court singularity for the sake of being odd, but for the sake of avoiding sin and dishonor to God. And in this case we are not to mind even the multitude who are against us. "Thou shalt not follow the multitude to do evil." Exodus 23:2. Because the law of God is made void in our world, does it make it a virtue to transgress that law? It may appear to the world a very small matter for the Christian to be in harmony with the world by just the act of keeping Sunday for the Sabbath in the place of the seventh day, but God's Word says the seventh day is My holy day. The man [of] sin says, I make a sabbath for you, and you must keep the first day of the week. 4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 15

The God-fearing Christian sees that Satan is tempting, "Worship me," and "All these things will I give thee." [Matthew 4:9.] But naked duty must be chosen—worship God in obeying His commandments and not bow the knee to the man of sin. Let not Satan's bribe be accepted, but manfully be true to God even if the world calls you singular; that which is right in God's sight, do. "He that walketh uprightly walketh surely." Proverbs 10:9.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 16

We thank the Lord that a few have had the moral courage in Nimes to cease to longer transgress the law of God, to accept the light and take their position firmly to keep the Sabbath that God has sanctified and blessed. Let the light shine forth from these few in bright, steady rays, reflecting light upon those who are in darkness. Said Christ to His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.] God has a church. It is not the great cathedral, neither is it the national establishment, neither is it the various denominations; it is the people who love God and keep His commandments. "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." [Matthew 18:20.] Where Christ is even among the humble few, this is Christ's church, for the presence of the high and holy One who inhabiteth eternity can alone constitute a church. Where two or three are present who love and obey the commandments of God, Jesus there presides; let it be in the desolate place of the earth, in the wilderness, in the city enclosed in prison walls. The glory of God has penetrated the prison walls, flooding with glorious beams of heavenly light the darkest dungeon. His saints may suffer, but their sufferings will, like the apostles of old, spread their faith and win souls to Christ and glorify His holy name. The bitterest opposition expressed by those who hate God's great moral standard of righteousness should not and will not shake the steadfast soul who trusts fully in God. All things shall work together for good to those who love God. "This is the love of God, that ye keep His commandments." [1 John 5:3.] They that will be doers of the Word are building securely, and the tempest and storm of persecution will not shake their foundation, because their souls are rooted to the eternal rock.4LtMs, Lt 108, 1886, par. 17

[To W. C. White?]

I have decided to write a few lines more. Elder Bourdeau had to pay out all the money that was sent him except ten francs to live on. They have two men boarders, and during the summer three, which made their expenses large, for milk is high and provisions are high. Now Brother Bourdeau must have more money. I think these men will have to engage in labor in other towns and cities. I should judge they are good workers.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 1

Do not fail to send Elder Bourdeau money, for ten francs will not last long with a large family to feed. He charges only eight francs per week for all the boarders, provides them bedding and food, and does the washing of Brother Albert. All they charge the conference is just what the bare material comes to. I think this is not just the way it should be. I think two dollars per week for each one of the boarders who is devoting his time to the interests of the cause is little enough. They would be glad to have their family to themselves, but cannot do so very well. If the men cook for themselves, it will take much of their time.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 2

... for me to obtain a knowledge of what they were doing when we parted, himself and wife shook hands heartily, and he said he hoped the Lord would spare my life to long continue to do good. In the evening he came with his wife and the directress and about fifty of his scholars. I had much freedom in speaking, and he came and thanked me for the words spoken. Today we have had quite a congregation, and I had much freedom in speaking. But, Willie, Nimes is a dark place. The people are far behind—wicked and corrupt, and wise to do evil. It seems like Sodom and Gomorrah.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 4

Two have embraced the Sabbath since we came. One is a man who will be of real value. He decided today to obey the truth. The work moves slowly, but the church is being formed and will, we hope, reflect light in this place. They had an excellent social meeting Sabbath afternoon. Sixteen spoke, and Minister Cruze remained through it all and seemed to enjoy it. Now if my coming here has done no more, it has, through becoming acquainted with these men, spiked their guns so they will not make a raid on me. They profess to esteem me highly.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 5

Brother Ings has done great good here in instructing the people. They have enjoyed listening to him, for they say he makes everything so clear and easy to be understood. He has been very active in working. He has employed his time fully and is much liked. We are of good courage. We leave here tomorrow morning.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 6

The Catholic friend and his wife visited us last Sabbath and attended meeting all day. They have just come to go to meeting tonight. He brought me his picture because he had ours, which was given him at Basel. I should not wonder if they might take hold of the truth. He is disgusted with confessing to the priest, who is only a man, not God. He wants a Bible and says he means to read it, that the Catholics are kept ignorant of the Bible because the Catholics do not live its teachings. Well, I like them. They are so kind and sociable.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 7

We read that the late rains have submerged one village near here, and the people had to find quarters in a graveyard. The prefects went to carry them relief last week. There has not been such a rain for forty years. A. C. Bourdeau writes it has rained five days in Italy. Good night. I am real tired.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 8

Mr. Gilley has been very sociable. He sent me a line soliciting we not leave until I had called upon Mr. Cruze, their minister, and also some of their institutions for orphans and fallen women. We felt the work was not fully completed, so consented to stay. Last Thursday we went to Mr. Gilley's [institution]. He accompanied us all through the establishment. Then we called upon Minister Cruze who received us cordially, and we had a social chat and he came out evening after the Sabbath afternoon with the directress of the institution, and his wife, to hear me, but I had just closed my remarks. I was not well and returned home, and who should come to visit me but the minister, his wife, and the directress of the institution. We had a good visit, and he brought me books and papers.4LtMs, Lt 108a, 1886, par. 9

My dear daughter Addie:

We have been in this city two weeks and two days. This is a very ancient city, and it has one hundred thousand inhabitants. It is a very wicked city, and it is only within a few years that Protestants could find a foothold here. Now there are several Protestant churches. But it is a hard place to labor in. About fifteen good souls are now keeping the Sabbath, and we think some more will yet take hold of the truth. These have taken their stand, I understand, recently. All that is gained here is by the hardest. I have spoken twelve times, Brother Ings ten times, and he has done much good in this place and is much esteemed here. They say he makes everything so plain that they can get hold of it.⁴*LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 1*

Sister Ing's health is improving. She is cheerful, and we hope she will enjoy her stay here in Europe. Sarah McEnterfer did not accompany me here. In the absence of Elder Whitney, Willie has a great burden upon him, and Sarah could be a great help in every way to him, especially in copying on the calligraph and taking dictations. I have written one hundred pages since coming to this place, besides my speaking. I labored very hard in England, contracted a severe cold which made me sick for a couple of weeks, notwithstanding I felt obliged to write. This place is ancient and noted for its ancient buildings and monuments. There is a fountain here that springs up from the earth like a bubbling spring and furnishes a deep, wide stream of water, very pure. The depth has never been ascertained. It flows in channels of its own and forms an island. On this island is the statue of the Goddess Diana, and her family and other statuaries in marble. There is solid masonry and inscriptions showing the Romans used this place for their baths. This hard, granite pavement was before Christ, and the statuary was before Christ. There is a large, immense building partially torn down, the temple of Diana, imitating, it is supposed, the temple in Ephesus. It was before the days of Christ. There are towers that I visited and climbed to the top which covered acres of ground that have been removed except the tower itself which history places far back to the days of Christ. I saw a whole floor of mosaic in the museum which is of the finest work of art—probably belonged to a king's palace.4LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 2

Mr. Gilley, who has lived here all his life and is above sixty years old, is a man who has been a minister here for many years. He says that the people were taking down some old buildings to be replaced by new when they struck, in digging for cellars, a hard substance and could go no farther. Direction was given to the workmen to move carefully in their work and remove the earth which was several feet beneath the surface. Mr. Gilley was on the ground himself and saw this piece of work, which was very fine, taken up out of the ground. It is 30 feet by 20. In 1883 this piece of fine art was unearthed. There is a large amphitheater which is a short two-minutes' walk from where Elder Bourdeau lives. This dates back to 1700, and up to this day in the arena are bullfights and large doings of the kind. There is an entire building that has been buried up in the ruins after invading armies have done their work, and many ancient inscriptions show that the building can be traced back seventeen hundred years.4LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 3

There are many things I have seen which I shall give a more full account of in the future. I have not been able to go out as much as I would have liked to do because it has rained much, and the prefect, the man who is in highest authority, has left to visit a place not but a few miles from here, where the inhabitants have been forced to leave their homes because flooded out and were then finding a refuge on higher ground of the graveyard.4LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 4

We leave at eight o'clock for Valence, six-hours' ride on the cars, spend a day and two nights there speaking to the people. A few Sabbathkeepers are in the place and then go on our way to Italy to labor there two weeks and then visit the churches in Switzerland on our way to Basel.4LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 5

I have made some very pleasant acquaintances in this place. I visited the establishment for orphans and fallen women; was shown over buildings that are situated upon a high ascent of ground, one building on steep hillside above another. Mr. Schultze is a minister of the congregation called “Evangelical Order.” He showed me great respect as well as Mr. Gilley—both ministers and teachers of schools, the proprietors of the schools and of the institution. Sabbath, Mrs. Schultze came to our meeting and then proposed after meeting to call upon us with the proprietors of the schools and asylum and accompanied by his wife. We had a very social interview, and they expressed with much warmth their wish that God would spare my life to continue in the good and great work I was engaged. These all came to hear me in the evening as I spoke twice that day and brought fifty of the students of the school to hear me speak. Sunday they came out again, some of them, not all. Well, I am glad I showed them special attention and have their goodwill, for at least it will do as much as to spike their guns so they will not make a raid on me and will help the growing work in this place.4LtMs, Lt 109, 1886, par. 6

Dear Children:

We reached this place this morning, half-past eight o'clock, and found mail for us. Read all the letters I thought, but upon a more thorough investigation, found one yet unopened, and which contained the important news of the birth of your second daughter. I was very thankful that the crisis was past and that Mary was doing well. I shall be much pleased to welcome the little one.⁴*LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 1*

I sent you letters from Nimes in regard to Abel [Bieder], who has recently taken his stand with us, coming to Basel. I had so great faith that he would be encouraged to come that I loaned him $9, as he had no means, and has had but two dollars per week for his labor; could not lay by anything. He had to purchase some underclothing which he needed. I hope he will be received well, and I would be glad if he could [be] a member of our family because it will be the very best thing for him, and the best missionary work we can possibly do. This I desire only for a little while until he has received a mold that he has never yet had. You will be much pleased with his spirit and his general deportment.⁴*LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 2*

I remembered the shepherd was represented as taking the lost sheep on his shoulder and carrying it with rejoicing back to the fold. I think this is the very thing that God requires us to do, to bear the straying, wandering sheep until it has strength to go alone.⁴*LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 3*

There is very much I would be pleased to say to you. I am glad I did not leave Nimes until last Monday, Nov. 1, the very day the little one was born. We left Nimes for Valence. There we found only four keeping the Sabbath. As no appointment had been given out, we therefore did what we could to strengthen the little few. One was present, another noble young man who had given up the truth. Elder Bourdeau talked some, Elder Ings talked some time, and then I talked to them. Elder Bourdeau was very anxious we should remain another day and speak next evening. I finally consented. He did all he could in visiting some of his friends and urged them to attend the meeting. They promised to do so. He rode ten miles out in the country to see a man who kept the Sabbath, but he was at work a great distance, and no word could reach him time enough to come into the meeting. Elder Bourdeau was chilled through, and that is all that trip amounted to. He did all he could do.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 4

That afternoon he had us accompany him to the cathedral and look upon the bust of Pius VI who was noted in prophecy, who was led into captivity and died in captivity. Here was the one marked in history who received the deadly wound. His heart is encased in the marble monument beneath where the bust is placed. We felt rather solemn as we looked upon the monument of this man noted in prophecy.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 5

It rained hard all the afternoon and evening, so that no one was out except the few keeping the Sabbath and the young man, a carpenter, who was a man of excellent ability. I spoke to the little few one hour with as much freedom as though talking to hundreds. The next morning slept none after half-past two. We left for the cars quarter of five. It was still raining.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 6

Elder Bourdeau rendered us good service in going to the depot and seeing us situated in the third-class cars. By going in this way we could save twenty-one francs.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 7

We rode from Nimes to Valence six hours in the third class very comfortably and saved fifteen francs. We were crowded with people going in and going out of the compartment we were in on the first part of the journey. I lay down, but a great burly man came in and sat upon my feet, and I thought best to draw them up and arise. It made us smile to see two young men, good, wholesome looking, come in the cars with the baggage they brought. Really was more than we carry. They could not possibly store them away and therefore one held a large valise in his arms. Well, we did very well until we reach Modan. Mary and you are acquainted with that place. It is where our baggage is examined. We changed cars here and lo, found the third class full of emigrants, just from the boats and cars, [going] to their destination. There were thirty-three emigrants, but as there was no smoking allowed, we got along very well. There was an Italian woman, daughter, and granddaughter in the cars, and they were astonishingly dirty. They could talk English. They were from Iowa, Cedar Rapids. Well, we got along nicely and felt pleased that we had saved thirty-six francs on that trip.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 8

Elder Bourdeau said when we reached Modan, we must take second class. We did so and had the compartment to ourselves with the exception of one woman who could talk German; and Sister Ings and she had quite a chat together. Had we taken the third class, we would have had to wait four hours at Modan and then been on the slow train which would reach Turin at 2 o'clock A.M. We had in taking the second class to wait only half an hour and then were on the express train which reached Turin at 6 P.M. We went to the hotel and tarried for the night. We had good accommodations for seven francs, but we had a desperate time getting off in the morning as the officials could not understand German or French. But after a time we got our tickets all right and had compartment to ourselves and reached this place half-past eight A.M. Elder Bourdeau was at the depot to meet us. They are usually well, with the exception of his son who remains in a bad state of health.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 9

Now, my children, there are some things rather discouraging here. Cocorder has commenced again, just as he did when Mary and I were here. He has sent for all the evidence he can get, all the falsehood he can gather from Grant against me. He has hired a hall in the place where Bourdeau labored with the tent, and it is a little perplexing to know what it is best to do. Will you advise? It is so hopeless an outlook to try to withstand such an influence when the people cannot tell what is piped or what is harped. They think one talks well, and another entirely the opposite in faith talks well. Not all as I can learn are keeping the Sabbath as the result of the tent effort yet. Elder A. C. says they have many friends. Cocorder has issued his flaming notices that he would give the history of the Adventists from the beginning. Now this bad man will say all he can; and if I had known of this, I would not have come to Italy till they said [he] was past. But we decided to go on as we did here last fall, take no notice of them, make no reference to them. But I wish I understood just what way we can please the Lord best. If He has sent me here just at this time for some purpose, I would not shun the conflict. I want to do my whole duty. A. C. will give an appointment for me in Villar Pellice Sunday afternoon. He speaks there Friday evening, but an additional minister has been sent to aid the one already there, and a minister and his wife have watched and taken the names of every one of the church members that they saw go to the meetings to deal with them. So you see the devil is astir in these valleys. We are here and do not like to leave without doing something. We are all of good courage. I had decided exactly as you had written to tarry over one Sabbath and Sunday at Lausanne on way to Basel. We may also visit Reinach and Tramelan and save an extra trip there. I fear I shall be in a hurry to get home now; but if we carry out our purposes, we may not be at home in one month. Had we better go to Naples while here or wait till some future time? A. C. would be much gratified could we go now. He thinks this as good a time of the year as we can go. I fear all that will be done on the books will not amount to much. I mean Volume One. I want to do my whole duty for Europe. Will not hold me very many months longer. 4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 10

Now about my work at Nimes. I became acquainted with Gilley, and he sent me a note begging me not to go from Nimes yet, to remain a little longer and call upon their minister, and to visit their establishment for orphans and fallen women. So we concluded to remain another week, and we did visit their institutions. We think it an excellent establishment, well conducted. We called on the minister; also he was the proprietor in connection with Mr. Gilley. He was a noble looking man, received us with great courtesy, and we had a very pleasant interview. I spoke of my appreciation of what they were doing, and it seemed to mellow the heart of this minister who is chief manager at once. He gave me books and pictures of the institution and the history of their work. Next Sabbath he came to the meeting in the afternoon in company with his wife and the directress of the institution and one who preaches to them, but they were too late, for I had just ceased to talk and I was sick and left the meeting; but this party carried all through the social meeting, and then all came to see me at Elder Bourdeau's. We had another good visit. They expressed the warmest friendship and confidence in my work. These all attended the evening meeting with fifty of their students, for they have a large school in connection with their work. The minister thanked me for what I had spoken and hoped it would do much good.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 11

I told Elder Bourdeau if our visit did no more, it would spike their guns so they would not make a raid upon me. Mr. Gilley thinks everything of (Volume 4) and of the Life Sketches. Now if you could send him Life Sketches in the new binding and the (Volume 2,) then he would be much pleased. He reminded me of it twice. Said he wanted them very much. He has a good spirit. What it will all amount to I cannot say, but the Lord will work in His own time, and in His own way. I would be pleased to give the minister a set of my books also.4LtMs, Lt 110, 1886, par. 12

My dear Brother:

Elder Whitney has read to me your letter to Brother Albert Vuilleumier, wherein the testimonies are referred to by you in support of the position which you have taken. I have since my husband died forgiven debts of about one thousand dollars—three hundred dollars to one brother. It was a money loan, but he was poor and troubled because this debt hung over him. I thought the Lord was testing me in this matter to see if I would love my neighbor as myself. I thought should I be exacting with this brother, then the Lord, to whom I am indebted for all that I possess, would be exacting with me. Just as I deal with my brethren will God deal with me. So I passed over to him his note and had him put it in the fire.4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 1

Another brother owed me one hundred dollars. He said he was poor, unable to pay. I released him. Still another owed me one hundred dollars. He wrote me he would pay me when he could, but had not the means to pay me then. I wrote to him [that] I forgave the debt. Another owed me fifty dollars, but was unfortunate in business. I have never asked for the money. It was tendered to me twice. I said, No, I cannot take it; you need it. When we shall meet around the throne of God, I do not want any account to be written against me in the books of heaven that I did not have compassion for the needy and the distressed. Five hundred dollars was loaned, with promise to pay in a few months. I have received nothing for two years and expect nothing, because misfortune came upon them in losses of property.4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 2

I am carrying a debt of $10,000 on which I pay eight per cent interest, and yet I am glad I have not required the payment of these notes which were my just due. I can sympathize with you in this matter of wanting the means due you. But I cannot sympathize with you in the urging of one of God's servants, whom I know to be a conscientious, God-fearing, honorable man, to pay you money that he cannot possibly pay when his circumstances are such that he can barely live, with the strictest economy. You certainly would not write and urge the payment of money that he cannot possibly command. When banks fail where our means are invested, we take it as a matter of course, bear it with as good grace as possible, but make no very great lamentations over the matter; but here is a brother in the faith who has met with loss. Because of dishonesty of others, he lost his all. Some others were involved and also lost, some more and some less. Then should one of his own brethren show no compassion, no mercy; and shall he pass judgment against his unfortunate brethren? Shall he judge him harshly and be severe upon him? If so, God will surely deal with the one who does this and will treat him precisely as he would treat his unfortunate brother. Has not Jesus paid the debt of His own life for us? 4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 3

Please read the parable of the debtor in the lessons of Christ to His disciples, (Matthew 18:22) and onward. Again read the good, righteous, and merciful laws the Lord gave to the children of Israel, (Leviticus 25:35-37): "If thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou shalt relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee. Take thou no usury of him, or increase: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase." 4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 4

(Deuteronomy 15:7-11): "If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought; and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin unto thee. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto. For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.”4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 5

I hope, my dear brother, that you and your good mother will see the clear light and understand your duty. I know that the Brothers Vuilleumier are afflicted over this matter. They suffer, both of them, in mind, and the Lord looks upon their distress with tender compassion. I entreat of you to write a receipt to these brethren, forgive the debt, and do it as in obedience to God’s law and requirements. You will be blessed in thus doing. When I heard Brother Whitney read your letters, he was so grieved he wept, for he knew the sensitive heart of Brothers Albert and Luke Vuilleumier. These are God’s children, and you do not feel right toward them. I believe when you look at this matter in the light of the Bible, you will see you have made a mistake and pressed your claims altogether too severely. Will you now freely forgive the debt as you would have the Lord forgive you your indebtedness to Him?4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 6

I feel a deep interest that you shall do right in this matter, because you will not be blessed of the Lord unless you do. I want you both to have the favor of God, and you cannot have it unless you follow the rules God has given in His Word as to how one brother should treat his brother. I will not urge you to see and do your duty, because I believe you will when you see it in the light of the Bible. You had better release your claims, then Satan will not keep bringing up the matter to your mind to perplex and harass you.4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 7

With much respect,4LtMs, Lt 111, 1886, par. 8

Bourdeau, A. C.; Bourdeau, D. T.

Previously unpublished.

I was shown that Brother [D. T.] Bourdeau has suffered deprivation in Europe, but he has shown that he was unacquainted with affliction brought close home to himself by the way he has received it. He has felt such unreconciliation that he will receive no reward for his endurance of trials because he has not endured them. God has from time to time reproved Elder Bourdeau and given him an opportunity to turn and reform.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 1

A change must take place in your character, and all that others might say would make no impression on your mind. Even the testimonies of reproof borne to you did not weigh with you long, because you could not see your defects. Your relatives and friends have ever talked as though you were chosen of God for a great work. You have been petted and praised and flattered by your relatives. And the most dangerous thing in your case is that you have placed a high estimate upon yourself. You have thought yourself a great man, possessing extraordinary abilities. You felt ready to engage in a great work, but the smaller duties that make fragrant the Christian life have been sadly neglected.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 2

You have overestimated yourself; so also has your brother Augustin. The value you have placed upon your own labors is much higher than your brethren ever have or ever can estimate you. This point you must see and view in a more rational light, or there will never be harmony between you and your brethren. The more highly you estimate yourselves, the less value will your brethren place upon you; therefore the gulf will widen in the place of being bridged. You must come to the Bible injunction to esteem others better than yourselves. You have exalted views of yourselves.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 3

It is this idea that leads Daniel to talk of himself, his experience, his views, his impressions, his feelings. He is impulsive, childish. He has not self-control. He is controlled to a very great extent by his feelings. He does not seem to consider that impressions are dangerous guides and that feelings are no criterion. If they are followed, he will be led in a strangely fanatical course. Satan will give impressions and feelings that will tangle him up where it will be impossible for him to extricate himself. We must move from principle.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 4

To think as much as you do of self is the worst form of selfishness. You have but little courage. Whatever you feel or think you do not have it to yourself, but talk it out. Your wife has heard your talk upon disagreeable subjects in reference to your poor self until her nervous system is seriously deranged. It is impossible, Brother Daniel Bourdeau, for anyone to be connected with you and listen to your continuous talk about yourself, and upon your sufferings and your trials, without becoming exceedingly wearied and feeling relieved when out of your company.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 5

You have no idea how strongly all you say savors of the order of yourself. Self is mingled and mixed with all you do. You have been the cause of your wife's nervous disorder, and that which you have originated you have increased by your unceasing talk, your murmuring and complaints. She will never improve unless entirely separated from you, and for a time, while she is being treated, has no communication savoring of discontent, telling your troubles or your trials. It shall cost her nothing for her treatment. You do not know that you are not only imperiling the health and life of your wife, but your own health. No man can have the thoughts you have had and the feelings you have cherished without destroying himself and those who are connected with him.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 6

But the worst feature in this case is that you have murmured against God because of the very work of destruction you have caused. You have felt your hearts rise in rebellion against God because of the affliction of your wife, when your own state of mind made you a captive of Satan, and insane. You cannot bear trouble. You have not an heroic spirit. You have been mad against God because you were troubled. All this arises from your determination to have your own way. You would inquire of God, Why doest Thou thus? But will God answer you? His ways are hid from man. And you would enter into a controversy with the Lord of hosts rather than to bow in submission to His will and humble your heart before God.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 7

This terrible extreme state of feelings has not come all of a sudden. It has more fully developed itself within a few months. This has been the effect of the state of mind indulged for years.4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 8

You have been cautioned to avoid long speaking and long praying, for it would exhaust you. You have written too much. [Remainder missing.]4LtMs, Lt 112, 1886, par. 9

This letter is published in entirety in 21MR 340-345.

[First part missing] ... stood one feeble man as authority for everything. He has not undertaken to bring the people up and to perfect every man in Christ Jesus. The ideas he has had upon these things have not been according to the light God has given me, and yet Elder Matteson has accomplished a large work. The error was in sending him alone at the beginning. There should have been several to unite in the work. Oh, that God would help His people with proper understanding to broaden, to extend! Oh, that Heaven's light may shine forth upon the responsible men and upon those who go forth to labor! We can work successfully only through God. 4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 1

Half-past ten o'clock. At nine o'clock, by appointment, I met the committee to talk with them in regard to the way of observing the Sabbath and the elements in the church that had been tolerated and had disfigured the work and brought the truth into disrepute. This influence, unless firmly dealt with, would be the means of turning many souls from the truth. I spoke very decidedly, in the fear of God, and I left no chance for any misunderstanding, I assure you. 4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 2

I pointed to the blacksmith's shop, silent on the first day of the week, and the noise of hammering and of the anvil and clatter of iron on the Sabbath; and then close by was the marble shop, and the sound of hammer and chisel mingled with the prayers of a people who are professedly honoring God by observing His Sabbath. Entering into the ears of God is all this din and all this confusion, I said, dishonoring God on your very premises, under your control. The Lord has sent you a message to which you are to take heed. You may regard it as idle tales, but I tell you in the day of God you will know the things which I tell you are verity and truth.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 3

I related to them that when in America I was shown the work in Norway, the church in Christiania in particular, and the slow advancement they were making. The standard of piety and of truth was very low. The truth was made a matter of convenience. Rather than bringing themselves up to the Bible standard, they were making their business and their own selfish interest the standard. God will accept no such service.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 4

An angel of God said, “Look and observe carefully what this people are doing, mingling their own dross with pure truth.” I had Sara present to report, and will not make the statement I designed to make, but have the words copied and then will have it more exact. Now, said I, I expect you may, some of you, consider my words as idle tales, but you must meet them in the judgment, and I must meet them. I cannot abate one iota from their severity. The meeting for preaching was to commence in fifteen minutes, and I told them I wanted another meeting to express more fully upon some points the mind of the Spirit of God concerning them. Next Monday—tomorrow evening—I meet the church and address them all.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 5

As soon as I ceased speaking, Brother Hansen arose and said, “I do not consider these as idle tales. I receive them and believe the truth has been spoken to us this morning, and I thank Sister White for saying them.” Then I think all in the room responded eagerly, heartily: “We receive these words and mean to act upon them.”4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 6

Now Brother Hansen is the most influential man in the church and the only one who has much of any property. He is a large builder and has had men under him. He is a large contractor, and I have talked with him plainly before in regard to his position and example, then I have seen him drawing off and feared he would give up the truth; but I felt so strongly for him, I have written to him, close, earnest, and yet in love, pleading in Christ’s stead for him to save his soul. He has had to have others read his letters for him as he could not read English, but he has received these letters gladly and has ever treated me with the greatest respect, and I felt that I could fall down upon my knees and thank God for this token for good.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 7

I had reined myself up; every nerve was strained to the utmost; and calmly and in the spirit of Jesus, but firmly and decidedly, as plucking a brand from the burning, I delivered this testimony. I am so thankful the Lord did open hearts to receive the reproof and warning. When I came to my room, I was weak as a child. I knew not how they would take my message.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 8

Now I expect there will be a change, but Satan will oppose every step of advance, and so long have the people here professing present truth tampered with sacred things, letting down to a level with common things, that I expect it will require stern efforts and much wrestling against inclination to bring them up where God would have them. I think if our brethren could realize how much it cost me—the weak instrument—to bear such testimonies, they would not think that this was a work I have selected myself.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 9

Two o'clock p.m. W. C. White spoke for a hack to take me to ride—the first time I have had a ride in a carriage for four weeks. We had a very pleasant ride two hours long. We saw a curiously constructed church, a State church, about three hundred years old. It is most curiously constructed. It has been presented to the king of Norway. Close by was an old, rough-looking building with curious specimens of antique crockery, brass, and tin waiters, plates, and various articles of wearing apparel and utensils.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 10

There are forests, groves, parks, and lakes owned by the city where the people, rich and poor, can get out into the country. We saw many, many people with baskets of food resorting to these forests, and what a blessing this is for them! Men, women, and children are flocking out of the city to enjoy the woods.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 11

W. C. White and I walk out twice each day. My hip has been so very painful I could not walk out much—not enough for my health. We walk quite a little distance to the king's palace and in the king's gardens, which have many acres of land in maple trees and trees of all kinds and green grass and flowers. Anyone can have access to these grounds. Seats are furnished for the convenience of all. Seminaries are located near, and the students resort to these groves to study their lessons.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 12

W. C. White and I have walked through the cemetery not far distant. It is an extensive ground and is kept up. Women are hired to water and care for the graves for a small sum from different families. The graves are made shapely—oval—and flowers of every description are planted on these graves. It looks like one beautiful flower garden; but the tombstones and the monuments remind you that you are in the city of the dead, and I look forward in imagination to the time when the trump of God shall sound and all that are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth, those that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 13

Oh, what a scene will we then see—some coming forth to life eternal at the first resurrection. Upon them the second death shall have no power. And then at the end of a thousand years the wicked dead come forth. I cannot endure to think of this. I dwell with pleasure upon the resurrection of the just, who shall come forth from all parts of the earth, from rocky caverns, from dungeons, from caves of the earth, from the waters of the deep—not one is overlooked. Everyone shall hear His voice. They will come forth with triumph and victory. Then there is to be no more death, no more sin, no more sorrow.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 14

We witnessed a burial scene last Friday. There was a large building upon the ground where services were held, and the coffin was placed in a small room connected with the building. Several women were there, and one after another would bring upon a waiter very rich bouquets, and these were received and fastened upon the coffin until it was entirely covered. There were two clergymen of the State church with their long black gowns and quilled ruffles about the neck and the wrists. The coffin was borne by bearers. There were no carriages. The grave was prepared as was Father's, with evergreens all around it, and the grave was lined with evergreens. I think this was some important personage. But beneath all these wreaths of flowers we knew was death. The coffin was lowered into the grave, and the officiating minister was handed a small shovel. He threw a shovelful of earth and then made a few remarks, and another, and another, making some remarks, until the ceremony was ended. He said a few words, and all were dismissed and everything had been conducted in a solemn, impressive manner.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 15

Well, I must not linger longer over this letter, but send it to you without further delay.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 16

Twenty minutes to eight. My appointment was at six o'clock. We had an interested audience. I spoke upon Christ's riding into Jerusalem, and Brother Oyen translated just as fast as I gave him, sentence by sentence. I know that there was a deep impression made upon the minds of the congregation. Many were in tears. I felt the deep moving of the Spirit of God upon my own heart; and by the promptness and earnestness of the way he translated, I believe he felt the Spirit of the Lord upon him.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 17

Well, I think my labors here in public speaking are now ended. I must yet labor with the church, then I leave them until the judgment, never expecting to see their faces again after I leave them. Oh, what will be our meeting then? Will it be with fulness of joy and hope? Oh, God grant that it may be so; and if we can meet Jesus in peace and be saved, forever saved, we shall be the happiest of beings! Oh, to be at home at last where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest! Heaven, sweet heaven! Oh, I shall appreciate heaven! I know that I must watch and keep my garments unspotted from the world, or I shall never enter the abode of the blessed. The east is not separated farther from the west than the children of light are separated from the children of darkness. We must watch continually and pray always that we may not be overcome with Satan's devices. I long for a greater faith, a more earnest consecration.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 18

I am informed Brother and Sister Hansen have come to see me. I must see them, although weary.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 19

July 12

We had, I think, a very profitable visit with Brother and Sister

Hansen. The Lord is surely drawing him to the light. I have borne a plain testimony to him both by pen and voice, and I have trembled in my soul as to how he would receive it. He told me through Brother Olsen that when he first read my letters written to him from Basel, he could see but little light in them; the second time he read them he could see more; and the third time he could see still more, and he could receive it all; but had he moved upon his first impression, he would have cast them aside as setting forth his case in a strong light that was not true. He has invited us to visit him in his home on the island, which he occupies in the summer. I have promised to go. I wish to draw nigh to him and help him all I can. King Oscar has a building on this same island which we shall visit. There are many things of interest connected with it that are desirable to see. The royal family spend some time there in summer.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 20

I wonder sometimes if I have left my home to no more return to it. I can truly say all the comforts and conveniences of home do not weigh anything with me to turn my face that way, unless I see my work is done and I am free to leave Europe. I am anxious to obtain that building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. I long to be there! "Come, Lord Jesus," and come quickly! [Revelation 22:20.]4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 21

We received letters from Brother Whitney, who has just visited Nimes, in France. He says the tent was pitched, but the lawless element has disturbed them much and the authorities are bound to protect them, but do not do it, and it is on test and trial whether a tent can be run in Nimes. They have a good working force; and if they are compelled to take down the tent, they will work from house to house and make the most of the situation possible. One or two meetings have broken up in confusion. It may be the workers will decide that they will have to commence their labors in places surrounding Nimes. They have their tent pitched within a stone wall eight feet high, entered only by a gate, and they may make arrangements to shut out this rough element.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 22

May the Lord cause His truth to triumph! The angels of God can protect the tent so that the people will have an opportunity to hear the truth. It is a little singular that the Catholics are the only men who would give their names to be responsible for the tent manager, so that the police could be employed, but the police as yet have done nothing to quell the disturbance. There is an excellent interest to hear, and God is able to make His truth to triumph amid the discordant elements of the world who are at enmity with God. Satan uses these elements to hinder the progress of truth.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 23

But now I must pack up to go tomorrow to Denmark. Love to all friends. I looked for your patterns and measurement, but none comes, so we can do nothing now here. We could get sewing done for twenty-seven cents per day, and we wanted to purchase and make Emma a dress; and now if your measure comes, we can perhaps let someone do the business for us. Am sorry for the delay.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 24

Mother.

I shall see you have stockings knit for winter.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 25

Mother.

I received an excellent letter from Emma. Thank you, Emma. I am so tired I can scarcely write a word fit to read.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 26

Edson spoke of the chair of Father's. I thought you all knew what chair I meant. It is in your house—the patent rocker. The chair was purchased in Texas, sent to Colorado, and then to Battle Creek. I wanted it sent to California, but if it is not, never mind.4LtMs, Lt 113, 1886, par. 27

Elder Butler

Dear Brother:

I was made sad to learn of your sickness, and I hope it is now passed away. I am now scarcely able to write. I have been quite ill for one week, with severe cold caused by prostration for want of pure air and thorough ventilation. I was prostrated at the commencement of the meeting in Grimsby. The people were crowded into a small room which had been closed up with the impurities of the day and evening before, and not properly ventilated in the morning to fit it for the early morning meeting, at half-past five o'clock A.M. All at once my tongue refused its office, and a prostration came upon me. After using every means to gain strength, I ventured to the hall, about one-half mile, and attempted to speak on Sabbath, but the same prostration came on again as I was near the close of my talk. These things are terrible for me.⁴*LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 1*

The hall is located in the center of other buildings, entered from halls or rooms. There is not a window from this hall leading directly outside. It is lighted with skylights, and little wooden transoms in the top admit air through a small opening; but it is impossible, without thorough ventilation from the doors leading into the entries, to divest the body of the house of its impurities accumulated by the congregations' exhalations from lungs and bodies. I thought then I was cut off from doing anything for the people, but our brethren said they had found out a way that the room could be ventilated, so I put on the armor again and did very well until Sunday night. I spoke to a hall filled with outsiders. I knew the moment I attempted to speak that our brethren had forgotten to ventilate the hall, and the outdoor air had not been introduced into the hall after the last meeting had been held. I got through with the discourse, wearied out. I walked home. I could not sleep that night, and next morning I looked haggard and I felt two years older than I did before I made the attempt to speak. I became very sick with nervous prostration.4LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 2

Willie knew nothing of this, for in company with others he left, en route for London, Wednesday. I was suffering much with inflammation of head, stomach, and lungs. Sarah gave me determined treatment with fomentations, and this day of suffering was the worst. From this time I grew no worse, but I did not attempt to speak again, although I was in Grimsby one week after the council meetings closed. My throat, head, and lungs are still afflicted, and tonight I leave for Nimes to labor again.4LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 3

I tell you, these hard spots in my experience make me desire the climate of California and the refuge of home. Have I any home? Where is it? Well, I can, I think, sympathize with you, and pray the Lord to preserve your life and give you peace, blessed peace and rest in soul and body—not rest in the grave, but rest from taxation and care.4LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 4

I have many things to communicate and would say, dear brother, that my trust is in the Lord. As the parties go to America, I am strongly inclined to attend the General Conference, but know that if I get on the other side of the ocean it will be to stay, not to come back here. But there is work to be done here yet, and there seems to be very much to be done to set the work rolling right, and I do not feel released yet. I have had some very plain talk to give some of the workers, and I am not through yet. When I recover I have some writing to do to different ones, which is not the most pleasant kind of work.4LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 5

I felt the most unreconciled to doing this work here in England. It seems that the workers are not happily disposed. Their tastes, their habits are not of that character to be harmonious. I never had a meeting closed with as little satisfaction after hard labor as the one in England. I could see no way for the work to advance with its present helpers. Brother John feels that if you propose a different way of labor than his own, it is a personal attack on him. He cannot understand any other way to do than his own way.⁴*LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 6*

Oh, my soul, how can the Lord do anything with such material as poor human nature—deformed, one-sided, crooked as He finds us! Well, if you have men of good, sound judgment, England needs them.⁴*LtMs, Lt 114, 1886, par. 7*

Butler, G. I.

Basel, Switzerland

November 24, 1886

Portions of this letter are published in 3Bio 358.

Dear Brother Butler:

After about ten weeks' absence from my home in Basel, I returned to it last evening quite ill with acute rheumatism. I could not move my right arm without great difficulty and much pain and could not take a full inspiration of air without acute pain in the right lung. I was intending to remain over another Sabbath and hold meetings in Chaux-de-Fonds and Tramelan. But Elder Ings remained to attend meetings in both these places, with Brother Fry as interpreter, while Sister Ings accompanied me home. I came unexpectedly to all, and how glad I was to get home where I could get treatment at once.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 1

I have for weeks been exposed to fogs and rains and bad air in halls. I have talked in halls where it was sometimes very hot and the air was impure and then have gone out into a sharp, cutting air from the lakes and have taken cold again and again. But I did so hope at this time to visit all the churches. I spoke once in Bienne, but as I could not sit up the next day, we left on the evening train with Sister Ings for Basel.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 2

In two days, the twenty-sixth of this month, I shall be fifty-nine years old. I thank my heavenly Father for the strength that He has given me to do more work than I ever expected to do. I thank the Lord with heart and soul and voice. I am thinking we may not feel obliged to remain here in Europe much longer, if additional help shall come, which is greatly needed. I hope that our brethren there will have the missionary spirit, and that those who want to do good will devote themselves soul and body to the work, feeling that it is so little that they can do for Jesus who has done so much for them.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 3

Jesus left the heavenly courts and came to our world. The Just gave His life for the unjust, and what are we willing to do for Him? What spirit will we manifest for those who need help? Will there not be those who will go without the camp, bearing reproach for Jesus? Are there not men and women of earnest faith who can endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, who will be laborers together with God, who will labor unselfishly for the Master? Who will take up this work of denying self, to seek and save that which was lost? What are our brethren and sisters doing at this time? God help them to awake, for Christ is coming with power and great glory. Who will hear the commendation, "Thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord"? [Matthew 25:21.]4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 4

But there is one point which I fear that our brethren in America do not fully comprehend, and that is that our publishing houses all need efficient workers, especially in the line of thorough bookkeepers. The offices in England and in Basel are very lame in this respect. This branch of the work has been neglected shamefully and altogether too long. It is a sin to allow a work of such magnitude, God's own work, to be done in a defective, bungling manner. There must be efficient bookkeepers in these important missions. God wants as perfect work as it is possible for human beings to do. To do the Lord's work in a cheap, uncertain, imperfect style is a dishonor to the sacred truth and its Author. We have as a people failed seriously here. We might have selected men and women long ago and educated them instead of setting them to work in a cheap, unprepared way. We should feel that it is necessary for those who are to connect with the work to receive an education for it, then they can do the work with one-half the worry and wear and with far greater exactitude. We have in the past too often accepted unprepared, uneducated men and women to do a work that they knew but little about and, as the result, at great disadvantage and with discredit to themselves, and many have been an injury to the cause they really wished to serve.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 5

There are those connected with our institutions who think it is not necessary to employ men of thorough intelligence and education, who will do honor to the cause of God. These men, they say, are not humble, they will not take hold of any kind of work. While some in Battle Creek talk of humility and urge that these men who are calculated for a higher order of work should engage in any kind of employment, they really have less humility themselves than the ones they would accuse. 4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 6

While there is nothing in any kind of work calculated to degrade the man, yet the Bible itself teaches that God has entrusted talents to every man according to his capacity. To every man is given his work. There are a few men who seem to be fitted for all kinds of labor. But they are not many. Some men have more mental capacity than others and are fitted both by nature and cultivation to do intellectual work with thoroughness and ability. Everything connected with the work of God should bear the stamp of perfection if it is possible for finite power to cause it to bear that stamp. But narrow minds will fail to see the necessity of intelligent, cultivated talent being brought into our publishing houses, in every department of the work, especially in the keeping of accounts. Some men are slow and stupid with the mind, but when doing a work which requires physical strength, they are more than a match for the men of educated intellect. 4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 7

Change the position of the two; set the man qualified for manual labor to casting up accounts or writing for papers and books, and he would be a complete failure, for he has not trained his mind for any such work; while the man who has devoted time and money to obtaining an education in certain intellectual branches, if put to hard physical labor, would be able to accomplish but little. We need men for the place, men adapted to the various branches of the work. 4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 8

Bookkeeping is and ever will be an important part of our work, and those who have become intelligent in it are greatly needed, both in our institutions and elsewhere. Shall we have them, or shall we continue to cripple along as we have done, imperfection marking the best efforts of many who do not know how to do the work and yet have been set at it, perhaps against their own will, and who are dissatisfied continually with their own deficient manner of doing the work? Shall we wake up, brethren, to this matter? Shall we continue to place in positions so important as keeping the books for our institutions those who have a deficient knowledge of this line of business? Shall we have qualified men and women or ignorant men and women? In our tract and missionary societies there should be more than one or two who are educated to the systematic way of doing business. They should devote time to studying the science so that they can do the work intelligently. In every church there should be men and women who are fitting themselves to do perfect work, for it is God's work, and the Lord is not pleased with deficiency in any branch of His work.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 9

I call your attention to this matter that you may impress upon those who shall connect with the work the idea that they must all be diligent students to acquire a knowledge possible to fit them for their work. If they are not disposed to do this, they are not the ones to engage in the work.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 10

Someone who is efficient in bookkeeping should give lessons in America to those connected with the different missions and to those who have charge of our tract and missionary societies, that they may learn how to do business in a businesslike manner so that God can approve their work. I hope you will take in the situation here in Europe and send the help that is so much needed, especially in keeping books, for unless you do there is great danger that the accounts will be found so tangled that nothing accurate can be learned from them.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 11

Years ago I was shown that we are far from reaching the standard that God would have us [reach] in these things. May the Lord help us to see this matter as it is. You may look upon it as a piece of extravagance to send able workers here, but it will be economy in the end. The work can then be placed upon a correct basis and others can be taught to do the work with thoroughness, and we shall soon have not one but several to depend upon.4LtMs, Lt 115, 1886, par. 12

What we want now is men who feel that they cannot afford to be commonplace workmen. Not men who are incompetent and who are willing to remain in ignorance, but men who will put forth effort to reach the highest standard and who will teach others to do the work of the Lord with thoroughness an exactitude.4LtMs, Lt 115,

[Elder Butler (?)]

... In regard to Elder Waggoner I think that there should have been decided measures taken with him by those in California before they went to the General Conference. I think I sent them all that I have had for him. I think I withheld nothing, but you know how hard it is for boys to deal with a grey-headed man of Elder Waggoner's position. This I think is the reason nothing more decided was done, and he was accepted, and my heart ached when I read his letter in response to mine, that he had freedom in speaking in Battle Creek, and that responsibilities were piled on him. It seemed to me that this was the thing to help on his deception. I fear he is not making thorough work. I fear God will never accept his halfway work. I fear, greatly fear, that should responsibilities be laid upon him again, he would think his case was not very much out of the way. I fear now the matter has come out, the bewitching delusion somewhat broken, that he sorrows more over the result than from a sense of sin. 4LtMs, Lt 116, 1886, par. 1

He and she, Mrs. Chittenden, have told me that this commenced in San Francisco and dated back three or four years. Then why does he place it at that period just before his wife left for the East? This is covering up. It was his own imprudence, the manifestation of his familiarity with Mrs. Chittenden, that made his wife suspicious and jealous and treat her (Mrs. C.) as she did. Many circumstances that have occurred have been laid bare before me. I cannot see, if Elder Waggoner is an honest man, how he can make the statement that Mrs. Chittenden is not to blame. He knows better, unless he is entirely destitute of discernment. She has worked under deception, under the cloak of godliness, but sin was in her heart, and I do excuse her; neither should Elder Waggoner. She was fully warned, and yet she kept on just the same, laying her snares and executing her designs. I know about this matter; these statements, as you say, do not go to the bottom. It is not a confession and repentance that needeth not to be repented of.4LtMs, Lt 116, 1886, par. 2

All we desire of Elder Waggoner is to meet the mind of the Spirit of the Lord. All we ask of him is to not cover sin, but to repent of it. All we ask of him is to make such thorough work that light and peace and freedom can come to his own soul and to the cause of God. We will not be his judge. We will not condemn. But whom the Lord shall make free, he is free indeed. When the converting power of the grace of Christ shall come into the man's soul, the brethren who have stood under the load of his guilt will be made free. God will not be trifled with. If he will make earnest work in repenting, God will forgive him. As yet, there has been nothing at all revealed, only that which has been discovered without any enlightenment on his part. I do not like the spirit which attends his confessions. There is an equivocating, a covering up, an evading, a seeking to get over and out of the disgrace with as few broken bones of dignity as possible.4LtMs, Lt 116, 1886, par. 3

Now I will not say anything more upon this matter, but commit you and him to the God of mercy and forgiveness and pray the heart may be broken before the Lord, and that he may repent, that evasions and excuses may no more grieve the Spirit of God, but that he may work and do meet for repentance, that his sins may be blotted out. All stands registered in the books of heaven.4LtMs, Lt 116, 1886, par. 4

Portions of this letter are published in EGWE 197; ChL 44.

Dear Brother Butler:

W. C. White and I read your letter yesterday, and as I was about to send you a letter which I had written to my son Edson, I will enclose with it a letter to you, and I need not tell you that we are very glad to hear all that you have to communicate. Our conference thus far has moved off well. At first there was some holding off on the part of Elder Matteson. I had a long talk with his wife and told her that Brother Olsen was not to take Matteson's place, but to help him in the work, and both were not able to do one-half of that which should be done in these kingdoms.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 1

I hope now from this time there will be a decided change for the better. I have been writing close letters to Elder Matteson in regard to many points of his manner of labor where it should change, and I did not wish him to refer to this, as much of it was so painful for me to write, knowing it would wound him sorely. I dreaded to have the sore touched, and I wanted to heal the wound by all kindness and sympathy and courtesy on my part; and now there seems to be all openness on his part, and he seems to feel we do not want to hurt him, but to help him.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 2

Now we feel that Elder Matteson has done a good work. He has written and preached and not spared himself; but he is a very feeble man in more respects than one, and it is impossible for him to give a robust mold to the work. He is in a large degree sickly and needs the grace of God, the help of the great Physician to make him spiritually strong. I am glad Brother Olsen has come. He is greatly needed, for the people know no other laborer but Brother Matteson, and they think their existence would end if he should leave them. We do not want he should leave them, but we want that now a different element shall be introduced into the work that should have been here years ago.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 3

There are to be one or two ordained at this conference, and we shall urge that they spend some time in England where they can get an education in speaking English so that everything shall not come through one man, Elder Matteson. I am willing to invest means that this shall be done, for all are poor, quite poor, in these kingdoms. There are a number of young men who are being educated and drilled in the present effort being made here that anticipate giving themselves to the work in some of its branches. But O dear, there have been so few branches that it is a mystery what they could do. But there will be a broadening, I trust, after this effort here.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 4

I must now go to the morning meeting, half-past six o'clock. There are a few outsiders in every morning. I have now spoken eight times in this place since last Sabbath. Yesterday was a holiday, and we did not expect many to the meeting; but the house was full, and I had great freedom speaking to the people from the last chapter of Daniel—"And they that be wise," etc. [Daniel 12:3.] There was deep feeling in the congregation, and I do pray that the words spoken may do good to souls. I believe God will and does bless our efforts. I am so thankful for strength given me of God, but I tell you, my brother, I have to fight some hard battles with the enemy; and Jesus comes to my aid, and then infirmities are overcome and I rejoice; but for me, it is to struggle and fight at every step. I am not discouraged, because Jesus gives me His Spirit, His grace, and His salvation.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 5

I have spoken eight times since last Sabbath and have written sixty pages of matter, all for the present needs of the work and of the cause, for the churches in the kingdoms, and for the camp meetings yet to be held: and I believe God will work for us in great power if we will only give Him a chance. The Lord wants us to do our work that He has given us to do with energy and perseverance, as if success depended wholly on our efforts, and to look to God and trust in Him as the One who could make the work a success by His power, working with our efforts.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 6

9 a.m. Just came from morning meeting. I spoke about thirty minutes from these words, "Go forward." [Exodus 14:15.] Thus God commands us to make an advance move. I related to them in what poverty the truth of God found those who received it in America, how we labored in privation and hunger and destitution to carry forward the work, and how step by step we advanced by faith. It required moral courage, earnest effort, perseverance that would not be baffled or repulsed. That is the way the work must go here in these kingdoms. The work must be pushed, and I shall work here, not studying the French manners or customs, the manners and customs and habits of England, the manners and customs of Sweden, Denmark, or Norway, but the will and way of God. Men of all nationalities must come to God's plans. And I find the work must be pushed here in the same manner as it was pushed in America in its infancy. We can do nothing, but the Lord can do all things. 4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 7

The people here are poor. I told them we were all poor in the commencement of the work, but we denied self, and we were determined to do something and "go forward," and the Red Sea opened before us. Step by step we advanced until we are what we are today through the mercy and blessing of God. When you do your part, God will do for you. You must not work in your own strength, but walking humbly with God, trusting in Him and praying and believing, your prayers will be answered. Go forward and God will not fail you. All heaven is interested in the salvation of fallen man; and if we do on our part all that we can possibly do, then the Lord will do on His part. Onward to victory. 4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 8

I have been shown that there are thousands of honest souls in these kingdoms that are living up to the best light they have. They want the light God has for them, and they will receive it. If we work in humility and in faith, we shall see a good army raised up to elevate the standard of righteousness. These are the words I gave them, and many more like words. There were about seventy present; some were outsiders. 4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 9

There was a very solemn feeling in the meeting, and the Spirit of the Lord was with us, moving upon hearts. All is moving in harmony. I think the believers have thought themselves too poor to do anything, or but very little, to sustain the work, and Brother Matteson has not helped them to think they could do anything in tract and missionary work.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 10

They have managed generally to pay his expenses in traveling. This was good as far as it went, but they need to be educated to systematic benevolence, to the tithing system. This will be for their spiritual interest and for the growth of the work. We are all doing what we can here, and may the Lord work mightily is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 11

You speak of England. I feel just as you do. There must be the very best gifts that America can send to make a break in this field; and when the work is once started, then I believe we shall see a great work done. These gifts have been with our people a long time. Now let others arouse. Let others go to work and spare these for a time. If Elder Waggoner could come, if he is in any condition where the Lord will work for him, then we would be glad to see him here in England, for his help would be an advantage in many respects. It might be well for Brother Wilcox's wife to come if it is thought advisable by you on that end of the line. He has hold now, and might, with some others' gifts worked in, do better than any new hand. Think of this. Test the matter of Sister Wilcox's coming, and try to ascertain whether she will be a burden or a help to her husband.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 12

We will stay over here another summer, if need be, to help in England. I cannot feel free to leave until a more broad and able effort is made to get access to another class of people. I am willing, the moment our work is done, to go to America or to Australia, but I am not free yet to leave Europe with the work in the shape it is in now. We must see a greater work done. We must trust in the Lord fully. We must do His will.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 13

I have sent you some things to be read to the churches or camp meetings, according to your best judgment. I have written to Brother Sharp some time ago to go according to the counsel of his brethren. I mentioned England because it was not far and expensive to reach and was in great destitution of laborers.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 14

In regard to Elder Andrews, would it not be best for his family to connect with him and he remain? This is mere suggestion. In regard to poor Michigan, I feel bad. I would willingly go from church to church and see if I could not help things if Providence should so direct, but I wait to have the Lord indicate my duty. Sometimes I feel that I must see our people in America and talk with them; then I see that the work would be left to drag on as imperfectly as it has done unless we can keep working perseveringly until we see a better state of things.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 15

W. C. White's judgment and counsel are appreciated by all wherever he goes. I am surprised that those who have not know him so readily accept his counsel. But in regard to Brethren Haskell and Farnsworth's coming to England, we say, Come, and we will unite our forces. We will go to England and we will work together and push things. "Without Me ye can do nothing." [John 15:5.] Jesus will help us. He will not leave us. We will see of His mighty power.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 16

Tell us, will Elder Waggoner come to England? Is he fit to come? May the Lord help you, my brother. Cling to the arm of infinite power. He will help you and strengthen and bless you. What should we do without Jesus? We should faint by the way, but we have a living Saviour. I now entreat you to do less work and put the burden upon others. It will not pay. We have too few burden-bearers already, and I beg of you to speak less and make others do more speaking and help them with your counsel. This would be so much better than to have you break down where the people could not have your labor at all and your counsel at all. I do not advise you to shoulder the responsibilities at Battle Creek until you have more help to unite with you in the work.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 17

I feel deeply over your constant, wearing labor. Please to make others work and you do very much less. God does not want you or Elder Haskell sacrificed. He wants you to lay off work and be more a planner, a manager. There will be times when your special labors will be positively a necessity, but I protest against your taking up so much labor. God does not require it of you, and you must not do it. Will you heed advice? Will you let others learn to bear responsibilities even if they make blunders while you are a living man to show them how to work?4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 18

I have been shown that yourself and Elder Haskell must at your age be laying the burdens on others. Attend fewer camp meetings, speak and work less at the camp meetings you attend, and this will force others to the front to be obtaining an experience which is essential for them. In order to do this, you must do less and others must do more. We want the help of every one of the old hands, and the work is, I have been shown, growing more and more important. We want these experienced men as counselors. We cannot spare them. This is not the voice of Sister White, but it is the message to you from God. Will you heed it, both of you? Will you be prudent? Will you be managers and work less?4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 19

I leave this matter with you. I hope that you will not sacrifice yourselves, because numerous calls come in insisting that you must attend their camp meetings. You must leave more of these to be conducted by others.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 20

And now I can say no more. The Lord bless you, my brother, and your wife and your boys. May you be spared to each other and the blessing of God attend you is my prayer.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 21

I will not send the letter to Edson with this. May do so after a little more reflection.4LtMs, Lt 117, 1886, par. 22

Vuilleumier, Brother and Sister

Basel, Switzerland

Dear Brother and Sister Vuilleumier:

When we returned home we found Kristine [Dahl] had been quite sick and is still feeble. As she was anxious to see something of Switzerland before she returned to Norway when we shall go, we thought she might spend a few days pleasantly at your place. I wish she could stop a day or two at Tramelan, but this cannot be. I am anxious she shall receive benefit by this change. I consider her a faithful Christian girl, and I wish her to accompany us to Sweden and cook for us during the conference there, if she is able to do so. Therefore I have thought best for her to go to you for a few days. I suffered much after I left you; I was a great sufferer all the way to Basel, but I stopped at the dentist—he gave me relief speedily.⁴*LtMs, Lt 118, 1886, par. 1*

With much love to the entire family, yours with much love.⁴*LtMs, Lt 118, 1886, par. 2*

Walling, Addie

Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland

May 30, 1886

Previously unpublished.

My Dear Niece Addie:

I have wanted to write to you for some time, but I have been very much afflicted and could not write anything that I was not actually compelled to write.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 1

We left Basel June 20 and were one day and a half in reaching Tramelan. Here are a goodly number keeping the Sabbath; in this place they worship in a large room in a private house. Eleven came from Chaux-de-Fonds, and others came in from other places. Two rooms were well filled.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 2

I was much wearied, but spoke that night, for I knew our time was short and wished to crowd in all the work I could. Sabbath I spoke again to the people with much freedom. They have but little preaching in these churches, and therefore they are hungry for the truth. The family are all united in the faith. Brother and Sister Roth have seven sons and three daughters, all with them in the faith. How gratifying it is to meet with such a family! They are in business. The father is a merchant tailor, his oldest son is in the same business, but independent of his father; the next oldest son is in a large and successful business of city baker. He has large custom. He is a most excellent young man and is now giving himself to the missionary work. He shows that he can be depended on as a laborer in the cause of God. He is growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth. He leaves a flourishing and successful business to give himself to the work of God. I wish there were many more young men of this stamp of character who feel that the work of God comes first. This family is much respected in this place and we are sure will accomplish much good.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 3

A life devoted to the service of God will be as sweet fragrance to God. I know that if our youth knew what they may do, and what they may be through constant advancement in the path of duty and religious experience, they would not be in the hesitating, halting position that they now are in. Time that is not employed by them in doing any real good to others is doing harm to many. No one can be in a position where he is doing neither good nor evil. If one is not decidedly doing good, he is decidedly doing evil.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 4

I spoke to the church in Tramelan three times. Sabbath our meeting was very interesting. I was led out by the Spirit of God. My mind was fruitful in the truth. My text was Isaiah 8:15-16, 20. I did not gain my strength, because I felt constantly the burden of the work—so much work to be done and so few to do it. Oh, that life and spirit and devotedness and zeal would come into the hearts of those who profess to believe and love the truth. We have the truth as a people, but we need the power and divine workings of God's Spirit in our hearts. I fear greatly for a form of godliness without spirit and life. We need the deep inward working grace in the heart which will leave a softening, subduing influence upon the life and character. Tuesday we rode fifteen miles to Bienne and attended a missionary meeting with the church. There I spoke about one-half hour. Willie [White] and Albert [Vuilleumier] spoke to the people, telling them how to work the best they could. Wednesday we rode thirty miles to Chaux-de-Fonds. The scenery was very attractive. The fragrance of flowers and blossoms of fruit trees made it very grateful to the senses.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 5

Thursday we rode three miles to Locle, a village situated in a valley formed like a basin, hills rising directly all around it.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 6

We visited Brother and Sister Shields. There are about two dozen in this place keeping the Sabbath. I left an appointment to speak on temperance. Sunday night I returned and spoke in a hall to our people and a few outsiders. Thursday evening the weather was very unpleasant—rainy and a cold wind, but the hall was full. Sabbathkeepers came from other places and a goodly number were assembled. Sabbath I spoke in the forenoon with great freedom, and my own heart was blessed, softened and broken by the Spirit of God. The whole congregation was affected to tears.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 7

I felt urged to invite those who wished to return from backsliding from God, and those who were convicted of the truth, to come forward, but we were packed in so close I could only ask them to arise and bow their heads. The whole congregation was on their feet. I called Brother Ertzenberger to the stand, and he united in prayer, most earnestly and with deep feeling. The Spirit of the Lord was in our midst, and His blessing did come upon us. We then had a social meeting. Testimonies were given in quick succession—short and to the point; Brother John Vuilleumier interpreted to me. Nearly all took part. We felt that this meeting was beneficial to us all.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 8

Brother Ertzenberger spoke to them in the afternoon. Meetings were held Sunday. In the evening I spoke at Locle upon temperance. All say it was a success. This place has been deeply prejudiced against our faith. We had a good representation of people. The hall was large and well filled, and all listened with deepest interest. Our brethren and sisters were much encouraged. Early next morning we returned to Chaux-de-Fonds and then decided to go to Neuchâtel to see Brother Albert Vuilleumier, who had just returned from visiting Apaca [?]. Brother Ertzenberger was to bring our horse and carriage to Tramelan and we would go in the cars to Neuchâtel, hold one meeting there, and then come back on the cars to where we should meet our team. This day was a most painful one to me from an ulcerated tooth. I thought it scarcely possible for me to speak, but nevertheless I did speak to the people and had a painful night, and in the place of riding in the carriage, took the cars and came in company with Sara [McEnterfer] direct to Basel to the dentist I employed.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 9

I took a hack and drove to the dentist before going home. He said, "Mrs. White, I am so sorry you have suffered so much. I will relieve you. This tooth I have well filled. I will let it remain. I couldn't consent to your request in extracting the tooth. With proper treatment, it will last you for years." He then bored a hole through the tooth close to the gum. He said in one hour I would be free from pain. In one hour I was relieved and have had peace since. I was prostrated for a few days with the pain, but I am now going a little again.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 10

Next week—Monday or Tuesday—we go to Sweden. Direct your letter to Orebro, Sweden, after this. We remain there two or three weeks. I will write you as often as I can, but sometimes I am so weary with other writings, I cannot tax myself with letter-writing. I hope to write one to May today, but I dare not. I have been for a few weeks very much exhausted. I took that journey among the churches, hoping to be gaining strength, but there was so much evening speaking, so much climbing of stairs, up to the fourth story of almost every house, that [it] taxed me. I could not sleep till midnight, and then I could not sleep in the morning after three or four o'clock.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 11

Well, I trust the Lord. I shall be sustained. I found all well at home, but Kristine. She was not well. Ella is well. Mary is well. Marian Davis is well as usual. The whole household is quite prosperous, I believe.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 12

There are to be twenty baptized at Tramelan on Sabbath or Sunday. Brother Whitney goes down and helps Brother Ertzenberger. Those subjects are from different churches. Tramelan is a more favorable place for this ordinance.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 13

The work moves along slowly; nevertheless it moves, and I am thankful, but we must see more done. The tent [meeting] starts in France now in a few weeks. Ertzenberger, Brother Bourdeau, and Albert Miller were all engaged in the work in the large city of Nimes. Brother and Sister Polisum [?] are in our family. They do not feel homesick. Both are excellent children, we think, and they love the Lord, and the Lord loves them.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 14

Addie, give my love to Sisters Stephens and Scott. Tell Sister Scott I wrote to her. Did she receive the letter, as there was no response? I feared she did not get it. I hope her health remains good. I hope she enjoys the sweet assurance of the love of Christ. This is of more value to us than everything else beside.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 15

Well, I have written this when not fit to write, but I do not want to delay longer. I love you, Addie, as my own child, and desire your best interest. Keep yourself in health and in the love of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Lt 119, 1886, par. 16

Butler, G. I.

Basel, Switzerland

January 2, 1886

Previously unpublished.

I have attempted to write you several times, but other matters pressed in demanding immediate attention, and I have not completed a letter commenced to you while I was at Christiania. After I reached Basel, I found an urgent call for me to go to Torre Pellice, Italy. I went. Mary White accompanied me⁴*LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 1*

We did hope to save Brother Mallon. We heard he was writing a tract against us. We attended meeting in his hall, hired and used for meetings by our people. I spoke in regard to the Sabbath distinguishing us from the world, and that it was a sign, a test, and then spoke of the martyrs who suffered for the truth's sake. Meanwhile Mallon came into the meeting; and as I was near the close of my discourse, interpreted by Brother Bourdeau, Mr. Mallon arose and interrupted me and expressed in strong terms great anxiety for his soul and wanted to know whether he would be lost if he did not keep the Sabbath. He said, "Answer me yes or no. Say yes, or no." I told him that was a question not for me to answer. I could say that if light came we would be judged according to the light the Lord had permitted to reflect upon our pathway. This answer made him very impatient. Yes or no he was determined should be my answer. I told him very much depended upon yes, or no, and I would have to lay out general principles and then leave the matter where the Bible left it. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, for they shall have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." [Revelation 22:14.]⁴*LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 2*

He then began to read a manuscript which he had written and threatened to have published. He just amplified around there at a great rate. He produced the same objections, going over the same ground which had been answered about one thousand times, and seemed to feel proud of his exploits. When he had read his objections against the Sabbath, he said that Christ broke the Sabbath. I said, "Brother Mallon, I hope you will not place yourself on the side of the caviling, plotting Pharisees." Then he seemed to be enraged. He fairly jumped up and down.⁴*LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 3*

I said, "You asked me to answer your arguments, and when I attempt to answer you get up and become so excited you do not know one word I say. You will not give me a chance to say anything. I have answered some questions in the French paper." He worked until the meeting was about to break up in confusion, and we closed with the benediction. He would not publish our appointment that night for the next day and would not publish notices of the meetings. The next day he came into meeting and while I was speaking made a display of himself in gesticulating like a crazy man, throwing his arms about wildly and talking aloud, and finally arose and called Brother A. C. Bourdeau an impostor. We went calmly on, taking no notice of the interruption. He snatched his hat and rushed out of the hall, and when we left the meeting he had a crowd gathered around him, talking in a very excited manner.⁴*LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 4*

Before the next meeting we had notices out, and what was our astonishment next day to find notices pasted just above ours for meeting on the very evenings and days that we had out our appointments. Cocorder and Elder Miles Grant began this work which at first was a tirade against me and the visions. You can imagine how I was situated. I had no real hold on the people; they were unacquainted with me. I plead with the Lord most earnestly for Him to give me wisdom and grace that we might take a course that He would approve. The Lord did help us. We had Mary attend his meetings and take notes. But we decided not to make the least reference to Elder Grant's tirade, but have our appointments come on a different hour from Elder Grant's meeting, and I would talk on practical subjects. We had a very fair attendance. Elder Grant took the position that there was no Sabbath at all to be kept. There was no law, and he placed me in company with the law and swept us away together. I was glad I was in such good company. He claimed that the law was a yoke of bondage; if we kept it we were fallen from grace. Then he presented me and my work in as ridiculous a light as possible, bringing forward the testimonies of those who had twenty-five and thirty years ago manufactured these lies which you have heard repeated, no doubt, many times, which Elder Grant had loved so well and repeated so often. It seemed so truly to represent the dragon spirit in this effort. "And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." [Revelation 12:17.]4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 5

Cocorder is a preacher, an age-to-come man, and he is a licentious man. He is an adulterer and has a very smooth tongue, but truth and honesty are not his companions. This kind of a man is the one Elder Grant yoked up with, and with satanic zeal they tried to do their work. Their efforts were to provoke a discussion, to create an excitement. But we kept right along, doing our work as though they did not exist. We did considerable praying about that time. We felt that if we trusted in God, all things would work together for our good. Some of the Vaudois church came to Grant's meeting and went home stating to their people that it was two parties of Adventists come to quarrel with one another, and the people ought not to go to the meetings of either party. These things made it difficult for us, although we had no quarreling to do—that is Elder Grant's business. He loves this work of picking up hearsay and peddling it out as truth. We have not such a work to do. We do not go from place to place to speak of myself and vindicate my character. I had testimonies sent me from Basel that would contradict every statement that Grant made, but this was not my work. I left myself in the hands of God and just talked of Jesus Christ and Him crucified.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 6

We had some of the best class to hear us. The question was asked when we would leave. I told those who inquired I would stay as long as Grant did if it was till spring. He should not add to his other lies that he drove me from Italy, that I dared not stay after he had exposed my work, etc. Well, we stayed till after Elder Grant left. We had some very precious meetings, especially on Sabbath and Sunday. A Baptist minister came three miles on foot from St. Johns. His brother and brother's son came also. On one occasion the son interpreted for me. These men seemed to be much interested. The Baptist minister visited me, and I had an opportunity to explain to him somewhat in regard to my work. We had a profitable season of prayer together. One has embraced the truth since I left Italy. Italy is not an easy field by any means in which to labor. The churches are closed against any preaching unless it be of their own sect. There are halls to be had, but frequently these are small. After we left Mallon's hall, we rented one under Cocorder's; so Grant's meetings were above, ours below. A man had rented all the building, including the hall, of the owner, and then in his turn rented out these buildings. Brother A. C. Bourdeau rented the hall of the man that hired it, but Cocorder told the proprietor he would give up his hall if we were permitted to occupy the room below. And the owner of the building found that he could, by law, turn us out of the hall, and so informed Brother A. C. B. This seemed to be a hedging up of the way on all sides. We looked at several halls; but one they wished to sell, another they did not wish to rent unless they could rent the whole flat, several rooms on the same floor. So Elder A. C. B. has devoted one of his rooms to a hall. It will hold about fifty persons.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 7

It looks like a hard field, but the standard of truth has been raised there, and it does not look like policy to give up the field until a more thorough effort is made. It is so hard to do much for a people whose hearts are so that you cannot reach them. They nearly all, rich and poor, go right into their stables to live in winter; and to reach them by evening meetings where they are, the gospel must be carried into these stables. There are cows, goats, calves, donkeys, and hens in these stables, and the heat of the manure filling the stable with a strong scent, that is hard exceedingly on the lungs. There is no ventilation except one pane of glass or a little slide about six inches square. There is no floor to these stables, and dry leaves or old refuse straw is brought in and covers the earth. In this place fifty or sixty assemble to hear the Bible opened to their understanding. And there are among these hearers men and women of intelligence who want to hear the truth and are astonished at the strange and new things that are taught them. In these places our brethren have to go from three to five miles in an evening, up in the mountain gorges, and then walk through the most dangerous places in the dark. It is not safe for one to go alone, for if anything is said that one of these Italians take offense at, in his irritation he might do anything that would endanger life. While some may be glad to hear, others may be enraged.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 8

Brother A. C. Bourdeau went about one week ago to attend one of these meetings. There were about twenty-five or thirty out to hear, and the ministers of the churches had warned their people not to go to hear these people, for they taught heresy. These people have their supper very near the time meeting commences, and they expect that the minister will partake with them. They take a basket of bread, hanging from a rafter, and some cheese and milk that has had all the benefit of the stable atmosphere, and pass it to their guests. Brother A. C. B. partook of this, for in so doing he opened his way to the hearts of the people. Now you can see what kind of a field the laborers in Italy have.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 9

There are churches all through the mountain steeps, like a city set on a hill, and there are large settlements in the mountain gorges and on the mountain sides rich vineyards, chestnut groves, and cultivated lands. They may have meetings in the valleys, but how are these mountain settlements to be reached? They will not, while they have no interest, go into the valleys, into the halls, for it is a very laborious process; so missionaries must reach them. There they are, and if they can get access to them, then they may become informed in regard to the unhealthy manner of living in the stable with their cattle in winter to secure the advantages of the heat without the expense of fuel, for wood there is very scarce. They plant willows and cut off the sprouts, some no thicker than your finger, and sell these in little bundles for one cent per pound. They also use all the sprouts and every limb they can spare from their chestnut trees. All the trimmings from the grapes are treasured and used for fuel.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 10

How these people are to be educated in regard to the healthfulness of the air they breathe is a perplexing question. It is impossible for people who live in this way to have healthful lungs and to have pure blood. But how can we make them believe this? Habits and customs have confirmed them so firmly in this way they do not know any better way. Well, this is the work that is now being done in Torre Pellice, Italy; and just such a work will have to be done in other places in Italy. There are very nice cities. Turin is one where we tarried all night, but it is almost thoroughly Catholic. And there are several places near Torre Pellice, small settlements. Some are Protestants, and [some] are almost wholly Catholics.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 11

The cities in the Alpine certainly ought to have much done for them, but how shall it be done? Shall we leave them to perish? Or where is the missionary who will go to work in such places? May the Lord God of Israel look upon these cities and valleys in Italy whose sod pilgrim feet have trod, where martyrs' bones have been buried, where they will come up from caverns, from craggy rocks, a host of precious ones who gave their lives, but would not yield their faith. Certainly the prayer should go up to God that He would raise up laborers to go forth into the harvest field. I feel very solemn as I think over this matter and see the condition of the people in such amazing ignorance of how to preserve their bodies in the best condition of health.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 12

Here we are shut away from the higher classes by men professing to be shepherds of the flock, but who feed themselves and not the flock of God. Every church is refused to those who would preach any other doctrine than that which their denomination believes. The halls will bring out numbers to hear, but the very ones who need the words in the message of warning, it does not reach. Well, the Lord of heaven has a care for His own, the purchase of His blood.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 13

When I came back to Basel, I was thoroughly exhausted. I had spoken ten times, twice on Sundays, and the anxiety and burden carried me very near the borders of breaking. I had a tremendous taxing labor at Christiania. It seemed that the burden on my soul would give me no rest day or night, and the journey home was severe. Without rest I went, in answer to the call, immediately to Italy, and the harassing time there was a trying one; and when we reached here we found work. Edith was dying. We labored and prayed with her, and the Lord heard our prayers. The afflicted one was comforted, relieved, and the peace of Christ came into her heart; and we have not a question but that she has fallen asleep in Jesus.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 14

Well, I am again coming up from great weakness and am able to write and speak again to the people. I shall put my trust in God and not be discouraged. If the Lord permits Elder Grant to follow on my track and hedge up my way, I will go right on doing my best. He can make the wrath of man to praise Him.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 15

I had, on the night before New Year's, a most precious dream. I thought I went into a room to pray, and my burden was the state of things in Europe. What could we do to improve matters? How could we arouse the people to do what they could do with their influence to help build up the work? I was telling the Lord all about this matter. A voice spoke to me in a distant corner of the room. I looked up in surprise, and I thought it was Jesus. What a glow of happiness I felt! He assured me that He was not a great way off, when I was in sore perplexity that He was nigh. And He told me that I might ask great things and the Lord would answer; that He was not willing that His people should be disheartened; that they did not have the simplicity of faith. And with most comforting, loving words He blessed me and told me that I might confide all my troubles to Him, and I might draw by faith from Jesus the very things that I needed. I felt so thankful that I implored at once that I might have greater wisdom; that I might give wise counsel; that I should not in any instance mislead one soul. I asked that the presence of [God] and His light and power would go with me as I bore the message. He said, "I will answer your prayer." Oh, how happy I felt when I awoke! I was so free and so peaceful.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 16

I have had many letters to write—one matter of a very perplexing character in regard to courtship and marriage. A young man was urging his attentions upon Brother Albert Vuilleumier's daughter. I wrote letters to him and have sent the general part of it to the Review. You will see it.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 17

I have many things that I would like to write but cannot now. I will state that one young man from the theological school here in Basel, native German, has taken his stand fully on the truth. He is a man of excellent mind. He is now at work in the office. His coming out as he did without having personal labors for him has aroused the attention of the teachers and students in the school, for this young man stated plainly his faith. They all liked him and urged him to remain in the school, and they would arrange that he should keep the Sabbath and yet carry on his studies. But he said, "No, I cannot conscientiously do this; for if I believe this truth, I must act a part in proclaiming it." Brother Whitney has received letters from two in France who have come out in the truth by reading. They sent money to subscribe for the French Signs. So the work is moving slowly.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 18

Yesterday, Sabbath, Kristine took her stand fully with us and was baptized. Oh, how thankful I feel for this! She is a precious child; we like her very much; and I think she is perfectly contented.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 19

Elder D. T. Bourdeau writes that three have embraced the truth in Geneva, and many others are interested. So we will look upon all the things the Lord is doing for us and take courage.4LtMs, Lt 120, 1886, par. 20

California Conference

Christiania, Norway

July 7, 1886

This letter is published in entirety in PUR 09/04/1913.

To the California Conference:

I do not think many of our people know what it is to believe in Jesus in the fullest sense of the word. When we do, we shall have a heart filled with such a sense of the salvation that it is our privilege to accept that we will gladly receive it and be trustful and happy in the assurance of His love; and with this faith appropriating the blessing to ourselves, we have glad and hopeful and joyful hearts all the time. 4LtMs, Lt 121, 1886, par. 1

Bright hopes become those who have such a Saviour. We should not have sadness and gloom and painful sympathies for our supposed afflictions and hardships. Humbled we may be ever because of our sinfulness, and because we have grieved the Saviour, but glad that we can believe that Jesus has promised to forgive the sins of the contrite heart, and that these sins through Jesus Christ shall be blotted from the book of His remembrance. Now why should we not be the most grateful of mortals that such an ample sacrifice, in infinite mercy, has been made in our behalf? Let these words be on our lips, if we have complied with the conditions laid down in the Word of God, "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." [1 John 1:7.]4LtMs, Lt 121, 1886, par. 2

We need far greater love, far greater faith, and much less of self. Oh, that my brethren could see the fulness that there is in Jesus and the love wherewith He hath loved us! In Christ we are as if we had suffered the penalty we have incurred. In Christ I am as if I had obeyed, and rendered perfect obedience to the law, which we cannot perfectly obey without Christ imparts to us His merits and His righteousness. Oh, the plan of salvation is a wonderful matter, and we have enough to think of, and talk of, and to be thankful for every day of our lives.4LtMs, Lt 121, 1886, par. 3

God can retain all His justice and present it to us with a greater dignity and luster; He can retain all His glory and reveal it to us in still increased glory and majesty, and yet pardon the transgressor. Through Christ, who was equal with the Father, we may claim the blessing of peace and rest. We need much of the Spirit of God. We seem to feel that we must do the work, and do not bring Christ and His love into the work.4LtMs, Lt 121, 1886, par. 4

[First four pages missing] ... translated for the benefit of the French and German here in this place. We are seeking to do all we can to benefit the people in Europe.⁴*LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 1*

We hear good news from Nimes, France. They have had in the beginning great opposition, but this is now changed. They thought sometimes they would have to give up the battle and beat a retreat, but they valiantly held to their position, and, thank the Lord, the victory is gained. Elder Bourdeau was invited to preach in one of the churches. He says: "Last night the number of our hearers was more than as large again, owing to my speaking in a popular church in the city last Sunday morning [on the] subject [of] the cross of Christ. I regard this as a victory."⁴*LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 2*

I do not know how the absent minister will like it. I was urged by his leading members and elders to fill the vacancy. You had better believe I responded promptly. I was as free as I would have been in my own kitchen. The Lord blessed me as I presented the efficacy of the cross of Christ.⁴*LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 3*

Some asked our friends who was the man speaking. [One] replied, "The minister who preaches at the tent. You would not go out to hear him; now you are obliged to hear him."⁴*LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 4*

I received "thanks" and "God bless you and your work." I announced the meetings in the tent. I thought I should get as much as that for my services. The rumors have gone far and near.⁴*LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 5*

But there came a telegram from Russia that our dear Brother Conradi is in prison. We know nothing of particulars yet. Brother Whitney has gone to consult the American counsel to ascertain what can be done. This American counsel is from Maine, Gorham, my own native place. He is very social and accommodating. I hope you will present this case before the church, that all who have faith may pray for the Lord to work in behalf of Brother Conradi, and that God will rebuke the power of Satan. We expect to see more of this work done in such places as Russia, where the truth must go, but I think they can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 6

Elder Bourdeau writes on the outside of his envelope, "I am at Professor Gilley's. He says Mrs. White can speak in our church." I shall be glad of the privilege of doing so. After the conference in England shall go to France, and in the great city of Nimes bear my testimony, if the Lord will.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 7

I hope our brethren are praying for the work in Europe. Prayers should go forth as sharp sickles in the harvest field. Oh, that we would as a people awake and put on the whole armor of God. I cling by faith to the arm of infinite power. I know that God alone can prepare our way and work with our efforts. We can reach the people only through God. A Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God alone giveth the increase.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 8

I try not to carry too heavy a load myself, but to do the work that seems necessary for me to do to the very best of my ability and leave the result with God. It is God's work. The souls for whom we labor are those for whom Christ has died, and He values these souls more highly than we do. But we can pray and we can work while the day lasts; and if we can at last be counted worthy to enter in through the gates into the city, what happiness and bliss will be ours.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 9

If I have a will of my own, I do not know it. I feel that I am not my own, but the property of Jesus Christ; and if I can be a laborer together with God, I should feel that I am highly honored. But we must bring consecration into our daily practical life. We must live a life of consecration. Our will and our way must be yielded to God's will and God's way. We must walk humbly with God. We must, as sons and daughters of God, reach a higher standard. We cannot consent to be merely commonplace professors. The Gospel presents before us a high mark. It is a great thing to be a consistent Christian. But let nothing short of this completeness and consistency of character satisfy us. We must draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to us.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 10

The Bible must be our standard, its holy principles brought into our lives, else we will fail to develop a religious character. The Father who has given us His own Son expects us to bear much fruit. Each [of us] has influence and is accountable to God for that influence. We must have personal religion; we must exhibit the beauty of true holiness; and then we carry with us every advancement we have made in this life into the future life.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 11

Children, it pays to walk circumspectly with God. Press to the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Urge your way against the current of worldlings and busy activities.4LtMs, Lt 122, 1886, par. 12

Dear Brother Rice:

I have been much worried in regard to the spiritual condition of the church in St. Helena. I am in the night season addressing them most earnestly. I thought I was in meeting, and you, my brother, were speaking. Your discourse as far as subject was concerned was good, but you were spiritless, your subject long and tedious, and many of the congregation were asleep. I felt urged by the Spirit of the Lord to say some plain things, Bro. Rice. Said I, "Do you know that the trumpet must give a certain sound? Can you not discern that your discourses do not interest and feed the people? Can you not see that the truth is powerless as you proclaim it? You preach altogether too much, and you are lulling the people to sleep with your lifeless discourses that have not the unction of the Holy Spirit. Are you awake yourself? You are doing the people harm rather than good. You must be careful how you make the truth unpalatable by your dry and tedious prayers and lengthy discourses. Learn to come straight to the point when you preach. [Preach] one-half as long as usual, then stop. Do not make your discourse over one-half hour long, and then you will not weary the people." 4LtMs, Lt 123, 1886, par. 1

I dreamed the spiritual interest at the Retreat was very low. There should be a decided effort made to make the meetings of the highest interest. [Ends here, apparently unfinished and never sent.] 4LtMs, Lt 123, 1886, par. 2

Dear daughter Addie [Walling]:

I received a letter from you last evening and was very glad to hear from you. I had begun to feel somewhat anxious in regard to you, but your letter set me at rest again. Was glad to hear that Sister Scott is pleasantly situated. I hope she will enjoy herself in her new home. I received a letter from Sister Lockwood, from Bro. Ramsey, and others. Brethren and Sisters

[NP]

Summer of 1886

Published in entirety in RH 11/02/1886

Dear Brethren and Sisters to whom are committed the sacred testing truths for this time:

Are you faithful to your God-given trust? Every one is wielding an influence over the destiny of other souls. "Ye are the light of the world." Matthew 5:14. A faithful discharge of duty on your part will have a telling influence upon the impenitent. But if you neglect the work which God has given to you, some souls will be lost. Consider this matter, I pray you, in the light of God's Word, and may your souls feel the burden of your entrusted responsibility. Oh, that there might be a turning to the Lord by every member of the church, that the earnest, fervent piety of each might be a message of warning to the sinner!⁴*LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 1*

"Be zealous therefore, and repent," (Revelation 3:19) is the Word of God to His professed people. "I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." Revelation 2:5. Many of our people are backsliding from God. We need to arouse. Let every soul that has named the name of Christ depart from iniquity. We want a pure Christianity. Great dangers are lurking for us on every side. When they need most the presence of God, many have the least of His presence. Many are in danger of becoming like the Jewish nation, who knew not the Scriptures nor the power of God. Like the teachers of Israel, you may explain Bible truth to others, and yet not practice it in your daily life. If the Jews had possessed an experimental knowledge of the Scriptures, they would not have been ignorant of the power of God. Like them we have great light and privileges, but many do not respond to these; and here is their peril.⁴*LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 2*

When Jesus wept over Jerusalem, His tears were for all who are abusing their present privileges. He wept that so many who profess His name fail to become what God designed them to be; that they continue in sin and weakness, which He is able and willing to save them from if they will but come to Him. The Saviour says, "What could have been done more to My vineyard, that I have not done in it?" Isaiah 5:4. He has dealt with His people as a loving father with a wayward and rebellious child. But He sees grace resisted, privileges abused, opportunities slighted. Where He had a right to expect earnest, vital piety, He sees insincerity, hollow formalism, pharisaic pride. Neglect of light is chargeable upon those whom God has entrusted with great and solemn truths. Ingratitude for God's mercies, abuse of blood-bought privileges, stand registered against many in the books of heaven, and are treasuring up for them wrath against the day of wrath. Vengeance will surely be visited upon those who have had so great light, yet who are so cold and unimpressible that no light shines from them to the world. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 3

God has loaded us with His benefits. Immortal blessings have been poured upon us in great measure. Messengers have been sent with warnings, reproofs, and entreaties. God's servants have wept and prayed over the lukewarm state of the church. Some arouse, but only to fall back in unconsciousness of their sin and peril. Passion, worldliness, malice, envy, pride, strife for supremacy make our churches weak and powerless. Some of Christ's ambassadors are carrying a heavy burden upon their souls, because their message is treated by so many as an idle tale. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 4

The eye of Jesus, looking down the ages, was fixed upon our time when He said, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace!" Luke 19:42. It is still thy day, O church of God, whom He has made the depository of His law. This day of trust and probation is drawing to a close. The sun is fast westering. Can it be that it will set and thou wilt not know "the things which belong unto thy peace"? Luke 19:42. Must the irrevocable sentence be passed, "but now they are hid from thine eyes." Luke 19:42. I tell you, there is need to be alarmed. It is time to seek God earnestly, saying with Jacob, "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me." Genesis 32:26. It will be of no avail to make a spasmodic effort, only to fall back into spiritual lethargy and lukewarmness. The past, with the slighted mercies, the admonitions unheeded, the earthly passions uncorrected, the privileges and opportunities unimproved, the soul temple filled with desecrated shrines—all is recorded in the book of heaven. But the most solemn moments are still before you. Because of past neglect, the efforts you make must be the more earnest now. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 5

The Saviour is speaking to His people, “Be zealous therefore, and repent.” Revelation 3:19. It is not ministers whom you have slighted; it is not the warnings of men that you have rejected; it is not My delegated prophets that you have refused to hear; but your Redeemer, your only hope. If ye are destroyed, it [is] yourselves alone that are responsible. Ye will not come to Me that ye might have life. “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, ... how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings,” Luke 13:34. But ye could not? No; “and ye would not!” Luke 13:34. I desired to save you, but ye would not be doers of My Word. The arm strong to save, is also strong to punish. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 6

Jesus is now looking from heaven above with yearning pity upon thee, even thee, in this thy day, O thoughtless, careless soul. But unless there is in our churches a general arousing, unless there is an individual work of confessing and putting away sin, unless each shall give earnest heed to the things which belong to their peace, the words of Christ may be at any moment applicable to them: “Now they are hid from thine eyes.” [Luke 19:42.] I entrusted thee with the solemn, sacred message of truth to make known to others, but thou hast been unfaithful to thy holy trust. Souls have not been enlightened, warned, and urged to repentance. Their blood will I require at thine hand. Will the churches humble themselves before the Lord in this day of atonement? Will they put away the sins which defile their garments of character, and separate them from God? 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 7

The present is our day of visitation. Look not to a future, more convenient season when the cross to be lifted will be less heavy, when the inclinations of the carnal heart will be subdued with less effort. “Today” saith the Spirit of God, “if ye will hear His voice, harden not your heart.” Psalm 95:7, 8. Today go about the work, else you may be one day too late. The impressions which you have today may not be as strong tomorrow. Satan’s snare may close about you. The candlestick may be removed out of its place, and you be left in darkness.4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 8

“See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh,” (Hebrews 12:25) says the true Witness. “Behold, I stand at the door and knock.” Revelation 3:20. Every warning, reproof, and entreaty in the Word of God, or through His delegated messengers, is a knock at the door of the heart; it is the voice of Jesus, asking for entrance. With every knock unheeded, your determination to open becomes less and less. If the voice of Jesus is not listened to at once, it becomes confused in the mind with a multitude of other voices. The world’s cares and business engross the attention. Conviction dies away. The heart becomes less impressible and lapses in a perilous unconsciousness of the shortness of time and of the great eternity beyond. The heavenly Guest is standing at your door, while you are piling up obstructions to bar His entrance. Jesus is knocking through the prosperity He gives you. He loads you with blessings to test your fidelity, that they may flow out from you to others. Will you permit selfishness to triumph, will you squander God’s talents and lose the soul through idolatrous love of the blessings He has given?4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 9

There are some whose hold on life is weakening. Disease is upon them. Soon the time will come for the separation from all earthly things. Will these venture to trifle with God? Will they rob Him by withholding from His cause? Are there any who will prefer perishable, earthly treasure to the heavenly, the immortal substance?4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 10

Christ is making His last appeal to hearts. How importunate His entreaty. How reluctant is He to give you up, to be separated from His love and from His presence forever. Still are heard the steps of Him who is waiting without your door. His voice is still pleading for an entrance. But there is a point beyond which the forbearance of God will not reach. Shall the sign be registered on that doomed doorway, “Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone”? Hosea 4:17.4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 11

Shall the word be spoken concerning you—he is joined to his idol of sensuality, let him alone; he is joined to his idol of earthly treasure, let him alone; he is joined to his idolatry of self, let him alone? The Sun of righteousness may set this very day for those who have had great light and privileges, but have not improved them. You have no time to loiter, no time to consult your convenience. It is now, even now, that you are to be zealous and repent. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 12

Oh, it is peace you need; heaven's forgiveness, peace, and love in the soul. Money cannot buy it, intellect cannot secure it, wisdom cannot attain to it, but Jesus offers it as a gift. It is yours if you will reach out the hand of faith and grasp it. Many are weary of their half-hearted service. Their souls cry out after the living God. We are so weak, so helpless, and yet so desirous of a better state of things, that we turn away from a religion that has in it no divine manifestation. We cannot be satisfied with a form of godliness. We must have the deep movings of the Spirit of God in the soul. 4LtMs, Lt 125, 1886, par. 13

Let the minister of God in his labors lean upon the arm of infinite power. Let him bare his soul in the closet, alone before God. Let him with loathing put away soul defilement. Let the weary, discouraged soul cry, as did Jacob, for the Comforter. Never trust in what you can do. Your wisdom is foolishness. Ever [keep in heart the knowledge that we are laborers for God. The Lord is leading his church in these last days as he led ancient Israel. While he gives them warnings, reproofs, and encouragement through his delegated servant, Christ, the angel of the covenant, who in the pillar of cloud and of fire went before the Hebrew host, is the leader of his people today. Provoke him not with your murmurings, by your selfish withholding from his cause, by cherishing iniquity; for in the face of great light he will not pardon your continual transgressions. The warning to the Sardis church is applicable at this time: "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." And to us also the promise is extended. “Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments, and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels.” [The last page is missing from the manuscript. (Discourse by Mrs. E. G. White, Orebro,)

Luke 13:23, 24. “Then said one unto Him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And He said unto them, Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.” When we read that many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able, then we want to understand what we shall do in order to succeed. This to us is a mournful statement, that there are those who will fail to enter in at the strait gate because they only seek to enter in, and do not strive. And to those who will make a success in the work of overcoming, it will require a great effort on their part. They must realize the burden of the work that is resting upon them individually.⁴*LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 1*

We are in a world where sin and iniquity prevail, and we want to know what we shall do in order to inherit eternal life. We cannot any of us afford to miss the great reward that is presented before the overcomer. We want to know that the steps that we are taking are heavenward instead of earthward. The truth which we profess will be of no avail to us unless we are sanctified through it. Christ prayed that His disciples might be sanctified through the truth. “Thy word,” said He, “is truth.” [John 17:17.] And while that error is prevailing to such an extent in our land, we want to know what is truth, because we cannot be sanctified by error. The better we understand the truth as it is in God's Word, the better we shall know how to sanctify our lives through God's Word.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 2

We are in this world as probationers, and God is proving us by giving us an opportunity to obey His truth. It is a very solemn thing to live in this age of the world, and we should not be satisfied unless we have a living connection with the God of heaven, and we should have a sense of our accountability to Him every day of our lives. We cannot press against the tide of moral evil that is in our world unless we have the grace that is mentioned in our text. We see the practices and customs of men around us who profess to be God's children, but their lives do not correspond with their profession. We want to stand out against all these things that are not in accordance with God's requirements. A great and solemn responsibility rests upon us who profess to obey God's commandments, to show to the world around us that we are bending our steps heavenward. And as we press against the current that is bearing all down, then we should know for what we should strive. We are to press toward the mark of the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus. We cannot remain in listless resistance and yet gain the prize.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 3

There are voices that we shall hear all around us to divert us away from the truth, but if we have an eye single to the glory of God and are striving to do His will, we shall hear His voice and know it is the voice of the Good Shepherd. It is very important that we understand the voice that speaks to us. We hear the voice of Christ here that says, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." [Luke 13:24.] We must live a life of constant watchfulness and of constant prayer to God. We must purify our souls by obeying the truth. We must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 4

For a few weeks past I have had a deep sense of the promises of God and the hope of the Christian. The Bible never seemed to me so full of rich gems of promises as within the last few weeks. It seems that the dews of heaven are ready to fall upon us and refresh us, if we will only take the promises to ourselves. We can never overcome our own natural tendencies without the help of Heaven, and the precious Jesus places Himself right by our side to help us in this work. He says, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." [Matthew 28:20.] Well now, we want to believe just what Christ has said. We want that our faith shall compass the promises. We want to throw it wide open, the door of our hearts, that Jesus can come in and dwell with us. He says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." [John 15:7.]4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 5

If we are indeed the privileged people of God with whom He has entrusted precious truth, He would have us in that position that we can reflect that Word to the world. We would be inclined to think that these promises refer only to the preachers of the Word for the very reason that every individual member of the church does not let his light shine to the world. Every one who has been partaker of the blessing of Jesus Christ and has received the light, it is his duty to try to show others the good way. And when the Lord has thrown open before us the rich promises of heaven, then how deficient we show ourselves if we do not grasp these blessings. It is because we do not receive this light by living faith ourselves that we do not reflect it to others, for those who partake of this great salvation cannot keep it to themselves. They see a world in darkness that is perishing for want of the light that cometh from Jesus Christ, and they are not satisfied to drink once from the Fountain of life, but they are constantly drinking. Christ says, "I will be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life." [John 4:14.] And how is this work accomplished? It is by refreshing others with the waters that come from heaven.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 6

There is not one in our midst but has reasoning faculties. God has given you reason and intellect to use to His glory. He would not have you abuse any faculty that He has given you. There are temptations that will come to every one of us. We all have our different dispositions to overcome; and how are we to know that we are doing this work day by day? We must look into the mirror—God's holy law—and there discover the defects in our character. It is a very difficult thing for one to understand himself. We must examine closely to see if there is not something that must be laid aside, and then as we make an effort to put away self, why our precious Saviour will give us the help we need that we may be overcomers. 4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 7

Do our works correspond with our faith? "Faith without works is dead." [James 2:26.] We must reveal to the world that we have the most precious truth ever committed to the world, and that God has given us this solemn trust. I ask, How are you using it? We want to be in right relation with God, and we want to strive and pray and watch lest the enemy shall overcome us with his deceptions. We are living in a day when the enemy will work with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, and the only safety for us is to crucify self. We must remember that our natural inclination is to depart from God and righteousness; but every one of us must be judged according to the deeds done in the body. Just according to the light which God has permitted to shine upon our pathway will be measured our punishment. If we neglect this great salvation, we shall understand what it is to have great trials in consequence of our peculiar faith; but if the faith which we profess does not accomplish anything for the receiver in the sanctifying of his life and character, then we ask what profit is it to us? We have a peculiar and holy faith which brings us out and distinct from the world. This line of demarcation is plain and sharp and clear. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." [Matthew 6:24.] Ye cannot partake of the world and have its pleasures in view, and yet be Christ's. 4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 8

In your efforts to overcome, you will meet with many temptations; but if you continue to strive, Christ will give you great success. The more serious the trials, the more precious the victory you gain. If you will only flee to the Source of your strength, then you will receive a great blessing. But we must learn to cast all our cares upon Jesus Christ who is our Helper. All our sorrow and grief, take it to the Lord in prayer. 4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 9

It is a great thing to believe in Jesus. We hear many say, "Believe, believe; all that you have to do is to believe in Jesus." But it is our privilege to inquire, What does this belief take in? and what does it comprehend? There are many of us who have a nominal faith, but we do not bring that faith into our character. The statement is made that the devil believed and trembled. He believed that Christ was the Son of God while he was in heaven; and when upon this earth he was in conflict with Him here on the field of battle, he believed on Christ; but could this save him? No, because he did not weave Christ into his life and character. We must have that faith that works by love and purifies the soul, that this belief in Christ will lead us to put away everything that is offensive in His sight. Unless we have this faith that works, it is of no advantage to us. You may admit that Christ is the Saviour of the world; but is He your Saviour? Do you believe today that He will give you strength and power to overcome every defect in your character?4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 10

There must be a greater striving in you to overcome every failure and sin, and to stand right before God. There are many today who might be far in advance of what they now are had they had this faith. God wants us to be standing upon the platform of eternal truth, and He would have us in that position where our lives will preach to the world that they must love God and keep His commandments if they shall ever enter heaven. Not a taint of sin shall ever enter heaven. The Spirit warreth against the flesh. His servants ye are to whom ye yield obedience; and when His Spirit shall cleanse the soul temple, Christ will come in and dwell there.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 11

We are to grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus, and we are thus growing up a precious temple unto the Lord. He says, "I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God and they shall be My people." [2 Corinthians 6:16.] What we want, my brethren and sisters, is religion. What we want is the Spirit of God in our souls. We want our faces set constantly heavenward. And when we see that sin in us is striving for the mastery, then we must strive.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 12

Let us have a burden for the souls that are around us. Every particle of light that you get from Jesus, remember that it is not for you alone, but for those that are around you. And as soon as you have this spirit of labor for those around you, then will you feel the necessity for striving for souls as never before. Why, you will look at these souls and say, I must be a light to them. If you make crooked paths for your feet, then will you turn the lame out of the way. I must have the Spirit of Christ with me from morning until night, or I will be the means of turning some soul out of the way. Why, it makes every difference with us whether we are living righteously or in sin. To some of us Christ may say that He is ashamed to call us brethren; but to those who are loaded down with burdens, why, the pitying Saviour stands right by their side to help them. He would send every angel out of glory while you are struggling to overcome sin, so that Satan cannot have the victory over you. Christ has sympathy for the weak; and we should be so thankful that we have One to redeem us who is called the Son of God. Why, He took man's human nature upon Him, that He might come right down to man in the temptation wherewith man is beset. The pitiful Redeemer knows just how to help us in every one of our strivings. Then shall we not accept Him as our Saviour? If you feel the wound and sting of sin, then it is for you to cry to the Saviour to help you. 4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 13

But we have individually this lesson to learn of special trust in our Saviour. We are to trust our heavenly Father just as a child trusts its earthly parents and believe that He is working for our good in all things; and that every struggling cry and every effort against the adversary of our soul enters into the ears of the God of Sabaoth, and He will send us help every time we need it; He will help us over every temptation if we call upon Him in faith. Now this is the lesson we must learn. 4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 14

I can trust my Saviour; He saves me today; and while I am struggling to overcome the temptations of the enemy, He will give me grace to conquer. We will have no excuse to offer in the day of God because we did not serve Christ. We are to be partakers of the divine nature; we are to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust; and this is what Christ means when He says, "Ye must eat My flesh and drink My blood, or ye have no life in you," "for My flesh is meat indeed and My blood is drink indeed." [John 6:53-55.] And this Christ is the Word of God; and we must take this Word and bring it into our nature, and thus we are receiving nourishment from Jesus Christ as the natural stalk receives nourishment from nature. So we are to connect with Christ if we would have a part with Him. We must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of

God.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 15

God help us that we may strive with all the powers He has given us to enter in at the strait gate. But if you fail, it will be yourselves alone that must bear the failure. Jesus has made provision for every one of you, that you may enter into the city. But you must advance, brethren and sisters, more than you have done. It is a tremendous responsibility that rests upon you. You must so live that you will show to the world around you that you are leaving a bright track heavenward. If you at last have the white robe and crown of life, will it not pay for all the trials and perplexities you have had here? This world is not heaven, it is the preparation place; it is the workshop of God where we are to be hewed and chiseled and fitted up for the heavenly mansions. Then do not be satisfied with a mere sense of the truth; God calls for a reformation at every step. It is to have a fitness for the mansions that Christ has gone to fit up for us. And if we can only be of the heavenly family in the kingdom of glory, then we shall have the eternal reward. May God help you to overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of His testimony.4LtMs, Ms 5, 1886, par. 16

Wednesday afternoon, June 23, 1886

(Talk before the Scandinavian Conference at Orebro,)

I have felt a very great interest in this meeting which shall be held in Sweden. These are meetings of very great importance to those who attend them. These are to give a mold and fashion to the work which shall be done in these kingdoms. And as the condition of the people in these kingdoms who have embraced the truth has been presented before me, I feel it a duty to say some things to you. The time has come when there must be a reaching a higher standard than you have had in the past. While quite a number have embraced the truth as it has been presented to them, they have not had sufficient labor in the churches to carry them along to an advanced stage. But our heavenly Father wants that His people here shall be harnessed for the work before them.⁴*LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 1*

I was among the first in the organization of our people in America and came right up with the work from its very infancy. We met together in a room about one third as large as this house for our first conference, and here the Lord has been revealing to us from time to time the advanced steps we must make in the work. We were at that time almost destitute of means, and there were only a very few who had money to carry forward the work. When in these sessions of conference we made it a special subject of prayer, we did have the special blessing and presence of God with us. We there pledged ourselves that every one of us would give a part in the work, and as soon as we made this decision the blessing of God rested upon us in great measure. Every one of us there agreed that we should have a season of prayer that God would bless us and open the way so that we might know how to work. We had then preparations made to bring the Lord our offering just as they should be proportioned to us. And a portion of every dollar we should earn should be invested in the work. And there were a few who came up nobly to assist in the work in our distress. As soon as any one began to show an interest in the work, they were blessed, and at the next conference we had the most precious meeting we were ever in. 4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 2

Now I was shown in America that there must be here the very same growing in the work as there was there; that every one should feel that they were under obligations to God to help in the work, and then these individuals would feel that the cause of God was a part of them. I was shown that there should be additional laborers in the field to carry forward the work. Brother Matteson has had upon him a tremendous load; he has not only been laboring in the field, but has been doing a great amount of writing. Now Brother Olsen has come here to your conference, and he can take hold with Brother Matteson, and Brother Matteson with him, and they can thus help each other in carrying forward this work. There are few of our brethren who have taken hold of the truth who have no idea what it will accomplish. But what it needs is a more thorough conversion to the truth of God. There needs to be an education of the people up to the standard; they need organized, systematic effort for every church; and if every one here feels that it is the great and solemn work of God, and that they are individually to be a light that is to be reflected to the world, then we shall see that the cause and work of God will advance more rapidly than it has done in the past. 4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 3

There has been altogether too much fear and trembling to bring the people up to a high standard for fear they will draw back. They cannot understand that they must take this position to reach a high standard and advance, but I tell you what you want, brethren, is to be endowed by the Holy Spirit of God. 4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 4

You have not had the advantage that they have had in America; and the publications which have been presented to you have been much more limited than those of America. But Brother Matteson has been straining every nerve to bring the truth before you, and you may depend [upon it] that greater efforts will be put forth to present the truth to the people than ever have been made. These conference meetings should be conducted in such a manner that they will be a school to those present, to train them to move carefully at every step. Brethren, you want to pray more. That God of wisdom that connected with Him the humble fishermen to be His disciples will help you in the work. And, my brethren, you must not feel that you are doing everything that you can do; you must put the whole armor on and stand as faithful soldiers to the work. All heaven is interested in you who have embraced the truth under difficulties. You want in every one of your churches to let the light shine brighter. You want to organize your Sabbath schools and there train your children in Bible study. You want to have the missionary spirit to convert other children who will come in; you may possibly reach the parents through the children. Our Sabbath schools are the great instrumentalities of God to bring the truth to the parents through the children. You want to go from this meeting with new zeal, and every one should feel that he is a missionary for God, that there is a work to be done right in your own home and in your own neighborhood.4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 5

If the people come into your meetings, you want these meetings full of life and earnestness, that they may know that you believe the things you profess. You want faith in God to believe that He will do just as He has promised. You may meet and have your prayers and testimonies ascend to God; but if you have not faith, these profit nothing. I would rather have two in these meetings that had living faith in God than I would have one hundred that had no faith in the truth. You are to feel individually that you are a representative for Christ; and although many of you are pressed with poverty, yet it is your privilege to feel that God will help you to invest means in this work. You must go to work here just as we did in America, have your tract societies and other facilities; and although it may seem at times that the publications in some places do not accomplish much, you must go right on; we had just such experiences in America. But we kept to the point in sending out these publications to different classes, and it was some time before we could make any advancement.4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 6

I have been shown that there must be a different mold put upon the work here in these kingdoms, and there must be a power from the God of heaven to inspire you to work in a different way; and while Brethren Matteson and Olsen will help you in this work here, I wish to throw this out to you now so that you can begin to think in a different strain. Why, you can do tenfold more than you think you can; but unbelief stands right here to say you cannot do anything in this line or that; but you can, brethren!4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 7

Habits and customs are different here from what they are in America, but human nature is the same here as there; and the brethren who have taken hold of the truth in the heart are willing to work, if they are only educated up to the point to know how to work. Why, brethren, I have not slept night after night more than three hours thinking of the work in Europe, and it seems to me that I can hardly contain myself in the body when I realize these things.4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 8

I have seen what God is willing to do for you; but it is just according to your faith what God will do for you, and therefore we want to arouse your faith and to get your ideas broadened; and may the Lord roll the burden of the work upon every one of you who believes the truth. Why, Jesus loves you, brethren, or He never would have presented the truth to you as He has done; and there are just as precious souls as you all through these kingdoms that are hungering and thirsting for something they have not. But it must be by steady effort that they will be brought into the light. When you consider that Jesus will stand right by your side to make the impression upon the heart of the people, then you should be encouraged to work valiantly for God; you must also humble your heart before Him, open the door, and let Jesus in. We may have a precious blessing from God in this conference.4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 9

Will our brethren go to God as did Moses? His petition was, "Show me Thy glory." He said, Why, I cannot go before the people unless the Lord goes with me. And the Lord said, "I will go with thee." [Exodus 33:12-17.] And yet he was not satisfied. He said, "Show me Thy glory.” [Verse 18.] And the Lord hid him in a cleft of the rock and put His hand over the rock, then revealed to him His glory. Well, now, we must have just such a faith. We must feel that we stand right upon the borders of the eternal world, and we must gather rays of light from divine glory and press back the darkness that is enshrouding souls. Let us seek God, my brethren and sisters, here. Be determined that you will know more of God when you go away than when you came here. He will walk through your midst with power if you will only have faith. Then let us wake up to our responsibilities and holy privileges. 4LtMs, Ms 6, 1886, par. 10

Sermon/Preparation for the Judgment

Orebro, Sweden

June 27, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 1SAT 25-38.

(Sermon by Mrs. E. G. White, June 27, 1886, Orebro, Sweden.)

Revelation 20:11-15. Here is presented before us the great and solemn day when the judgment is to set and the books be opened, and the dead are to be judged according to the things that are written in the books. I have questioned in my mind, as I have seen the people in our cities hurrying to and fro with business, whether they ever thought of the day of God that is just upon us. Every one of us should be living with reference to that great day which is soon to come upon us. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 1

The inhabitants of the old world had the message of warning sent to them 120 years, but it did not suit their inclination to heed that warning; therefore they turned away from the message of truth which God sent to them. It was for their interest to heed that message and find a refuge from the coming storm of God's wrath. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 2

Do we consider from day to day that a record is going up to heaven of all our actions here? If we would take heed to our ways, and if we would have the fear of God before us, our lives here would be far better than they are today. We are here as probationers, on trial. God is testing us; God is proving us to see what characters we shall build up. Angels of God in heaven are sent to our earth to weigh moral worth. And our heavenly Father has sent us the message of warning, that we shall get ready for that day of final reckoning. He has bid us to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation that surrounds us. He has bid us to "search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of Me." [John 5:39.] 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 3

It is our privilege to understand the great responsibilities that God has placed upon us, so that we shall not be in darkness as to what is coming upon our world. We cannot afford to meet that day without a preparation. But when we think of this great and solemn event of Christ's coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, we should live in great humiliation before God lest we fail of the grace of God and prove ourselves unworthy of eternal life. When we see that the world is given up to the seeking of pleasure and the indulgence of appetite, we should weep between the porch and the altar, crying, "Spare Thy people, O Lord, and give not Thine heritage to reproach." [Joel 2:17.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 4

We see that the world at large have no thoughts of this great day, and many of them do not care to hear anything about it. But we must meet the record of our lives. We must remember that there is a witness to all our works. An eye like a flame of fire beholds us in all our actions of life. Our very thoughts and the intents and purposes of our hearts are laid bare to God's inspection. As the features are produced upon the polished plate of the artist, so are our characters upon the books of record in heaven.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 5

We ask you, "How stands your character in the sight of God today? Are you preparing your souls for the grand review, that you may have the white robe of character in that day?" You cannot afford to indulge in sin and iniquity; you cannot afford to be found a transgressor of God's great moral rule of righteousness.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 6

If God had no law as a moral standard, whereby every case must be judged, there could be no judgment, and the cases of men and women could not be tried. If we have not been found in harmony with God's requirements in this life, we will not be in harmony with His requirements in the future life.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 7

What excuses have we today that we are not in harmony with the laws of God's government? And what excuse can we render in the day of God for the disobedience of His requirements? Will you say, "The whole world was in disobedience to the law of God, and I thought I would not be singular"? In that day this excuse will not be accepted. You may present excuses now, but you will not venture to present them before the Judge of all the earth, for just as soon as the books are opened, and the characters that are written there are brought out, every mouth will be stopped, for the guilt of all stands as plainly revealed to themselves as to God. Every one then will see just where he departed from the right way. Every one will then discern the influence he had upon his fellow men by his own departure from God's righteousness, to turn them away from the ways of truth and right. Every one then will understand just what he did to dishonor the God of heaven by breaking His law.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 8

Every one who comes forth from the dead when Christ comes in the clouds of heaven, and those who are living, will stand before the judgment seat of Christ. The deeds and acts which we have thought to have been done in secret, where no eye could see, are made known. There was an eye that saw and registered the deeds done by man.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 9

When Belshazzar had his great sacrificial feast, there was a witness present which he did not discern. They were drinking their wine and having their luxurious feast and praising the gods of silver and gold, extolling their own wisdom; but right over against the wall facing the king, a bloodless hand traced the terrible characters testifying of his true condition. The message came, "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." [Daniel 5:27.] Now the Lord is weighing characters in the sanctuary, and the deeds of those who are careless and indifferent, rushing on in the paths of sin and iniquity, are being registered in the books of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 10

The God of heaven has given us reasoning powers and intellect, and He wants us to use them. He has given us this body which He wishes us to preserve in perfect health so that we can give Him perfect service. The Lord God is an everpresent witness to the deeds of wickedness done among the children of men upon this earth. How does He look upon men and women for whom He has paid an infinite price, but who yet refuse to obey His laws? They refuse to be saved in His appointed way, which is entire obedience to His commandments.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 11

Here are youth right here in our midst in this large city, but do these youth appreciate the powers that God has given them, that they should return Him service for all that He has done for them? The future of society is indexed by the youth of today. Some of the youth are making their aim high as did Joseph. They have aimed to keep themselves unspotted from the world. The Lord God of heaven is looking upon the children of men with intense interest, and what are we doing? Are we keeping as did Abraham the ways of the Lord? Are we teaching our children to love and obey God? We want to be in such a position that we can educate these young men brought within the reach of our influence and leave them a good example. We should be in such a position here that the notes of counsel and warning will be given them as from God, and that what God has given them through His messengers may come back to Him in souls saved.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 12

But suppose these youth frequent the saloon and take their drink of beer and wine and strong drink? Nadab and Abihu were in holy office, and they drank wine and strong drink. The influence upon them beclouded their perceptive powers so that they could not discern sacred things. Those who are forming habits of intemperance are beclouding their reasoning powers so that they cannot discern between truth and error. It is the great work of Satan for this time to tempt the appetite so that error shall be placed on a level with truth. We want all the sharp powers of our intellect to be engaged in the work of conflict against the deception of Satan, and we must keep the spiritual and moral powers unperverted so we will know what is truth. God asks for all the entrusted capabilities and talents He has lent us. Will you give them to Him?4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 13

Our sisters cannot afford to use their God-given time on unimportant things which will give them no spiritual strength, but will, if they continue, separate them from God. It is a solemn thing to die, but it is a far more solemn thing to live. Here is a world that is lying in wickedness around us, and what are we as men and women who claim to be sons and daughters of God doing to save the souls of those around us? God requires that we shall give back to Him in willing service all the powers that He has given to us. Let us look forward to the day of final reckoning. How will our cases stand in that day? Will it make us unhappy then that we have served God and kept His commandments? God has given us rules to regulate our lives so that we shall have His care and protection in this life. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 14

The lawyer came to Christ and asked Him, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" [Luke 10:25.] This was a positive question and was just as decidedly answered. "What is written in the law? How readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself. And He said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live." [Verses 26-28.] This means to keep the first four commandments, which show the duty of man to his God, and the last six, which show the duty of man to his fellow men. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 15

Here is the work that is before us. The soul anxiously inquiring, "What shall I do to be saved?" is answered, "The way is laid open. It is to love God above all things, and our neighbor as ourself." We ask you, "Are you doing this?" Are we who profess to be followers of Jesus Christ imitating His life? Are we following His example? If we are, we are in such a position that we can have a living connection with heaven. We are channels of light to the world. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 16

Christ said to His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world ... Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." [Matthew 5:14, 16.] It may seem to you that you have shown great self-denial and self-sacrifice in obeying God's law. Does He require more self-denial on your part than He has shown for you, that you should not perish, but have eternal life? He has led the way; will you follow? He says, "I have kept My Father's commandments." [John 15:10.] Will you keep the commandments of God? He left the royal throne of heaven and changed the crown of glory for one of thorns. He placed His feet in the blood-stained path which led the way to Calvary. He has told us that those who will be partakers with Him in His sufferings will be made partakers with Him in His glory also. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 17

We may never have to suffer as He did; but we should keep before us ever the Author of our salvation and never exalt self, never be lifted up in pride or self-sufficiency. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 18

He was despised and rejected of men. Those He came to save could not see in Him anything that they should desire in Him. Should He come into our world today without earthly honor or princely power, who would receive Him as the King of glory, the Majesty of heaven? How many proud church members would be so ashamed of Jesus and the reproach that would be likely to be attached to them, should they accept Him, that they would refuse to follow Him? Oh, what love, what matchless love has been displayed by the Son of Man! And all this the Son of God endured, that He might bring many sons and daughters to glory. Who is willing today to be on the Lord's side? We cannot wait until the judgment before we consent to deny self and to lift the cross. We cannot then form characters for heaven. It is here in this life that we must take sides with the humble, self-denying Redeemer. It is here that we must overcome envy, strife, selfishness, love of money, and love of the world. It is here that we must enter the school of Christ and learn of the Master the precious lessons of meekness and lowliness of mind. And here it must be our aim and earnest effort to be loyal and true to the God of heaven by obeying all of His commandments and thus be fitting up for the mansions that Christ has gone to prepare for all who love God. Christ says, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me: In My Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you ... that where I am, there ye may be also." [John 14:1-3.] Now the mansions are being fitted up in heaven. Are we being fitted with pure, elevated, holy characters for those mansions? 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 19

All heaven is interested in our salvation. God's angels are in this very congregation. Could your eyes be opened, you would see not only good angels who are trying to impress hearts, but you would see also evil angels who are seeking to make of none effect the message of truth God has in mercy sent. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 20

While we are in this world, we are not safe unless our petitions are continually ascending to the God of heaven, that He will keep us unspotted from the corruptions of the world. Our Saviour has told us what would be in these last days. Iniquity will abound, but the souls that are open to the influence of the Spirit of God will receive strength to withstand the corruptions of this degenerate age.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 21

Enoch walked with God three hundred years previous to his translation to heaven, and the state of the world was not then more favorable for the perfection of Christian character than it is today. And how did Enoch walk with God? He educated his mind and heart to ever feel that he was in the presence of God, and when in perplexity, his prayers would ascend to God to keep him. He refused to take any course that would offend His God. He kept the Lord continually before him. He would pray, "Teach me Thy way, that I may not err. What is Thy pleasure concerning me? What shall I do to honor Thee, my God?" Thus he was constantly shaping his way and course in accordance with God's commandments, and he had perfect confidence and trust in his heavenly Father that He would help him. He had no thought or will of his own; it was all submerged in the will of his Father.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 22

Now Enoch was a representative of those who will be upon the earth when Christ shall come, who will be translated to heaven without seeing death. But be sure that if your hearts are inclined not to do God's will, not to keep the way of the Lord, but to follow your own way, then you are not in harmony with the God of heaven. We want to pray with David, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law." [Psalm 119:18.] Many close their eyes lest they shall see the truth. They do not want to see the defects in their life and character, and they are disturbed if you mention anything about God's law. In this they show that they have a human standard of their own; that their will is not the will of God. We want that you should not be deceived by Satan, the first great adversary of God's law. We want to bear in mind that God's law is the only standard by which He will judge man.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 23

If we are to enter heaven at last, we must bring all of Heaven into this life that we can. The religion of Christ never degrades the receiver; it never brings him down upon a low level. Truth is ever elevating in its influence, lifting them up on the high platform of truth. The religion of Jesus Christ has a refining influence upon men and women. When the truth of God finds access to the heart, it commences its refining process upon the character. Men who are coarse and rough become humble, teachable, learning ever, learning in the school of Christ. The mighty cleaver of truth has taken them out of the world. Then there is the work to be done for them to fit them for God's temple. They are hewed and squared and chiseled and fitted for the mansions in heaven. Those who are naturally full of self-esteem become meek and lowly, they have a change in character. In the beginning, God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." [Genesis 1:26.] But sin has almost obliterated the moral image of God in man. Jesus came down to our world, that He might give man a living example, that he might know how to live and how to keep the way of the Lord. He was the image of the Father. His beautiful and spotless character is before man as an example for him to imitate. We must study the copy and follow Jesus Christ, then we shall bring His loveliness and beauty into our character. In doing this we are standing before God through faith, winning back by conflict with the powers of darkness the power of self-control, the love of God that Adam lost. We are through Jesus Christ living and keeping the laws of God.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 24

When the judgment shall set, and the books be opened, and every one be judged according to the deeds done in the body, those who have imitated Christ in obedience to God's commandments will be blessed. "And another book was opened, which is the Book of Life: and the dead were judged according to their works." [Revelation 20:12.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 25

John also saw the Holy City, the new Jerusalem with its twelve gates and twelve foundations, coming down from God out of heaven. He was shown that city and saw the streets of transparent gold, clear as crystal. Every one that goes into that city is changed and sanctified in character here in this life. The nations that have kept the truth enter into the city of God, and a voice is heard clear and distinct, "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.” [Revelation 22:14.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 26

There the crown of immortal glory is placed upon the head of the overcomer. Then how earnest should be our work here, that we may win souls to Jesus Christ. We cannot afford to devote our God-given powers to our own pleasure for one moment. We must devote our lives to our Master. You must expect to carry on this battle with self-denial and self-sacrifice. The Word of God says through His apostles, “Ye are laborers together with God.” [1 Corinthians 3:9.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 27

Our work may seem at times to be very discouraging, but if one soul is turned from the error of his way to righteousness, there is joy in heaven. The Father and the Son rejoice in the presence of the angels. The song of triumph and victory is sung and echoed and reechoed through the courts of heaven. Then why should we not be wise in this life and work for the glory of God. “They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.” [Daniel 12:3.] We want that our lives here shall be refined, ennobled, elevated, like Jesus Christ’s. When Christ is formed in you the hope of glory, you will begin to lay aside your favorite sins. You will fear to offend God, and you will love His law.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 28

I see before me today the purchase of the blood of Christ. There is value in every soul. Said the Lord through His prophet, “I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.” [Isaiah 13:12.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 29

It is the truth of God received in the heart and practiced in the life that makes man thus precious in the sight of God. As John sees this precious company refined and purified around the throne of God, the angel inquires, “What are these which are arrayed in white robes and whence came they?” And John answers, “Sir, thou knowest.” And the angel answers, “These are they that came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve Him day and night in His temple, and He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.” [Revelation 7:13-15.]4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 30

Now is the opportunity for us, through repentance toward God, to wash our robes of character and make them white in the blood of the Lamb, that we may stand in white raiment before the throne of God. We are to wash our robes of character and have our names registered in the Lamb's Book of Life; and He says, "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." [Verses 16, 17.] 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 31

We want you to live for the future immortal life, and we want you to decide, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." [Joshua 24:15.] Now is the time for you to give yourselves without reserve to Jesus. Be determined that you will have Christ at the loss of everything else. The very obstacles and difficulties you meet here are to strengthen your faith by overcoming these obstacles, and every victory gained is registered in the books of heaven. Every good deed you do, leading souls to walk in the way of God's commandments, is also registered in the Books of Heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 32

Let not the enemy deceive you. He has filled the world with his heresies. You want to plant your feet upon the Word of God; then you will be all ready to come under His rules and commandments in the kingdom of bliss. If you ever sing the song of triumph and redemption in the kingdom of God, you must first learn that song here. Is Jesus abiding in your heart? If He is, you will talk about Him. You will reveal Him in life and character. You will talk of His power and make melody to God in your heart. The sweet spirit of meekness will be cherished, self will be crucified. Purity and holiness will be developed in the character. 4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 33

I speak because I know what I am talking about. For more than forty years I have stood in the desk proclaiming salvation to sinners, and my heart has yearned over them. God has opened before me the glory of Heaven, and I have obtained a sight of the majesty and glory of my Redeemer. I have obtained a sight of the angels in glory. I was very young when the physicians said, "You must die, you cannot live more than three months.” It was then that God gave me a sight of His glory, and said, “Go proclaim the message I give you to the people.” I started out in my weakness. I could hardly stand. I had not spoken aloud for weeks, but when I stood before the people, God’s power came upon me. Voice was given me, and I talked from two to three hours with clearness. But when I had finished, my voice again was gone. I traveled for three months in this way, and then the pain of the lungs ceased, and I have been ever since doing the work which the Master has given me to do. I have traveled and labored, and God has given me strength to continue unto this day.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 34

I want to say to whomsoever the glory of God has been revealed, “You will never have the least inclination to say ‘I am holy, I am sanctified.’” After my first vision of glory, I could not discern the brightest light. It was thought that my eyesight was gone, but when I again became accustomed to the things of this world, I could see again. This is why I tell you never to boast, saying, “I am holy, I am sanctified,” for it is the surest evidence that you know not the Scripture or the power of God. Let God write it in His books if He will, but you should never utter it.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 35

I have never dared to say, “I am holy, I am sinless,” but whatever I have thought was the will of God, I have tried to do it with all my heart, and I have the sweet peace of God in my soul. I can commit the keeping of my soul to God as unto a faithful Creator and know that He will keep that which is committed to His trust. It is my meat and drink to do my Master’s will.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 36

And now I present before you the cross of Calvary. If you will come to that cross in penitence, in faith, in obedience to God’s commandments, you will come in the only appointed way. If you lose heaven, you lose everything. If I can only see the King in His beauty, it is all I desire. Let me listen to the sweet music of His voice, saying, “Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.” [Matthew 25:34.] Who of you in this congregation shall we meet there? We want to see you crowned in the city of God. We want to see when the judgment shall sit and the books be opened, that you can stand with the glory of God shining in your countenance. If we can only have that life in the city of God, we shall be eternally blessed.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 37

I warn you, do not place your influence against God's commandments. That law is just as Jehovah wrote it in the temple of heaven. Man may trample upon its copy here below; but the original is kept in the ark of God in heaven; and on the cover of this ark, right above that law, is the mercy seat. Jesus stands right there before that ark to mediate for man. We want you to keep God's commandments and live. Seek for immortality, and the crown of life, and then you will have heaven at last.4LtMs, Ms 6a, 1886, par. 38

Remarks/Reproof for Sabbath Breaking

Christiania, Norway

July 11, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 10MR 89-95.

(Mrs. E. G. White's Remarks Before the Committee at Christiania, July 11, 1886.)4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 1

We feel gratified at the advancement you have made here. You have an appropriate building where you can serve God. And while we may feel gratified with this, we want to be sure that everything in regard to ourselves is right with God. When I was in America the condition of things in Christiania and in other churches here in Europe was presented before me, and I was shown that, while our brethren here had accepted the truth, yet there was to be a continual advancement on their part before they would be prepared for the work that God would do through them; that we have a most solemn message to proclaim to the world, which is to elevate the standard of God's law before the world that is making it void; and that there was here in Christiania a defect in the church in this respect. The Sabbath was not regarded by the people with that sacredness that it is presented to us in the Bible. While they held the Sabbath so loosely, it was impossible for God to let His blessing rest upon the church. There has been too much done in the line of bringing the Sabbath down to man's convenience rather than to bring the Sabbath up, as it is presented in the Word of God.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 2

The word spoken to me by the angel of God was to observe and see, that while worship was going on in the house of God on the Sabbath, and the Sabbath was being nominally observed by the people here; while the prayers were being offered to God for His blessing to rest upon the people, and while the minister was talking to the people, there was heard the sound of the hammer and anvil and chisel, and various sounds. Said the angel, This is an offense to God. How can God regard Himself as honored by a people who profess to worship Him, and let His blessing rest upon the people, while these things are going on? Well now, I could not at the time understand what this meant; but since I have come right here upon the premises, I understand it. Here is a blacksmith right here upon the premises who carries his work on right while worship is going on here on the Sabbath day. And while these meetings have been going on, I have heard the same sounds that the angel caused me to hear over in America. I have heard the sound of chisel and hammer while we have been worshiping God. And the angel said to me that God could not let His blessing rest upon a people who have so little respect for His Word. Again I was led into different places, and I saw accounts that were being settled up and business that was being done upon the Sabbath day, because it was convenient for the people.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 3

Then I was pointed back and was shown that had the truth been held in years past in the manner that it has been held here, we would not have been one-fiftieth part as far advanced as we are today. I was referred to the case of Daniel, how he stood forth for the honor of God whatever might be the result. Had many of our brethren here been placed in a similar condition as was Daniel, they would not have stood firm to principle as he did, but they would have lowered the standard to meet the condition of the people. I was shown that should you, with your present ideas and views, be brought to the test here, you would not take your position so as to connect yourselves with the work of God. Now the requirement that was presented to me was that there should be just as strict integrity on the part of you here as there was on the part of Daniel.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 4

We may expect, from the history that is given us of Daniel, that God would work for us as He did for Daniel. Daniel purposed in his mind that he would not comply with any condition that would in any way weaken his physical powers so that he could not give glory to God. Now if he had yielded to that very first test—to have eaten at the king's table—then he would have yielded to the second test. Had he said, It is a very small matter whether I pray in secret or whether I pray openly to God, and it is convenient for me to obey the command, then the Lord could not have let His blessing rest upon him in such a remarkable degree. But here is wherein Daniel saw

God could be honored; that he as a representative of God must keep the living God exalted above all as the One who could give wisdom and power. Here was an opportunity for him to show to all from whence came his strength, and that man could not come in between him and his God; therefore he did not accommodate himself to the circumstances at all, but he placed himself in that position, that he would lose his life rather than dishonor the God of heaven in any way. And we see that God honored Daniel with wisdom and understanding more than all the astrologers and magicians that were in the king's palace. And notwithstanding a gaping lion's den was open before him, yet he would repair to his tent and worship God there.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 5

Now here is where the test is coming to every one who will enter the city of God—whether they will keep God's commandments and His honor before them, or whether they will serve the powers that be. And if our people shall take the position their faith is a convenient faith, and that it can be manipulated according to their convenience, why, they will throw themselves on the side of the enemy.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 6

Well, there were matters presented before me in regard to the demoralized state of the church which I should bear to this people. And I thought it was to be borne by pen. On every occasion where man's convenience has been exalted before God's, they have put a blinder before their eyes so that the very people who should be strong according to the light which shines from the Word of God upon their path—why, in many things they are as weak as water; and in their influence connected with the church they have not seen the importance of keeping the church together and their standard high.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 7

There has been the evil work of the talebearer and meddler going on; and these things have been passed over as a slight thing. Your meetings have been demoralized so that some of them have been a disgrace to the people of God. There has been a criticizing, faultfinding spirit. It has been right here in the church, and the frown of God has been upon the church, for they were guilty of these things because they allowed it.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 8

God said to Joshua, Why are you lying upon your face here? Said Joshua, There is an accursed thing in Israel. Why, the enemy had gained the victory over them. And God said, I will not go out to battle with you until you have put the accursed thing away from among you. [Joshua 7:7-12.] I want to talk further upon this point, but cannot at this time. 4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 9

Now if you had been in a right connection with God, you never could have heard these sounds I have heard here upon the Sabbath day and yet felt that you were in a right condition before God. And to think that these things have been going on right at the time when your prayers were ascending to God! Now if this matter were not under your control at all, and you were to consider the question of building a meetinghouse in such a place, this should be taken into consideration, and you should take care not to locate where you would be disturbed by such things. But here the matter is under your control and right on your own premises, and yet your sensibilities are not aroused to it, although it is right under your eyes, and you a people who profess to be exalting the law of God in your land. 4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 10

Now you may regard it as a matter of economy. It may bring in some means to invest in the work. I was carried right back to Saul and was there shown how he ordered that the best of the cattle and sheep should be kept to offer to the Lord as a burnt sacrifice, notwithstanding the Lord had told them that everything should be destroyed. And the Lord said Saul should lose his soul for that very act. And yet Saul in his eagerness declared that he had kept the law. Why, says he, I have kept the command, but have kept some of the best of the cattle, oxen, and sheep to offer to the Lord for a burnt sacrifice. Then said Samuel to him, "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." [1 Samuel 15:10-22.] And here the means that are brought in by any of you by transgression of God's law, God will just as surely scatter those means as you have them. For a time it may seem that God wants these means, but God bears with men to a certain point; but when sufficient light has been given and they do not regard that light, then His hand is stretched out to destroy them. And if any of you are engaged in business with men where there is any infringement on God's law, you better cut loose from all such things. The Lord bears and forbears long with the perversity of His children, but when He undertakes to punish them, He will not cease until He has made a full end.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 11

I want that my brethren shall understand that the Lord is in earnest with them. I have not come to this place to cry in your ears, Peace, peace. It is because I have love for this cause, for my brethren, and for this church that I seek to arouse your minds in regard to these things. Just as soon as we begin to accommodate the truth to our own circumstances and conveniences, then we begin to lessen the power of the truth and its influence; for just as surely, this principle that has been weaving itself into this church will hinder it, just as others have been hindered. And when there is a departure from the strictest principles of truth, then there is an inclination for a still wider departure.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 12

The Lord would have His people here arouse themselves to a sense of their condition. Why, here is a church standing here in this large city to present the truth to the people, and every soul that is connected with this church should have a living connection with God. Example has swayed men so that they have not kept God's Sabbath, and He has said that His Sabbath should be a sign between Him and His people, that in the day of final destruction He will pass over them so that the destruction that is to fall upon the world will not fall upon them, who keep the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. I feel like urging this matter because I know that the conscience has become hardened in regard to these things. And the people are not ignorant of these things; they take notice of them.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 13

Do not think that the means that you obtain from this blacksmith shop and marble works will advance the work of God, for it will not. The God of heaven will not accept means obtained in any such way; it is an offense to Him; it is that received by transgressing His commandments and speaks plainly against you. You could not have allowed these things to have gone on like this for years had you had sensitive consciences. God has been dishonored by you here; and if you expect that the God of heaven will work for you, you must have altogether different consciences.4LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 14

Just as soon as you begin to humble yourselves before God, then He will come in and work with you. If the truth is worth anything to us, it is worth everything. It is through the truth that we are to be sanctified. But just as surely as you refuse to receive ... [Remainder missing.]⁴*LtMs, Ms 7, 1886, par. 15*

Luke 19:41, 42, 43. These words were spoken upon a special occasion.⁴*LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 1*

We read also Matthew 21:5-9. Here was to be a scene that the people who should witness it should never forget. They would never lose the impression given. It was a special occasion, and the multitude had poured out from Jerusalem to join the company in order to fulfil prophecy. But they did not know that they were fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah. In that multitude were those who had felt in their body the healing power of Jesus. There were those who had been cripples who were healed; there were those whose eyes were opened by the power of Jesus; there were lepers who had been cleansed from their impurities and who spread their garments in the way; and there were those who had been raised from the dead, crying, "Hosanna to the Lord."⁴*LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 2*

Luke 19:37. Here was a general acclamation of triumph in view of the mighty work which Jesus had wrought for them. As they stood upon the crest of Olivet, Jerusalem was before them in all its glory, and this seemed to give a new zeal to their acclamations of praise. They looked at Christ to see what effect it had upon Him, and behold, He was in an agony of tears. The very branches of palm trees which had been strewed in the way were bedewed with His tears of pity. Why this expression of agony and grief amid all this rejoicing? Christ saw before Him that which the multitude around Him could not see. There was a nation that had been blessed and favored with every advantage which God could give them, and they had rejected Him. They were anticipating the death of the Son of God, and when Jerusalem should have reached that point, it was the utter rejection of Him who only could give them peace and hope and rest. He was the only One who could break the yoke from off their necks. He was the only One who could give them triumph and victory, and they had put this blessing away from them because the purity of Jesus was too much for them, and their own sin and iniquity was pressed upon them. 4LITMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 3

Christ saw the desolation of Jerusalem. He knew the future. He heard the tread of the mighty host which should surround her, and it was the desolation and misery and the deception of the Jewish nation that called forth the agony and tears on that occasion. In choked utterances He exclaims, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Luke 19:42. And why was it that Jerusalem did not know? Had not the mighty Prophet of God walked their streets and given them warnings and entreaties for three years and a half? Then why had they not accepted the message which was brought to them from heaven? He had healed the sick in their city and villages until there were no night vigils to watch over the sick and afflicted, but homes filled with gratitude and rejoicing in the place of them. And yet notwithstanding the mighty works which had been wrought for those who were suffering and in sickness—even to raising up those who were dead—their hearts were set against the Saviour. Can we explain this hardness and impenitence of the heart? Who can understand the perverseness of the human heart? 4LITMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 4

There was no mistake in the great message which came from heaven and meant so much to them, and yet this message was rejected and refused. Christ halts upon the crest of Olivet; the western sun is about to set behind Jerusalem, and when that sun which was gilding its towers should set, the day of Jerusalem was ended. Jesus, who knew the end from the beginning, knew what was before Him. Just at the foot of Olivet was Kidron and in sight was Calvary. He knew that the cross would be placed upon Calvary and that He would be stretched upon it. Was it this that forced the tears from the eyes of the Son of God? Was it this that caused His body to rock as a tree before the tempest? It was not the thought of His own agony, His suffering, His humiliation, His shame, that brought these tears, but it was the giving up of the people for whom God had done so much. And just according to the light which had shone upon them and which they had turned away from would be their punishment because of this rejection. Why, to give up one soul to perish is a terrible thing! One soul is accounted with God of more value than all the world beside. And here was a whole nation that was to be given up to destruction—a nation who would have passed their probation when they had crucified the Son of God.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 5

In the destruction of Jerusalem is symbolized the destruction of the whole world. And of Jerusalem, in broken voice and with weeping, Christ said, "If thou hadst known, even thou, ... in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace!" Here was a pause; He hesitated before passing the irrevocable sentence, "but now they are hid from thine eyes." This is spoken to every heart in the world who turns from light and truth. Every one who turns from the mercy and blessing of God which is offered to him freely—he is the one to whom God is talking.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 6

The last clause comes from His pale and quivering lips. "But now they are hid from thine eyes." He has done what He could for the people, but they would not come to Him that they might have life. We look with sorrow when we see a mother weeping over the bed of her dying child, but here was a sorrow a hundredfold greater than that of the mother for her child. "How can I give thee up? O Jerusalem," was the language of our Saviour. [Hosea 11:8.] He exclaims in one place, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, ... how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Matthew 23:37. What loving care He would have had for them! Christ came to our world in human form, and He would have encircled them with His human arm while with His divine arm He would have connected them with the God of heaven. The apostle exclaims, "Who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth?" Galatians 3:1. He will ask you today, What has come over you that you will not come to God and in full sincerity receive your Saviour? Certainly it is a benumbing power that has come over the souls of many who have had a knowledge of the truth, that they cannot understand the great love of God.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 7

In (Matthew 21:12) we read that He “went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves.” Here our Saviour, as He came down from the crest of Olivet, entered into the temple, and there were the temple courts filled with all sorts of rubbish. There were the boxes for the doves, the pens for the sheep, and there were the oxen and all these things. And there was the quarreling of the priests and the moneychangers and general confusion in that place.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 8

Christ stands upon the steps of the temple, His eye looks over that crowd, and divinity flashes through humanity as He looks upon the scene. There was a terrible period of silence upon all that was remarkable. Every eye was cast upon Jesus. He took up a small whip of cords in His hand and as He raised it He said, “Take these things hence.” John 2:16. “It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye made it a den of thieves.” Matthew 21:13. That flash of divinity through humanity sent terror through every soul, and they fled from that temple as though a band of armed soldiers were behind them.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 9

As they went away they met a great company coming to the temple with their sick, and they said to them, “Go back, go back, He has driven us all out of the temple.” But did they go back? No, they had come a long way with their sick and their dying ones, that Jesus might heal them; and should they give up now? They felt that some of their loved ones would not live until they could reach the temple, and they pressed on their way to the place where Jesus was. With what gracious love He receives every one of them. (Verse 14 of Matthew 21): “And the blind and the lame came to Him in the temple; and He healed them.”4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 10

After the priests saw that they were not followed by those that were after them, they could not understand by what power they had been driven out of the temple, and they said, "Let us go back and challenge Him by what power and authority He has done this thing." Verses 15, 16. Here were the little children that had been healed of their diseases. Jesus had bent over their suffering ones and touched them with His finger and healed them. The multitude that had been crying, "Hosanna," had become so terrified that their voices were hushed, and these little children had picked up the palm branches which they had dropped in the way, and they were walking through the temple and crying, "Hosanna, Hosanna," which the leaders dared not do. Thus the prophecy was fulfilled. 4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 11

Mark 11:12, 13. Here was a fig orchard in the way that Christ traveled, and in that fig orchard was a tree that had put forth its green leaves. The other trees had not yet put forth their leaves, but here stood one tree with its pretentious leaves, pretending that there was fruit thereon. But the Master came and, searching from the topmost boughs down to the lowest branches, He found nothing but leaves. It was stated to Him that the time of figs was not yet. In California the trees always put forth the figs before the leaves appear, and here Christ had reason to believe that there was fruit on the tree, but He finds none. He says, "Let no fruit grow on thee from henceforward forever." Matthew 21:19. And as they returned that way again, the disciples call attention to that tree which is withered to its very roots. 4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 12

Here we have a symbol of the Jewish nation. Here Christ had clothed them with truth that they might let it shine out to others. To the disciples this lesson was essential for them at this time when they were to have such a trial of their faith. Here were the other fig trees that had just as much reason as this one to put forth leaves, but they made no pretensions of bearing fruit. Now we want you to take this lesson to yourselves. Here was a nation that professed to be in advance of every other nation, but there was no fruit to be found upon them. And whatever may be your profession, your advantages or privileges, unless you live up to them and practice the light God has given you, you will be under greater obligations for the light you have. If your religion is flourishing like this tree, and you bear no fruit, then your religion is vain. We want to examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith. 4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 13

Jerusalem's sin was in not listening to the warnings given them; and the Word of God had plainly stated that if they would walk in His statutes and keep His law, His blessing would rest upon them. And while they claimed to be keeping the law of God, the Word of God tells them that they are not keeping it, but breaking it. And here we want to inquire how many have let the temple of their souls be desecrated by worldly things and have crowded out the Son of God? Here was a nation that stood forth claiming the highest privilege of any nation upon the face of the earth. Prophecy had told them just how Jesus should come, and why could they not have read in the Scriptures just the manner of His coming? Because their hearts had been lifted up.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 14

Just so it is with the Christian world today. A Christ in glory, a Christ crucified, they acknowledge as their Saviour; but if Christ should come into our world today as He came into Jerusalem, who would receive Him? The Jews thought Jesus would come as a mighty prince and ruler upon a throne of divinity, but they did not read prophecy aright and therefore they would not accept Him. He was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief; "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."Isaiah 53:5.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 15

He came here to save every one who would come to Him to be saved. His long human arm reached to the very depth of woe and human misery; and while He would lift man up and ennoble him, He takes hold of divine power and thus He unites man with the infinite God. All the blessings which He came to bring to man they refused, but how many are refusing Christ today? The waves of blessing are falling upon their hearts, and they are beating them back.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 16

But hear the mournful cry of Christ, "O that thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Luke 19:42, margin R.V. There is nothing that He requires of you that He does not lead the way. And here He has told us of the fate of Jerusalem, (verse 43 Matthew 21): "Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Here the judgments were to come because they knew not the time of their visitation. At the destruction of Jerusalem there was not one Christian that perished because they heeded the instruction of Christ, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, ... then let them which are in Judaea flee to the mountains." Luke 21:20, 21.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 17

God had prepared a refuge for them, and forty years later this prophecy was fulfilled. There was the temple that was destroyed, and although Titus tried to the best of his powers to save that beautiful, costly temple, he was unable to do so. A higher mandate had gone forth, "There shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Mark 13:2. And here were those who had taken the Son of God and crucified Him. And who was it that had acted so prominent a part? It was those of His own nation. And they were the ones who cried, "His blood be on us, and on our children." Matthew 27:25. And these were the ones who had crucified Him on Calvary where the crosses stood as thick as forest trees. And we see the prophecy tells us all about these things, and why are we not searching the Scripture for ourselves? We have no right to close our Bibles and let others search for us. 4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 18

We may make great pretensions to spirituality and godliness as did the Jewish nation, but it is fruit that Christ is seeking; and will He find in you nothing but leaves? We want the truth, and we want to practice it. We want to be on the Lord's side, and not on the side of His persecutors. We are to reveal Christ in His humiliation. We are to reveal Him in meekness and lowliness of heart. And when we realize that every blessing that we enjoy comes through Jesus Christ, why do we not seek to honor Him? Why are we not opening our hearts that the Son of God can take possession of them? "Behold," says He, "I stand at the door, and knock: if any man ... open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him." Revelation 3:20.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 19

There are many of you who appear as though you were in an agony to receive the Spirit of God, but you are not in a position to receive it. Why not receive it in His own way? Why not cast out debris out of your heart? Why not die to self? When you come in a position that you will have the truth, cost what it will, then you will appreciate the truth. But form is just as objectionable today as it was in the day when Christ was crucified. Are you in harmony with Jesus? Are you keeping God's law? Our precious Saviour has made an infinite sacrifice for every one of us. He wants to clothe you with the garments of His righteousness.4LtMs, Ms 7a, 1886, par. 20

Talk/Overcoming Self

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 19, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in TDG 209; CTr 126.

(Morning talk.)

Nahum 1:7. We have rich promises in the Word of God, if we only believe and trust in Him. We are in danger of trusting to our own poor human efforts, and not putting our trust in God. Every one who has any part to act in this great preparation of the work of God for these last days should come close to God. When God sends out His workers to do a special errand for Him, He has pledged Himself to be one with them, if they will be one with God. But if they draw apart from God, and try to do this work in their own strength, they will find difficulties and discouragements at every step. Here we have the promise that in working for the Lord He is by our right hand to help us and work with us.⁴*LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 1*

It would be the greatest folly in the world for any of us to take any of the credit to ourselves for any success we may have. The more humbly we walk with God, the more will He manifest Himself to us to help us. The Lord never designed to send out His servants to do a work for Him with all the opposition of Satan and evil angels against them unless He gives them divine help. The reason that we do not have greater success in the work is because we depend on our own efforts rather than upon the help God will give us. It is our privilege to feel our weakness, our unworthiness, and then claim the help that God has provided for us. We can take the Word in our distress, and while we feel the burden of souls upon us, and say, "Here, Lord, Thou hast promised, and I believe Thy Word."⁴*LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 2*

We must learn to go to our heavenly Father just as a child goes to its earthly parents. He says, "Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?" Matthew 7:9, 10.4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 3

We put the heavenly Father altogether too far away from us; we do not bring Him close into our lifework. If we will only have that faith that will rely upon the promises of God! Consider how Satan rules his agents and works through them to do his work of darkness and deception. It is your privilege to believe that Jesus will work more earnestly for you that you can do His work. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 4

While every one of God's workmen should cultivate his powers to the best of his ability, yet he should not trust in these powers. Make of yourselves everything that it is possible for you to make, and then trust the rest to God. Do not feel that the Lord should be under obligations to you because you have consented to do errands for Him; but you may feel that you are highly honored to have anything to do for God. To be in co-partnership with the world's Redeemer is a great thing. It is your privilege to say, "I cannot engage in this precious, solemn work unless Thou wilt go with me." You need not make feeling a criterion in this matter. But show simplicity of faith and trust and confidence in God, and believe that He does hear you, because He has pledged His word. Go right along talking with the Lord in your souls, as you travel, and Christ will go with you. Have an earnestness, and press your prayers and petitions to the throne of God, believing that the Lord hears you. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 5

We are not half in earnest when we come to God in prayer. We have a form of petition, and many of us would be surprised should our prayers be answered. This unbelief does not please God. We want to come to Him, as a child to his earthly parent, and believe that the Lord hears us. The Lord cannot do any great thing for us because we come so self-sufficient, and we lift up ourselves as though we had done some great thing. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 6

We want to have higher and more exalted views of God. Our very life and character is to be hid with Christ in God, and our own peculiar tempers must be molded after the similitude of the character of Christ. If we abide in Christ, and Christ abides in us, the molding influence of the Spirit of God will be seen in our character, and then Satan cannot take advantage of these peculiar traits in our character to come in and lead us astray.4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 7

I am so glad we have a Saviour. When I wake up in the night seasons, it comes into my mind to praise the Lord, for He has given us a Saviour. And we want to look to our Saviour with praise and gratitude for what He has done for us. The evidence that we have that Jesus is at our right hand to help us is the cross of Calvary. Jesus hung there upon the cross, a bleeding victim, that we might have that grace and power that He could bestow upon us.4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 8

When you are opposed in your work, do not let self rise up as though you were grieved, but feel that you are grieved because Christ is wounded. Every day feel that your spirit is to assimilate to Christ's Spirit. Let your heart go out wherever you are in earnest supplication for help from God; and when your heart is filled with these earnest longings for Christ, His help and His love, Satan cannot come in to take possession of it, but angels of God are attracted around you. When you throw yourself right into the arms of Jesus, you will receive help and suggestions just at the very time when you need them, and you can stand and resist all the arguments that are brought against the truth.4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 9

But never take one jot of the glory to yourself on these occasions. It is God that has imbued your mind and helped you to withstand the power of opposition that has come against you, therefore, to God belongs the glory for every thought and effort that has helped to beat back the enemy.4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 10

If we were only hid with Christ in God, He would glorify His name through us, but it is because we exalt ourselves that God cannot work through us. Now shall we not learn right here today to love God and give Him the glory? Shall we come right to the foot of the cross? The lower we lie at the feet of Jesus, the more will we have to say of Jesus, and the less of self. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 11

All heaven is interested in the work of those who are to be saved in the kingdom of God. "Without Me," says Christ, "ye can do nothing." [John 15:5.] Therefore there is not one iota of glory that we can take to ourselves. Notwithstanding you may feel your weakness, yet you may link yourself to the mighty God. I know that I am nothing, but Jesus is mighty to save. I can do nothing, but Jesus can do great things. God wants me in the work, but my efforts will be useless without His help. Imagine just as strong as you please that you have linked your arm in with the mighty Leader and He will do great things for you. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 12

The constant cry of Israel was, "It is Moses that has done this," and they did not keep God in view. [Numbers 20:2-5.] God had a lesson to teach His people, and when Moses ventured to take the glory to himself, God showed the people that it was not Moses, but God who had done the work. At last came the word to Moses, "Thou shalt not go into the holy land." [Verse 12.] The Lord demonstrated to the Israelitish host whose hand it was that was leading them. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 13

When we feel our utter nothingness, it is then that Christ sees it is time for Him to give us His Spirit. He will clothe us with His salvation when we will give the whole credit and glory of the work to Him. The Lord help you, my dear brethren and sisters, to learn the precious lessons in the school of Christ. These lessons are meekness and lowliness of heart. Some never learn these lessons. They work and work in themselves, and they do not understand who is the source of their strength and power. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 14

I invite you to come into the school of Christ. Yoke up with the Master. He says, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." [Matthew 11:29.] Then you will not feel that you are carrying a heavy load for the Master, for He will carry it for you. He says, "My yoke is easy, and My burden is light." [Verse 30.] Then bring Jesus into your life, and you will see that you have the help of the Lord just as surely as Jesus has promised it. 4LtMs, Ms 8, 1886, par. 15

Sermon/Having Our Conversation in Heaven

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 24, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 1SAT 39-47.

(Sermon by Mrs. E. G. White.)

1 Peter 1:13-16. The apostle here gives instruction for them to gird up the loins of their minds. Then we are to have special care over the thoughts of the mind. We are not to allow our minds to be diverted and allured by different things, because there is something more important for us. If we would allow the mind to take its natural turn, it might dwell upon unimportant things and we receive no benefit thereby. Here is presented before us the one great event—the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when the graves are to be opened and the dead be raised, and we are to be changed. This event should fill our mind and crowd out everything else. And we want to make the most of the privileges and opportunities we have to prepare for the future immortal life.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 1

The truth of God has taken us out of the quarry of the world to fit us up for the heavenly temple of God. We may look upon one another and think, There is a great work to be done for that brother and for that sister, but we may not take into consideration the work that is to be done for ourselves. And if Satan can get in among the people a spirit of criticism, then he is satisfied, for a root of bitterness springs up in these wherewith he will be satisfied. We are not all of the same character, but we are brought together in church capacity, and we count ourselves as children of God, and we talk of having a home in the city of God.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 2

Our faith is that if we perfect a Christian character, we shall be numbered as the family of God in the mansions that He has gone to prepare for us. Now our heavenly Father brings us together in church capacity, that we may gain in knowledge and be fitting up for the community of heaven. Well, some may say, all I want is that every one should see eye to eye. But there are those who want every one should see just as they do. They do not consider that they have traits of character that must be changed. Then, what is the work before us, in order to be ready to be among those who are waiting for their Lord to come in the clouds of heaven? It is for us to be in a position of humility before God. "Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." [Verse 13.]4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 3

The Lord has not placed before one individual the trade of becoming a church tinker, but we want individually to feel that we have a responsibility before God to be a blessing to every one with whom we associate. And we are to consider that every brother and sister is the purchase of the blood of Christ. Here we are, living stones out of the quarry, and we are to be chiseled and fitted for the New Jerusalem. Do not let any of us think that we are all right. As soon as we are taken out of the quarry, we have a work to do for ourselves. "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh" [Galatians 5:17], and we want to be considering those things which will give us solidity of character. We do not want to have a high estimate of ourselves, but we want to esteem others better than ourselves. We want that our souls shall be uplifted to God every moment for help for fear we shall fall. And while some are so diligent to look after others, they will forget the work there is for their own soul.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 4

We are to heed the exhortation of the apostle, that we are to be holy in all manner of conversation. And as we separate those things from us which will be a hindrance to our advancement, the Holy Spirit will come in. We want to be filled with the Spirit of Jesus; and if you are not closely connected with Christ, then the thoughts of your mind will be upon unimportant things. But if you are connected with Jesus, you will just as surely be a channel of light as Jesus is light, for Jesus has said to His followers, "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.]4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 5

Now we are by living faith to keep our eyes fixed upon the Author and Finisher of our faith. "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in our ignorance. But as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." [1 Peter 1:14, 15.] Before we became acquainted with Jesus, the conversation was upon the dress, and what shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and what shall we wear? And we were finding fault with one another. But as soon as we become acquainted with Christ, our conversation changes. Here we are, objects of His love. Has the change taken place in us, namely, have we passed from death unto life? Have we died indeed to self? Have we fastened our hearts and affections upon the great God? He is all light and power. 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 6

Every provision has been made for us that can be made by our precious Saviour, that we may have that abundant grace, so that we may overcome every defect in our character. And we cannot afford to satisfy ourselves in this life, but we want the fulness that is in Jesus, and we must train ourselves to talk of those things which will bring to us peace and light. And as we have our conversation upon heaven and heavenly things, the angels of God are all around us; and when we are, in our thoughts and with our hearts, drawing near to God, then He is drawing nigh to us, His love is in our hearts, and then we speak it from our lips. 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 7

It is not only our duty to train our minds upon heavenly things, but we are to talk of these things, for it is our duty to bind about our mind, to gird up the loins of our mind, and say, I will not think of these things. Then it is our duty to guard our conversation. 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 8

We would think from the shadow that many walk in that they had no Saviour. But I want to speak to those and say, Christ is risen! He is not in Joseph's new tomb, but He has arisen and has ascended up on high to make intercession for us. We have a risen Saviour interceding for us, and we must walk in harmony with God. He is seeking to "purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." [Titus 2:14.] If we seek with all our hearts to be obedient children, conforming our will to the will of God, then the work can go forward in us without interruption. Let us not forget for one moment that we are living for the future immortal life, and let us put away from us everything like complaint and faultfinding. Let our words, our conversation, reveal to the world that we have a hope that is big with immortality.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 9

We want that His will shall be our will. We do not want that our will shall be such that it will control all that [are] around us. One brother said to me, "Sister White, we must see eye to eye. Now I view matters in this light and my brethren in another light, and I cannot make them see everything as I do. Their habits and ways are altogether different from mine." "Thank God," said I, "brother, that there is only one like you in the world; for if we were all like you, we could not live in the world long, for there would be no harmony. Your brother's ways are just as precious to him as yours are to you."4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 10

God wants us to go through the mill. Here this man's sharp character must be burnished off, and here is one who has taken hold of the truth who has always been coarse in his conversation, and he must overcome that. This is the very thing the apostle means when he says, You must overcome in order to have a home in heaven. Jesus must be in my whole work to transform my character. We must accept the truth as it is in Jesus, and then how kind will we be to one another, how courteous, for this was the work of my Master. We shall see the precious mold of Jesus upon the character; and when we learn the precious lessons He has for us to learn, we will be like Jesus. "Come unto Me," says He, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." [Matthew 11:28, 29.]4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 11

Here you are with your variances and differences. "Come to Me," says He, "and learn of Me." Nine tenths of our trouble all comes from our esteeming ourselves too highly. But just as soon as you begin to look and see how many fruits you can find in others with whom we associate, then you will not be so ready to see their defects, and you will dwell upon the good in their character in place of their faults. In doing this, we bind them closer to our hearts by the firm cords of love.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 12

The question was asked me, "Sister White, why is it you have such control over your children and those you bring up?" The answer was given, "Gain their confidence and love, and you can have perfect control." Then let every member in the church be working in such a manner that he can gain the confidence of his brethren and sisters. Then the precious light that emanates from Jesus will be reflected upon his life and character. There is something meant in this expression, "Building up yourselves on the most holy faith." [Jude 20.] And whenever you shall have the consolation of the Spirit of God, you should feel an earnest desire to give that consolation to others. 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 13

If you have the precious light from heaven, talk about it. And have we not everything from Jesus to talk about? I could give you subjects that would put to the stretch your thoughts and mind, and yet there is a great deal more. The great plan of redemption is not half comprehended. If we could only understand the plan of salvation, we would be the happiest people upon the face of the earth. The truth that God has given us would so fill our minds that we could not talk of earthly things. And then it is almost impossible for you to explain to others the greatness of salvation that you feel in your own hearts. Jesus wants you to dwell upon this salvation. Our precious Saviour has died to bring us to God. He has suffered as our sacrifice, and all this was that we could stand freed from sin, cleansed from all iniquities. The cleansing blood of Christ is enough for us to talk about from morning until night, if you will only let your minds run in this direction. We want an intelligent faith. We want to understand how much of the blessing of God we can claim. Hear the Word of God on this point. And if He has given us His Son, "How shall He not also with Him freely give us all things?" [Romans 8:32.]4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 14

It is through the Son of God that we claim the promises that He has left on record for us. Here we have come out, and are keeping His commandments, because we see it is His requirement. We make ourselves peculiar from the world in this respect, and as we follow the best light we have in keeping His commandments, it is our privilege to claim His blessing, and then lay our whole burden upon Jesus Christ and claim by faith His rich salvation. While Satan will press upon your soul his darkness and tell you you cannot be saved, tell him, Jesus died for me; it was a whole sacrifice that was made in my behalf, and I claim a whole salvation. The Master would have me joyful, for He has said it. John 15. The Word of God declares plainly and positively, "Herein is My father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples ... these things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." [Verses 8, 11.] 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 15

Not that they should feel that they were under bondage to the law. This is My commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. We want to believe the words of Christ, for they are spirit and they are life. We want to take Him at His word. We want to walk right out upon the narrow plank of faith. We want to serve God with all the heart, might, mind, and strength, and then it is our privilege to claim to be children of God. 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 16

God wants to pour into your souls the light and glory of His presence. He wants that His joy shall remain in you and that your joy may be full, that when you meet with your brethren and sisters you can say, "Hear what the Lord has done for me. He has given me rich experience, that if I seek Him for His blessing, it will come." Then you begin to talk of Christ's coming, and the end of all things at hand, and how we are getting ready for His appearing. Then you will begin to talk of that heavenly city; you will talk of the tree of life, in the midst of the paradise of God, and you will talk of the King in His beauty, with His kingly crown, and of the riches that are to be given to the children of God; you will talk of that stream that goeth out from the throne of God, and then it would be, "Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me give Him glory." [Psalms 146:1; 103:1.] 4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 17

Why if we were such a people today, what impressions would we make upon the world! They would say that we have something that they have not, and they would begin to inquire, "What can I do to be as happy as that man?" My brethren and sisters, God is your strength, and He does not want you to go crippling along in this life. And when you enter the gate of the New Jerusalem, you will read over the gate, "Blessed are they that do His commandments." [Revelation 22:14.] He will welcome you and with His own hand place the crown upon the brow of all those who enter there. Then they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb in the kingdom of glory. Well, now, is there not inducement enough that God has set before us, so that we should think upon heavenly things? And the best of it is we do not enter the city as convicts, but as sons and daughters of the Most High God. The Father stands at the gate and welcomes every one to His bosom. There we shall show forth the matchless charms of our Redeemer. And the song will echo, and reecho through the courts of heaven, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." [Revelation 5:13.]4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 18

I ask you, is not this enough to talk about? Shall we go mourning, just as though God's wrath were about to break upon us, or shall we talk of that infinite love that has been brought to us by the infinite sacrifice of the Son of God. When you think of these things, and of the love of Jesus, you will love one another, and you cannot help it.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 19

Christ has manifested His interest in humanity. He says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." [Matthew 25:40.] We are dealing with Jesus in the person of His saints. Then be very careful how you wound the hearts of your brethren and sisters. We are almost home—pilgrims and strangers only a little longer. All heaven is interested in the salvation of men; and in harmony with them, we should be interested for those around us. We should be getting ready for the heavenly city.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 20

Oh, I praise God with all my soul, Jesus has died for us, and that He has wrought out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory that we shall have in that day. Then, brethren and sisters, be getting ready to move. Keep your mind upon the better country, even the heavenly. Learn to sing the song here upon this earth. The best song you can learn is to speak kindly to one another, for in heaven the business of the inhabitants is to please one another. Bring all of heaven into this life that you can. We have a living Jesus, and let us triumph in a living Saviour. He saves us with an everlasting salvation.4LtMs, Ms 9, 1886, par. 21

Sermon/Preparation for Christ's Coming

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 24, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 2SAT 26-30.

Mark 13:34-37. We see here that there are none excused from work. To every man He gave his work, therefore everyone has a work to do for the Master. And while that they are represented as waiting and watching, yet they are doing noble work for the master, so that the waiting, watching position of the people of God is not a position of inactivity.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 1

The impression has prevailed largely that the preacher who proclaims God's Word is the only one who has anything to do. And this is why there are so many weak churches in our land. If they would all realize that they have an individual work to do, then they would be building one another up in the most holy faith.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 2

The question is, What is the work that devolves upon us as individuals who are looking and watching for the Lord to come? Please read Matthew 24:43-48. Here is a special work to understand what kind of food is to be given to the flock of God. And while he that is made overseer of the flock of God shall open the Scriptures and give them the truth, then it is their duty to open the Scriptures to others.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 3

The question is asked, How shall we hear without a preacher? But when God has given His message to us through the instrumentality of men, then we are accountable for how we teach that message. It is a great and solemn truth that God has given us, and we should not confine this truth to ourselves, but we should be seeking in every way possible to present it to others that the Lord is coming. The end of this earth's history is to take place in a short time, and we indifferent and careless in regard to the matter? Why, we must be in that position that we will feel that we are accountable for the souls around us.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 4

And when we begin to feel that our interest is weakening, so that we have not a living connection with God, plead with God until you get it, for your heavenly Father will honor every effort you make in this direction. And while we profess to be in advance of the churches around us, we want to show our faith by our works. Here our eternal interests are involved, souls are at stake. And what would it profit us if we gain the whole world and lose our own souls?4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 5

We must show that we have a true and living faith in the Bible, and then we shall be represented as God's waiting, watching ones; and we are not only waiting and watching, but longing for His appearing. It is that which is called in the Word of God a glorious hope.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 6

We should be astonished at our own indifference when we should be all life and vivacity, could we see the work that is going on in heaven. Here is the work of our Intercessor; the great antitypical day of atonement and the work of judgment are going on with the dead, and how soon will they begin with the living, when every one of our cases will pass in review before God? And let it be understood by you that if you do not the work that God has given you, you will be weighed in the balances of the sanctuary and found wanting. To us who have this hope and faith, it is a dangerous thing to be putting off the day of God. Matthew 24:48.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 7

The one that has the true principle at heart will serve God every day as though it were his last. He will separate sin and iniquity from him and will keep before him the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And whosoever hath this hope in Him purifieth himself even as He is pure. If we get careless and think that we have many days of probation, then the enemy comes in and takes possession of us. And now, supposing that every one of us should be in that state of watchfulness that Christ requires us to be in, then in how much better condition would the church be. Why, every one would feel, Today I must do my work as for eternity. And they would feel like a faithful servant of Christ: I must bear my message with fidelity. And our faith will grow as we search the Scriptures. We will see light in His light and rejoice in the truth. We must keep Jesus ever before us and be waiting and watching for His coming; and then if we are ready, if our character is spotless, we shall be among the white-robed ones who shall stand around the throne of God.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 8

Jesus knew the influence it would have upon the human mind to be careless and indifferent in regard to His coming, and therefore He has expressly enjoined upon us to keep His coming in view. The end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 9

Your life here is to be a preparation for the future immortal life. And if this shall be in us, what an impression will it make upon the world. Why, they will say that people believe just as what they profess to believe, and in their lives they are doing thorough, noble work for Christ. A living church is a working church, and a working church is a living church.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 10

We must educate ourselves to be thinking and dwelling upon the great scenes of the judgment just before us; and then as we keep the scenes of the great day of God before us, when every thing will be revealed, it will have an effect upon our character.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 11

One brother said to me, "Sr. White, do you think the Lord will come in ten years?" "What difference does it make to you whether He shall come in two, four, or ten years?" "Why," said he, "I think I would do differently in some things than I now do if I knew the Lord were to come in ten years." "What would you do?" said I. "Why," said he, "I would sell my property and begin to search the Word of God and try to warn the people and get them to prepare for His coming, and I would plead with God that I might be ready to meet Him." Then said I, "If you know that the Lord were not coming for twenty years, you would live differently."4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 12

Said he, "I think I would." Then said I, "You know your Master's will, and it is your duty to do just as though you knew that He were coming in twenty years." I opened the Scriptures and read to him what we have read this morning, and he was convicted that he should change his course, and he did change his course of action. Well now, how selfish was that expression that he would live a different life if he knew His Lord were to come in ten years. Why, Enoch walked with God 300 years, and this is a lesson for us, that we shall walk with God every day, and we are not safe unless we are waiting and watching. We must have an eye single to God's glory.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 13

When Satan tempts you to do evil, then say: I will not take the first step wrong, for it is registered in the books of heaven. Why, if I do this wrong I cannot lift up holy hands to God; I will be ashamed to lay my soul open before my Saviour. There are many who do wrong, then they have no courage to approach their Saviour, but what we want is to live with an eye singled to God's glory. Oh, if we can only be found ready when the Master comes, then He will say, "Child come up higher."4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 14

We have washed our character and made it white in the blood of the Lamb. We must have an intense anxiety to separate evil from us. If we lose heaven, we lose everything; and if we gain heaven, we gain everything. We will not only have eternal life in the kingdom of glory, but eternal riches for evermore. Therefore we should have a deep interest in these things. Why, the time is coming when the teachings of Christ will be made of none effect. From the minister in the desk you will hear: Peace, peace. There is to be a temporal millennium first before Christ will come. But what we want is the Bible.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 15

Look at Martin Luther. As he stood before the people, he cried out, "The Bible, the Bible is the foundation of our religion." And we want to search the Scriptures, praying the God of heaven to give us light upon it. And when these doctrines come pouring in upon us from every side, then we can say: The Bible and the Bible alone is the foundation of our religion. We want to believe that the Lord is coming in the clouds of heaven, and show our faith by our works, and be getting ready for His appearing.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 16

Well now, here we are little companies in different places getting ready for the coming of our Lord. You cannot have a minister with you in all these places, and then you want, every one of you, to pray the God of heaven to enlighten you so that you can be a help to one another, building up one another in the most holy faith. You must say, We will not keep the minister with us, but let him go out and enlighten others. But you can have Bible readings among yourselves and search the Scriptures and pray to God in faith, believing that He will answer you. 4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 17

Here in Malachi we read, "Then they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon His name." [Chapter 3:16.] It is represented as God's hearkening to their testimonies; and although you have no minister standing in the desk talking to you, yet you have angels of God that will minister unto you. And as you talk of the blessed hope and of the home in heaven, angels are right by your side. Why, we have enough in this hope to give us life and courage if we will only draw nearer to God. 4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 18

The eye of God is upon these scattered ones; and if there are only two or three of you together, the promise is: Where two or three are met together in My name, there am I in the midst of them. [Matthew 18:20.] And what does the Lord say in regard to these little companies? Why, He says, "They shall be Mine in that day when I make up My jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." [Malachi 3:17.] Now every one of us who will try to bring a healthful, reviving influence into the church by their works will be remembered in heaven, and He will give them a reward just as much as to the minister who stands in the desk. They are doing their work with fidelity, and they have a sense of the responsibility that rests upon them that they must labor for one another. 4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 19

And He says, "They will be Mine in that day when I make up My jewels." Well now, we want to be among the blessed in that day. It means something to be a Christian. Then let every one of us put the armor of righteousness on. We war not against [flesh and blood, but against] principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places. God sees you each. We need His power amid the moral darkness, and He will give it us. He does not mean that we shall fight this battle alone, but He has His angels right on the ground to fight for us; and when we do all we can, God will add His blessing to our efforts. His arm is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is His ear heavy that it cannot hear.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 20

Now when you meet together in your little churches where you are, then remember these words that have been spoken to you this morning, and let every one feel an earnestness to bring all the life and vivacity into that meeting that it is possible for them to bring. Pray to your heavenly Father as though you expected that He would hear you. Offer your testimonies as though you knew the God of heaven would listen and that they would be written down in the books of heaven. When you do this, your own souls will be kept alive; you will be strong in His strength, mighty in His power. You will see the work of God in your midst, and others will be added to your number to unite with you.4LtMs, Ms 10, 1886, par. 21

Sermon/Christ's Controversy With the Devil

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 25, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in CTr 216, 288. +^{NoteOne} or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

Luke 24:49-53, Acts 1:9-11. Here is the promise that the very same Jesus that ascended up into heaven should so come in like manner as He went into heaven. And we read that they returned to Jerusalem with great joy. Now this joy was not because they were parted from their Redeemer and they were to no more have His company upon the earth, but the joy was that that Saviour that went up into heaven would come again <in like manner as He ascended,> and they should see Him. As He ascended, His hands were stretched out in blessing <upon> His disciples, as they stood gazing at Him <in the heavens to catch the last sight of their ascending Lord.> Floating down from the clouds come these words, "Lo I am with you even unto the end of the world." [Matthew 28:20.] 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 1

Now why should we not believe that the very same Jesus would so come in like manner as He went into heaven? Our Redeemer came into this world at His first advent, and He was not accepted by the children of men. And all <that> the world could endure of their Redeemer was the few years He was with them upon the earth, and they wanted to get rid of Him <almost as soon as His mission commenced.> John says, "The world knew Him not," and they would not accept Him because they knew Him not. [John 1:10, 11.] The question that every one of us has to settle is: Am I prepared for the coming of the Son of man? If you have accepted your Saviour by living faith, if you have repented of your sins, then you are in that position of acceptance with God that if Christ should come, you would meet Him in peace. 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 2

Now Christ will not come to our earth until He has sent a warning of His coming, and there is to be a wonderful scene that is to take place at His second advent. Adam and Eve transgressed the law of God, and because of their transgression they fell from their holy estate; and the precious Saviour consented that He would save the fallen race by becoming their substitute and surety. He would take their sin and guilt upon Himself and give man another trial, another opportunity. Now let us notice the steps that the Son of man had to take in order to carry out the plan of salvation. He steps down from the royal throne, lays aside His royal robes, clothes His divinity with humanity, and consents to come to this world. And it is right <here> in this world that was to be the field of battle where Christ and Satan, the prince of this earth, should here engage in conflict. And the question was here to be settled: How could God be just and true to His law and yet justify the sinner? This could only be done by the sacrifice of the Son of God. Not one precept of the law could be changed or altered to meet man in his fallen condition, and here is where Satan started in his rebellion to work against the law of Jehovah. And the question was raised: Is that law changeable in the slightest degree? As soon as the decision should be made in heaven that that law was changeable in the slightest particular, then there was a reflection cast upon God's wisdom and character, and the very fact that Christ came into our world and died man's sacrifice testifies to the immutability of the law of Jehovah. Supposing that every individual in the world should acknowledge that the rule of God's great moral standard was honorable, and obey it, they would not stand in the position they do today. God gave His rules, His statutes, and His laws to govern His family in heaven and in earth. Now Satan thought that in tempting Adam and Eve that he could have man as his agent with him to work against the law of God. And here was Christ the Saviour of the world who consented for our sakes to become poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich; and if Christ endured the test that was brought to bear one hundredfold greater than that which was brought upon Adam, then that law will stand forever. It was difficult to uproot Satan from the affection of the angels in heaven. He took the position that the law of God was against the heavenly intelligences, and here the warfare and controversy between Christ and Satan was started in heaven and is going on in the earth to the present day. 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 3

This controversy between Christ and Satan was witnessed not only by the heavenly intelligences, but by all the worlds that God had created. Here the power [arises] that claims to have the right to change times and laws; [it] is the man of sin. But does he have power to change times and laws? No. Because God's law is written in the tables of stone, engraven with His own finger, and placed in the temple of God in heaven, and that great moral standard will be the criterion that will judge every being upon the face of the earth, both dead and living. But here now Satan claims that his work while in heaven was for the benefit of the heavenly intelligences; and the mystery is: how did sin enter into our world? Just as soon as you can understand how sin came, then it will be proved that it is not sin. There is no excuse for sin. There is no sign of a reason for sin, but here the battle is to be fought right here upon this earth between Christ and the powers of darkness. Our Saviour as He stood on the banks of Jordan prays a petition such as angels never listened to before, and the heavens were opened and the glory of God like a dove of burnished gold encircled the Son of God, and from the highest Heaven the voice is heard, saying, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." [Matthew 3:16, 17.] 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 4

It was because God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son a sacrifice for man. And the testimony that is borne from Heaven is, Ye are accepted in the beloved. Why, the sin of our first parents cut off all earth from heaven and separated man from God. But Christ, the Son of God, has come to be our surety, our substitute, and through Him the heavens are opened, the gates are ajar, and light will come to the children of men. And the praise that may go up from the children of God enters into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. No longer can we say that there is a separation, that we cannot approach our God, for we can draw near to Him through Jesus Christ. The long human arm of Christ encircles the race while with His divine arm He grasps the throne of the Infinite, and thus He unites earth with heaven. He was the ladder which Jacob saw, the base of which rested upon the earth, while the topmost round reached into the highest heaven. And here is the connection between God and man, and heaven and earth. Jacob saw angels of God ascending and descending this ladder of shining brightness, and God was above it. 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 5

It was impossible for man on his own account to meet the requirements of the law of God, and keep it. And here Heaven has furnished help to be with us in every temptation, and this help is Jesus. And while that Christ went into the wilderness of temptation to bear the severest temptations, He was tempted in all points as Adam was tempted, and He passed over the very ground where Adam stumbled and fell. Adam failed in obedience to God's commandments. Christ now is to stand where Adam stood, bearing humanity, and to overcome in behalf of the race where Adam fell. And Christ withstood the test on every point; He resisted on the point of appetite. He overcame the enemy; He was tempted upon the point of ambition, and presumption, and He overcame the enemy on these points. And here the great temptation of the attractions and allurements of the world that would be presented to man was presented to Christ; if He would only worship Satan, the whole world should be his. Here are the great leading temptations wherewith man will be beset. And the Saviour of the world overcame and obtained the victory on every point, and in this He redeemed Adam's disgraceful fall.⁴*LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 6*

Why, God saw that it was impossible for man to overcome in his own behalf. He had not moral power, but here is the divine Son of God come to bring to man moral power, to unite with man's human effort, that man might be a conqueror in the name and strength of Jesus Christ. Now these temptations will be presented to us as they were presented to the Son of God. It will be upon the point of appetite that Satan will work to overthrow the race. And we see what victories he gains upon the human family. We see through the indulgence of appetite that the moral powers are debased. Here are the precious talents and mental powers enfeebled through the indulgences of the appetite. You will hear those that have given up their God-given manhood declare: I cannot overcome the habit of using tobacco and liquor. They have sacrificed their God-given manhood to a lustful appetite. Do they forget that our Saviour came into the world and was in the wilderness of temptation 40 days and 40 nights bearing the test of temptation upon the point of appetite in order to give us light? Had Christ yielded upon a single point and had not overcome, then you could say: I cannot overcome. But here Christ fought the battle with the power of darkness, and He came off victorious, saying to every son and daughter of Adam, You may overcome in your own behalf, on your own account, through Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 7

The work of temptation is to be brought right into our lives here upon this earth, and we are to regain the image of God which has been destroyed because of sin. Jesus has made it possible that you can be transformed to the divine image, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. But here we see that the power of Satan is opened upon the Son of God every day of His ministry here upon the earth. All Heaven is watching the controversy, how it is going on. Here upon the earth Satan stirs up the enmity that is in the human mind to resist the salvation that has been brought to them at such an infinite cost. He was the light of the world, and yet the world knew Him not. He created the world, and yet the world would not acknowledge Him. But when His life was sought for, the Majesty of heaven had to go from place to place; Heaven marked this. And He was despised and rejected of men; He was mocked at, reviled; but when He was reviled, He reviled not again. But Satan did not stop his persecutions until Christ hung upon the cross of Calvary. All heaven and all the worlds God had created were watching the controversy; would Christ carry out the plan He had undertaken, to lift man from the pit of sin, that he might stand with Him upon His throne? The enmity of Satan stirred up the men to cry: Crucify Him, crucify Him, and release unto us Barabbas. All this was taken notice of by the heavenly angels. And upon the cross, as the Son of God cried out, "It is finished," then the plan of salvation had been carried out for the fallen race. [John 19:30.] Why, the angels hid their faces from the sight when they saw the Majesty of heaven in His dying agony. The sun refused to shine, and the very earth groaned out in agony as it witnessed its dying Author. The rocks were rent, and the horrors of the darkness covered the earth. And those who saw the darkness declared that it was the Son of God that had been put to death.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 8

Then the Saviour of the world was laid in Joseph's new tomb, but the angels of God were watching that tomb. The Roman guard were also keeping their weary watch around that tomb. But how feeble was the power of man when God sent His angel to work for His Son. The mighty angel from glory clothed with the panoply of Heaven pierces the darkness and rolls the stone away. Why, the Roman guard could no more endure the light of that angel; they fell like dead men to the ground. But they had seen the mighty glory of the angel; they had seen Jesus walk forth from the tomb as a mighty conqueror. The angels of God had prostrated themselves before Him in adoration; and while the Roman guard was hired to testify to a lie, yet there was evidence on the back of this that no one need be deceived. 4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 9

When Christ arose, a multitude of captives came forth with Him from their graves and went into the city to testify that Christ has risen, and we are risen with Him. Thus the crucifixion and resurrection of the Son of God testified that the law of God was immutable, unchangeable. The great rebel was uprooted from the thoughts of every one as they saw Christ's resurrection; the question was settled that the law of God was immutable and covered all that were in heaven and in earth, and all the created intelligences. Christ was with His disciples 40 days and 40 nights and then, in my text, it says He was taken up from them into heaven; and the multitude of captives were with Him; and a multitude of the heavenly host was around Him; and as they approached the city of God, the angel that was accompanying Him said, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye ever lasting doors, that the King of glory may come in." And the sentinels ask, "Who is this King of glory?" And the answer comes back with music rolling up to the gates of heaven, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in." And again the question comes, "Who is this King of glory? The Lord of Hosts, the Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in." [Psalm 24:7-9.] And the heavenly train passes within the gates of the city; and while the angels are about to worship Him, He waves them back, Not yet; He must hear from the lips of the Father that the sacrifice is accepted. And then He has a request to make, and that request is that "those that Thou hast given Me shall be with Me where I am." [John 17:24.] He does not forget those who are struggling with the temptations of the enemy upon earth: "They must be with Me where I am." And the answer comes back from the God of heaven, "And let all the angels of God worship Him."

[Hebrews 1:6.] And there the song echoes and reechoes through the courts of heaven, “Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory.” [Revelation 5:12.]4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 10

Now this Saviour is our intercessor, making an atonement for us before the Father. “If we sin we have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous.” [1 John 2:1.] And that precious Saviour is coming again. Many spiritualize this second coming all away. But the very same Jesus that ascended up into heaven, the angels said He would come in like manner. Those eyes will behold Him in His beauty as He comes to this earth, and those who have waited for Him and loved Him He will crown with glory, honor, immortality, eternal life. When He cometh the second time, it is [not] to wear the crown of thorns, it is not to have that old purple robe placed upon His divine form; the voices will not be raised, Crucify, Him, crucify Him, but there is a shout from the angelic host and from those who are waiting to receive Him, Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain. A divine conqueror. In the place of the crown of thorns, He will wear the crown of glory; in the place of that old kingly robe, that they put in mockery upon Him, He will wear a robe whiter than the whitest white. And these hands that were bruised with the cruel nails will shine like gold. His eyes are like a flame of fire to search creation through. And the righteous dead come forth from their graves, and they that are alive and remain are caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall they ever be with the Lord. And they will listen to the voice of Jesus, sweeter than any music that ever fell on mortal ear, Your warfare is accomplished, come ye blessed of My Father, enter into the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the earth.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 11

Now I want you should have this riveted in your mind that all this sacrifice of the Son of God was not to abolish the law of Jehovah, but to establish it. But while nearly all the world is making void the law of Jehovah, He will have a people that will keep His law. We want you to inquire that if that law has any claim upon you, what is now your position before God, tonight? God required obedience from our first parents, and because they did not render obedience to Him they fell from their estate. Now He requires obedience from every son and daughter that lives upon the face of the earth, and He will accept nothing less than perfect obedience from every one of us. All the false ideas that are held against God and His law the people are willing to accept, but it is because the human mind chooses fables rather than the truth of God. They want an easier way than that to resist evil and to be obedient to God's requirements.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 12

An infinite sacrifice was paid in your behalf, and we want to know now what are you willing to do for Jesus. Are you willing to give all there is of you to Him? your mental powers and ability and every organ of the body? You have been bought with an infinite price, ye are not your own, and then will you give to God all that which He has purchased with His own blood? Or will you draw back and say, I cannot, oh, I cannot lift the cross of Christ. But you must lift that cross, and in lifting it, it lifts you—this the pledge to you of everlasting life. We are not to confer with flesh and blood, but we are to inquire what saith the Lord? What does Jesus require of me? And as Christ denied self and sacrificed at every step, so must we if we would sit with Him upon His throne. And then what do we get? Everlasting life, an eternal weight of glory. The streets are all of pure gold, like transparent glass; and there is the tree of life whose leaves are for the healing of the nation. Everything is lovely; there is no sickness, no sorrow, no pain, no death there; but our life there will measure with the life of God.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 13

And we inquire how is it that we can turn away from this great inducement for the things of this life? Paul inquires, Who has bewitched you? [Galatians 3:1.] It is the bewitching power of Satan that has so eclipsed the Word that the mind takes in only the things of time and sense. I must have eternal life, cost what it may. I must be on the Lord's side if the whole world is against me. I will not stand with the great rebel who commenced his work in heaven and is working against God's law. I will stand under the bloodstained banner of Prince Immanuel and at last will hear Him say: Ye have kept My Father's commandments. Blessed are they that do His commandments, for they shall have right to the Tree of life and shall enter in through the gates into the city.4LtMs, Ms 11, 1886, par. 14

Talk/The Christian Brotherhood

Grimsby, England

September 22, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in TDG 274; 2MR 145.

(Morning talk by Mrs. E. G. White.)

“We know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.” 1 John 3:14. Also 1 John 3:9-11, 16.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 1

I have been thinking how little we appreciate the decided declaration of the Word of God to us in regard to our relation with each other. There is that selfishness in the human heart that centers our thoughts upon ourselves; and even those who seem to have a connection with God, we are pained sometimes to see how much of their thoughts are centered upon themselves, not seeing nor sensing the needs of others. We are connected together as in the great web of humanity, and in all our associations with one another we should seek to have the mind of Christ. To close the eyes to the needy and perishing, to leave sinners unwarned, and by indifference and selfishness tempt them to say, No man careth for my soul, is to dishonor God and bring reproach upon the cause of God. Our work is to build up one another in the most holy faith.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 2

If there is not that perfect harmony existing between us, we should not feel that we ourselves are not at all to blame in the matter. If another's thoughts and feelings are not in the same channel as our own, we should not feel that they are all wrong and we are right. We want to constantly keep the mind at the right point, to answer the prayer of Christ in John 17:21-23. We want to know what is the yoke Christ bids us take, and the burdens we are to carry at this time, and constantly seek in kindness and love to show our brother that we have an interest in him and bring love into our actions day by day. This is the gold tried in the fire—faith and love. If we see one in error on any point, we should not pass along and say nothing, but we must try to bring him out from darkness into light. We must guard each other's interests as we do our own. We do not value the soul as we should. We ought to be united in one great brotherhood and be in that place where we can bear with the faults of one another with all longsuffering and meekness and seek to bear one another's burdens. Ephesians 5:1, 2.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 3

Well, you say this is the work of the minister. But it is also the work of each of us. We are not to associate with one another with long faces, and cherishing feelings of gloominess and despondency. No; this is not religion. True religion brings joy into the soul. It is the living outflow of the heart to give praise and glory to Jesus. If we have a loving Jesus abiding in the heart by faith, that love will flow out to others; and if a brother is looking upon the dark side, we will look upon the bright side and talk courage to him, and thus we are helping him out of the slough of despondency. We know Satan is working in every way possible to put discouragement upon the human soul. What shall we do? We want to put away all sadness, all gloom, all discouragement, and trust in Jesus. 4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 4

The greatest trial I have had for years is, when the Lord has given me some testimony for my brethren, to have them say, Who has been telling Sister White about this? Well, the very thought shows that they are not right before God. When Nathan was sent to show David his sin, David never thinks that he is speaking of him and so passes judgment upon the man; and when Nathan had received the judgment, he said unto David, "Thou art the man!" [2 Samuel 12:7.] By this we can see how judgment is passed upon another. Had David realized that Nathan was speaking of him, how different would have been his judgment. 4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 5

Now God wants us to be united as one family. Do we want to be one of the family in heaven? If we do, we want to be looking out for one another's interests here. If you wound the hand of one of your brethren, you wound the hand of Christ. And you cannot afford to do this. We want, while we are together at this meeting, to have a true sense of what religion is. The plant of love is a very tender plant and must be cultivated. Some are about to speak harsh things; and when they have wounded another, they say, "You must not think too much of this; it is only my way." If they had said, "I am a man of a very coarse spirit; and if my coarse way has wounded you, I want you to forgive me," how much better it would have been than to have tried to justify themselves and say, "I am very firm, and when I speak hastily it is only my way."4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 6

Shall we have our own way or God's way? This is why there are so many church difficulties. Every one wants his own way and thinks this is best. Now God wants us to have love in our families; but when these envious thoughts come up in the mind and are cherished there, they lead to impure actions, and you cannot be clear if you have these feelings against your brethren. Well now, we don't want this spirit at all.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 7

If you feel discouraged, never let a word escape your lips, because you are casting a shadow upon another, and they become discouraged. I have had discouragements upon me until it seemed it would press me into the very earth. Well, God gave me discouragements, but I made up my mind that no one should know of them, and I determined not to cast a shadow upon the pathway of another. Every one has their trials best known to themselves.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 8

When we see individuals jealous of one another, we know they will never reach heaven, for there will be nothing of the kind there; but we must have the similitude of Christ in the heart right at home. We can have a little heaven right here on earth if we will; and we must have a tenderness for one another. Well, do you carry this to an extreme in the family, and when any one speaks to you of the errors of another, do you let your spirit rise up against them? If so, the plant of love is crushed.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 9

Now my brethren, we want true religion, and we want to bring it into the household. Like Abraham, you want to manifest it toward your children. You do not want to fly at them when they have done wrong and shake them, but you want to talk to them of Jesus and try to educate them in the right way. Your first ministerial field is to guard and train your children, taking care of the little garden God has given you; and when you educate and train these children, then you have done a work that God will bless. We want to bring the principles of love into our home life and work there. Are we educating our children to keep the Sabbath? Are we giving attention to them? Do we expect God will give them a home in heaven? There is a great deal more work for us than we imagine, and there are duties right before us that we are neglecting. We want to take up these duties right next to us; and when we can present to the world a well-disciplined family, then we present the greatest proof to the world that we can present to show that we are Christians. Brethren, if ever there were a people who ought to try to bring everything into harmony, it is those who are waiting for the coming of the Son of man.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 10

Well now, there is much more I wanted to say, but I have said enough. I don't want to crowd the mind with too many things. Brethren, do not look at others, but go to work for yourselves and see the duties you have to do at your home, and in the church, and not be in the same position as was David. But let us throw open the door of the heart and let Jesus in, and love one another as Christ has loved us. And let us consider that we are woven together in the great web of humanity. Let us be growing an holy temple to God, and we may have the light and love of God. I want to see the faces of this assembly here shining with the love of God, and I know in order to have it we must begin to attend to neglected duties. We want to be in that position that the sweet love of God is abiding in the heart, and if abiding there you cannot keep it secret; it will be springing out just as the water from a fountain. You put your hand over the fountainhead, but you cannot stop its flowing; and so it will be with us.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 11

When I think of the family above, and that we can be fitting for it here, I feel that we must improve every opportunity. Why, Jesus will fashion you just as the clay is fashioned in the hands of the potter if you will let Him. You will find love, joy, and sympathy; and everything appears in perfection. That is what we want. Perfection of character. But you are not to do it yourself. Heaven is open before us. Bring love right into your lifework here, and you will see of the workings of God.4LtMs, Ms 13, 1886, par. 12

Ms 15, 1886

Christian Integrity in the Ministry

Basel, Switzerland

1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 11MR 82-91.

I have been shown that in times past men have made grievous mistakes. Some who have stood in positions of sacred trust have sullied their integrity. They have not, in their individual responsibility, stood in moral power before God. Those who were not worthy have been flattered, while those who have stood fast for truth and for righteousness, because their ideas did not agree with those of their brethren, have been denounced, discredited, and misjudged. Evil has been imagined against them.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 1

Greatness without goodness is valueless. It is as a tinkling cymbal. The man who does not gather about him the rays of light that God has let shine upon his pathway will surely surround himself with the shadows of darkness. God designs that His people shall press closer and still closer to the light. Then they will go forward and upward.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 2

“Light is sown for the righteous, and truth for the upright in heart.” [Psalm 97:11.] There is altogether too little searching, with painstaking effort, for the truth as for hidden treasure. With hearts softened and subdued by the grace of God, the conscience quickened by habitual prayer and searching of the Scriptures, the whole soul may become familiar with heavenly truth. Such will stand firmly for the right because it is right. Pure and undefiled religion will be interwoven with the life practice. They will honor God, and God will honor them.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 3

I have been shown that there is a fault with us. We honor and flatter human beings, accepting their ideas and their judgment as the voice of God. We advocate their cause. But they are not always safe to follow. Their judgment is erring.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 4

God would have us ever refuse to plead against the truth. His frown is upon all that is false or unfair. This should be the position of every one who stands to minister in the service of his Master. For if one to whom God has entrusted holy responsibilities allows envy, evil surmising, prejudice, and jealousies to find place in the heart, he is guilty of breaking the law of God. And his words, his ideas, and his errors will extend just as far as his sphere of influence extends. God says to every man to whom He entrusts responsibilities, "Put not your trust in man, neither make flesh your arm." [Jeremiah 17:5.] Look to God. Trust in His infallible wisdom. Regard as a sin the practice so common, even among Seventh-day Adventists, of becoming the echo of any man, however lofty his position. Listen to the voice of the great Shepherd, and you will never be led astray. Search the Scriptures for yourself, and be braced for duty and for trial by the truth of God's Word. Let no friendship, no influence, no entreaty; let not the smiles, the confidence, or the rewards of any man induce you to swerve from the path in which the Lord would lead you. Let Christlike integrity and consistency control the actions of your life. The man who sits most at the feet of Jesus, and is taught by the Saviour's spirit, will be ready to cry out, "I am weak and unworthy, but Christ is my strength and my righteousness." 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 5

Godliness, sobriety, and consistency will characterize the life and example of every true Christian. The work which Christ is doing in the sanctuary above will engage the thoughts and be the burden of the conversation because by faith he has entered into the sanctuary. He is on earth, but his sympathies are in harmony with the work that Christ is doing in heaven. Christ is cleansing the heavenly sanctuary from the sins of the people, and it is the work of all who are laborers together with God to the cleansing the sanctuary of the soul from everything that is offensive to Him. Everything like evil surmising, envy, jealousy, enmity, and hatred will be put away; for such things grieve the Holy Spirit of God and put Christ to an open shame. Love of self will not exist, nor will any engaged in this work be puffed up. The example of Christ's life, the consistency of His character, will make his influence far reaching. He will be a living epistle, known and read of all men. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 6

“Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise, blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.” 1 Peter 3:8-12.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 7

It is not safe for us to open our minds and hearts to envy and evil speaking. The fruits of God’s Spirit are plainly specified, so that we need not entertain or cherish those attributes that proceed from the enemy of God and man. The false tongue beguiles the unwary, and makes an easy conquest of those who are not strengthened, stablished, and settled, having root in themselves. The atonement of Christ is to be the anchor of our hope and the Word of God a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. Then our words will not be of self, but of Christ and of the all-essential work for this time.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 8

With many there is but a very limited perusal of the Holy Scriptures. The truth is not dwelt upon, and the result is that it is not made the theme of conversation. It is made evident that Christ is not abiding in the heart. Our tongues should speak more of the matchless love of Jesus.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 9

[Romans 11:17-22 quoted.]4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 10

The Lord has shown me that as a people we must have a purer morality. There is among us a flippant reproduction of arguments that are the product of other brains than ours, while the man who first uttered them has not spent hours of earnest study each day in order to know the truth. In his self-sufficiency he has turned away from the truth unto fables. He has not poured out before God his earnest prayer that he might know the hidden mysteries of God’s Word, that he might present to the people things new and old, which by painstaking effort he has dug from the mine of truth.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 11

Mysteries which have been hidden for ages are to be revealed in these last days to humble people, who lean upon the arm of infinite power. Truth will be opened to the humble seeker, whose life is hid with Christ in God.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 12

God calls upon His people to be Christians in thought, in word, and in deed. Luther made the statement that religion is never so much in danger as among reverend men. I can say that many who handle the truth are not sanctified through the truth. They have not the faith that works by love and purifies the soul. They become accustomed to handling sacred things, and because of this, many handle the Word of God irreverently. They have not walked in the light, but have closed their eyes to light.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 13

This is an age of signal rejection of the grace God has purposed to bestow upon His people, that in the perils of the last days they may not be overcome by the prevailing iniquity and unite with the hostility of the world against God's remnant people. Under the cloak of Christianity and sanctification, far-spreading and manifest ungodliness will prevail to a terrible degree and will continue until Christ comes to be glorified in all them that believe. In the very courts of the temple, scenes will be enacted that few realize. God's people will be proved and tested, and He may discern "between him that serveth God, and him that serveth Him not." [Malachi 3:18.]4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 14

Vengeance will be executed against those who sit in the gate, deciding what the people should have and what they should not have. These take away the key of knowledge. They refuse to enter in themselves, and those that would enter they hinder. These bear not the seal of the living God. All who now occupy responsible positions should be solemnly and terribly afraid lest in this time they shall be found as unfaithful stewards.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 15

Satan has come down with great power, knowing that his time is short. The continued apostasy, the abounding iniquity, which chills the faith and constancy of many, should call the faithful ones to the front. Straight, clear, decided testimonies, freighted with light for the time, will be given. Truth, undimmed by the furnace, will shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day. The Spirit and power of the coming One will be imparted in large measure to those who are preparing to stand in the day of God, who are hastening the second advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To these faithful ones Christ gives special communications. He talks with them as He talked with His disciples before leaving them. The Spirit of truth will guide them into all truth. God has lines of communication with the world today. Through His appointed agencies, He speaks to the people He is purifying, warning and encouraging them. There are those who listen with open ears and quickened understanding for the words of reproof and encouragement addressed to them. But Satan is ever on the alert to make these words of counsel of none effect. He seeks to close every avenue through which people receive truth. Unto those that have shall more be given, but from those that have not, shall be taken away, even that which they have. If the ears are dull of hearing, if the eyes are closed to the light which God flashes into the pathway, the light previously received is so mingled with supposition, uncertainty, and darkness, that light cannot be distinguished from darkness. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 16

There are those whom we have loved in the faith who have turned from it and given heed to seducing spirits. "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us." 1 John 2:19. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 17

The love, the tender compassion, the marvelous condescension of Christ for His disciples is without a parallel. He made them the depositaries of sacred truth, as they could comprehend it. But He said to them, I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. [John 16:12.] Although Christ was with them, as their instructor, yet their former teaching had so molded their ideas and opinions that should Christ unfold the many things He longed to communicate, they would have misinterpreted His words. While He was with them, He sought to impress upon them the knowledge there was for them in the mysteries of the kingdom of God. He would have them see that it was an evidence of His love for Him to lift the veil of the future, and make them the depositaries of knowledge concerning events to come. But much He had told them had been dimly comprehended, and much would be forgotten. He told them that after His crucifixion and ascension the Holy Spirit would open many things to them and give them a better understanding of what He had tried to tell them. [Verse 13.] He would still continue to reveal sacred truth to them, and His Spirit would more fully impart truth to them. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 18

While Christ unfolded the iniquity and sorrow that must come to His disciples, the persecutions, and the trials they must bear, and the rejection of their testimony, He did not design that they should cloud their lives by looking on the dark side. He assured them that they would not be left alone, but be sustained by His Holy Spirit, which would guide them into all truth. “The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost,” He said, “whom the Father will send in My name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.” John 14:26. “I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will show you things to come.” John 16:12, 13. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 19

Here is a precious promise; the purposes and plans of God are to be opened to His disciples. What is a disciple?—A learner, ever learning. Coming events, of a solemn character, are opening before us, and God would not have any one of us think that in these last days there is no more that we need to know. This is a continual snare of Satan. He would not have us meet coming events without that special preparation which is essential to guide us through every difficulty. He would have all not stumbling their way along in ignorance, making self-conceit, self-esteem, self-confidence, take the place of true knowledge. The more satisfied any one is with himself and his present knowledge, the less earnestly and humbly will he seek to be guided into all truth. The less of the Holy Spirit of God he has, the more self-satisfied and complacent he will feel. He will not search earnestly and with the deepest interest to know more of truth. But unless he keeps pace with the Leader, who is guiding into all truth, he will be left behind, belated, blinded, confused, because he is not walking in the light. 4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 20

All who follow Christ will walk in the light as He is in the light. They will not then regard light with indifference, nor will they misapply the light, or stumble over it as did the Jews.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 21

A spurious light will be accepted in the place of truth by some who feel called upon to be expositors of the Scriptures, because of their calling or position. Extravagance, dishonesty, fraud, licentiousness are mingled with sacred things, until no difference is made between the sacred and the common. Many who claim to preach the Word contemplate some portions of Scripture truth, but do not apply it to the heart and character. They expatiate upon the plan of redemption, and upon the law of God, and become enthusiastic upon some of these glorious themes, but they take no personal interest in the matter. Christ is not brought into their lives. Can we then be surprised to hear of ministers falling under temptation and sin, disgracing the cause they were professedly advocating? Can we wonder that there are apostasies when men who urge conversion upon others are not themselves converted; when they commend to others the love of Christ, which does not glow in their own souls, preaching repentance which they themselves have not practiced, and faith which they have no experimental knowledge of, telling of a Saviour whom they have never known except by rumor? They are self-deceived men, not far from destruction. Pitiful indeed is their situation. All may seem peaceful to them, because the palsy of death is upon them.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 22

We are fully aware that dishonest men, immoral men, who preach the Word, are not always reprov'd and warn'd. They are not unmasked. They learn to hold the truth in unrighteousness and can tamper with it without a trembling of heart and rebuke of conscience. O that with pen and voice we might lead the people who claim to be the depositaries of sacred and eternal truth to feel the necessity of enthroning the Word of God in their heart, and bringing every thought, word, and action into subjection to Jesus Christ. It is a fearful responsibility to be in daily connection with the truth of God, telling others of eternal truth and yet be unsanctified through the truth.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 23

It is not safe to place men in the position God should occupy; for men cannot be trusted. If they do not constantly live as in the presence of God, if they do not walk humbly before God and their brethren, they will diverge almost imperceptibly, and by slight degrees, from the straight line of God's work. Trusting to their own wisdom, they will deceive themselves and their fellow men. Their ideas become so confused that they offer strange fire before the Lord.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 24

The Word of God is to be the man of our counsel. With pen and voice I proclaim to all who bear credentials, to all licentiates, to all colporteurs, and all canvassers, that the Bible, and the Bible only, studied on your knees, laid up in your heart, and practiced in your life, attended by the Holy Spirit's power, can be your safeguard. It alone can make you righteous and holy and keep you thus. Every human influence is weak and varying unless the truth of God's Word is brought home to the soul and placed upon the throne. Not till this is done will the heart be sanctified, purified, and made holy, a fountain out of which are the issues of life.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 25

Discourses that have little of Christ and His righteousness in them are given in the desk. They are Christless sermons. To preach in the demonstration of the Spirit is completely beyond the power of those who are without Christ. They are feeble, empty, and without nourishment. They have no Christ to carry with them in private life. They are full of boasting, of pride, of self-esteem, speaking evil of things of which they have no real knowledge. They manifest an impatience of everything that does not follow in their line. They will even scoff and mock at sacred things, because they do not see that spiritual things are spiritually discerned. They degrade themselves by perverting and falsifying truth.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 26

By His Holy Spirit, the Lord will demonstrate that His Word is the only thing that can make men right and keep them right. I have been shown that God's revealed truth alone can keep men in the path of humble obedience. Standard-bearers are falling round us, not only through death, but through the deceptions of Satan. All heaven is looking upon the remnant people of God, to see if they will make truth alone their shield and buckler. Unless the truth is presented as it is in Jesus, and is planted in the heart by the power of the Spirit of God, even ministers will be found drifting away from

Christ, away from piety, away from religious principle. They will become blind leaders of the blind.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 27

Our faith cannot be vested in any man. We need Christ's righteousness. We need Jesus ever by our side. He is our Rock. It is by His might that we conquer and by His righteousness that we are saved. When I see men exalted and praised, extolled as almost infallible, I know that there must come a terrible shaking. When God's lamp of life shines into the heart with clear and steady ray, darkness will instantly be dispelled. Every idol will be dethroned, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding will reign in the heart. Truth, precious truth, will be seen, appreciated, and obeyed. The standard will be elevated, and many will rally round it.4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 28

[EGW note, 1897:] (This writing, with other manuscript, came to me about ten days since from America; and as it seemed to meet the present state of things, I have had it copied and sent to the church in Adelaide.)4LtMs, Ms 15, 1886, par. 29

Labors in Italy

Torre Pellice, Italy

April 18, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 5MR 272-273.

We left Basel April 16 and arrived here safely and are all as well as usual. We were some wearied as it took us till Friday four o'clock to reach our destination. Our tickets took us by Milan, and we had the privilege of visiting the cathedral there. This is one of the greatest cathedrals in Europe. We saw some other interesting things.⁴*LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 1*

I spoke to the people here in Torre Pellice on Sabbath. I was so thankful for the blessing of the Lord that I felt and also those assembled felt it. We had a precious season. Today I go five miles out where Bro. A. C. Bourdeau has been laboring and speak at four o'clock. It commenced to rain soon after we arrived here and has rained ever since. The climate in Turin and Milan is much milder than in this place. There is plenty of snow on the Alps.⁴*LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 2*

April 22, the weather yesterday was very beautiful, but today it is cloudy again. Evening meetings are very taxing to me for I cannot sleep after speaking till midnight. Eld. Bourdeau and Bro. Bigleo went to Villar Pellice to fill the appointment given out for me. I was not able to speak, being unable to sleep after speaking at St. John's last night. But I will speak at St. John's again tomorrow night.⁴*LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 3*

The hall where they hold their meeting was packed full, and then there was a large number, from 100 to 200, who could not get in, so a Bro. Geymete preached to the crowd outdoors while Eld. A. C. Bourdeau to those inside. Thus two meetings were going on at the same time. This morning a peasant living near the hall presented Eld. A. C. B. with two quarts of shelled chestnuts as a token of her appreciation of his speaking to them. To them these are tokens of good. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 4

The people in attendance had come from the mountains where they are now taking their flocks and cattle to spend the summer. Many came miles to hear me speak last Sunday. I speak again to them next Sunday. If pleasant, I shall speak from the balcony or upper piazza outdoors, for it is impossible for the rooms to hold the people. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 5

I feel deeply for poor priest-bound Italy. We wish we had a tent here this very week, for it is the only way we can reach the people. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 6

April 23

Yesterday it was cloudy but did not rain. This morning it rains again. This morning for the first time W. C. White, Mary, and I walked out. In the afternoon we visited the Catholic church. They are celebrating the scenes of our Saviour's death, and what silly nonsense for men and women of sense. There are tall candles lit upon the altar, then there are smaller ones burning that are gradually extinguished at a given signal one at a time. The priests are in a room just back of the auditorium room chanting, in Latin I think, prayers, while the people are kneeling upon the benches in the auditorium. This chanting continues for two hours; then the last candle is extinguished, and there is seen standing before the door a crowd of boys of all sizes with little wooden instruments in their hands with which they keep up a deafening noise; it sounds like a rattle. These boys are not allowed to come in until a given signal; then the janitor, who has kept them back with a long stick, opens the curtains and lets them enter. There is a drum in this large room; and when this commences to beat, it is a signal for the children to make all the noise they can, and all in the house help in the tumult. This is to celebrate some feature in the crucifixion, but what part of it I cannot learn definitely. Some say it is to drown the voices of the mob who are crying, "Crucify Him, crucify Him." [Luke 23:21.] Eld. A. C. Bourdeau informs us that men of intelligence on a similar occasion kicked the benches, pounded the walls, and drummed on tin pans. And this they call religion. It is a relic of papacy brought with them from the darkest of the darkened ages of superstition and idolatry. The poor, deluded people deserve the pity of all who are in the light. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 7

In the evening we left here at seven o'clock to attend my appointment at St. John's. We had a good congregation of the better class of people than the previous evening. At both of these meetings there were some who understood English, and they listened with deep interest. I was made acquainted with some of them. I had great freedom in speaking. My text was Mark [9]:35-37. The Lord blessed me with His Holy Spirit. Some spoke to me and said they were highly gratified with the discourse. A teacher in the college thanked me for the benefit he had received. I think it was right that we came here, and we shall remain till the last of next week, and perhaps longer. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 8

Sabbath I will speak here in Torre Pellice. Sunday in Villar Pellice, Tuesday in St. John's. We cannot commence meetings till eight o'clock. We hold one hour or one and a half and then have three miles to ride home, so it is eleven before we can get to bed and one before I can let down and go to sleep. Nevertheless, I will do what I can to reach the people. I have a cold upon me now, but I shall pray and believe and work. I write some, but feel so much my want of sleep that I cannot do much. I wish I could sleep as others do, but I cannot and never expect to be able to do. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 9

Sr. Bourdeau enjoys this visit much. Sarah is not well. She will surely go as Edith did before long. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 10

I am so pleased to see the interest there is in these valleys to hear the truth, and I hope and pray that it may increase until the moral darkness shall be rolled back and heaven's light shall shine into minds and hearts which will reflect it to others. I never feel more deeply in earnest than when I am addressing these poor souls that have no tangible faith. Light is sown for the righteous and truth for the upright in heart. Praise the Lord, dear children, that you have the truth and that your feet are standing upon the true foundation, the eternal rock, that storm and tempest cannot move you. 4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 11

My soul is burdened for poor, benighted Italy. I weep and pray over the matter, begging for wisdom and the power of God, that He will help the laborers here, that the truth shall triumph, and that the work shall move on against the darkness and superstition and error. We cannot appreciate the truth only in contrast with error; with the dark background, false doctrines and error, the truth shines forth clear and connected, link after link, uniting in a perfect whole; it binds all that is good and true together and connects them with heaven.4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 12

Oh, what a vagueness of doctrines prevail in the so-called reform church of today whose first members sealed with their blood the clear and living faith in the truth for their time. The Reformers have ceased reforming. Men of mind, men of talent, sensible as far as everything else is concerned, are hundreds of years behind the truth which God has been in His plan unfolding. A general indefinite faith in the Bible is cherished, while they refuse new light and unfolding truth. These old forms and customs are the only religion they have. A far-back truth is all they will receive. New light, new obligations, an advance faith they will not receive and appropriate to themselves.4LtMs, Ms 15a, 1886, par. 13

Visit to Copenhagen

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 1886

Formerly Undated Ms 47a. See Lt 101, 1886. Portions of this manuscript are published in LDE 232; 6MR 143-144.

Since coming to Copenhagen I have been feeling much better healthwise. I have been enabled to walk twice a day the distance of one mile. I have been speaking in our morning meetings. Tuesday I spoke both morning and evening. We are situated in the fourth story of a boarding house. Directly opposite our windows is the City Botanical Garden. In this garden are many trees of every variety, and plants and flowers of every description. There are several large nursery buildings in the enclosure. There is an artificial lake and artificial hill where many rocks are gathered and classified. In this garden seats are arranged for the conveniences of visitors, and all may enter it that choose. 4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 1

W. C. White and I have walked over the grounds nearly every day. Just opposite this garden on one side is the hospital for invalids. The buildings are noble and well constructed. We have had very pleasant weather since we came here. Scarcely a cloud in the horizon and no rain. Just a short distance from this hotel is the barracks, and every day in the early morning the tramp, tramp of many feet is heard from the soldiers marching through the streets with their knapsacks and their guns over their shoulders. I think they go to the parade grounds for drill. 4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 2

Here are many things which make the place one of great attractiveness. There are many city parks nicely arranged, beautified with trees and flowers of every variety. There are artificial lakes with swans in them, and there are many seats prepared to accommodate visitors. The streets here are arranged upon a very liberal plan. The street which leads to our place of meeting is over 100 feet wide and is divided into seven parts with three rows of trees between them. The first is sidewalk, the second a place for carriages, this paved with stone; then comes a place for men on horseback; then a broad street for footmen; next another carriage way, and then the sidewalk. This is all grand, safe, and convenient for all parties. But I look away from this in imagination to that city whose builder and maker is God, and whose broad streets are of pure gold, as it were transparent glass. And He showed me a pure river of water of life clear as crystal proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life which bear twelve manner of fruits and yielded her fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nation. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 3

W. C. White, Eld. Brorson, and I visited the tower that stands at one end of a large church. This tower is so constructed that in the place of stairs to ascend there is a broad street paved with stone, and it winds round and round, ascending gradually as it rises nine stories high. We went to the very top and obtained an extensive view of the city, and of the surrounding cities and islands. I did not take great pleasure in looking down from such a dizzy height. I was told that Peter the Great and Frederick the Fourth with horse and carriage rode to the top of this tower, but they could not have ridden clear to the top because there are three sets of stairs before you enter the top, but horse and carriage could without any difficulty go to the last story where the stairs commence.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 4

It is said that while looking down from this dizzy height Peter the Great addressed Frederick in these words: "Which of us has soldiers who would prove their fidelity by throwing themselves down from here if the king told them to do so?" King Frederick answered [he could not say] that he had any soldier that would do this; but he could say that he was not afraid to sleep in the house of the poorest subject in his kingdom. Noble man who could give such a noble answer!4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 5

I cannot express to you how much at times I long for retirement. Especially is this the case when I am in a large, noisy city like this. The noise of carriages on the stone pavements makes it difficult at times for common conversation to be heard. When upon the streets, the clatter of wooden shoes, people coming and constantly on foot, the baby carriages, women and men and boys wheeling their handcarts, screeching out to the top of their voices their goods for merchandise, and the noisy heavy carriages are so confusing you scarcely know where you are. Ah, well, all this will have an end!4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 6

My heart is filled with joy at the thought Jesus is coming. I long to hear the sound of the last trump and see the righteous dead come forth to immortal life. Then we that are alive shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, caught up with them to meet our Lord in the air, and so forever be with our Lord.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 7

We see that everything here in Copenhagen has been arranged upon a broad plan. Large means must have been expended to place things in the condition of so great perfection. There is a Greek church, the dome of which is covered with gold. Its appearance glistening in the rays of the setting sun presents a splendid picture. The view from our windows is very fine—large and expensive buildings, domes, spires, and noble trees of every variety, making it look like a forest in the very heart of the city. As I looked over the city from the high tower, and then contemplated the scene which must take place at the second advent of our Lord in the clouds of heaven, it almost made me shudder. He will come with power and glory, with the speed of the lightning flash, as a thief in the night. Every strong bolt and fancied secured fastenings are shaken open by the mighty earthquake, and the trumpet sounds. Oh, what terror, what shrieks of agony will come from human lips that have mocked and derided every overture of mercy from God's messengers. But there are waiting, watching ones. They are not surprised as those in unbelief, as those in the days of Noah. They did believe the message of old, and they did prepare for the event.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 8

I think of this city given to beer drinking, card playing, gambling, dancing, and revelries; and if they hear the last message of mercy, they mock the message and the messenger as in Noah's day, saying, "Where is the promise of His coming?" [2 Peter 3:4.] All things remain as they were from the beginning. When the message has fallen upon their ears of the threatened wrath of God upon the despisers of His mercy, they have mocked at the words of warning. Self-indulgence, love of pleasure, and sin so engross their minds that they care for none of these things. The dwellers in Copenhagen will be awakened only too late, as were the dwellers in Sodom. As they awoke in the morning of that eventful day when the retributive judgment of God fell upon the wicked city, they thought to commence a day of godless riot, when suddenly [from] the sun shining [in the] heavens were hurled balls of fire upon the doomed capital. What a scene of misery and screams of anguish and distress was that day of retributive judgment.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 9

So shall also the coming of the Son of man be; they will be eating and drinking, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage until the wrath of God falls upon the heads of the guilty without mixture of mercy. The world is rocked to sleep in the cradle of carnal security. Men and women hurrying to and fro upon their expeditions of pleasure without a thought of the all-important subject of the Lord's coming.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 10

Have they not been taught by the ministers that the second coming of Christ is only spiritual? The literal appearing of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven has been discarded by the largest class of the religious world. The prophetic figures which trace down the history of events have had no interest to them. Christ at the door has been denounced as fanaticism and heresy. The lovers of pleasure were intent upon their own amusement; the moneymaker was seeking wealth; and all saying, Where is the promise of His coming? Skepticism and that which is called science have undermined the faith to a large degree of the Christian world in their Bibles. Error and fables are gladly accepted, that they may pursue the path of self-indulgence and be not alarmed, for they are striving not to retain God in their knowledge. They say tomorrow will be as this day and much more abundant. But in the midst of their unbelief and godless pleasure, the shout of the archangel and the trump of God are heard. The fatal deception is broken at last, and they find themselves weighed in the balance and found wanting.4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 11

Behold I come as a thief. Just when the world has been rocked to sleep by the peace and safety cry of the professed watchman, just when the scoffer is uttering his bold challenge, Where is the promise of His coming; when everything in our world is busy activity immersed in selfish ambition for gain, Jesus comes as a thief in the night. Watch therefore for the solemn events predicted. The believing, watching ones are addressed, "Yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, for when they shall cry, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them and they shall not escape." [1 Thessalonians 5:2, 3.]⁴*LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 12*

These grand and magnificent buildings will be shaken down. The guilty worshipers will be buried in their ruins. Jesus has pronounced a blessing upon the waiting, watching ones who are faithful sentinels, who are anticipating the Lord's coming. They are ever of the watchtower faithfully doing their work, having on the whole armor of God. Christ sees the danger of even those who believe the truth, becoming careless and losing the spirit of watchfulness. He addresses to His own followers the solemn words, "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, at midnight, at the cockcrowing or in the morning, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." [Mark 13:35, 36.] Eternal vigilance is our only safety. I feel deeply in earnest at this time and have some sense of the dangers that threaten the church lest many of its members will not be found in a waiting, watching, expectant attitude. We are exhorted by the apostle to not only be looking for, but hastening unto the day of God. The coming of Christ is called the blessed hope, and the blessing is pronounced upon him that watcheth and keepeth his garments. The watching and waiting ones will be more active in doing and working in the vineyard of the Lord. They will be strictly temperate in eating and dressing. Humility and simplicity will be expressed in all their acts. In harmony with the truth which they believe, those who are watching more nobly and truly are the ones who are working with the greatest vigilance to arouse souls to their danger. All heaven is in busy activity preparing for the great day of God's judgment, which is the days of Zion's deliverance, and shall not the waiting ones by word and action proclaim to all the end of all things is at hand: Be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh. Be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. 4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 13

We must keep faithful watch over the affections of the heart and character. We must maintain a spotless life and be jealous of ourselves lest the least sin shall defile our character. We cannot be too careful in our preparation that we may meet our Lord in peace. All our powers should be taxed to the utmost to understand the Word of God; to listen to His voice of warnings and counsel. We should seek earnestly to adorn the soul temple in a manner to please our Lord. Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning the plaiting of the hair, the wearing of gold, the putting on of apparel, but the hidden man of the heart in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. The little while of tarrying is almost ended; the pilgrims and strangers here upon the earth who are seeking a better, even a heavenly, country are almost home. Are we then looking and waiting to see the King in His beauty? We now should be earnestly getting ready. We have great and holy truths, but they will be of no benefit to us if we do not bring them into our practical life and if our hearts are not sanctified through the truth. The blessed hope of Christ's soon appearing should impart to us new animation and give intensity to every Christian grace, strengthen our faith, increase our confidence and trust in God, quickening our zeal and earnest fervor. 4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 14

Since coming to Copenhagen, I have spoken twice at length to a full hall and they seemed deeply interested. I have spoken four times in the morning meetings, half an hour each time. These meetings seem to be as highly appreciated as in America, if we can judge from the testimonies borne. This morning I spoke with unusual freedom. A gentleman arose and said he lived in the country, and in visiting Copenhagen he had never found anything good in it, but he thanked God that he had come to this morning meeting. He had not visited Copenhagen for nine years, but he had found something this morning which made him thankful that he had come. He had heard the truth as he never heard it before, and it had made an impression upon him which he should never forget. He believed the time had come mentioned by the prophet when your sons and your daughters should prophesy. He said he wanted to be among the people of this faith. The wife of this man was in the meeting. He had bitterly opposed her, for she had been a believer for several years. After meeting closed his wife took my hand and in a most affectionate manner kissed me again and again and spoke in Danish, looking up to heaven. Sr. Matteson said she had read my writings, but never expected to see me, but the Lord had greatly blessed her in hearing the message from my lips. She seemed unwilling to let go my hand. Her feelings were deeply stirred. The position her husband had taken was a matter of unexpected blessing to her. 4LtMs, Ms 15b, 1886, par. 15

Sermon/The Privilege of Being a Christian

Grimsby, England

September 19, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 2SAT 31-38.

(Sermon by Mrs. E. G. White, Grimsby, England, Sept. 19, 1886)

1 John 3:1-3. Here the beloved disciple is trying to present before us the great love of God to fallen man. He cannot find language broad enough and deep enough to express this wondrous love, and he calls upon the world to behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God. How can we behold this love? By looking to the cross of Calvary. The light from the cross expresses the love God had for fallen man. John says, "Behold, what manner of love." Behold the Man of Calvary; behold Him who is equal with the Father; behold the Majesty of heaven; behold the King of glory. God's own dearly beloved Son—He gave Him, a freewill offering for us, and here we see the wonderful condescension of the Father. We dwell much upon the love of Christ, but we frequently lose sight of the love of the Father in giving His only beloved Son to die that we might live. We want to call your attention to the love of God for fallen man in that He did not withhold His only beloved Son, but gave Him as a freewill offering for us; and how much more will He not with Him freely give us all things?⁴*LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 1*

After the fall of Adam and Eve the race was plunged in hopeless misery, and it was then that this great plan of redemption was advanced. It was then the Son of God consented to leave His Father's throne, lay aside His royal crown, clothe Himself with humanity, take upon Him the nature of man, and become a man among men. He became a Man of sorrow and acquainted with grief; wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities. Then shall we not say with John, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God!"

[Verse 1.] Many in our world seem to think that to be a Christian is to step down very low, getting upon a very low level. But this is a very mistaken idea. What is it to be a Christian? It is to be like Christ. Who is Christ? The Son of the living God. He is the One who wrought out the plan of salvation for the fallen race. Every blessing we have comes through this Source, through Jesus Christ. Anyone who would entertain the idea that it is a great sacrifice to become a Christian should remember, when seated around the family board partaking of the bounties there, that all these blessings come from Jesus Christ. It was in consequence of sin that man was shut out from the throne of God, but Christ steps in and pays the price; and through His merits man is brought back in favor with God. 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 2

As Christ bowed upon Jordan's banks after His baptism, there was a bright light that descended like a dove of burnished gold and lighted upon Him, and from heaven was heard a voice, saying, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." [Matthew 3:16, 17.] We read over these words, but do not take in their significance. We do not seem to understand their value to us. They are stating to you that you are accepted in the Beloved. Christ with His long human arm encircles the fallen race, while with His divine arm He grasps the throne of the Almighty, thus uniting earth with heaven, and fallen, finite man with the Infinite God. And this earth, which was divorced from heaven, is again united with heaven. A communication is opened with heaven through Jesus Christ that man, who was fallen, is brought back again into favor with God. Here Jesus passed into the wilderness of temptation, and the trial is brought to bear upon Him one hundred times more trying than that brought upon Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. And will He endure the temptation? 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 3

Satan comes with his temptation upon the point of appetite, the same point upon which Adam stumbled and fell. Christ fasted forty days and forty nights. The race had degenerated and had been growing weaker and weaker. The Son of God saw it was impossible for man to overcome in his own behalf, and therefore He comes to our world and gives man divine power that he might obtain the victory. Here we see that Satan's first attempt was upon the point of appetite, and he seeks to overcome Him. But Christ was to pass over the ground where Adam fell and redeem his disgraceful fall. He met Satan every time with, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." [Matthew 4:4.] If human beings for whom Christ has died would take these words to heart and live them out in their lives, we would see a different state of things in our world today. There would be less selfishness, less love of the world, and more love for God. He has entrusted man with talents that he might carry the knowledge of the truth and of Christ to all nations in our land. If Adam and Eve had lived by every word that proceeded out of the mouth of God, they never would have fallen, never lost the right to the tree of life. All who will live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God now will be brought back to the Eden home.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 4

And now the question is, Will man fasten his thoughts upon the things of eternal interest and work in harmony with God? Is it any condescension on our part to accept the cup of salvation? To us it is no condescension to accept of the crucified and risen Saviour. Do we consider the sacrifice and take hold of the only chain let down from heaven for man to grasp? We answer, No; but it is the highest exaltation that can be placed upon us. Heaven we want, every one of us. You cannot afford to lose heaven. You cannot afford to have the gates of paradise closed to you.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 5

You want heaven, eternal life. Then what will you do in order to obtain it? You must be obedient to all of God's commandments. It is the only moral standard and rule that God has given for the use of His subjects. He has rules and statutes, and it is for man to obey them. It was because Adam and Eve did not obey that they lost the paradise of God. Now He says, "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." [Revelation 22:14.] Then there is something to gain; it is a right to the tree of life; a right to the tree that Adam and Eve were forbidden to partake of after their transgression. Now how much more study is given to what kind of hats to wear, and to the house, what shall I eat and what shall I drink, than to the things that pertain to the eternal interests and the salvation of the soul. These things will soon pass away.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 6

We want to seek with all the powers that God has given us to unfold the Scriptures to those who are in darkness. There is happiness, hope, and peace for the desponding. We cannot afford to give our God-given ability and devote it to the commonplace things of this earth. We want a faith that will grasp the promise set before us in the gospel. What if we should lose our soul? It would be better for us had we never been born. One soul is worth more than all the gold and silver that could be heaped up on this earth.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 7

Think of a world to perish because they will not give their attention to the things that are unseen. The things which are eternal do not seem to have any charm for them; it is the things of this earth that attract them. But where does the skill and knowledge you possess come from? Have you manufactured it? No, it comes from the God of heaven, and He will require it of you again. What have you done with the gift of reason God has given you? Have you studied the Scriptures and trusted your souls to the Master? We want to understand how to keep this house in order that we can serve God acceptably.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 8

We remember Calvary. We remember who endured temptation in the wilderness, faint, pale, and hungry on the field of battle that He might work out for man a glorious victory. And when we are tempted to indulge appetite at the expense of reason and health, we remember how Christ overcame Satan that man might become victor on his own account and in his own behalf. We want to bear these things in mind. You know not how soon any of you may be called to lie down on a bed of sickness and death. We want to know if you are ready? We want to know if you are seeking to purify yourselves soul and body from every spot and stain of sin? We want to know if you have a hope full of immortality?4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 9

I see matchless charms in Jesus. I never talk of any trials I cannot bear, or any self-sacrifice that I cannot make; I see One who died in my behalf, and He shall not die for me in vain. I will place myself in right relation to God, and I will have a right hold from above. I am not studying what the world will say of me, but my study is, Lord, how shall I please Thee? How shall I perform my mission in this world? How shall I save the precious souls around me? Here it says, "They shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." [Daniel 12:3.] I want the eternal weight of glory; I want to see Jesus who suffered and died a shameful death on the cross of Calvary; I want to cast my crown at His feet; and I want to touch the golden harp and fill all heaven with sweetest music.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 10

If we are overcomers at last, there are battles for us to fight, and we will find that the flesh warreth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh. It is for us to say which will triumph. But our carnal hearts will not submit to God's will, but refuse to obey. Christ said, "I have kept My Father's commandments" [John 15:10], and He is our example in all things. What shall we do when trials come? We must flee to the Mighty Helper. Christ never leaves us to fight these battles alone. He came into this world of darkness to fight with the prince of darkness, and when He cried out, "It is finished," there was joy in heaven. [John 19:30.] "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." [Hebrews 4:15.] Then what are we to do? Come to Christ as a child would to its earthly parents and believe that He will hear us. He says, If thy son asks bread, wilt thou give him a stone? and if he asks a fish, wilt thou give him a scorpion? [Luke 11:11, 12.]4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 11

We want to cultivate living faith in God. We want to have our eyes turned away from the attractions of this earth and centered upon heaven and heavenly things. We do not want the earth to intervene between us and God, but we want an eye single to the glory of God. We talk of heaven and of its blessing, and it would be a great loss to lose it. Well then, if it is so lovely, so desirable, bring it into this life; bring it into your families and educate your children not to live for this world, but for the future immortal life. You want to weave Jesus into their experience from their very childhood and teach them Jesus will help them to overcome their evil desires.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 12

I have been where I have had children of my own to educate, and I know how hard they have to struggle to gain the victory. I know how hard it was in times when Satan was tempting them to evil. We want a practical, living Jesus with us every day of our lives, and then we can educate and train our children, and peace will be in our house. God says, I know Abraham that he will command his household and his children after him. [Genesis 18:19.] And this is the work we want to teach parents to do in this age of the world, just like Abraham, to command their children and their household after them. God says, I know him that he will command his children and his household after him to keep the way of the Lord. Abraham knew God had commandments, and he would keep them. He knew God had a law, and he would obey it. He would not deviate from it himself nor allow his children to. 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 13

We don't want to make Jesus ashamed of us. There are many ways we can dishonor Christ, by the love of self, love of the world—what shall we eat and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?—when Christ has promised to provide for us if we will only put our trust in Him. But all this will pass away if you educate yourselves to wait upon Christ, and you can reflect light to all around you. Now in the place of talking of these things and dwelling upon them, turn your mind to the paradise of God and the riches and glory that are to be given to the saints of the Most High God; and if this is to be our home, why should we not talk about it? If you are to join the heavenly choir and sing the praise of God in heaven, why not learn to sing it here? You never can sing it there unless you learn it here. How much praise do you give to God? 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 14

Why not educate yourselves to talk of Jesus?—Him in whom our hope of eternal life is centered; Him who has shown so much love for us that He has given His life to redeem us. “Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God!” [1 John 3:1.] The world knows us not because it knew Him not. You see how the world treated Jesus; does it treat you any better than it did Jesus? If you have conformed your life to Jesus, you will have the privilege of being a light-bearer to the world. Why? Because you represent Him in character, you are saying, Behold Him. By precept and example you are representing Christ. And He is not ashamed to call you His brethren. I appreciate the favor of God more than all the praise that men or women could bestow upon me in this world. 4LtMs, Ms 16,

I love Jesus. I see in Him matchless charms. I hold up before you the Man of Calvary. I want you to become acquainted with Him; and if you bring Him into your daily life, let me tell you, you will lose sight of the little perplexities here. Jesus says, "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." [Matthew 11:28.] There is rest in Jesus. And if you see poor souls fretting and worrying, it is because they have not the yoke of Jesus on. Perhaps in that extra ruffle and that extra trimming they have neglected to let Jesus in. Says He, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." [Revelation 3:20.]4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 16

You can have a little heaven here below if you will only get your eye fixed upon God—not looking at Christ half the time and at the world the other half. When you live for God, He will put His everlasting arm beneath you, and then He says, "My yoke is easy and My burden is light." [Matthew 11:30.] Do you believe it? I can testify this is so. By my past experience I can testify that I would not have one trial less, one sorrow less, for Paul says, "These light afflictions which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but the things which are unseen." [2 Corinthians 4:17, 18.] We want to look at the things of eternal interest, that we may think seriously in regard to what use we have made of our reasoning powers, whether we have tried to strengthen them with idle things that we cannot take with us when we shall be caught up to meet Christ in the air.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 17

We want to learn the lesson that Christ has told us we must learn—meekness and lowliness of spirit. And we want to be fitting that we may have an abundant entrance into the city of God, that we may have a life that measures with the life of God. Everything compared with this is of no consequence compared with that which God has in store for us if we will only do His will.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 18

In the last days there are to be only two parties, the one on the right hand and the other on the left; and Christ says unto one, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me.” And they answer, When saw we Thee thus and ministered unto Thee? And Christ says, “Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me.” But to those on the left He says, “Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.” The first class had Christ interwoven into their character, and they were not conscious of anything they had done. “Come, ye blessed of My Father,” is the benediction, “inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.” 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 19

So we see Christ identifies His interests with fallen man. He turns to those on the left hand and says, “I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in: naked, and ye clothed Me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited Me not.” And when they ask Him, “When saw we Thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee?” the answer comes, “Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me.” Matthew 25:34-46. Not the greatest, but the least. Well now, we want to bring Christ into our everyday life. Those who had not fed the hungry or clothed the naked or visited the sick were not conscious of it. Why? Because they had educated and trained themselves in the school of self-indulgence, and the result was they lost heaven and the eternity of bliss which they might have had, had they devoted their powers to God. 4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 20

Has He given you power? Give it to Him. All your body and soul belongs to God; give it to Him. In the place of devoting all your time to the pleasures of this world, in eating and drinking and dressing, give it to God. And the light God has given you, use it to bring souls to God. Remember that Daniel says, “They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.” [Daniel 12:3.] Oh, say you, that belongs to the minister; I beg to be excused. It belongs to every disciple of Christ, however weak they are. You will be judged according to the light given you. You have taken Christ into your life to represent Him to the world. What we want is more of Jesus and less of self.4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 21

A little longer and we shall see the King in His beauty. The work will be over, and we shall hear the words, "Child, come up higher. Enter into the city and have a right to the tree of life, and behold the matchless charms of Jesus." Will you be there? Will the crown of glory be placed upon your brow? and will the white robe of righteousness be placed upon you? Shall we eat of the tree of life? God grant that we shall every one be there. You cannot afford to lose this. God bless you here tonight; and may God come into your souls and shine around you here; and may you walk in the light as He is in the light!4LtMs, Ms 16, 1886, par. 22

Sermon/Lessons From the Life of Abraham

NP

March 13, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 112; CTr 73, 75; 10MR 118-121.

March 13, 1886

(Sermon, Mrs. E. G. White,)

Genesis 12:1-4; Hebrews 11:8-10. It was not a small trial to Abraham to be called to leave his home and acquaintances and go into a land that he knew not. When he came into that land, he found that the Canaanites were there, and he would have all their idolatry to meet.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 1

This was a severe trial to Abraham's faith. He could not see any possession that he could claim as his own. But in his perplexity the God of heaven condescended to preach the gospel to him and show him the possession that he should have for an eternal inheritance.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 2

Abraham moved from place to place, as it seemed advisable for him, in order to obtain a support for his family, and his family was not small. His trained servants numbered more than 400. At every place where he pitched his tent, close beside it he erected an altar, so he worshiped God in every place where he was called to be. In thus doing he was training his family to love and fear God.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 3

When he had another trial in a severe famine that came in the land, and he moved down into Egypt, God gave him favor with the Egyptians, so that when he left there, he had more than when he went in.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 4

Now when God bade Abraham to leave his country and friends, he might have reasoned and questioned the purposes of God in this. But he showed that he had perfect confidence that God was leading him; he did not question whether it was a fertile, pleasant country, or whether or not he should have ease. He went at God's bidding. This is a lesson to every one of us. When duty seems to lead us contrary to our inclinations, we are to have faith in God.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 5

There are those who may be in favorable positions, as far as business is concerned, and in all the things of this life, but God may have a work for them to do elsewhere, a work that they could not do among their relatives and friends. The very position of ease, and the relatives who surround them, may prevent them from developing the very traits of character which God would have them develop. But God sees that to change their position, and to send them where their surroundings will be entirely different, will be the very best place for them to develop a character which will glorify Him.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 6

Every one, wherever he shall go, should carry the true principles of his religion with him. If sin, and forgetfulness of God, and idolatry exist in the places where he shall go, then is the time for him to show their true principles.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 7

When we set ourselves where all is convenience and ease, we do not feel so much the necessity of depending moment by moment upon God. God in His providence brings us into positions where we shall feel our necessity of His help and strength, and He loves to reveal Himself to us.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 8

We see the marked traits in Abraham's character when the strife commenced between the herdsmen, and Abraham said, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee. ... Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left." [Genesis 13:8, 9.] Lot saw the country near Sodom was most favorable for his worldly and temporal prosperity, and he chose that location. [Genesis 13:10-12 quoted.]4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 9

If Lot had manifested the same courtesy that Abraham had, he would have given him the choice. But Abraham did not take the position that he was superior to every one around him; he took a humble position. It was the right of Abraham to make his choice, and to be first, but he chose to be courteous in this matter. 4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 10

Lot, instead of inquiring whether this would be the most favorable for his morality and godliness, thought only of his worldly prosperity. But the time came when Lot was placed in a most trying position because of the wickedness of the inhabitants of Sodom. When Lot and his family were taken by those who came in to conquer Sodom and Gomorrah, Abraham went to deliver him from his captors. When the king of Sodom would have Abraham take some gifts of the spoils, he there again showed the true nobility of his character. He said he would not take so much as a thread or a shoe tie lest they should say, "I have made Abraham rich." [Genesis 14:23.] God had given to Abraham the promise that he should have great riches, and he would not have any one say that the wicked had given him the treasures he possessed. We see that every step with Abraham was one of faith. 4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 11

We read of visitors coming to Abraham as he was sitting in the door of his tent, and how did he receive them? These were angels of God, and one of them was no less than the Son of God. When these guests came up to his tent, they were strangers; but he observed the rules of true courtesy towards them. The Word of God tells us to "be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." [Hebrews 13:2.] Abraham did this. And when the heavenly guests made this known to Abraham, then they told him what was their purpose in regard to Sodom. The cry of distress and suffering had come up to the God of heaven, and He had come down to see if they had done altogether according to the cry of it, which was come up unto Him. And while Abraham was not in Sodom, was not connected with Sodom, yet we see that he had an intense interest that Sodom should not be destroyed if God could spare it. Genesis 18:20-22. In the next verse we are told that Abraham drew near and said (quote verse 23). 4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 12

While Abraham had a true sense of humility which every child of God should possess, yet he had an intense interest in the souls of sinners. He is represented as drawing near. He steps close to those heavenly messengers and pleads with them as a child would plead with his parents. He remembers that Lot has made his home there in Sodom and that Lot has connections all through Sodom by marriage. Therefore Abraham commences at 50, and the Lord tells him that he will spare it for 50; and he goes down to ten, and the Lord tells him that He will spare it for ten's sake. [Verses 26, 32.] He does not make any further appeal, but he does hope that there will be found ten righteous men in Sodom. Well, when the angels came in Sodom, they could not find even five righteous ones in the splendid city so that we may reason that there may be the most splendid cities, having the greatest wealth, and yet there not be found five righteous in them. Every one of us, as we are seeking for the future immortal life, should have everything connected with us as favorable as we can make it for the development of Christian character. God frequently calls us to break every tie that binds us to unholy influences and to come out from among them. 4Lts, Ms 19, 1886, par. 13

Here is Abraham standing as one that is a representative for God, and his history is brought down along the line to our time. Abraham's interest and anxiety for Sodom is a lesson to us that we shall have an intense interest for those around us. Although we should hate the sin, we should love the souls of those for whom Christ died. And then we should feel the most grateful to God that we have One who is pleading in the heavens above in our behalf. Jesus knows the worth of every soul because it is He that has paid the price for every one. When He was in His agony at the crucifixion, He prays there for His enemies (murderers); He says, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." [Luke 23:34.] And here as we see in the case of Abraham that he pleads for the guilty as one man pleads for another. We should put up that earnest prayer for those who are in darkness. 4Lts, Ms 19, 1886, par. 14

But there is still another test that Abraham is to bear. There is a message that comes from God in the season: "Take thy son, thy only son, whom thou lovest, and offer him up as a sacrifice to God." [Genesis 22:2.] We can have some little idea of this test required of God. As Abraham walked with Isaac to Mount Moriah, he had at every step to look away from things that are seen to things that are unseen. As Isaac walked by his side, he had the whole three days with him by his side for the temptations of the enemy to pour in upon him in regard to this test. We can imagine the feelings of that father when Isaac said, "Father, here is the fire, here is the wood, but where is the lamb for the offering?" [Verse 7.] Up to that time Isaac did not know that he was to be offered. Every day the eyes of Abraham had been directed towards heaven, hoping that some command would come countermanding that order. But he comes to the very place of which God has said, "I will show thee," and there he sees the very place where he is to offer up his darling son. He had answered the question of Isaac, "God will provide the offering" [Verse 8], but now the father sees that he has come to the last point, and he opens the whole matter to Isaac, and Isaac consents to the sacrifice. It was God who had required it, and he would even offer up himself as a sacrifice to God. And Isaac is bound and placed upon the wood, and there as Abraham draws the sword to slay his son, there comes a voice from heaven to say it is enough. He is commanded to stay his hand and do no harm to his son. Genesis 22:10, 11.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 15

There are sermons preached in order to excuse God and make it all right on His side that He should require this offering of Abraham. Now all these discourses imply a question whether God should require this of Abraham. God has a right to every one of us, and it is not for any one to question whether it is right, whether God should take this course or that course with us. Those that have perfect confidence in the Lord God of heaven will never question any of His dealing with His children. He has important experiences to give His children, and He gives them this experience in His own way. Now Abraham verily believed and made the sacrifice to all intents and purposes in his heart. And that very faith is counted to him for righteousness. He thought and taught to Isaac that God was able to raise him up from the dead and could see the end from the beginning. This is the very faith that we should have, every one of us, in the Lord God of heaven. We have the history of Abraham, and the ground the Lord brought him over, in order to give us strength and courage and faith. The Lord wants every one of us to believe that He is the very best friend we have. Here was Abraham that trusted God at every step, and his faith was perfect.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 16

Now the Lord has a controversy with His people, and He wants every one of us to come into obedience to His requirements. We are none of us, when duty is laid out before us, to question, "Is it convenient, or will it please me to do this?" If God says it, it is enough. We are to take our Bibles, we are to study and see what the will of God is concerning us, and then to follow as Abraham did in faith and confidence. Now you see the first test was a very close test for Abraham, to leave everything and go into a land of strangers. He suffered poverty and he suffered hunger when the famine came, and his whole household suffered. He had an opportunity there to question and distrust God in thus leading him out from his home and land and kindred. And there were adverse circumstances that followed Abraham for a time, which brought him into positions of trial and where he was proved of God. But Abraham's faith and confidence in God at last began to bring him returns. He had great riches, he had great possessions, and he had above everything else the blessing of God.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 17

What should we do if it were not for these representative men that are presented before us, and the dealing of God with them? Our lines are not to be always cast in pleasant places. We shall be brought where we shall feel the test and proof of God. If we could know the history of everyone that is here in this house today, there would be some valuable experiences brought out where they followed the leadings of God irrespective of inclination. The God of heaven will test us to see if we appreciate the favor of God and believe His promises and will rely upon them irrespective of consequences. Here is where the trial will come with many who accept the unpopular truth for this time. If God should call any of us to leave positions where it is for our interest to retain them, and we go according to the light God gives us, why, the Lord knows all about that. Although Abraham was promised that he should have the whole of Canaan, God said, "Walk through the land in the length of it and the breadth of it" [Genesis 13:17], yet he had not a foot of it in his possession. If we do not realize any very wonderful prosperity in this life, yet we have the claim of the future immortal life.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 18

It is stated of Abraham that he looked for a city whose builder and maker was God. When he buried his dead, he had not so much land that he could put his dead there. He had to buy it. But when the Lord opened before him the view of immortal life, and this earth purified, and here to be his home, he was satisfied. So with every one of us. We are only pilgrims and strangers in this world. We are seeking the city which Abraham looked for, whose builder and maker is God. We do not expect all the reward here in possessions, in land, in gold, or in silver, but we expect an eternal weight of glory. I will give you further points of this subject when I shall speak to you next.4LtMs, Ms 19, 1886, par. 19

Sermon/Lessons From the Life of Abraham

Basel, Switzerland

March 27, 1886

Formerly Undated Ms 128. Portions of this manuscript are published in 1BC 1093-1094; TDG 95; CTr 76, 80; 6MR 5-6.

Genesis 19:1-3. Lot had been kept with Abraham's household, and he had become so molded that he had the same courteous spirit that Abraham manifested. These men appeared just like other men when they came to Lot, and if a spirit of courtesy had not been cultivated by Lot, he might have perished with the rest of Sodom. But the wickedness of the inhabitants of Sodom was so great that they would have abused the men that brought this message and were entertained by Lot. But angels of God protected Lot from being torn in pieces by the rabble that were outside his door. He smote them with blindness so that they could not find the door.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 1

After this exhibition of their wickedness, these angels opened to Lot the object of their visit. They asked Lot if he had any sons or daughters in that place, to bring out of the city. Lot was permitted to go to those of his relatives and to tell them that the city was to be destroyed, and that they must flee from it. But all his entreaties and all his warnings were of no avail to them. They mocked at what they called his superstitious fears. Why, here was Sodom just as it had been, and there was no evidence in anything that their eyes beheld that led them to think that there was a destruction before them. But the angel, as Lot returned, was in haste and bade them flee out of Sodom. Well, Lot was, as it were, stupefied at the thought that he must go without his property, and with only his wife and two children with him. The angels laid hold upon them and led them out of the city. Why, the angel said, we can do nothing until you get out of the city. And just as soon as they were out of the city and on their way towards the mountain, then the angel said to them, Flee for your life, and tarry not in all the plain. And the command was, Look not behind you.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 2

It was a tremendous test for Lot. He pitched his tent toward Sodom, and he was rich in treasures and possessions. But he must leave it all and he must flee and he must not look behind him with a thought of regret. The wife of Lot turned her eyes toward the city for what she had left there, and the curse of God came upon her and she was turned into a pillar of salt. Lot makes the plea that he is not able to get to the mountains, and he wants to make his home this side of the mountains, and it is granted to him. But he did not dare to tarry in the place he had thought was a place of refuge, for the wickedness of Sodom had reached there. He learned by experience that the angels knew much better than he where he ought to go. The angels pointed to the mountains and bade him flee there, and he finally did.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 3

Now we can see that when Lot made his home in Sodom he made a mistake. Here he not only lost all his positions, but he lost his children, all but two. This is a lesson to us that we should take to heart. There may be very flattering openings to the children of God, but they must look on every side of the question before deciding. The very first question with every soul of us should be, How will it be with my soul? What kind of influences will be around my family and my children? All that may be gained by worldly prosperity at the sacrifice of one moral principle is a terrible loss.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 4

God promised to Abraham and his seed after him that they should have possessions and lands, and yet they were only strangers and sojourners. The inheritance and lands which are to be given not only to Abraham but to the children of Abraham will not be until after this earth is purified. Abraham will then receive the title to his farm, his possessions, and the children of Abraham will have a title to their possessions. Every one of us should constantly bear in mind that this earth is not our dwelling place, but that we are to have an inheritance in the earth made new. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah symbolizes to us how this world will be destroyed by fire. It is not safe for any one of us to build our hopes in this life. We want first to seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness. The Sodomites had passed the boundary of mercy, and no more light was granted to them prior to their destruction. Had the warning gone through these cities of the plain, and had they been told just what was to come, who of them would have believed it? They would no more have accepted the message, and God knew it, than the sons-in-law of Lot.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 5

Sodom and Gomorrah were like the Garden of Eden. The Lord had lavished His blessings upon that portion of the earth. Everything was beautiful, everything was lovely, and yet it did not lead men to honor the Giver. When the Lord rained the fire and brimstone from heaven to consume Sodom and Gomorrah, what a desolation! How easily could the blast of God make that beautiful situation and unsightly place.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 6

There is a lesson in this destruction of Sodom to those who live in Christ's day, and the message comes down the lines to our time. Matthew 11:20-24. We can see that it was according to the proportion of light that shone upon them that their guilt was measured. And this is a lesson to every one of us before whom God has opened the precious light of truth. It is impossible for me to describe to you my feelings as I passed through the cities on my way to Bienne and Lausanne. I looked upon these large cities that we passed through, and the message of warning has not reached them. I thought of you here in Basel who have the privilege of associating together and building up each other in the faith, and I thought, No light for these places. The very commonness of hearing the truth from week to week, and of receiving the efforts of the servants of God in your behalf, it loses its value in the minds of many of you.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 7

But I would inquire if our dear friends here seek to respond to the light that God is letting shine upon them? It is not the amount of light that comes to us individually that will save us, but it is the use that we make of this light that is given us from heaven. Light has been flashed upon our pathway, and we want to know how much better it makes us. Has it discovered to us our imperfections of character? and has it perfected us so that we cease to sin? You should every one of you that meet together here from Sabbath to Sabbath consider that you are greatly privileged. You should regard it as a school that you are in to be educated, and to develop characters which will fit you to be a blessing to others which are in darkness. Here you may feel that you have accepted the truth, that you understand it, and you may stop there and go no further. It is one thing to accept and hold the truth, and another thing to have the truth as it is in Jesus. While you are engaged in labor, while your hands and minds are employed in doing useful work, there is a necessity of meditation and reflection and earnest prayer. You want this light that comes from heaven to do something for you. You want that faith that is represented as gold. You want to cultivate the love of Jesus in your heart, and you want to bear in mind that the very angels that appeared to Abraham and to Lot may be in your midst though you may not see them. Everything that you shall do in the different departments and branches of your work, you want to bear in mind that you are doing it as unto God and not unto man. There is a great and solemn work to be done for the cities of Switzerland, and you know not but that God may be fitting you up to bear the message to these cities.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 8

But there is another point that I want to impress upon your mind. You should every one labor to reach the highest standard as representative men and women, because your example will tell upon those who have wrought in connection with this church and this office of publication. God expects you in your influence to show that the truth has sanctified the soul. As you seek in the strength of God to advance and grow up into the stature of Christ Jesus, you want to have seasons of meditation and prayer that you may be capable of being channels of light. Christ says, "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.] You are called, while you are placed in connection with this office, to let the light be shining out into different parts of the world. And if, while you are engaged in this solemn work, you should be letting your prayers ascend to God that the truth you are handling may bring souls to Christ, angels will be round about you.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 9

I know that our danger will be to be content with a feeble experience; but if you are closely connected with Jesus Christ, the Source of light and wisdom, you may become strong men and women in Christ. We are so willing to be content without any special evidence of our nearness to God that we fail where we might make a success. Every provision has been made by Jesus that we might not only believe an unpopular truth, but that we might have joy in Him. The truth works by love and faith works by love, and it purifies the soul. There will be efforts made in this city to present the truth to those that will hear it. 4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 10

Now the question is, Are you gaining in the knowledge of the truth? Have you a living connection with Jesus Christ? You see Abraham had, and he talked with angels, and he could ask a favor of them. You see that Moses had a living connection with God, and his earnest petition was that he might see the glory of God. "Show me Thy glory," was his petition. [Exodus 33:18.] Well now, the Lord did not rebuke him for making that request; he was not presumptuous in trying to know more of God and His glory. But we see that that mighty man of faith was hid in a cleft of the rock, and the hand of God was placed over the rock, and then He revealed to him His glory. 4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 11

We have not earnestness enough in our faith or in our experience. I am anxious that these young men should be educated to know what it is to trust God fully. You want an individual experience in the things of God; and should you press your petitions to the throne of grace, "Give me, Jesus, clearer and more distinct views of Thy purity, Thy love, and Thy power," you would receive answers to your prayers. Your souls would be touched, and your lips, as with a living coal from off His altar. Why, your words would be of such a different character from just the common utterances that we hear from day to day. Why? Because Christ is treasured in the heart, and out of the treasures of the heart the mouth speaks, and you are thus training yourselves for the kingdom of heaven. The lower you lie in humility at the foot of the cross, the more clear and forcible is the glory and loveliness of Christ to you. Your very hearts ought to glow with the love of Jesus. Christ said to His disciples that it was His will that their joy should be full [John 15:11], and the one reason that it is not is because you have so faint and indistinct views of the power and loveliness of Jesus. You want to study the character of Christ and pattern after it. 4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 12

I hope there is not one of you that will settle down with a contented position because you believe the truth. Just as long as there is a soul to save in all the world you want to press yourselves to the Source of all light and power that you may save these souls. You do not care to have an earthly, worldly mold upon your experience.

You have souls to save or to lose, and you want a great deal more of Jesus brought into your lives, into your character, and into your experience. You can be a help and blessing to one another by being true in every position where you are, by feeling that you are God's representatives upon the earth; that you cannot allow a cheap, mean thought or action to come into your life because you are purchased by the blood of Jesus Christ. I have thought that many of us forget that we are soldiers for Jesus Christ, that we are fighting the good fight of faith, that we are keeping our eye fixed upon the Author of our salvation, and that it is the privilege of every one of us to be conquerors. Well then, if we are pressing toward the mark of the prize, we are pitching our tent a great ways from Sodom. You do not see the attractions in sin and evilness, but the whole power of your intellect, your thought, and being is thrown on the side of the God of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 13

If Satan did not tempt you, you would have no battles to fight. But he will come with his temptations and present them before you in various forms; but you must resist him, steadfast in the faith. This is the warfare in which we are engaged; and by meeting these obstacles and overcoming them, you are gaining in spiritual sinew and strength for those which await you. Now Christ said to those who were lightening to His lessons, If these wicked inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah had had the instruction that they had, they would have repented; and if the light that God has permitted to shine upon you is not cherished, if you place the sacred truth upon a level with common things, you will be more guilty before God than those whom Christ addressed than the inhabitants of Sodom. Do not allow the truth, because it is so often repeated to you, to become a matter of no special benefit; but let it be fitting us day by day for the society of heavenly angels in the kingdom of God.4LtMs, Ms 19a, 1886, par. 14

Sketch of Journey

Basel, Switzerland

June 11, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 5MR 18-23; 3Bio 342; EGWE 190.

I think you will want to hear some particulars in regard to our family. We now number ten. W. C. White and Mary and Ella are well. Ella has grown to be quite a girl since you last saw her. Sarah McEnterfer is well, and just as busy as she can be, taking letters by dictation and writing them out on the calligraph. Marion's health is about as it usually is. She is at work on Vol. 4, Great Controversy. Bro. and Sr. Powelson board with us. They are well. Lillie P. is now doing our house work. Christene Dahl from Christiania, Norway, has been doing our work since we returned from Norway. She is about to return to Norway again. She is now sick, and I have feared that she will not be able to ride on the cars a three or four days' journey. We have a French teacher in our family who is working in the office. She has her board for giving lessons to the family in French. I believe I have told you now all who compose our family.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 1

My health has not been very good for some time, but my unceasing prayer to my heavenly Father is for physical strength and mental clearness that I may do the work that He has given me without making blunders.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 2

One week ago last Tuesday we returned home from visiting the churches in Switzerland. We traveled with our own horse and carriage and by thus doing obtained a view of the places and scenery of interest which we should not have done had we ridden on the cars. Switzerland is far ahead of Colorado for landscape scenes. The hills and mountains here are indescribably grand. I do not think I ever viewed scenery which made so deep an impression on my mind. It seemed as though my heart was lifted up to heaven as I viewed the works of God in nature. I could not refrain from saying, "Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty." [Revelation 15:3.] I looked upon the high rocks seamed by the mighty cataracts which had worn a channel through them, and at the mountains towering toward heaven and then down hundreds of feet into the ravine through which a rapid stream was noisily beating its way over the stones and rugged rocks. I was filled with awe as I looked upon this scenery. I meditated upon the things which my eyes were beholding. How great was the living God who held and controlled these wonderful places of the earth, holding the mountains of stone in their place by His own hand, subject to His will. Oh, what power and what majesty has our God! Himself is the Rock of Ages.⁴*LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 3*

These mountains clad with forest trees and high towering rocks of every conceivable form are beautifully adorned with the fir, hemlock, and beech. The evergreens are of the darkest green; the beech of a light, living green. The combination of colors is as beautiful as a bouquet. Interspersed with these are pure white blossoms resembling the snowball. All the beauties and the marvelous greatness of things in nature are open to our senses that we may better understand the love of God for man and learn lessons of His wisdom and His power. These things which my eyes behold draw me personally and trustingly to my heavenly Father, for I recognize Him as the source of all our blessings.⁴*LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 4*

If our hearts were softened and subdued with the love of God, they would be open to discern His mercy and loving-kindness, as expressed to us in every shrub and the profusion of blooming flowers which meet our eyes in God's world. The delicate leaf, the spires of grass, every lofty tree is an expression of the love of God to His children. They tell us that God is a lover of the beautiful. He speaks to us from nature's book that He delights in the perfection of beauty of character. He would have us look up through nature to nature's God and [would have] our hearts drawn out in love and affection to Him as we view His created works. The beautiful forests stretch out before us and the groves where the merry songsters congregate and make our world vocal with their songs of praise; their rich and joyous music should awaken the song of melody and gratitude to God in our own hearts. The Lord wants us to rejoice in the works of His creation. He rejoices in the work of His hands which He has clothed with such a profusion of beauty. His glory is not only declared in the heavens in the sun, moon, and stars, but in everything in nature, opening bud and blooming flowers which His hand has created.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 5

We may consider, as Jesus bade us, the lilies of the valley, and the beautiful flowers growing up around us should awaken in our hearts not only reverence but love to God. We need greater natural simplicity and far more spirituality than we now possess in order to read aright the pages of the book of nature God has opened before us. We want to grasp the eternal through faith which He has set before us in earthly forms and semblances that the depths of our souls may be reached, that we may magnify and reverence the God of nature.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 6

God designs that the scenes of nature should influence the children of God to delight in the pure, simple, quiet beauty with which our Father adorns our earthly home. Jesus tells us that the mightiest king that ever swayed a scepter could not compare in gorgeous array to the simple flowers that God has clothed with loveliness. [Matthew 6:28, 29.] We wish to learn God's lesson out of His book. The heavens above, pure and beautiful and lovely, in faint colors presented to our senses here upon the earth, and we may put the imagination to the highest stretch to grasp the glories which these represent in the paradise of God; and yet the eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for those who love Him.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 7

We must be preparing for the white robe of character in order that we may pass within the pearly gates of the city of God to a heaven of bliss. Revelation presents the scene—fountains of living waters, rivers that are as clear as crystal proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb, trees of living green growing on either side of this river of life. [Revelation 7:17; 22:1, 2.] The foliage gives health and life to those who eat it, as well as the fruit. The walls and foundation of the city are of precious stone. The streets are paved with gold.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 8

We have in the glorious things of nature a mere shadow of the original which we shall see in their full loveliness in the paradise of God. Let us learn the precious lesson which God designed we should. He who careth for the simple flowers in their season, will He not much more care for you whom He has created in His own image? Look upon these things of beauty. God prepares and clothes them with a robe of loveliness, and yet they perish in a day. All these earthly, temporal beauties are to be appreciated as the voice of God speaking to us of the treasures and glories of the unseen and the eternal.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 9

It will be impossible for me to describe the scenery which I beheld on this journey. It is too awfully grand. I might write you much more upon this, but I will pursue my narrative of my journey. Our first day out from Basel at noon we halted under the widespread branches of a grand old oak. W. C. White unharnessed Dolly, and John Vuilleumier brushed her down, using hay as a curry-comb, then left her to eat grass which privilege she enjoyed, if we can judge from appearance. A bed was made for me on the grass. I had been sick for several days, and the proposition was made to defer the journey until the next week, being unable, as they thought, to travel. This day, the twentieth of May, was very warm. I decided to undertake the journey, and if it were impossible for me to travel safely, to return to Basel. I was very weak, but my rest in sleep did me good.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 10

Close by us was a large rock running up abruptly from the road, but in the rear was a plat of level ground which, without much difficulty, would bring one to the top of the huge rock. Here Napoleon placed his cannon upon the top of the rock, and his army must have stood upon the very spot we had chosen for our noon lunch. The name of this place was Laufen, fourteen miles from Basel. Sarah McEnterfer prepares the luncheon which is spread upon the ground upon smooth Manila paper used as a tablecloth. The blessing of God is asked upon our food, and the simple lunch is eaten with a relish.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 11

W. C. White engaged in writing letters on the calligraph, and Sarah washed the dishes in a stream close by and arranged the dinner basket to be strapped again on the back of the wagon. John took the German and French paper to a house not far distant where we obtained milk and did some missionary work. He obtained names to whom he could send these little messengers of light and truth.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 12

The entire journey was one of interest for remarkable scenery. Having ridden thirty miles, we tarried that night in Moutter, a beautiful village located in a valley of loveliness. The inhabitants are mostly Roman Catholics. We had good accommodations, and early in the morning took a breakfast in our room consisting of bread and hot milk, and then were seated in our carriage again to continue our journey. We arrived at Tramelan about noon and were welcomed by the family of Brother Roth. Brother and Sister Roth are most excellent people, wholehearted in the truth. They have now living seven sons and three daughters. One daughter died in the faith not long since. All are established in the truth that are old enough to understand. Their family are in the best circumstances of any of our people in Switzerland. The father and eldest son are merchant tailors. The second son is a baker, but has given himself to the missionary work, and is fitting up for a laborer. He is a young man of superior ability. One young woman is working in the office at Basel. She understands French, German, and English. The third son is also working in the office. We enjoyed our visit with this dear family. Tramelan is one of the most beautiful places in Switzerland. It is high up among the mountains. There is much snow there in winter, and the summers are quite warm. I think we shall have a camp meeting in this place before we leave Europe. We had good meetings in Tramelan. I spoke three times.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 13

May 25, we went with our carriage to Bienne, about 15 miles. We had a missionary meeting and spoke about one-half hour. W. C. White and others talked with interest. Bienne is a large and beautiful city. Bienne Lake comes close to the city. Wednesday morning early we were in our carriage on our way to Chaux-de-Fonds. Here I spoke twice. I was not well here. We had to mount four pairs of stairs. Up so near heaven we found very pleasant rooms. There was still another story above us. We had for three or four days cold, disagreeable weather. Thursday we went to Locle, visited an excellent family. Tarried a few hours, left an appointment for Sunday evening, then rode back and spoke in C. that night. I also spoke Sabbath forenoon with great freedom. The Lord blessed me. I was very weak, but I knew Jesus was in our midst, and His sustaining grace was given me. My heart is seldom more deeply stirred than it was at this meeting. I could not forbear weeping as I had a vivid sense of the love of Christ. The congregation were many of them in tears. I knew that Jesus of Nazareth was passing through our midst, and His blessing was flowing in rich waves of love to our souls. I knew some were convicted of the truth, but had not consented to lift the cross.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 14

I presented before them the words of Joshua, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." [Joshua 24:15.] I asked those who wished to take a decided stand for the truth, and to be fully on the Lord's side, to arise; also those who had backslidden, or had become cold in the service of the Lord, to stand upon their feet. The house was so crowded that they could not come forward, but nearly every one in the house was deeply moved and stood upon their feet.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 15

Brother Ertzenberger offered deep and earnest prayer to God. Then we had a precious social meeting. Testimonies were given in quick succession; short and to the point. John Vuilleumier interpreted to me so that I was privileged to know what was said. I felt in this meeting as though we were very near the blessed Saviour, that the heavenly breezes from the Land of Canaan wafted over us. I am all the time learning new and precious lessons from the heavenly Teacher. I have been learning to trust more calmly and casting all my care upon Jesus. I never knew as fully as now the great care and love Jesus has for us, and the precious privilege we have in committing the keeping of our soul to God as unto a faithful Creator, and resting in His love without anxiety and without doubt. God has given us every evidence of His love. I will not doubt Him, never, no never.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 16

Sunday we went to Locle. This is a place where our people have suffered the greatest opposition. They were almost afraid to have me speak, fearing the opposition would be more intense. But they were much pleased to see the hall full of the best of the community, who listened to the temperance discourse with the deepest interest.

I was sick, but the Lord helped me to rise above my infirmities and to talk to the people that night. I praise His holy name for His goodness and loving-kindness to me, that He gives me strength according to my day. After speaking evenings I cannot sleep until midnight, for I feel so intensely earnest to benefit the souls before me.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 17

May 30, we left our carriage to be driven to Tramelan by Brother Ertzenberger while we took the train for Neuchâtel to see Brother Albert Vuilleumier who had just come from Africa. I spoke to a room full that night under great pain, with ulcerated tooth. The blood rushed to my head just before speaking, my nose bled freely, but I obtained no relief. Used fomentations without receiving any benefit, but felt that I could not disappoint the people, and spoke to them about three quarters of an hour. Those present were none the wiser for my sufferings. I did not again take the carriage, but Sarah and I hastened home to Basel on the cars to my dentist. He said the nerve of the tooth was dying, and he could relieve me. He drilled a hole through the tooth through the gum, and I was relieved in about one hour.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 18

We leave for Sweden next Monday. I have much dreaded this journey, for I know it will be attended with great weariness. Nevertheless, I have decided to go and trust myself in the hands of the Lord. We ride thirty-six hours on the first stage of the journey to Leipzig, remain there over twenty-four hours. Elders Whitney, Conradi, and W. C. White accompany us to transact important business there.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 19

I have now run over this very limited sketch of our journey, knowing you would be interested to hear it.4LtMs, Ms 20, 1886, par. 20

Healdsburg College

NP

1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 1MR 317-322.

The Healdsburg College:

Deeming it no longer safe to entrust our youth with infidels or with irreligious teachers, or even with teachers who would poison their minds with doctrinal errors, we have erected our present commodious home and college in Healdsburg. We saw the necessity of religious training being interwoven with their education, also of their knowing something of the different trades and branches of business. In order for them to develop symmetrical characters, they need not only the advantages of a thorough intellectual training, but of a training of the physical powers. Then their mental capabilities will develop proportionately. It is painful to see how many one-sided, half-developed characters there are in our world. Our churches today show that these defects have been brought into the religious life to the great detriment of the church. There is a great work to be done for our youth. Our college must not do any haphazard work. The taste of those who attend it must be refined, their imagination pure and correct, and all their aspirations ennobled and purified through the copy that is constantly kept before them, Jesus Christ. If they learn to come into subjection to His sway, and are controlled by pure, elevating motives, they may go forth fitted for any position of responsibility or trust.⁴*LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 1*

Young men have a work to do in this life which they will be unable to perform unless they form correct habits. Every soul that has been redeemed by the blood of Jesus Christ has a destiny to fulfil. No one liveth to himself. All exert an influence for good or for evil. The injunction of the apostle is, "Young men, be sober minded." [Titus 2:6.] How can they be otherwise when they consider that they are to be co-workers with Christ and partakers with Him of His self-denial,

His self-sacrifice, His forbearance, and gracious benevolence. Says the apostle, "I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." [1 John 2:14.] You are God's agents to work for the upbuilding, the advancement of His cause, therefore you should put away all levity, jesting, and joking which is not convenient. Put away your spend-thrift habits, and learn habits of economy. Be not seeking after amusements, live not for your own selfish gratification, be sober minded. In your God-given manhood, rise above every enslaving, debasing habit and practice, and encourage a due appreciation of your high calling. Ponder well the paths your feet are treading. Search your Bibles carefully and prayerfully. Study the waymarks, and inquire diligently whether your feet are in the path leading heavenward or in the path leading to perdition.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 2

You need to learn more of God and of heaven. How important that you start right, that you begin active life aright. A little diverging from the path of right at starting will lead you further and further away from the path of safety and happiness. One step taken carelessly will place you upon the enemy's ground and oppress and benumb the intellectual and moral energies. We are living in an age of infidelity and disloyalty to God. Bad dispositions, hereditary tendencies, are opposed to the gospel of Christ. All the miserable traits of character, all the depravity and overflowing profligacy which prevail in our world, are because the law of God is not made the standard of character. Satan is working with pleasing fables upon the minds of professed Christians to make of none effect the law of God which is the detector of sin. God wants faithful men to press firmly against the wiles of Satan and urge the truth against destructive errors and delusions.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 3

Our college is far-reaching in its principles. It has for its one great object the education and training of young men and women for usefulness in this life and the service of God. If these youth have an eye single to God's glory, they will seek to fit themselves for His special service. The love of Christ will have a controlling influence upon their every day life. This object imparts an energy more than finite, and qualifies for achievements that are divine. Their works will show some proportion of the strength of their motives. The salvation of men for whom Christ has paid an infinite price will be their grand aim. All other considerations—home, family, social enjoyment—are secondary to this.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 4

The worker for God must reach for man where they are, immersed in darkness, sunken in vice, and stained with corruption. Thus it was that Christ showed His love for fallen man. He came from a heaven of bliss, where He was appreciated, loved, and honored, to our world to meet man in his fallen condition. His work was to reform men and fit them for a pure and holy heaven. He stopped at no sacrifice; He hesitated not at any self-denial. He for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich. Jesus had a great deal of rough work to do among a rough, uncultured, depraved class. He reached for men where they were, and adapted His process of working to the material He had to work upon. The workers for God must work as Christ worked. They must take in and understand the conditions of the beings for whom they work, in order to gain the victory. Whoever would be an effective co-worker with God in the vineyard of God must expect no better portion and treatment than had the world's Redeemer. They must expect to bring their ministry to the understanding of the men for whom they labor.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 5

Those will attend the college who have no settled principles, no fixed purpose. They have no sense of God's claims upon them. Unless they can be inspired with courage, lofty aims, and a burning desire to improve their talents, to increase their knowledge, that they may increase their usefulness, they would be better tilling the soil at home. Those who have a purpose to labor for the salvation of souls must not have moral cowardice, but pure elevated motives. The hours of these will be hallowed, their opportunities appreciated. They will drink in knowledge. They will be representatives of industry, sobriety, punctuality. They will ever advocate order and discipline. They will be caretakers. There will be nothing loose or lax, but they will have sturdy, persevering resolutions and earnest fidelity.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 6

God would have His workers aim at perfection and strive earnestly for it. As they go out they will meet worldly men. Some are coarse and rough, others are intelligent and having the worldly polish.

These all must have the mold of Christ's character. The people have a right to expect that the one who presents himself as a teacher of Bible truths shall be refined in manners. They will pass severe judgment upon the man who claims to be a teacher, and is not refined and courteous. He should be able to command the respect of all. Young men should go forth from the college qualified for this work by diligent study and faithful training. All bad ways and coarse ways should be avoided, and a strict guard should be placed over the mind and manners lest they fall into erroneous ways of speaking and acting.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 7

The teachers in our schools should labor strenuously to have their own voices and manners as nearly right as possible. But little is gained in devoting all the time to the study of books while the manners and the voice are neglected. They should impress upon the students under their charge the importance of self-culture, and then the student should take himself in hand to practice the lessons taught, that he may overcome incorrect habits of utterance. If these wrong habits are carried through their college education, they will have become fixed and very difficult to overcome. Intelligent youth often thus hinder their own success by retaining faults which earnest, painstaking efforts would overcome. If they would take themselves resolutely in hand, they would succeed in changing their habits and their manners at once and forever.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 8

There is great pathos and music in the human voice; and if the learner will make determined efforts, he will acquire habits of talking and singing that will be to him a power to win souls to Christ. God wants the offerings of yourself to be perfect through Christ. The teachers in our schools should not tolerate in the students ungainly attitudes and uncouth gestures, wrong intonations in reading, or incorrect accents or emphasis. Perfection of speech and voice should be urged upon every student. Because of carelessness and bad training, habits are often contracted which are great hindrances in the work of a minister who has otherwise educated talent. The student must be impressed that he has it in his power, by combining divine grace with effort, to make himself a man. The mental and physical capabilities with which God has adorned him may by cultivation and painstaking effort become a power to benefit his fellow men.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 9

All connected with our college as teachers and workers should be God-fearing men and women, hating sin, despising every temptation that will lead to pollution. They should stand firm as a rock to duty, feeling that they have a responsible work for the performance of which they must render an account to God. Every teacher in our college should feel a deep interest that the youth should receive such a training and discipline that they may go forth from the college with higher, holier motives and firmer principles than when they entered the school. They should not only become efficient in the sciences, but the intellect should expand and strengthen and develop, and they should grow in grace and knowledge of the truth. While cultivating the mind, they should cultivate that uprightness of heart, that stern integrity that Joseph possessed. Then they will scorn to yield to temptation that will sully their purity. Like Daniel, they will resolve to be true to principle and to make the very best use of the intellect with which God has endowed them. Pure, genuine religion never deadens the intellect, but it awakens the highest, noblest thoughts, and strengthens the intellect to exercise its powers to the utmost limit.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 10

It is impossible for teacher or student to be connected with the God of wisdom without his intellect becoming developed and strengthened through the grace of Christ. He may then become a man of power to lead other souls to divine truth. The greatest work of the teacher is to lead those under his charge to be intellectual Christians. Then the mental and moral powers will develop harmoniously, and they will be fit for any position of trust. Divine grace will give clearness and force to the understanding. To faith will be added a virtuous character, and they will be a bright light in the world. They present the power of Christianity in the well-ordered life and godly conversation. They will despise cheap, foolish jesting and joking. They will adorn the doctrine of Christ. The principles of truth are inwrought in their lives, and bright beams of light will shine forth from them to the world in good works. Their righteousness goes before them as in the case of Daniel, and the glory of the Lord is their reward. The Lord has said, "They that honor Me will I honor." [1 Samuel 2:30.] God's Word will be fulfilled; not a jot or tittle of it will fail. Many who will stand before the throne of God wearing the white linen which is the righteousness of the saints will be the sheaves that faithful example and earnest effort have brought to the Master.4LtMs, Ms 22, 1886, par. 11

Building a House for God

NP

1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in Ev 377-378; CG 542-543; CTr 364.

Nearly three thousand years ago by divine appointment the temple was built in Jerusalem. The nation of God's choice had been greatly favored; they dwelt in costly houses while they still worshiped God in the curtained Tabernacle. Here the Shekinah, the visible emblem of God's presence, dwelt between the cherubim, and out of the perfection of beauty, God shined. The ark of God that had been constructed in the wilderness, and had been borne all the way from Horeb to Jerusalem during the pilgrimage of forty years, still remained in the Tabernacle.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 1

David, while dwelling in his palace of cedar and beholding the costly dwellings of the inhabitants of the city, was impressed that a more honorable place should be prepared for the worship of the great God, the Maker of the heavens and the earth. David was filled with remorse that he dwelt in a magnificent palace while the ark, which symbolized the mighty God, was provided for so much more poorly. Making known his convictions to Nathan, the prophet, he was encouraged by him to carry out his purpose, that of building a temple for the Lord to dwell in. But God had a special work for David to perform, and in His providence He had selected his son Solomon to accomplish the great work of building Him a house.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 2

The Lord has made men His agents and has supplied them with means to carry forward His work. They will take the most happiness in their possessions when they render back to God that which He has freely given them, when they show that they make His cause and work supreme, and when they plan more wisely for the advancement of His cause and work, for the salvation of souls, than for their own convenience or enjoyment. The Lord says, "Them that honor Me, I will honor.” 1 Samuel 2:30. When those who love God have an eye single to His glory, see that narrow plans and inferior accommodations are made for the worship of the Lord God of hosts, and then see how much is expended upon building and furnishing houses for men, they will feel as did David.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 3

A good work has been done in Healdsburg in erecting buildings for the accommodation of students. In the purchase of the college and in the planning and arrangement of the boarding house, some of our brethren have done nobly; but there is much yet left undone. The efforts made by the God-fearing, zealous servants of God should be encouraged by their brethren, for their plans in preparing a home for our youth and providing facilities for training and educating them according to the Scriptures have worked far more successfully than we had hoped. Plans are often devised to do a great work, but they fail because they are not in accordance with God’s plans and God’s ways. When self is interwoven with the plans and devices, then failure is written upon them.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 4

In carrying out the design of building a house for God in Healdsburg, there will need to be a spirit of sacrifice on the part of all. It does not belong to this one church at Healdsburg to bear all this burden. Healdsburg is a place where the interest of our people on the Pacific coast will center. It should be considered as a missionary field. Here their children will be sent to attend the college; here they will listen Sabbath after Sabbath to the Word of God from His delegated servants. The other churches should all take a special interest in the work being done there and should feel it a privilege to help in building a house of worship there. They should consider it not only a privilege, but an honor to share in this work. It is not proper to make the school chapel a place for the people to assemble to worship God.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 5

There have been times when it seemed necessary to worship God in very humble places; but the Lord did not withhold His Spirit nor refuse His presence because of this. It was the best His people could do at the time, and if they worshiped Him in Spirit and in truth, He never reprovved or condemned their efforts. But He has blessed us with means, and we expend that means in making our houses attractive, in planning and executing to please, to honor, and to glorify ourselves; if we are content to thus leave the Lord out of our plans and to worship Him in a much poorer and more inconvenient place than we are willing to live in ourselves; if, I say, our selfish purposes are thus made supreme and God and His worship secondary, He will not bestow upon us His blessing.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 6

God appoints to every man his work, that of honoring God's name on the earth. Have we not a work to do for the Master here in Healdsburg? Are we prepared for this work? Here are carpenters who do not possess the mind and Spirit of Christ. When this work of building a church shall be begun, there will be a revealing of the true character of many among us. There are men of various temperaments and ideas who feel very ardent to have their plans carried out because they think them just right. If all are not guarded, envy, discontent, murmuring will arise in their hearts because they are disappointed in something.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 7

Be assured, brethren, that with every one who develops this spirit there is need of a true conversion to God. All should be thankful that God allows them a name and a place among His people without their seeking to be first. They are to do their work with fidelity and thoroughness, considering every day what Christ has done for them. If he had failed in His appointed work in the redemption of man, we should all have hopelessly perished.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 8

Christ's work was perfect in every part. We need to daily humble our hearts before God in view of the blessings that He has brought within our reach at infinite cost to Himself. He lived a life of humiliation, He was slighted, scorned, rejected, that we might be lifted up. Then will we consider that the Lord has a choice even of men who shall build His house? It does then make a difference to Him who engages in this work and what spirit characterizes them. God would have men engage in His work who have wisdom and who are disciplined by His grace. Men's plans are not God's plans. He may see that it is best for us and for His cause to refuse our very best intentions, as He did in the case of David. Our plans may look exceedingly wise to us, but not so to the Lord. Of one thing we may be assured, the Lord will bless and make useful to the advancement of His cause those who humbly devote themselves and all that they have to His glory. If He sees fit not to honor their desires, He will, if they are humble, teachable, and under the control of His Spirit, counterbalance His refusal by giving them tokens of His love and entrusting to them other service.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 9

The Lord reminded David of the lowly position he was in when He called him and entrusted him with great responsibilities, and He would have him ever bear in mind that his prosperity and success came through the blessing of God and not through any inherited goodness that he possessed. Although God did not allow him to carry out the wish of his heart, He granted him the next highest honor, that of entrusting the work to his son.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 10

Solomon received wisdom from God. Yet Solomon did not find among the workmen of his nation and religion those qualifications, that fine skill, that he deemed essential to carry forward the work of building a temple for the God of heaven. He was therefore obliged to send away for workmen, men who would do justice to the responsible work entrusted to them. God was the designer and men were the executors. There was a head, a leader, and the men were brought in under him to follow his directions. There was no discord, no strife; every man wrought until the stones were brought out of the mountains so perfectly hewed and chiseled that when brought to the building they came together without the sound of ax or hammer.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 11

We have no command from God to erect a building which will compare for richness and splendor with the temple. But we are to build an humble house of worship, plain and simple, neat and perfect in its design. Then let those who have means look to it that they are as liberal and tasteful in erecting a temple wherein we may worship God as they have been in locating, and building, and furnishing their own houses. Let them manifest a willingness and a desire to show greater honor to God than themselves. Let them build with nicety, but not with extravagance. Let the house be built conveniently and thoroughly so that when it is presented to God He can accept it and let His Spirit rest upon the worshipers who have an eye single to His glory. Nothing must interfere between God's glory and us; no selfish plans, no selfish schemes, no selfish purposes. There must be an agreement.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 12

The work of building might have commenced last year. But there are many carpenters and others who have come from different places and settled in Healdsburg who have not been actuated by the right spirit, or the right motives. As soon as the subject of building a meetinghouse was agitated, they began to manifest a spirit of rivalry and to selfishly covet the work themselves lest someone outside of Healdsburg should be called to act a part or be made leader in the work. Those who have come to Healdsburg and who have done nothing for the upbuilding of the cause and work here, who have been no spiritual strength, efficiency, and support to the church, but who have ever been, as far as their influence is concerned, a detriment to the church, were the most anxious, self-sufficient, and forward in their claims of superiority, urging that it was their right to take a prominent part in the matter. If these men have been converted the past year, then their past words, and attitude, and claims may be blotted out, and they can begin anew. But I have no evidence that the spirit of ambition in my brother workmen is dead. They would be puzzled to select a head man among themselves under whom they would agree to lay aside their own opinions and manners of working. They are not large-minded, large-hearted men of experience, but are so very sensitive lest they should not have the supremacy.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 13

In building the temple for God, all worked in harmonious action. Among the thousands of workmen, there were acknowledged heads, master workmen who commanded certain parts of the work. Although these were not of their nation or religion, all consented to obey them. There were no strikes, no rebellion, no dissatisfaction. The very elements seemed to be under the control of the Great I AM. Peaceful and harmonious, the work went on; and when all the parts were brought together, they fitted with an exactness that was not the result of a special miracle, but of accurate, skilful labor by workmen who felt the greatness of the work and fashioned every stone to match the place it was to fit. In our work we must move cautiously in faith. But it is our privilege to build a house for God. We should not be confined to a school chapel. If we have a deep heart interest in the work of God, every man and woman will say, Let us arise and build. Let us look as did David to our own conveniences and then consider the poor accommodations that we have for the service of God. Let every one, old and young, bring gifts and donations to help in building a house for God, and let parents and children show as great, yes as much greater interest in this building as they have shown in building houses for themselves. It is for our own good and for the glory of God that we undertake this work. We know it is a trying time as far as means is concerned, but we should not let this hinder us. We want God's blessing, we want to work the works of God; let none of us be behind in this work.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 14

The house erected for the worship of God should be cherished with sacred reverence by parents and by children. It should not be used for common business of any kind. Schools should be disconnected from the room that is employed as a sanctuary where we expect God to reveal His sacred presence. Our children are not receiving the proper training in regard to the sacredness of the house where God is worshiped and where His Word is opened to the people. It is not possible to have them form correct ideas of God's sanctuary if it is used for a schoolroom and for common business purposes. There should be a sacred spot, like the sanctuary of old, where God is to meet with His people. That place should not be used as a lunch room or as a business room, but simply for the worship of God.4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 15

When children attend day school in the same place where they assemble to worship on the Sabbath, they cannot be made to feel the sacredness of the place and that they must enter with feelings of reverence. The sacred and common are so blended that it is difficult to distinguish them. It is for this reason that the house or sanctuary dedicated to God should not be made a common place. Its sacredness should not be confused or mingled with the common every-day feelings or business life. There should be a solemn awe upon the worshipers as they enter the sanctuary, and they should leave behind all common worldly thoughts, for it is the place where

God reveals His presence. It is as the audience chamber of the great and eternal God; therefore pride and passion, dissension and self-esteem, selfishness, and covetousness, which God pronounces idolatry, are inappropriate for such a place. What concord is there between Christ and Belial, what agreement between the temple of God and idols?4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 16

Parents should be constrained by high and holy motives to teach their children the sinfulness of entering the house of God in extravagant apparel and external display, which is contrary to the injunction of the inspired Word. Their dress and spirit should be appropriate to the holy place of worship. Thus the constraining love of Christ will triumph over the promptings of the natural heart. Such a worshiper will be a "living epistle, known and read of all men." [2 Corinthians 3:2.] The world will witness his unselfish love and feel condemned for their idolatry, and they will take knowledge of this devoted unselfish child of God that he has learned of Jesus. The church have as yet reached only a low standard, whereas if they will show due honor to God and elevate the standard, they may triumph gloriously. There is not that marked difference between believers and unbelievers that there should be. The Lord will accept that faith only that is sustained by corresponding works. You must arise from your low condition. You must have more noble aspirations, higher aims. Your whole soul must be wrapped up in God. You are to take no credit to yourself for your good and wise works, for there is no merit of themselves in your works; but if the Spirit of God worketh in the children of obedience, it is all of God not of self; therefore wherein shall we receive credit?4LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 17

We are justified freely through the redemption there is in Christ. Faith is the gift of God. It is an assent of the understanding of God's Word which binds the heart to His service. It is an active faith, for it works by love and purifies the soul. Let us arise and build. The great argument for Christian liberality is the life and example of Christ. We have not as a people the mind of Christ. Our energies are not employed in the service of God to make us more and more heavenly minded. We are not inclined to grow heavenward, but earthward. We want to avail ourselves of every means of grace to become more and more like Jesus. We want every advantage we can command in order to grow up into Christ our Living Head.⁴*LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 18*

The house of the Lord in Jerusalem made it the praise and a holy revered name in all the earth. The walls, the towers, the stones, the streets, the foundations, the very dust of the city were sacred to the Jewish nation because God revealed the Shekinah of His presence in the sanctuary, and there His blessings rested upon His people every day. When the sun's soft beams shone down from the crest of Olivet upon the gilded domes and polished stones of the holy house, the one thought that God dwelt in Mount Zion and that He was in His sanctuary called forth a union of prayers for wisdom and strength from Him who dwelt between the cherubim. I call your mind to the sacredness and awe which were cherished anciently for God's house, His sanctuary. God is not confined to any one particular place, but anciently, pilgrims from all parts of the world assembled to worship at Jerusalem. The Passover, the Pentecost, and the feast of the tabernacles were seasons that stirred the souls of the loyal in Israel, old and young, rich and poor, high and low, joined the grand procession going up to Jerusalem to appear before God. The long journeys were made during the most favorable seasons of the year and by short stages, for many went on foot. The shepherds from their flocks, the herdsmen from the wild mountains, the sons of the prophets from Mount Carmel, the [fishermen] from the Sea of Galilee, and the stray wanderers would encounter perils on land and on sea that they might assemble and stand within the gates of Jerusalem on these special occasions. As they journeyed, the tedious monotony was relieved by sacred songs. Morning and evening the hills resounded with thanksgiving and praise. The wonderful deliverance from Egypt after the passage of the Red Sea was celebrated by songs of experience and thanksgiving and praise to their wonderful Deliverer.⁴*LtMs, Ms 23, 1886, par. 19*

Miriam, the sister of Moses that once led the women of Israel with timbrels, saying, "Sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously" [Exodus 15:21], the children of Israel for fifteen hundred years wove their wonderful experience into song. They chanted the grand Hebrew psalms with the same reverence and devotion which inspired the composer of the sacred melody. They exalted God; they brought their experience into history and elevated the marvelous works of God. The angels' visits to the fathers and His revelations to the prophets were all brought into their songs, celebrating the majesty and power and wonderful works of Jehovah. At the sound of the signal trumpet and the music of the cymbals, the voices of praise and thanksgiving came from thousands of voices, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." Psalm 122:1, 2. In these caravans marching to the holy city, not one went empty handed. Fruits from their produce in field and garden, and offerings of every kind, were borne by the worshipers. The fairest and the choicest of everything was taken to be presented as a gift to Jehovah in the sanctuary. Devotion to God was the order of all who visited the sanctuary. This should be the case with us. When these pilgrims arrived upon the surrounding hills in sight of the holy city, they looked with reverential awe down upon the living mass of people who like themselves were winding their way to the temple. As they saw the smoke of the incense ascending and heard the trumpets of the Levites heralding the break of day, the people caught the inspiration of the hour and broke forth into sacred songs. "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of His holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north." Psalm 48:1. "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces." Psalm 122:7. "Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord." Psalm 118:19. "I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all His people, in the courts of the Lord's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem." Psalm 116:18, 19. "Because of the house of the Lord our God, I will seek thy good." Psalm 122:9. 4Lts, Ms 23, 1886, par. 20

Objections to the Bible

NP

1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 1SM 19-21.

Human minds vary. The minds of different education and thought receive different impressions of the same words, and it is difficult for one mind to give to one of a different temperament, education, and habits of thought by language exactly the same idea as that which is clear and distinct in his own mind. Yet to honest men, right-minded men, he can be so simple and plain as to convey his meaning for all practical purposes. If the man he communicates with is not honest and will not want to see and understand the truth, he will turn his words and language in everything to suit his own purposes. He will misconstrue his words, play upon his imagination, wrest them from their true meaning, and then entrench himself in unbelief, claiming that the sentiments are all wrong.⁴*LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 1*

This is the way my writings are treated by those who wish to misunderstand and pervert them. They turn the truth of God into a lie. In the very same way that they treat the writings in my published articles and in my books, so do skeptics and infidels treat the Bible. They read it according to their desire to pervert, to misapply, to wilfully wrest the utterances from their true meaning. They declare that the Bible can prove anything and everything, that every sect proves their doctrines right, and that the most diverse doctrines are proven from the Bible.⁴*LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 2*

The writers of the Bible had to express their ideas in human language. It was written by human men. These men were inspired of the Holy Spirit. Because of the imperfections of human understanding of language, or the perversity of the human mind, ingenious in evading truth, many read and understand the Bible to please themselves. It is not that the difficulty is in the Bible. Opposing politicians argue points of law in the statute book and take opposite views in their application and in these laws.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 3

The Scriptures were given to men, not in a continuous chain of unbroken utterances, but piece by piece through successive generations, as God in His providences saw a fitting opportunity to impress man at sundry times and divers places. Men wrote as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. There is “first the bud, then the blossom, and next the fruit,” “first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.” [Mark 4:28.] This is exactly what the Bible utterances are to us.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 4

There is not always perfect order or apparent unity in the Scriptures. The miracles of Christ are not given in exact order, but are given just as the circumstances occurred, which called for this divine revealing of the power of Christ. The truths of the Bible are as pearls hidden. They must be searched, dug out by painstaking effort. Those who take only a surface view of the Scriptures will, with their superficial knowledge, which they think is very deep, talk of the contradictions of the Bible and question the authority of the Scriptures. But those whose hearts are in harmony with truth and duty will search the Scriptures with a heart prepared to receive divine impressions. The illuminated soul sees a spiritual unity, one grand golden thread running through the whole, but it requires patience, thought, and prayer to trace out the precious golden thread. Sharp contentions over the Bible have led to investigation and revealed the precious jewels of truth. Many tears have been shed, many prayers offered that the Lord would open the understanding to His Word.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 5

The Bible is not given to us in grand superhuman language. Jesus, in order to reach man where he is, took humanity. The Bible must be given in the language of men. Everything that is human is imperfect. Different meanings are expressed by the same word; there is not one word for each distinct idea. The Bible was given for practical purposes.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 6

The stamps of minds are different. All do not understand expressions and statements alike. Some understand the statements of the Scriptures to suit their own particular minds and cases.

Prepossessions, prejudices, and passions have a strong influence to darken the understanding and confuse the mind even in reading the words of Holy Writ.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 7

The disciples traveling to Emmaus needed to be disentangled in their interpretation of the Scriptures. Jesus walked with them disguised, and as a man He talked with them. Beginning at Moses and the prophets, He taught them in all things concerning Himself, that His life, His mission, His sufferings, His death were just as the Word of God had foretold. He opened their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures. How quickly He straightened out the tangled ends and showed the unity and divine verity of the Scriptures. How much men in these times need their understanding opened.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 8

The Bible is written by inspired men, but it is not God's mode of thought and expression. It is that of humanity. God, as a writer, is not represented. Men will often say such an expression is not like God. But God has not put Himself in words, in logic, in rhetoric, on trial in the Bible. The writers of the Bible were God's penmen, not His pen. Look at the different writers.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 9

It is not the words of the Bible that are inspired, but the men that were inspired. Inspiration acts not on the man's words or his expressions, but on the man himself, who under the influence of the Holy Ghost is imbued with thoughts. But the words and thoughts receive the impress of the individual mind. The divine mind is diffused. The divine mind and will is combined with the human mind and will; thus the utterances of the man are the Word of God.4LtMs, Ms 24, 1886, par. 10

Talk/Sanctification

Orebro, Sweden

June 20, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 5MR 123-124.

June 20, 1886

(Morning Talk by E. G. White, at Orebro, Sweden,)

“If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.” 1 John 1:8, 9.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 1

These words show us the importance of occupying a position of humility and self-abasement instead of pride. We are to keep the mirror—the law of God—ever before us, that we may discover our defects of character. By this law we are to test our lives.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 2

There is one point that I wish to emphasize: Those who are striving to keep the law of God never boast of their holiness. But many of those who are trampling the law under their unsanctified feet claim that they are without sin, that they have attained perfect sanctification. When the claims of the law of God are presented to them, they at once show feelings of opposition and hatred. Such feelings do not reveal sanctification; for sanctification is entire conformity to God’s will.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 3

Sanctification is not the work of a moment, but of a lifetime. It is not gained by a happy flight of feeling, but is the result of constantly dying to sin, and constantly believing and living to Christ, practicing the virtues of Christ. The law shows us the defects in our character, and then God promises that “if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.” [Verse 9.]4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 4

When we are convicted that we are sinners in God's sight, we are not to sink down in discouragement, feeling that our case is hopeless. Neither are we to seek to break the mirror that reveals our defects. Instead, we should bow before God humbly, confessing our sins and claiming the promise of forgiveness.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 5

We are living in the great day of atonement. O how many forget this! In the typical day of atonement, the people of Israel humbled themselves before God and confessed their sins. The high priest took the prayers of the repentant people and, standing before the ark in the most holy place, made intercession to God in their behalf. And the Lord heard his petition and granted pardon.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 6

This is an illustration of the work that is today going on in the heavenly sanctuary. Our great High Priest is standing before the mercy seat and is making an atonement for us. And should not we be constantly humbling our hearts before God, with confession and repentance? Christ takes the prayers that are offered by contrite hearts and presents them to the Father mingled with the incense of His righteousness. Then pardon is written opposite their names, and the sins of those who have offered these prayers are pardoned.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 7

Every day our faith should increase. While we say, "I know that I am a sinner," we can say also, "I know I have a Saviour." Jesus died for sinners, and He will pardon my sins, if I sincerely repent. It is of no avail to claim to believe on Christ unless we acknowledge the claims of God's law and daily strive to obey its precepts.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 8

It is our duty to believe that Christ will pardon our transgressions. We are to plant our feet upon His promises, remembering that faith, not feeling, is to be our guide. We are to walk by faith, not by sight.4LtMs, Ms 25, 1886, par. 9

He who keeps his eyes fixed upon Jesus will not claim to be holy. It is those who have lost sight of the sinless Saviour who say boastingly, "I am holy." It is those who break God's commandments most defiantly who boast most loudly of being without sin.4LtMs, Ms

Sermon/Evil Speaking

Christiania, Norway

July 15, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in UL 210; OHC 234; Ev 244-245.

“Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.” Psalm 15.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 1

We all know what mischief an unruly tongue will do if left to run at will. Those who have been brought together in church capacity have bound themselves by their act in joining the church to keep evil speaking out of their ranks. It is the duty of those in responsible positions in the church to closely guard this matter to see that order and harmony are preserved in the church. From the light given me by God in regard to the church here in Christiania, this work has been greatly neglected. Because of this, the enemy has worked through unruly elements to weaken the church.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 2

When I was here last year, I bore my testimony on this point, through my interpreters. At that time there was a demoralized condition of things in the church. And those occupying positions of responsibility did not seem to understand the harm that the mischiefmakers were doing.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 3

There are those whose propensity it is to talk. They seem to think it their duty to watch for faults and mistakes in the lives of others. Such do not see the necessity of taking vigilant watchcare of themselves. There was one in this church who was working in this way, watching for defects, and then talking unkindly about her brethren and sisters. There were others who were just as guilty as she, because they listened to her, and in listening, partook of her spirit. Her words were as cruel as the grave, but they did not seem to realize this. There were those who took real pleasure in listening to tales that blackened the character of this one and that one. This was a cruel work; and had the individual members of the church taken the right stand, it would not have been done. They would not have allowed it for a moment. But instead of rebuking the one who carried these reports, they listened to the scandal; and in the books of heaven they are charged as being equally guilty with the one who did the talking.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 4

This kind of work brought the displeasure of God and left a stain upon the church and has greatly weakened the church. If I could set this matter before you as it has been before me, I think you would change very materially your course of action. Those who felt pleased as they listened to reports that blackened the character of others are guilty before God. But so far have some of the members of this church departed from the Bible rule in regard to this matter that their eyes are blinded. Unsanctified tongues need to be converted. Every member of the church should strive with all his power to obey the directions laid down in the Word of God. If there are those who refuse to do this, it should be made a matter of church discipline.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 5

As a church you should stand where you can represent the character of Christ to the world. You should stand where you can build one another up in the most holy faith. Never are you to tear one another down, for you are doing Satan's work. Day by day you are to help one another to grow up to full stature of men and women in Christ. In this work you close the door to the enemy. The power of speech is a great talent to bless others or a great curse to cause dissension and strife.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 6

The one who gives himself up to finding fault with this one and that one is neglecting his own precious soul. And those who allow such a one to carry on his unchristlike work unrebuked are themselves accountable before God of injury to their brethren. You, my brethren and sisters, have seen this spirit of faultfinding in the church and have gone right on as if it were regarded as the work committed you to do.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 7

Can we expect the blessing of God to rest upon a church when the members are cherishing bitterness against one another? Why is it, that when such a condition as this exists among you, that you do not drive it out? Meet together and faithfully show from the Word the wrong done to the whole church. The Word of God declares, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen." 1 John 4:20. Those in whose hearts Christ abides will show in their lives the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness. Those who are controlled by the enemy will be filled with envy, strife, malice, and evil surmising.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 8

If tonight I can speak words strong enough to arouse you to see the evil that the unruly tongues amongst you are doing in the church, I shall be thankful that I came to Christiania at this time. There are those among you who have precious talents, but they dare not improve these talents; for they fear that wherever they might go or whatever they might do, they would be followed by the cruel words of the scandal-mongers. There are in this church some who are suffering martyrdom from these unruly tongues. They feel no surety, no peace. They feel sure that they will be followed by backbiting and reproach, and they dare not take a position of trust, in which they might improve their gifts, because they fear the envy that would be aroused by the agents of the enemy, who would follow on their track and find fault with them.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 9

If one of those of whom these cruel words are spoken were tonight lying cold in death, how different would be the words spoken of him. How often this is the case! While a person is living and could be blessed by kind words, unkind, bitter words are spoken of him. But when his work is ended, and his hands are folded in death, words of love and appreciation are spoken. But the words of love fall upon ears that hear not. They are spoken to hearts that cannot be comforted. It is too late! O if some of these words of love could have been spoken in life, how much better it would have been for the persons and closed the door of reflection after them. Let us be kind and helpful to one another. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 10

At the day of judgment we shall meet those with whom we have associated in this life, and every one will then be judged according to the things written in the books. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matthew 12:37. Then those who have given themselves up to evil thinking and evil speaking, and who have refused to change this course, will see plainly revealed the words of censure and falsehood that they have spoken. And they will see the souls who have been turned from the truth by these words. There are in this city those who today would be united with the church had it not been for the envy and malice cherished and revealed by some of the members. How will those who have turned these souls from the truth meet their record in the judgment? 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 11

God desires His people to bring into their homes all the peace and joy and love that it is possible for them to have. The love that they bring into the home they will bring into the church. My brethren and sisters, you can bring the peace of heaven into the home and into the church if you will sanctify to God the talent of speech. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 12

If it were possible for those who have brought turmoil into the church to be admitted to heaven, would they not reveal the same spirit there? If their way were crossed, would they not become impatient and begin to find fault? Would they not be jealous of those whose crowns were brighter than their own? 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 13

In the Scriptures the question is asked, "What shall be given unto thee? or what shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?" What treatment shall be given the unruly member? The answer is, "Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper." Psalms 120:3, 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 14

The Bible is full of instruction enjoining us to show in speech love, patience, and respect in our treatment of one another. The love of Jesus in the soul never leads to malice and envy. The tender plant of Christlike love must be carefully cherished. It will not grow unless it is cultivated. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 15

Heaven takes notice of the one who carries about with him an atmosphere of peace and love. Such a one will receive his reward. He will stand in the great day of the Lord. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 16

The Importance of Obedience

The Sabbath of the fourth commandment has not been exalted and honored by some of the members of this church as it should have been. God blessed and sanctified the seventh day and said that during its hours no secular work should be done. He declared that His Sabbath was to be a sign between Him and His people forever, throughout their generations. [Exodus 31:13.] Of the week, God has given us six days on which to labor, but the seventh He has reserved for Himself. And to spend the hours of this day in doing our own work is to rob Him. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 17

I desire tonight to show you the importance of strict obedience to God's commands. It is dangerous to attempt to go through the world without living in obedience to God. The Scriptures declare that those who offend on one point are guilty of all. [James 2:10.] Those who love God will honor Him by keeping His commandments. 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 18

We are now living in the great day of atonement. Christ is standing in the heavenly sanctuary, before the mercy seat, making an atonement for the sins of His people. He died to exalt the law of God and make it honorable, and shall we dare to manipulate it to suit our own convenience? Shall we dare to spend for ourselves the hours of His holy Sabbath? 4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 19

Among those who embraced the truth at Basel last winter was a young man who left the school that he was attending in order to keep the Sabbath. He was asked what he expected to do for a living. He replied, "God has given me physical strength, and I will work in any capacity rather than break His commandments." Some felt anxious that he should be given a place in the printing office, but one said. "No. When he shows that he will obey God at any cost, then we shall know that he is the very man we need in this office. But if he has not principle enough to do this, he is just the man that we do not want.”4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 20

Elder Whitney came to me and asked me if he ought to give the young man encouragement to think that he would be given a place in the office. I said, “The God of heaven has presented before him the eternal weight of glory that awaits the overcomer; and if like Moses he has respect unto the recompense of reward, he will take his position decidedly on the side of truth. But it would do harm and not good to hold out before him any bribe or attraction. And yet your duty is to help him see that he must walk out by faith, but do not leave him to wrestle this battle out alone, for Satan will tempt him, and you must render him every help possible.”4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 21

God has not given us the commandments so that we can change them to suit our own convenience. The idea that the law of God is of little consequence has prevailed with many in this church, and a change must come. When all the members surrender to God, placing heart and mind in His keeping, a different condition of things will exist. Courage and faith will come in.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 22

“What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?” Mark 8:36. “To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams.” 1 Samuel 15:22. God sent Saul to destroy the Amalakites utterly. Feeling at liberty to use his own judgment to depart a little from what the Lord had said, Saul supposed it his prerogative to save the best of the sheep and oxen to sacrifice in offerings to God.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 23

“Then came the word of the Lord unto Samuel, saying, It repenteth Me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is turned back from following Me, and hath not performed My commandments.” 1 Samuel 15:11.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 24

Meeting Samuel at Gilgal, Saul accosted him with the words, “Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.” 1 Samuel 15:13-15.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 25

“And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being king.” 1 Samuel 15:22, 23.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 26

To those who have been trying to serve God and mammon in any line, I would say, Is it not time that you took your position on the Lord’s side? You may say that you cannot keep the Sabbath and attend to your business. Then change your business whatever the consequence may be. Can you not trust God? He does not ask you whether or not it is convenient for you to keep the Sabbath. He asks you to keep it at whatever cost. The Sabbath is often desecrated because it is convenient. God forbid. On this point there is great danger in all our churches.4LtMs, Ms 26, 1886, par. 27

Sermon/Building on the Rock

Copenhagen, Denmark

July 25, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in TDG 215; Ev 595-596.

July 25, 1886

(Morning talk at Copenhagen by Mrs. E. G. White,)

“Whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 1

“And everyone that heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.” Matthew 7:24-27.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 2

As the people sat upon the hillside, listening to the words of Christ, they could see valleys and ravines through which the mountain streams found their way to the sea. In summer these streams often wholly disappeared, leaving only a dry and dusty channel. But when the wintry storms burst upon the hills, the rivers became fierce, raging torrents, at times overspreading the valleys, and bearing everything away on their resistless flood. Often, then, the hovels reared by the peasants on the grassy plain, apparently beyond reach of danger, were swept away. But high upon the hill were houses built upon the rock. In some parts of the land were dwellings built wholly of rock, and many of them had withstood the tempests of a thousand years. These houses were reared with toil and great difficulty. They were not easy of access, and their location appeared less easy of access than the grassy plain. But they were founded upon the rock; and wind and flood and tempest beat upon them in vain. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 3

Those who hear and obey the words of Christ are building upon the rock, and when the tempest comes, their house will not be overthrown. They will through faith in Christ Jesus gain eternal life. Those who are hearers, but not doers of His words, are building upon a foundation of uncertainty which is sand, and calamity will overtake them. Had Adam and Eve heeded the words that God spoke to them in the beginning, they would not have fallen from their first estate. Our Saviour met temptation in a stronger, fiercer form than it was presented to Adam, and His only weapon was one that is within the reach of all—the Word of God. When Satan came to Christ in His weakness, and told him to satisfy His hunger by turning the stones into bread, and thus prove Himself to be the Son of God, Christ answered, “It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.” Matthew 4:4. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 4

Just before speaking the words that I have taken for my text, Christ spoke words of special warning: “Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat.” Matthew 7:13. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 5

The reason so few find the way that leads to heaven and safety is that they do not heed the words of Christ. They may hear them, but this does not avail if, after hearing, they still follow in their own course of unbelief and sinful indulgences, and then when they are not blessed, complain, as is represented in the 58th chapter of Isaiah. To lose eternal life is to lose everything. Let us put forth every effort in our power to press through the strait gate and walk in the narrow path that leads to heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 6

We shall meet with false doctrines of every kind, and unless we are acquainted with what Christ has said, and are following His instructions, we shall be led astray. One of the most dangerous of these doctrines is that of false sanctification. There are those who claim to be holy, and yet are breaking God’s commandments. Their assertion that they are sinless is false and should not be received. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 7

Holiness means perfect obedience to God's law—"Thou shalt" and "thou shalt not." Those who pay no heed to this law, except to tear it down by their unsanctified actions, are in rebellion against God and cannot possibly be holy. Not only do they break the law themselves, but by their transgression they teach others to break it; and unless they repent, heavy will be their punishment. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 8

Christ declared, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Matthew 5:17, 18. And He says again, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Matthew 7:20. Are those who so boldly claim to be sanctified doing the works of Christ? Are they holding up before the people the law of God given on Mount Sinai? They declare that they have with them the power of God, but the Scriptures declare: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isaiah 8:20.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 9

Christ declares, "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven. Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils: and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." Matthew 7:21-23.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 10

Another doctrine that will be presented is that all that we have to do is to believe in Christ—to believe that He has forgiven our sins, and that after we are forgiven, it is impossible for us to sin. This is a snare of Satan. It is true that we must believe in Christ. He is our only hope of salvation. But it is also true that we must work out our individual salvation daily in faith, not boastingly, but with fear and trembling. We are to use every power of our being in His service, and after we have done our utmost, we are still to regard ourselves as unprofitable servants. Divine power will unite with our efforts, and as we cling to God with the hand of faith, Christ will impart to us His wisdom and His righteousness. Thus, by His grace we shall be enabled to build upon the sure foundation. 4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par.

It is not the purpose of God that we should be dwarfs in the religious life. He desires us to be constantly growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth. He wants us to be able to do better work for Him today than we did yesterday. He has for us a heaven full of blessings, and He wants us to claim these blessings, and in our humanity sanctified, glorify God as His obedient disciples.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 12

As we follow on step by step to know the Lord, we need not expect that the way will be free from hindrances. Just as surely as we strive to serve the Lord, so surely will Satan put forth every effort in his power to accomplish our ruin. But help has been laid upon One that is mighty, and to every struggling child of His who asks Him for grace, believing, He comes with the needed aid. We have an all-powerful Saviour who was victorious in His assumed humanity, and we are to press forward in the work of overcoming in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. In His strength, which we claim by faith, we are gaining the victory over sin. As temptation after temptation comes to us, we shall remember the conflict that we last gained and shall be armed with increased strength for the next conflict before us. Thus, through the blood of the Lamb and the word of His testimony, we are to overcome evil and become established.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 13

Let us make the Scriptures our rule of life. Let us search them diligently and carry out in the daily life the principles that they teach. This is the only genuine higher education possible for us to obtain. In doing this, we shall not only be placing ourselves in close connection with Christ, but we shall help those around us to reveal the power of His grace in doing His commandments. We are enjoined: "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." Hebrews 12:13. We are to keep the example ever before us. If we allow our own feet to be turned out of the narrow path, there are others who will follow the wrong example we set. But if we walk in the narrow path that leads to life eternal, many others may follow us in safe paths. We cannot afford to make a mistake in our steps, lest others be led in false paths.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 14

We cannot be too careful of our influence. If thoughts of unbelief come into your mind, do not utter them. To speak words of unbelief is to sow the seeds of doubt. Those who talk unbelief not only weaken their own faith, but the faith of others. It is our privilege to talk faith and to act faith. The harvest reaped by those who do this will be one of hope and blessedness.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 15

Wherever we go, we may hear words of skepticism. But it is not so common to hear words that establish faith in Jesus. God wants us to be channels of light, not of darkness. He desires us to use in His service every power that He has given us. Our eyes, our ears, our lips, our feet and hands—every gift and capability that we possess—belong to God. All that we do and say should tend to build one another up in love and unity. In unity there is strength; in division, weakness. God wants us to press together. He is waiting to give us the strength that will enable us to overcome the powers of darkness.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 16

In the last days, Satan will work with great power, doing wonders and performing miracles in the sight of men. Why? because he knows his time is short. His agents will have power to deceive. The Word of God declares that if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect. Therefore, we must have a sanctified spirit and discernment. Our only safety is in doing just as Christ has told us. The Saviour has said, “Many shall come in My name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.” Matthew 24:5. Those who are heeding the words of Christ will not be deceived. They have an infallible guide. Their house is built on the eternal rock, and the storms of trial and temptation cannot overthrow it.4LtMs, Ms 27, 1886, par. 17

Sermon/The Hope Set Before Us

Nimes, France

October 24, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 104-107. +^{Note}One or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

As John thought of the love of Christ, he was led to exclaim, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we might be called the sons of God." [1 John 3:1.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 1

People think it a privilege to see a royal personage, and thousands go great distances to see one. How much greater privilege it is to be sons and daughters of the Most High. What greater privilege could be conferred on us than to be given entrance into the royal family?4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 2

In order to become the sons and daughters of God, we must separate from the world. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate," the Lord says, "and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters." [2 Corinthians 6:17, 18.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 3

In separating from the world, we shall encounter difficulties on every hand. But here is comfort for us: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." [1 John 3:2.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 4

There is a heaven before us, a crown of life to win. But to the overcomer only is the reward given. He who gains heaven must be clothed with the robe of righteousness. "Every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." [Verse 3.] In the character of Christ there was no discord of any kind. And this must be our experience. Our lives must be controlled by the principles that controlled His life. 4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 5

Are we keeping our eyes fixed upon the perfect pattern, or are we lowering the standard? We need the faith that works by love and purifies the heart. We need to bring Christ into our homes. We cannot afford to be without His help. He says, "Ye are the light of the world." [Matthew 5:14.] He has brought His people together in church capacity in order that He may teach them to put off the world and prepare for heaven. He came to this world to raise men and women from the degradation of sin and fit them for heaven. What more could God have done for us than He has done? And how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? 4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 6

The love that Christ has shown for us is without a parallel. He died that we might have everlasting life. But in order to obtain this life, we must have strength from the Source of all strength. The way of salvation has been opened before us. Shall we not walk in the path of duty? Many think that Christ is a long way off and cannot hear when we cry to Him. But He is close to us, and He is acquainted with our weakness and our needs. He has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. He understands our true condition. We should study His life more closely, and gain a deeper knowledge of Him and of what He has done for us. If we are His representatives, we must seek to be like Him. 4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 7

We must work while it is day, and watch constantly. Our hearts must be imbued with the love of Christ. Then we can obey. Then we shall be prepared to reach out after others. If Christ is in our hearts, we shall reveal this to those whom we are trying to help, and they will be drawn to Him. 4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 8

Christ is soon to come the second time. Of this we should often talk. It should be the uppermost thought in our minds. He is coming, with power and great glory, and every eye shall see Him. All the holy angels will accompany Him. Of this company John writes, "I beheld and heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders, and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands."

[Revelation 5:11.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 9

The trumpet has not yet sounded. Those who have gone down into the grave have not yet cried, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" [1 Corinthians 15:55.] The righteous dead have not yet been caught up with the living saints to meet their Lord in the air. But the time is near when the words spoken by the apostle Paul will have their fulfilment, "The Lord Himself will descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." [1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 10

In order for us to be like the Saviour, we must be changed. Now is the time for us to bring into the daily life the virtues of Christ's life. We have no time to lose. Should we fail in our character building, we shall lose eternal life. We must build on the true foundation. If we bring to the foundation material represented by hay, wood, and stubble, our building will not stand the test of the judgment. We must do the work of Christ and be constantly watching and praying. Then we shall be ready for His appearing, prepared to receive eternal life.4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 11

All who will can be overcomers. Let us strive earnestly to reach the standard set before us. Christ knows our weakness, and to Him we can go daily for help. It is not necessary for us to gain strength a month ahead. We are to conquer from day to day.4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 12

This earth is the place of preparation for heaven. The time spent here is the Christian's winter. Here the chilly winds of affliction blow upon us, and the waves of trouble roll against us. But in the near future, when Christ comes, sorrow and sighing will be forever ended. Then will be the Christian's summer. All trials will be over, and there will be no more sickness or death. "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away." [Revelation 21:4.]4LtMs, Ms 28, 1886, par. 13

Talk/Gaining a Fitness for Heaven

Nimes, France

October 31, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 113-116. +^{Note}One or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

“Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. ... For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.” [Matthew 6:19-21.] 4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 1

While it is lawful for us to acquire means, the money that we possess should be regarded as ours only in trust, not to be squandered, but spent in the Lord’s service. It should be our determined purpose to obey the orders of our Captain, and thus lay up for ourselves heavenly riches. Then when everything in this world perishes, we shall have a treasure in the heavens, which faileth not. 4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 2

There is force in the following words, “No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.” [Verse 24.] 4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 3

If we are constantly thinking of and struggling for the things that pertain to this life, we cannot keep our thoughts fixed on the things of heaven. Satan is seeking to lead our minds away from God and to center them on the fashions, the customs, and the demands of the world, which bring disease and death. God has given us reasoning powers, and these powers we should use to the best account in preserving the strength of our bodies, that we may have strong, healthy minds. 4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 4

In this world we are to obtain a fitness for the higher world. God has left a trust with us, and He expects us to use all our faculties in helping and blessing our fellow men. He calls for our best affections, our highest powers, and He is dishonored when we follow a course that brings weakness and disease upon the physical and mental powers.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 5

“Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.” [Verses 28, 29.]4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 6

Let the mother take her children with her into the field or garden and from the things of nature draw lessons that will point them to nature’s God and aid them in the struggle against evil. Let her point them to the lofty trees, the shrubs, and the carpet of green that covers the earth. Let her teach them how the lily, striking its roots down deep through the mire into the sand below, gains nourishment that enables it to send up a pure, beautiful blossom. Then let her show them how, by rejecting that which is impure, and choosing that which is pure, they may grow up into pure, noble men and women.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 7

The children need to be given lessons that will nurture in them courage to resist evil. Point them from nature to nature’s God, and they will thus become acquainted with the Creator. “How can I best teach my children to serve and glorify God?” should be the question occupying the minds of parents. If all heaven is interested in the welfare of the human race, should not we be diligent to do all in our power for the welfare of our children?4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 8

“The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world.” In rightly training and molding the minds of their children, mothers are entrusted with the greatest mission ever given to mortals. Yet how often we see mothers taxing their physical strength in adorning the bodies of their children, and spending thus the precious time that ought to be used in training aright their mental and spiritual faculties. Mothers need to study the Scriptures more and the fashion plates less; for we are on this earth to form characters for eternal life.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 9

Parents should exercise great care in regard to the food placed before their children. Drunkards are only too often made by lessons of intemperance learned in the home. Let the children be given food that will build up mind and body, but keep away from them the highly seasoned dishes that would arouse a desire for still stronger stimulants.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 10

The use of tobacco and strong drink has a great deal to do with the increase of disease and crime. Tobacco is a slow, insidious, but most malignant poison, and its use is working untold harm. Boys begin the use of tobacco at a very early age. The habit thus formed, when body and mind are especially susceptible to its effects, undermines the physical strength and corrupts the morals.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 11

No argument is needed to show the evils of the use of intoxicating drink. The bleared, besotted wrecks of humanity—souls for whom Christ died, and over whom angels weep—are everywhere. They are a blot on our boasted civilization. They are the shame and curse and peril of every land.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 12

Paul declared that he kept his body under, lest after he had preached to others, he himself should be a castaway. [1 Corinthians 9:27.] Those who in ancient time ran for a prize realized the importance of temperate habits, and how much more should we, who are running a race for a heavenly crown. We should put forth every effort to overcome evil. Christ came to set us an example of how to overcome. He endured a fast of forty days, and He has made it possible for man to overcome on the point of appetite. The battle is before us. We must fight valiantly. If we are successful, we shall one day realize the fulfilment of the promise, “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His throne.” [Revelation 3:21.]4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 13

Precious promises have been given us, and in view of this, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.4LtMs, Ms 29, 1886, par. 14

Christ left heaven that we might be redeemed from the depths of sin and degradation, and that we might have eternal riches. Our characters are photographed on the books of heaven, and from these books we are to be judged. What have we done with the talents that God has given us? Have we exerted our influence on the right side? Have we set the proper example, or have we been following the fashions of the world? Have we used our powers in God's service? Do our lives reflect light to those around us? God expects every one to make the best use of his faculties. If we fulfil the mission that has been assigned us, the results will be seen in the kingdom of God, and to us will be spoken the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant: ... enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." “If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples. As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you; continue ye in My love. If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love, even as I have kept My Father’s commandments, and abide in His love.” [John 15:7-10.] God holds up before us a high standard—perfect obedience to His law. Only through obedience, and faith in the Saviour, can we gain eternal life. Christ pitied the fallen race, and gave His life for them, that, through His grace, they might be overcomers, and at last enter the city of God. Should we not show our appreciation for the great sacrifice made in our behalf? Should not our hearts be filled with gratitude to God for the gift of His Son? Should not the love shown for us awaken in us an earnest desire to bring our lives into conformity to the will of God?4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 1

Christ came to this earth because the law was so sacred and so immutable that not one jot or tittle of it could be changed to meet man in his fallen condition. Christ clothed His divinity with humanity and by His death made it possible for man to be restored to the favor that Adam lost.4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 2

It is our duty to search the Scriptures and from them learn our duty. My brethren and sisters, go to the Bible, and from it learn God’s will concerning you. If you rely upon human beings for instruction, you may be misled in regard to your duty. Let us not hold the doctrines of men, but the truths of God’s Word.4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 3

We must not think that by walking in the path of obedience we shall escape trials; for the enemy will do all in his power to hinder us from gaining heaven. But the Saviour has promised to help us. Have you trials? So had Jesus. Are you tempted? So was He—in all points like as we are. He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not. “But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God.” [John 1:12.] “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.” [1 Corinthians 10:13.] 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 4

When Christ was upon this earth, the people flocked to hear Him. So simple and plain were His words that the most unlearned among the people could understand Him, and His hearers listened as if spellbound. This enraged the scribes and Pharisees. They were filled with envy because the people listened so attentively to the words of this new teacher. They determined to break His hold upon the multitudes. They began by attacking His character, saying that He was born in sin, and that He cast out devils through the prince of the devils. Thus were fulfilled the words, “They hated Me without a cause.” [John 15:25.] The Jewish leaders maligned and persecuted the One who is chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 5

As we separate from the world and its customs, we shall meet with the displeasure of worldlings. The world hated the One who was the very embodiment of virtue, because He was better than they were. The servant is not greater than his Lord. If our ways please God, the world will hate us. If the Majesty of heaven came to this world, and endured a life of humiliation and a death of shame, why should we shrink back because obedience involves a cross. If He was persecuted can we expect better treatment? 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 6

Christ laid the truth before the Jewish people and called them to obedience. If they had accepted His counsel, they would not have cherished hatred in their hearts. But Christ declared, “Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven.” [Matthew 5:20.] 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 7

It is not enough to profess the religion of Christ. This religion must be lived. All sin is to be put away, and the law of God is to be obeyed. The truth must be given the first place in the life. Christ represents the truth as leaven, which a woman hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. The truth is to continue to work in the life until the whole character is transformed. 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 8

“The entrance of Thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple.” [Psalm 119:130.] A casual reading of the Scriptures will not answer. The Bible must be closely and diligently searched. As we make this book the man of our counsel, our hearts will be filled with love for the heavenly Father, who, through the ministration of angels, is ever watching over us. Could our eyes be opened, we should see heavenly messengers guarding and keeping us from the attacks of evil angels and protecting us from harm and accident. 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 9

I point you to the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world. He will comfort and sustain all who come to Him for help. Our Saviour did not remain in the tomb. He rose from the dead and is now making intercession for us. He wants to take the garments of sin from those who desire a better world than this and clothe them with the robes of His righteousness. He is a living, all-powerful Saviour, and we ought to have unwavering faith in Him; for He says, “Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do.” [John 14:13.] Let us seek a close connection with Christ; for thus only can we grow in grace and in a knowledge of the truth. 4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 10

An eternal weight of glory and a life that measures with the life of God await the overcomer. Our minds should be constantly dwelling on the goodness of God and the future home of the saints, and we should ever be striving for perfection of character, that at last we may be given entrance into the city of God. Outside of the city there will be those who love and make a lie, and with them there will be those who have distrusted God. How important, then, that we have the love of Christ in our hearts and cherish constantly the Spirit that will lead us to obey our Creator.4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 11

Let us take our stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel. Those who at the coming of Christ are standing under the black banner of rebellion cannot enter into immortal life. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." [Revelation 22:14.] When you are tried and tempted, remember that Jesus is your helper. He will give you grace to resist every temptation, if you will strive to walk in harmony with the precepts of God.4LtMs, Ms 30, 1886, par. 12

Sermon/Giving Up Our Will for God's Will

Torre Pellice, Italy

November 7, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 5MR 253-256. +^{NoteOne} or more typed copies of this document contain additional Ellen White handwritten interlineations which may be viewed at the main office of the Ellen G. White Estate.

“I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.” [John 8:12.] 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 1

Those who walk in obedience will know what truth is. But the heart that is separated from the truth has no relish for sacred things, because the truth condemns that which it holds dear. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 2

Christ says, “I am the good shepherd, and know My sheep, and am known of Mine.” [John 10:14.] In order to know the truth, we must be willing to obey. Those whose affections are placed on the world are not willing to give up their plans for the plans of Christ. They walk in darkness, not knowing whither they go. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 3

The precious light of truth flashes upon the pathway of every one who seeks for it. But iniquity abounds, and for this reason the love of many waxes cold. Those who would be successful in fighting the battles of the Lord must have on the whole armor. They must hold up before the world the One who is able to save to the uttermost all who come to Him. They must put away sin; for this God hates. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 4

What is sin? John defines it in these words, “Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law.” [1 John 3:4.] Obedience to the law is the standard held up before us. There is no reason why we should be transgressors. We may be Christians in every sense of the word. By constant prayer we are to bring Christ into our lives. From Him we are to receive the grace that will enable us to overcome. Only by receiving this grace can we go on from strength to strength and gain a fitness for eternal life. We shall have conflicts and temptations to meet, and we are to meet them in the Spirit of Christ. The Saviour says, "My grace is sufficient." [2 Corinthians 12:9.] 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 5

We shall be known by the fruit that appears in our lives. A pure fountain will not send forth an impure stream, neither will a true Christian utter words of abuse, or enter into contention with those around him. When we set our hearts on God, we shall have a constant battle to fight; for we have the enemy of all righteousness to contend with. In every conceivable way he will seek to discourage us and cast us down. The world stands opposed to Christ and His work. But those who are striving to do the will of God have this consolation—they are united with the highest authorities of heaven. Trusting in Christ, and advancing step by step, the children of God will gain the victory. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 6

If we desire a place in the world to come, we must bring our will into subjection to the will of God. We must follow the light that shines upon our pathway. To go contrary to this light is to walk away from Christ. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 7

It should be our highest aim in life to get ready for heaven. Sanctification is not the work of a moment, but of a lifetime. The sinner must repent of his sin and come to Jesus for pardon. The promise is, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." [1 John 1:9.] "We know that He was manifested to take away our sins, and in Him is no sin." "Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not." [1 John 3:5, 6.] Many are deceived on this point. Their minds are confused, and they do not know what sin is. But they can know, by studying the Word of God. 4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 8

There is a higher standard for us to reach than we have yet reached. We must be cleansed from all unrighteousness. Paul says, "I have not ceased to warn you from house to house." [Acts 20:31, 20.] Why did he do this? Because the law was transgressed.

He himself, when he saw his true condition, exercised repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. Let no one think that while he is living in transgression he will be allowed to enter the gates of the holy city. Those who when Christ comes are in rebellion against God will not be admitted to the courts above. No rebel will enter heaven.4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 9

Daily we are to be preparing for the kingdom of glory. God's standard is to test our character. If we endure the test, we shall be given a place among the redeemed.4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 10

We must bring heaven into our hearts, into the daily life. Christ is an all-powerful helper, and those who follow Him will not walk in darkness, but will understand the thoughts of heaven. They will understand the voice of the true Shepherd and will walk in obedience.4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 11

We must search the Scriptures for ourselves. As we search them as for hidden treasure, the truths that we find will give us strength to stand in the day of God. God holds us responsible for those around us. There are sinners to save, souls to be won. Shall we allow iniquity to separate us from Christ, from the work that He has given us. Let each one of us say, I will not disappoint the Saviour. He shall not have died for me in vain. I want to praise Him through all eternity. I must have heaven at any cost.4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 12

Would you see the King in His beauty? Would you stand around the great white throne? Then you must obey God's commandments, because none will enter heaven who refuse to accept the law of Jehovah as the rule of life.4LtMs, Ms 31, 1886, par. 13

We have just said farewell to three of our responsible men in the office who were summoned by the government to serve for three weeks of drill. It was a very important stage of our work in the publishing house, but the government calls do not accommodate themselves to our convenience. They demand that young men whom they have accepted as soldiers shall not neglect the exercise and drill essential for soldier service. We were glad to see that these men with their regimentals had tokens of honor for faithfulness in their work. They were trustworthy young men.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 1

These did not go from choice, but because the laws of their nation required this. We gave them a word of encouragement to be found true soldiers of the cross of Christ. Our prayers will follow these young men, praying that the angels of God may go with them and guard them from every temptation.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 2

The same night there was beautiful music and fireworks close by across the road. There is an extensive beer garden owned by the city and carried on by the city. This garden is made attractive with flowers and shrubs and noble trees, giving a nice shade. There are seats that will accommodate hundreds, and little oval tables are adjusted before these seats, and this most beautiful instrumental music is played by the band; and when there is danger of customers becoming less, then there is something new to draw in both men and women. This is a popular beer garden.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 3

Sunday afternoon and evening crowds visit this place made most attractive to secure the higher class while there is beer drinking and dancing; and as the stimulus of beer makes the visitors very talkative and lively, there is much noise and confusion. There are always those who devote time to practicing shooting at a mark. All this is in keeping with the laws of Switzerland; but should the press be run which is in the basement, disturbing no one, the office would serve a warrant upon the proprietor for working [on] Sunday. This is the consistency of these city laws.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 4

A short time since in riding out one Sunday, we met hundreds of people, men, women, and children with baskets, looking heated and weary. They, many of them, had mugs in their hands. They were coming quite a distance to assemble in some of the beer gardens. They took their bread, and their repast was of bread and beer. Almost every beautiful location of groves and gardens is converted into a beer garden. We saw whirling tents [with] men, women, and children within them, riding on wooden horses. There was a large swing; a man was laboriously turning a crank to make the swing revolve. There were baskets of fruit and bread for merchandise, and people who had no better chance had a table placed outside the house, and the family and friends, men, women, and children, were accommodated with their foaming mugs of beer; and as they began to be exhilarated, they laughed and talked fast and loud, and then we met large numbers staggering along, hardly able to walk straight, puffing their cigars, and they appeared to be without nobility and could hardly reason. But all this is considered according to law. It would be difficult to estimate the number of these beer gardens. While the authorities are very zealous to inflict the penalty for a good work on the first day of week in our missionary house, they tolerate any kind of pleasure in beer drinking, practicing shooting, and all is considered to be a good thing.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 5

A few weeks since, quite a number of the office hands went up to the Rigi. We first rode on the cars to Lucerne sixty miles, then we took a steamer which brought us to the place where we take the cars for to ascend the mountain. The name of the town is Vitznaa and Arth in connection. The car consists of one carriage holding fifty-four persons not divided into compartments. It is more like a city railway car. The gauge is that of ordinary railways. Between the rails in the center run two others close together provided with teeth on which a cog wheel under the locomotive works. The train is propelled upward by steam power. In descending, the speed is regulated by an ingenious mode of introducing atmospheric air into the cylinder. The carriage for passengers is placed both in ascending and descending above or before the engine to which it is not connected by coupling. In case of accident it can be stopped almost instantaneously. The speed does not exceed four miles an hour. The Rigi [is] 5,905 feet above the Lake of Lucerne. There is a group of mountains ___ miles in circumference lying between the Lakes of Lucerne, Zug, and Lowery. The cars pass through a wooded, hilly country. We pass farm houses—beautiful and expensive buildings. The Rigi Hotel is a very beautiful building, but far, far above to the _____ Hotel is our destination. This route seemed so much like California. In reaching the summit, there are precipices far, far down with rapid streams passing through them; fresh green pastures with many cattle feeding. The name Rigi is applied to the north peaks only which, owing to its isolated position, commands a singularly beautiful scenery spread out to the senses like a panorama of three hundred miles of circumference. Several new hotels have been erected for the accommodation of travelers. The Rigi is new, one of the most popular resorts of Switzerland. The view of the lake is greenish, bluish water—is seen giving a most beautiful sight to the eyes, and as we slowly ascend becomes more lovely.⁴*LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 6*

The train after twenty minutes ascending brings us into a projecting conglomerated rock by means of a tunnel eighty-two yards long and crosses a ravine seventy-five feet deep by a bridge upheld by two iron pillars. This is a very interesting point in the journey. In a few minutes we reach a watering place and station at Freibergen. From this point the line is double [for] five miles [to] Kaltbad, 4,728 feet from the level, or from the Lake Lucerne. Here is built a health resort on a plateau sheltered from the north and east winds. This place looked interesting, and I would have much liked to have spent some hours here. A path leads through a narrow opening in the rock to the left of the hotel to St. Michael's Chapel. The walls, I learn, are hung with numerous tablets. One records that two pious sisters sought refuge here from persecutions of a governor of the district in the time of King Albert and built the chapel. The spring (42 degrees Fahr.) which bubbles forth from the rock adjoining the chapel was formerly called the Schwesternborn in memory of the two sisters. A path among the blocks of conglomerate near the chapel and onward traversing parklike grounds leads to the Kangli, 4,770, a pavilion on a projecting rock which commands a fine view of the snowy Alps and of the plains toward the north with its numerous lakes. In five minutes the train reaches Staffelhohe, then ascends to the left around the Rigi Rothstock. In some minutes to Rigi-Staffel, 5,210, the junction of the Arth line. This is a place I would have been pleased to stop for a day. The scenery seems very fine. The central part of Lake Lucerne is seen, and I am told a clear view is often gained from this point, while the highest point, the Klein, is enveloped in dense fog. From this point, the sunset is seen in greater perfection from the Rothstock than from the Klein. From the latter place, when the atmosphere is clear, the sunrise is a scene of great beauty. We climb, climb higher and still higher until we become almost giddy, and we have reached at last the summit. I am pointed to the Rigi path one-half mile on the Kunsnacht road where stands Tell's chapel. At the base of the Rigi to the [place] where we returned, we had a nice chance to view the scenery. We looked down into canyons thousands of feet and where streams of water were running swiftly. 4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 7

After we left the cars, we passed through the depot and found ourselves under majestic trees. There were seats where we could be accommodated while waiting for the boat which we saw approaching. We found ourselves in proximity to a beer garden which had been made attractive as possible. It was Sunday, and a large number of people were collected together, both men and women, and children. There was one man fiddling and singing. I wished to see the effect of this upon those present, for it was a little more close than we had ever been to a beer and wine garden. The performer was playing upon his fiddle and going through all the grotesque movements of a clown. He acted in my sight like the fools I have read about that are in kings' courts. After he had ceased singing, then there was a great demonstration: clapping of [hands], stomping of feet—for there was a board platform—and thumping of canes. I was astonished that this kind of thing should delight the taste of even pleasure lovers. And now came the drinking of beer and wine. This was apparently their height of enjoyment. Earthly and sensual! Here was a low kind of amusement which is almost universal in Europe. Drink beer, brandy, and wine, dancing, smoking. This is not found alone in crowded cities, but nearly every spot inhabited by human beings. Those in high life and those in low life, from youth of ten years to men of gray hairs who seem prepared for to be cut down by the scythe of death, every rank and condition of life is represented in these pleasure gardens. If they can find a cluster of trees or reduce it to two or one tree, you will see its shadow converted into a place for seats and tables for the people to congregate to drink beer, wine, and brandy. 4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 8

We thought much as we looked upon this scene. Here are men created by God upright, surrounded with the most grand works of God in nature that should charm the senses and inspire the heart with love and gratitude to the Giver. All these things are turned from for selfish, sensual indulgences. God has surrounded man with pure scenes to awaken high and noble aspirations and desires for pure pleasures, healthful and happy enjoyments. But man has left the fountain of living waters and hewn out to himself broken cisterns that can hold no water. How astonishing it is that man, created in the image of God, fitted for the heaven of bliss, should fall through indulgence of appetite, separate himself from his Maker and withdraw his eyes from the heaven of bliss, from Jesus who is altogether lovely, and fix them on earth; and like our first parents, continue to disobey God and eating of forbidden fruit, courting disease, that he may die! I thought as I looked upon these human beings draining their glasses of stimulus, death lurks there. He is clad in the livery of heaven and tempts the appetite, and multitudes do just as Eve did—disobey God, eat, and dying, they shall die. Sinful pleasures, how deceptive—promising much, but disappointing so many. Indulgence of perverted appetite is laying the foundation for disease and premature death. Satan has his plans matured to create an appetite for stimulus. In this he enfeebles the physical and mental powers. 4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 9

Satan has displayed his infernal wisdom in the devices that cluster around the steps of youth. The various amusements of society have been the ruin of thousands who, but for these, would have had pure taste for uncorrupting enjoyments. They might have been upright and respectable. But Satan solicited Christ to worship him, Satan. Christ meets him with, "It is written," etc. He comes to man as he came to Christ, and he is not resisted by men as Christ has given us the example how to resist him. Men, women, and youth bow to Satan in his temptations to indulgence of appetite. The only safety for our youth is total abstinence. Taste not, touch not, handle not. Abstain, restrain, deny should be the motto. One step in the direction of selfish indulgence is one step to ruin, one step in the path of perdition, following a demon clothed as an angel of light.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 10

We see youth who have been richly endowed of heaven with valuable talents in trust to be used to the glory of God, debased to the fascinations of pleasures. Wrecks are seen everywhere and thousands press on in the same path, seeking forbidden indulgences notwithstanding they have before them the lives of so large a number ruined—of no worth to society, but to act as tempters and destroying their prospects of a future eternity of bliss. Thousands crowding upon the heels of thousands to certain ruin. Why will they not open their eyes upon the fearful work that the indulgence of appetite is making? Why will they not arise in the strength of their God-given powers and roll back this tide of moral woe until there shall be an awakening and strenuous efforts put forth? The monuments of ruin will stand like sunken rocks—at times concealed from view—to wreck the barks of others.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 11

The steamer glides up to the landing and we step on board. It is crowded so that it seems next to impossible to urge your passage in the closely packed crowd. The scenery on this Lake Lucerne is very beautiful, but we see a shower arising. The muttering thunder and the lightning flash warn (us) to take shelter in the saloon below. We hasten down before the crowd gets in motion; and there out of the cabin windows we see a most beautiful sight—the large drops of rain falling upon the smooth surface of the lake look like glittering diamonds. I never witnessed such a scene as this before.4LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 12

We are approaching our landing place, Lucerne, and we begin to make our way out in the passage, but this seems a hard task; inch by inch we creep along, but the crowd is densely packed, and before we get through it the steamer is again in motion. We have lost our chance of landing. After a time we make another landing. This is our last chance. We press to the front of the crowd and step off in a pouring rain and try to get a hack; but no, every one is employed for private purposes, and we must walk in the pouring rain. We feared we shall all have to remain over night in Lucerne, which would cost us quite a sum of money. We hastened almost on the run and were told the cars were gone, but wet and bedraggled we went through three apartments and out on the platform and found the cars about ready to start. We stepped on board the train and were glad that we could have our own apartment to ourselves. We were rather a wet, uncomfortable, sorry-looking set. Ella clapped her hands and in a joyous tone exclaimed, "Now Sarah, aren't you glad you went to the Rigi? Sarah, aren't you glad you went to the Rigi?" We had a good laugh and tried to look at the matter in her light and drop out the dark colorings.⁴*LtMs, Ms 33, 1886, par. 13*

A Christlike Character

NP

July 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in OHC 176; TSB 261.

We keep Christ in the background and we do not bring Him into our hearts. I feel deeply that as a people we are not closely following our Bibles in our treatment of one another. There is not that full, entire, forgiving spirit that will bring peace and rest to the soul. I find here in Europe that on this point there are special lessons to learn, and the neglect to learn these precious lessons separates the soul from communion with God. Satan magnifies little things; and if we see that our efforts in behalf of others do not work a reformation in them at once, then there comes in a spirit of impatience, and sharp, rasping words are spoken that do not work any reformation in them or bind them any more closely to our hearts. 4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 1

Love is the silken cord that binds hearts together. We are not to feel that we must set up ourselves as a pattern. As long as we think of ourselves and what is due to us from others, it will be impossible for us to do our work of saving souls. When Christ takes possession of our hearts, we shall no longer make the narrow circle of self the center of our thoughts and of our attentions. What a wonderful reverence for human life Jesus expressed in His life mission. He stood not among the people as a king, demanding attention, reverence, service, but as one who wished to serve, to uplift humanity. He said He had not come to be ministered unto, but to minister. [Matthew 20:28.] 4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 2

I am sure that the great lesson of forgiveness must be more perfectly learned by all of us, and we must practice the Christian graces. Wherever Christ saw a human being, He saw one who needed human sympathy. Many of us are willing to serve particular ones—those whom we honor—but the very ones to whom Christ would make us a blessing if we were not so coldhearted, so unkind and selfish, we pass by as unworthy of our notice. We do not help them when it is our duty to do so, to bear with their rudeness, while we seek to cultivate the opposite traits of character. We must work the works of Christ. The greatest wrong we can do to others is to be unforgiving if we think they injure us in any way. This is a most dangerous position for a professed Christian, because just in the manner in which he treats his brethren, so will the Lord of heaven treat him.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 3

We are seeking here in these meetings to instruct not alone upon the theory of the truth, but in regard to how we shall practice the truth. The great question that is of vital importance with us all now is, What must I do to be saved? To say we believe the truth while its principles are not practiced daily in our lives will leave us in a similar position to Capernaum—exalted to heaven in point of light and blessings bestowed, yet this light and these blessings, so graciously given, were unappreciated. The Lord would have us wash our robes of character now and remove every stain in the blood of the Lamb.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 4

We see so many who estimate the character of their brethren and sisters by the manner in which they treat them or serve them. We are not in this world to be made much of, but to be helpful to others, and we must not measure the religious standing of others by their willingness to serve us. We love people who are pleasant, who have no disagreeable ways. Then let us gather to our souls the graces of the Spirit of Christ and bring them into our life, that God will not turn from us with the same disgust with which we turn from others. Defects of character close our hearts to those who need encouragement to overcome them. The Lord will then close His heart to us, if we are wayward and unpleasant, disobedient, disrespectful and irreverent, and forgetful of Him as a guest whom we should honor. Shall we require of others that deference, that respect, that honor which we refuse to give to Jesus in Christian politeness? Let our pride, our selfishness be humbled in the dust. Let self be hid with Christ in God. And remember, if we have an unforgiving spirit toward the erring, the Lord will not forgive our trespasses, but will deal with us as we deal with one another who err, who are connected with us in labor and in church capacity. ...
[Two pages missing.]4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 5

We need to have higher and more distinct views of the character of Christ, that we may copy His example. We need to understand better what constitutes a pure religious life. We must learn to be Christlike in disposition and in character. We want an increase of faith in the promises of God. He has shown us great and precious favors. He has revealed to us His glory, all loving, all holy. His attributes are blended with justice and mercy. We are not to think of God only as a judge and to forget Him as a loving Father. Nothing can do our souls greater harm than this, for our whole spiritual life is molded from our conceptions of God's character. We have lessons to learn of Jesus' love. He has been ever solicitous for our welfare. His voice is ever inviting us to come to Him with all our griefs, all our sorrows, and if we will obey the call we will be drawn toward Jesus. Now let us improve the precious opportunities to become acquainted with our heavenly Father who "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." [John 3:16.]4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 6

Wondrous love, that God, the infinite God, has made it our privilege to approach Him by the endearing name of "Father"! No earthly parent could plead more earnestly with an erring child than He who has made us pleads with the transgressor. No human interest has ever followed the impenitent with such tender invitations. Then with what tender sympathy should we labor for those who are erring and sinful, who are perishing around us. We must work in the spirit in which Christ worked, in the compassionate tenderness that He manifested. When we shall, by living faith, claim the promises of God, when we shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, we place ourselves on the side of Christ, and we have His Spirit and His grace to work with our efforts to bring souls to a knowledge of the divine will.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 7

"Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Revelation 22:17. Why do we not come to Him who hath promised? This is His pledged word: "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but My kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of My peace be removed." Isaiah 54:10. His voice is heard, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Jeremiah 31:3. "With everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee." Isaiah

54:8.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 8

How amazing is this love! God condescends to remove all cause for doubt and questioning from human fears and weakness and takes hold of the trembling hand reached up to Him in faith, and He helps us to trust Him by multiplied assurances and securities. He has made us a binding agreement upon condition of our obedience, and He comes to meet us in our own understanding of things.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 9

We think that a pledge or promise from our fellow men, if recorded, still needs a guarantee. Jesus has met all these peculiar fears, and He has confirmed His promise with an oath. Hebrews 6:17. "Willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath: That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." [Verses 17, 18.]4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 10

What more could our Lord do to strengthen our faith in His promises? The clean heart, the right spirit He requires of us, is the gift of Jesus Christ. Christ works to this end, and man cooperates with Christ. The divine and human effort are united. The white robes, the crown of righteousness, the exceeding and eternal weight of glory are laid up for those who love God and keep His commandments. Then let all pride, all self-sufficiency be laid at the feet of Jesus. He is faithful that hath promised. If we approach Him with a lowly, childlike trust, He will give us His grace and the treasures of eternal life as a free and everlasting gift.4LtMs, Ms 35, 1886, par. 11

Counsel to Church Members in Switzerland

NP

1886

Previously unpublished.

Our brethren and sisters at Chaux-de-Fonds, I would impress upon you the importance of clinging close to Jesus Christ. We are soldiers of Jesus Christ, and we need to carefully guard against being surprised by the enemy. We must have constant faith in Jesus Christ as our great leader, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. We must not expect defeat, and therefore there is the greatest necessity for wise-laid plans and careful management that all may maintain their confidence and war the good warfare with faith and with courage.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 1

Any mismanagement of the soldiers will create a panic and distrust, and then the result is charged upon our Leader, who is too wise to err and too good to do us harm. There must be no bungling in our plans, resulting in confusion and disorder. The soldier of Jesus Christ must constantly look to Christ for orders, especially if his course of action is to influence the movements of others. We must have confidence in Jesus Christ and those whom He has appointed to carry on the work in His army as His officers.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 2

The privates in an army have duties to perform of which they cannot always see the purpose. They are brought into positions of danger, and without knowing why. So in the armies of Christ, we must have faith in our great Commander—that He is leading us, that He will lead us and will bring us through every conflict.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 3

In the earthly warfare, with men who fight battles, the best trained and most intelligent men are the very best soldiers. A soldier needs to think and to have careful, painstaking ability in consequence of right discipline. The training of all the faculties, whether mental or physical, and the ability to use and the habit of using every natural power, are essential to help gain the victory when trial and conflict come. The best soldiers in the earthly army are those whose education has been most thorough, men who are faithful, courageous, and true. And if this be so in earthly warfare, how much more true it is of the work which we have to do as soldiers of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 4

Christ's soldiers must realize that they are not their own. They belong to God, and the warfare in which we are engaged is largely mental. The mind most thoroughly trained will do the most acceptable work. Poor soldiers will they be under any and every circumstance whose powers have, through long disuse, become incapable of exercise. It is most dangerous to the individual professing to be a soldier of Christ—in these times of special peril through Satan's manifold snares—to be inexperienced, inefficient, unable to render real, earnest, sincere service to his Lord, because he is not wise and intelligent in the ways and means of doing the best service.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 5

The servants of Jesus Christ should seek to understand the best way and manner of doing the work of God by understanding the requirements of this time. The conditions of warfare and the works required of the Christian soldier now are not what they once were, because greater light has shone upon us, and great and solemn warnings have come to us. Unless we have understanding of the times, we may, though we have the best intentions, stand in the way of our own interest and that of our brethren and do very bungling work.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 6

The claims upon Christians are perfect and implicit obedience to truth. But the manner of Satan's attacks, unless the senses are sharpened to comprehend them, will be so deceiving, his manner of warfare so different, that there will not be a preparation of defense. Under the generalship of Satan there are many deceitful, wily foes, who will avail themselves of every means to give force to their assaults on those who vindicate the claims of the law of God. They will not meet them in open warfare with arguments, but with power that is felt to press them into difficult places, to annoy, to restrict their privileges and liberties because of their obedience to God's commandments. Prejudice will be excited by the ministers and by the professed Christians who despise the truth for these last days.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 7

God's people in Chaux-de-Fonds, in Tramelan, in Bern, and Lausanne must reach a higher standard. Why, under any circumstance, should the servants of Christ, of all men on the face of the earth, leave any faculty unused, uncultivated? The greater the work, the worthier the Master we serve, the more efficient should His servants be. Those who wish to honor God will render to Him the very best and most thorough service that it is in their power to render. He requires every faculty, in its highest state of culture and in its most vigorous exercise. It is His due. He has bought man with an infinite price.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 8

Under the old dispensation men were not allowed to lay on His altar the maimed or the halt or the blind. And shall men and women who profess to be servants of Christ be content to offer Him blind service because of ill-trained movements and crippled, dwarfed faculties? God calls for better service and higher work than we give Him. "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." Luke 14:27.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 9

Soldiers engaged in warfare have to meet difficulties and hardships; they have coarse food and a limited amount of that; they have long marches day by day over rough roads, under burning sun. They camp out nights, sleeping on bare ground with the canopy of heaven for a covering, exposed to drenching rains and chilling frosts; they hasten at the battle call and remain in deadly encounter with the enemy—hungry, faint, exhausted, standing as a target for the foe.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 10

He who has entered the service of the Master, Jesus Christ, and expects the conveniences of life, ease and comfort and indolence; who expects to be off duty when he pleases, and sleeps at his post of duty, exposes the cause of God to reproach. Such avoid trials. Self-denial they will not practice, effort and endurance they will not attempt; but when men are needed who can be depended upon to do mighty strokes for God, these ease-loving ones are ready to answer, "Here am I, send me." [Isaiah 6:8.] Difficult work has to be done, hard work, trying work. Blessed are the ones who are ready to do it, and who are not found wanting when their names are called.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 11

God will not reward men and women in the next world for seeking to be comfortable in this world. It is true that He investigates closely our nature and what manner of spirit we are of. Those who enlist in Christ's army are to do a soldier's duty for Christ. They are expected to do difficult work and to bear painful trials patiently, uncomplainingly for Christ's sake. They must deny self. Those who suffer with Christ shall also reign with Him.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 12

Then soldiers of Christ must work in concert. Each soldier must act in relation to his comrades, else there will be a mere concourse of independent atoms. Instead of strength being carefully treasured to meet one great purpose at any moment, and concentrated on one great point, it would be wasted in disconcerted, meaningless efforts. Union is strength. A few men and women who counsel together and pray together, having the glory of God in view and acting for one purpose, will be growing in strength and wisdom and will gain victories. A good soldier will not move independently of his brethren. There is much hard work to be done for the Master. Much wisdom must be brought into this work. It is the unconquerable perseverance, the never-failing endurance which will bring the desired victory. Many have a theory of the truth, but know scarcely anything of the sweet victories to be gained through that faith which overcometh the world. There is an experience that must be gained by every individual, or he will never sit down with the suffering Man of Calvary upon His throne. My brethren and sisters in Europe, you must calmly consider what is the cost of following Christ and obeying the truth. It will cost you all, and as the reward you will inherit all things. When the warfare is over, the victory gained, you will appreciate the eternal reward.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 13

Now we are on the battlefield. There is no time for resting, no time for ease, no time for selfish indulgence. After one advantage is gained and one temptation successfully resisted, other temptations—maybe of an entirely different character—will assail you, and you must do battle again. You are gaining strength in the conflict. You must go on conquering and to conquer, gathering strength from fresh struggles, from every victory you have gained, increasing in courage, in faith, in determination. Through divine strength you have in the struggle proved more than a match for all your enemies.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 14

Oh, workers in the European fields, especially in Switzerland, are very few and do not put to the best use their powers to gain success. There is a cowardice that will not be rewarded with success. When they shall arm them like men, and be strong, then the Lord will go before them. Severe conflicts will have to be experienced, costly sacrifices made. Still they must be laborers together with God. Just as long as it costs them nothing, many will hold the truth; but when they see that self-denial and the cross lie directly in the pathway to heaven, they choose a road that is broader where they can walk around the cross without lifting it.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 15

There is need of reformation in our churches. God will test every soul, and if you have not yet been partakers with Christ in self-denial and in suffering, you ought to be alarmed lest you are not indeed followers of Christ. The world can be no criterion for you. God's own standard must be met. However good qualities a soldier may have, he cannot be a good soldier if he acts independently of those connected with him who have had committed to them the care of all the churches.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 16

One man may be of hasty temperament and cannot brook delay. He will not see the difficulties which beset his pathway and which would make his plans inadvisable; and if he moves independently, he may neglect to make a careful consideration of the situation of the future which should have an influence on the present action. Therefore there should be a consideration by careful, cautious minds in regard to every new movement that shall be made. Independent action is not then possible to any one who desires to be a good soldier in the Lord's army. Independence and efficient service will not harmonize. Occasional and uncertain movements, however earnest and energetic, may not be the best-planned and in the end bring defeat and take the place of efforts that might have been well planned and successful. One man's sight and one man's plans and judgment may so influence others' minds and others' judgment that wrong moves may be set on foot and wrong plans engaged in that will prove disastrous in the end.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 17

God's soldiers must move in order, with concentrated action, seeking in humble prayer the counsel of God and the counsel of one with another. If there is one of age, of discernment and caution, that one above all others should have a voice in every important action, that each may influence the others beneficially. All the plans are to be submitted to the officers and the ones in command, else there will be no concentrated action. There must be obedience to the ones who are set to bind the soldiers to the great center in all their plans and actions, that there may be no strange movements that will bring one spot or shadow of a stain upon the cause of God.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 18

Take a team of horses, strong and active. Let one pull in one direction and the other in an opposite direction, and one start with a jerk, the other pull back, instead of both pulling in one direction and at the same time, and what will such a team accomplish? With all their strength and activity they cannot pull the load. So will it be with the church, if there is disconcerted action and want of harmony in every movement. There will be a zeal, an activity, but not according to the wisest knowledge. They may make movements at the wrong time and in the wrong direction, and move counter to the action and plans of others, and thus their efforts are worse than wasted.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 19

None must act independently of the center. They may have most unquestionable motives and love the truth sincerely, but they cannot be good and successful soldiers without concert in action. They do not render that efficient service to the cause of God when—whether from too great haste or too high an appreciation of their own wisdom and their own powers and plans—they refuse to act in concert; they will do harm and bring in a disorderly state of things. There is need of self-restraint and caution; these are positively necessary for concerted action. Soldiers of Christ must not be determined that they will carry out their wishes and preferences independently of the common good of the cause of God. The noblest leaders in Christ's army consult together and plan, devise, and pray and watch unto prayer lest Satan shall, through someone who is not consecrated to God, introduce some plan that will eventually bring defeat in the place of victory. God can be glorified only by well-directed, concentrated effort.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 20

Every blessing God has given us we should receive with appreciation. We must move in perfect harmony and love, esteeming others better than ourselves.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 21

“Without Me,” says Christ, “ye can do nothing.” [John 15:5.] Have we Christ with us? Are we abiding in Christ? Do we seek Him most earnestly daily that He will be our counselor, our support, our helper? Do we lay aside our wisdom and seek earnestly the wisdom that cometh from above, which “is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits”? James 3:17.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 22

About ten years ago the state of the cause of God in Europe was presented before me, and I was shown that there were many difficulties to encounter there in unfolding the truth to the different nationalities. There were but very few who were not poor, and then very few who were doing anything for the support and extension of the truth. Poverty was binding them about. Those who might have been in a position to help had moved inadvisably and could not help, as they had crippled themselves both in regard to influence and means. But there was to be a work done in Switzerland, where the publishing house—as the great center of the work—was located, and there were to be men and women brought to the knowledge of the truth if the right kind of efforts should be made to bring the message of truth before those in darkness.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 23

The work, I saw, would go slowly because of the peculiar situation of things, and at every step there would be hindrances, but these things should not prevent men and women from working with courage and with faith. God will enlist human co-operation as the condition of progress of His work demands. Churches would be established where the Reformation had planted the standard of Christ. But those who claimed to be Christians, who had left Romanism, would act out very much the same spirit to hinder, as far as they could, any advance reforms. 4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 24

Those who accepted the reforms of Luther, Calvin, and Zwingli ceased to continue their reforms. They ceased to go forward, as truth is constantly opening to the people of God. Light which is present truth will shine forth in clear rays from God's Word, and those who have anchored their doctrines and their faith upon the teachings of any one favorite leader, and are unwilling to advance beyond where this man led the way, will refuse to obey the command "Go forward." [Exodus 14:15.] They will be left in the rear while the great Leader is constantly advancing, leading those who will follow, to advanced truth and greater light. This will cause those who will not open their eyes to behold wondrous things out of the law of God to become adversaries to those who will see, and who are willing to follow the Leader, lift the cross, deny self, and accept reproach and false accusations because of unpopular truth they hold. 4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 25

The men who will follow where Christ leads the way must do so in spite of foes who will be manifold, powerful, and difficult to resist, because they work in no hand-to-hand battle, but in subtle, underhanded manner. Religious bigotry will be the greatest foe we shall have to meet. It is not the human powers we will have to meet and contend with, but principalities and powers and spiritual wickedness in high places. The resources of the enemy are various, and we must not move like blind men or be ignorant of Satan's devices. The truth must go with greater strength in these places. 4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 26

I saw that God would work upon hearts and minds to bring in occasionally those who have means to sustain the advance of truth in Switzerland, if those who are poor will do all they possibly can to aid the cause of God. They have a love for the truth and must show the same. They can deny self in many ways and will do it when the truth becomes a sanctifying power in their hearts. They will lift to the very utmost of their ability. They will deny taste and inclination for Christ's sake and must be educated by precept and example to deny inclination in many ways.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 27

I was shown that the people were badly situated to make the most of their influence where they were living. They were dependent upon others who were opposed to truth for lodgings; and as the owners of the houses or rooms they hire become stirred up with enmity against the truth, by the great adversary of souls, they will do all in their power to hinder the advancement of the truth. They will oppress and restrict the rights of those who occupy their houses, that their privileges to entertain those of their own faith will be taken away; and the more the truth advances, the more will this oppression be felt.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 28

I saw that our people would be unable to hire rooms for meetings or for dwellings in which to lodge, without great prices and having their liberties restricted. I was told I would have a testimony to bear to these—but I know not whether it would be by writing or word of mouth—that they should study and devise means to obtain humble lodgings under their own control, where they could be free to assemble together and worship God and hold meetings and not be forced or oppressed by those who will make them feel their power. Many can do nothing in this direction, but those who can do this should not delay to place themselves in positions where they will not be molested, where they can entertain their brethren and sisters who shall assemble together to worship God. Much of this work is to be done. Because all cannot better their situation is no reason some should not do this.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 29

I was shown that when those believing the truth have done to the very best of their ability, then Providence would work in their favor. We know neither the numbers, resources, nor position of our adversaries, yet we are not to be cowards, but valiant soldiers of the Master. When we fancy security, Satan is mustering his forces to make some new movement of attack, and you will be left to feel the oppressing power of Satan.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 30

Watchfulness, perseverance, and painstaking effort are necessary on the part of every believer. We have a kingdom to gain, a crown of life to win, and Satan is striving for the souls of every one. In Europe the truth will make headway slowly, but it will triumph most gloriously at last if the advocates of truth will act their part with fidelity.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 31

I have suggested to different ones that some plan would have to be devised for our people to rid themselves of the yoke that they had to wear in being so dependent upon opposers of our faith for lodgings; but due to the poverty, the question would immediately arise, How can it be done? But recently there seems to be a way that this can be done, and yet not lay up treasures upon the earth. All our people should be willing to have the plainest of furniture, plain wardrobes, and deny self in many ways, if they can only secure to themselves freedom to entertain and have rooms under their own control so that they can be hospitable and courteous, and accommodate their brethren and sisters who shall assemble to worship God. Our brethren in Europe must as far as possible place themselves in positions where the money they pay for lodgings will secure to them freedom, where they are not left to the impulses and caprice of those who love not God and love not the truth.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 32

False maxims, evil customs, selfish gratifications, social influences of a pernicious character will need to be overcome by those who profess to believe the truth, if they would be followers of Jesus Christ and do their utmost to win souls to the truth. Our time to work is short, and the question is, Shall the means that you handle and pass into other hands be used in a manner that will secure to you the greatest liberty, or shall it pass from your hands, and your liberties be restricted, and you be subjected to inconvenient and unhealthful lodgings with water closets of such a character that they are pouring forth in your houses a polluted atmosphere, which is poisoning the blood? Shall there be plans to arrange humble lodgings, free from every extravagance, but where the sanitary conditions shall be especially arranged for health?4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 33

Our people should become enlightened in regard to healthful eating and drinking, and should strictly regard every ray of light God has been pleased to give us on this subject. Tea and coffee should be discarded. Both are injurious to health. But there is a greater evil with which they have to contend: it is the arrangement of the water closets in the lodgings they are obliged to hire. The health cannot be maintained when the rooms in their houses are permeated with poisonous gases from the water closets. There is only one place I have visited in Europe where the arrangement was perfectly safe. That is at the lodgings hired by Brother Ademar Vuilleumier. The Lord would have His people preserve to themselves the very best condition of health. Satan is constantly tempting the appetite. Evil tendencies within league with evil tendencies without, to create such a condition of things that the flesh shall war against the spirit, and the spirit needs to be aroused and receive power from God to war successfully against the appetites and passions of the flesh. The habits and customs of the people may be greatly changed for the better.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 34

All stimulants, as wine, beer, tea, and coffee, are injurious to the brain nerve power. They cause irritation of the nerves resulting in impatience and quick passion. And when the immediate effect of the stimulus is gone, a prostration sets in that is proportionate to the elevation through unnatural stimulus. Thus that which professed Christians put into their mouths is conveyed to the blood and the nerves of the brain, creating in the system a warring lust.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 35

There is a determined warfare before us, between good and evil, right and wrong; between God and the devil. This conflict has been incessantly waged ever since the angels in heaven rebelled. A lust denied, which is in the least degree detrimental to brain and nerve energy, is a lust partially subdued, mortified. Abstinence from every hurtful lust, in denial of appetite, brings the body into a more healthful condition to continue the warfare in stronger faith with clearer, keener perception. Thus we gain the mastery over every hurtful, health-enfeebling, life-destroying lust.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 36

We are not half awake to our dangers and to the determined assaults of the adversaries of our soul. The most difficult warfare a man can raise is against self. The complete subjection of all the appetites and all the passions must be obtained if we are not finally overcome of warring lust. We are to have constant watchcare over the state of our own hearts. There are to be victories gained over self, in a constant suppression of every evil desire, every unhealthful practice. There must be a purification of the soul temple from every defilement. There must be prompt and painful correction of every step which deviates from the laws of life and health and the laws of God.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 37

Our course must be a steady climbing, straight forward, upward, heavenward. The spiritual warfare means incessant reaching after those things which are before us, higher, better, holier thoughts and feelings and practices. It means mental struggles in which God alone can help you.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 38

In your warfare, even your friends will oppose. Your old established habits and practices will be thought to be good enough. Scornful sneers will meet you because, from an enlightened conscience, you will venture to choose a better way. Your motives will be misjudged—even your habits and character maligned. This will be a burden which you must roll on God alone.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 39

“Ye have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin.” Hebrews 12:4. We have a lifelong and incessant strife, but is not the reward at the end of the conflict worthy of all the labor? Will not the eternal weight of glory more than compensate for every wound, every grief, every sorrow? And will not every sacrifice made bring returns of treasures that are without price?4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 40

Read the promises of God which are to be granted to the overcomer, in the letter to the seven churches mentioned in Revelation. Each surpasses the one which precedes it. He who shuns self-denial here, proves a coward, will miss that glorious reward, and will meet only shame and contempt hereafter. The Lord Jesus has paid an infinite price for our redemption, and He offers us a love that passes knowledge, which love can only be received aright when the entire affections are placed upon Christ.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 41

The churches in Switzerland aim too low and do too little for Jesus. The better life which is promised us is on condition of obedience. Only those who have the love of Jesus in the soul will seek to do God's pleasure instead of their own. There must be a new, a holy affection to take the place of the old and expel the old from the soul temple. Has the real transforming grace of Christ been welcomed into the heart? Has it a constraining power upon the life and character? Love to God is a power which brings into subjection every faculty of mind and body to the service of Christ. These capacities are only the ministers that stand and wait the bidding of a heart fully imbued with the love of Jesus.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 42

Our moral nature is to be revolutionized in its governing principles, love to God and love to man. An empty-word acknowledgment of the claims of God is of no value. There must be an inward, deep principle that is the vital power in the life, transforming the character to the character of Christ. The soul must be enlightened. It has eyes, it has taste, and it is to search for truth which obeyed will lead to the beauty of holiness. The soul loves, the soul loathes, and the spiritual taste needs to be cultivated, refined, ennobled, sanctified. The state of the heart colors the whole of our lives for the present and for eternity.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 43

The lofty pattern is set before us. The religion of Jesus Christ is to raise us to a higher, holier standard to meet the divine likeness of Christ's character. "He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me." John 14:21. All who are abiding in Christ as the branch abides in the vine will show themselves fruitful. By their fruit-bearing properties they will represent the character of the Vine. God requires of every soul of us far more than we give Him. He requires the whole heart, the whole mind, the whole strength. All we are belongs to Jesus. There is need of cultivating ability to serve God.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 44

There is a feeble appreciation of the work to be done. There should be in all parts of Switzerland men and women working with faith and making personal efforts. The hardest of the soul struggles belongs to the hour of the greatest resolves. As a people, God calls upon us to do our part in self-sacrifice and self-denial. We must renounce the world, we must trample upon the lust of the flesh, the pride of life, and choose the self-denial and cross before selfish gratifications. Our people who have accepted the truth are not half awake. There are great moral revolutions to take place. The truth must have a perceptible influence upon our character and life. We must make advances and let the light of truth shine forth.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 45

Your whole duty is in willing and doing. We may seem bound about, that there is no room, no power or strength within us to do much; but a few resolute souls can do very much if they work not impulsively, but in God, and move in perfect harmony. There is work to be done. We must situate ourselves to do it. We cannot do the great work to be done in Switzerland unless we venture something, but we must, in these movements, be sure that Christ is guiding us.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 46

Every individual member of the church throughout Switzerland should pray and work to the very utmost of his ability. But to work in human wisdom will produce discord and failure in your efforts. The whole body of the church has something to do. Every individual member of the church must act his part. The cause is one—a great system through whose wondrous, harmonious working God is pleased to renew and sanctify souls and train them up to be heirs of glory. Who will refuse to make one in this co-partnership with Christ? Every member of the body has a part to act. All have not the same work. There is the head, the eye, the ear, the arms, the limbs; every part is indispensable.4LtMs, Ms 37, 1886, par. 47

Principle is always exacting. Our country claims of fathers and mothers, their sons, the brothers, the husbands, to be given up, to leave their home for the field of carnage and bloodshed. They must go and face peril, endure privation and hunger, weariness and loneliness; they must make long marches, footsore and weary, through heat of summer and through winter's cold; they run the risk of losing life itself. They are compelled to follow the commander. Sometimes they are not even allowed time to eat. And all this severe experience is in consequence of sin. There is an enemy to meet, an enemy to be resisted; enemies of our country will destroy her peace, and bring disaster and ruin, unless driven back and repulsed. Conquer or die, is the motto.4LtMs, Ms 37a, 1886, par. 1

Thus it is in the Christian warfare. We have an enemy to meet who is vigilant, who is not off his guard for a moment. The claims of our country are not higher than the claims of God. If hardships are borne and trials are endured by our soldiers when fighting in behalf of the country to obtain the mastery and bring into obedience the rebellious, how much more willingly should the soldiers of Christ endure privation, self-denial, and any taxation for Christ's sake! The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering, that He might bring many sons and daughters to the Lord. We are standing under the blood-stained banner of the cross of Christ. We are to meet Satan and his host. We must conquer in the name of Jesus, or be conquered.4LtMs, Ms 37a, 1886, par. 2

Sermon/Whom Are We Following?

St. Germain, Italy

November 11, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 5MR 256-262.

November 11, 1886

(Sermon at St. Germain, 7:30 p.m.)

“My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me. And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of My hand. My Father, which gave them Me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of My Father’s hand. I and my Father are one.” John 10:27-30.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 1

Here Christ has said, “My sheep hear My voice, ... and they follow Me.” [Verse 27.] We have the fact presented that no one could pluck them out of His hand. “Whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.” Matthew 7:24, 25.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 2

Now it is very important that we should search the Scriptures ourselves, for we are enjoined to give a reason of the hope that is within us with meekness and fear. What saith the Scriptures? for they are our chart and guide to heaven. It is not safe for us to follow any man unless his word is in harmony with the Scriptures. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 3

What saith our Redeemer? for we want to know what to do. The answer comes to walk in the light as it is unfolded to us. Our Saviour has made an infinite sacrifice for us that we may regain that which was lost by Adam. Christ offered Himself a substitute for man. He left His happy position in heaven, and laid off His royal robes, His crown, and dignity, and for our sakes became poor. He did not come to mingle with the great or to appear in splendor, but He associated Himself with the poor, to lift them up from their low estate; and for all this love He was despised and rejected of men.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 4

He says, "What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it?" Isaiah 5:4.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 5

He has set us an example in order that we may know how to walk in conformity with His will. Christ is a true Shepherd. His example, if followed, will lead us aright. How precious was His gentle spirit. He was meek and lowly in heart. No jealousy, no envy, no iniquity was found in Him. He passed over the same ground where Adam fell, thus showing us that it is possible for man to overcome. Those who follow Christ will be obedient; they will not trample on one of God's holy precepts.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 6

It is very important to know whom we are following. There are precious victories for us to gain. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." Matthew 16:24. But how apt men are to shrink from the reproach that the truth will bring and then be led to disobey the requirements of God. There have been those in the past who have suffered for the truth's sake. It was to them dearer than life, and men lost their lives to gain eternal life. It will not be surprising if we have to suffer, if we are tried. When these trials come, it may be on account of temporal things, but we must not allow the things of this life to govern us. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matthew 6:33. If we are sanctified through the truth, then we shall let nothing come between us and our duty to God. "What is a man profited, if he should gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matthew 16:26. There are many who exchange their souls for this life. But what is a man profited if he should gain this world? for he cannot have this world and the one to come.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 7

When the Son of man comes from heaven with all His glory, He will then reward every man according to his works. Here we are pointed to the future life. We have a heaven to gain and a hell to shun. Paul says, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Corinthians 15:19. We want to think of the future home where there is no disappointment, no sin, no enemy, no outburst of passion. And all of this will be realized by those who will follow the true Shepherd and obey the commandments of God. Although Satan is at war with the followers of Christ, the true Shepherd will not allow any one to pluck them out of His hand. Every soul that comes in sincerity will find help. Our heavenly Father tells us to ask, and if we ask we shall receive. He knows that we are deformed by sin. He knows our weakness. He knows that Satan is striving to control the passions of men; and He has sent Christ to break every yoke, to set before man an example, and it is for us to copy the perfect Pattern, for heaven is worth everything. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 8

Wherever we look we see deformity caused by sin, and we all need a Saviour, one who will save to the uttermost. But we must do our part to work out our own salvation. I am so glad that I have a Saviour, one who can help me. God did not send angels to this world to save man, but His own Son, who suffered and was tempted on all points like as we are, and He knows how to succor all that are tempted and tried. This is done that we may have salvation. What more could have been done than has been done? This should evidence to us that God has great love for the human race, therefore in return He demands obedience from our hands. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 9

The young man came to Christ and asked, "What good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" The answer was, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Matthew 19:16, 17. The same answer was given to the lawyer, and the lawyer told Him that the law told him to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." And Christ said unto him, "Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live." Luke 10:27, 28. So you have the whole duty laid down, and that is to keep the commandments if you expect to have eternal life. What was lost through Adam by disobedience must be brought back by obedience. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 10

You may ask, What is the value of one soul? I will point you to Calvary. The precious Saviour placed an estimate upon man, and He became poor that we may be elevated. With His divine arm He came to lift us up, and this was done by the sacrifice of His own life. He knew that man could not overcome in his own strength, and He left the courts of heaven that we might be reconciled to the Father. Oh, what matchless love! Well may John exclaim, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." 1 John 3:1. It is sin that caused this great sacrifice to be made, and now God claims from us loyalty and to walk in the light of His perfect rule and standard in order that we might be brought back to our Eden home. Christ is the true Shepherd and leader, and if we do not follow Him by doing as He did, then we are none of His. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 11

We want heaven and its joy. We want to put away sin, and it is our privilege to ask, "What is sin?" The Bible gives the definition: "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3:4. The law of God is the rule of our life, and by it our characters will be measured. It is the work of Satan to keep you from forming a right character that will meet the perfect standard. I desire that you should have a heaven of bliss, and the great gift will be bestowed on those that obey. Our precious Saviour has provided everything for us, and we should remember Jesus and follow Him. 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 12

How does Christ look upon those who claim to be His followers, who are engaged in strife and contention? He wants us to be like Him. We must become acquainted with our Saviour and grow up step by step, and thus attain to immortal life. What efforts would men put forth to honor a worldly emperor or king? If they were going to appear before such, they would make every preparation to appear before him aright. Then how particular we should be who are expecting to meet the King of kings! 4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 13

The command is, "Come out from among them, ... and I will receive you, ... and ye shall be My sons and daughters." 2 Corinthians 6:17, 18. What greater honor could be conferred upon mortal man? This life is filled with anguish and sorrow, but the promise is eternal life, a life without sorrow. This is a precious boon, and how earnest we should be to enter heaven! God has given us a moral standard and we need not make any mistake, for the rule is laid down, and it is here that we must fit up for eternal life. And it is only through obedience that we obtain it. But we have this to encourage us, that Jesus knows our weakness and He will assist us to gain heaven, and we must believe the truth and remember that we are taken into the workshop to be fitted to join the heavenly family and to connect with the heavenly choir. Then let all sin be put away, and let us bring heaven into our lives. If we let Christ rule in our hearts we shall have a heaven below, and thus be fitted up for heaven above.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 14

Oh, what matchless charm there is in Jesus! And to dwell with Him and stand around His throne, having all the stains of sin washed away in the blood of Christ, to dwell with Him for ever and ever, is surely worth striving for. Angels will attend us here and help us to walk aright, and keep us from the evil. We need to love one another as Christ loved us and be a blessing to all around us. Christ has told us that if we are followers of Him He will lead us to the fountains of living waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat." Revelation 7:16.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 15

I have chosen Christ as my portion, and I want to share with Him in His sufferings and be partaker with Him in His joy. If we remain close to our Redeemer, He has promised that no one shall pluck us out of His hand.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 16

I present to you eternal life. Will you have it? If so, here is the condition and blessing: "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Revelation 22:14. May God help you to enter is my prayer.4LtMs, Ms 38, 1886, par. 17

Sermon/"If Thou Wilt Enter Into Life"

Nimes, France

October 16, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 66-70.

(Sermon at Nimes, 10:30 A.M., October 16, 1886. Thirty present. Interpreted by Elder D. T. Bourdeau and sketched by W. Q.) LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 1

Text: "And, behold, one came and said unto Him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And He said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto Him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow Me. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions." Matthew 19:16-22.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 2

Here in this text we have our duty defined. In answer to the young man's question, "What ... shall I do that I may have eternal life?" [Verse 16.] Christ directed him to the commandments. If they were obeyed strictly to the letter, then he would receive the precious boon desired—eternal life. The young man had supposed that he was a commandment keeper, being deceived in himself. Christ knew just where the young man failed, and He touched the plague spot of his life—his great possessions. These stood in the way of his loving God with his whole heart. He was not ready to follow his Master in self-denial, and in this he showed his weakness. He was not a true lover of God. There are many like the young man. When their duty is pointed out to them in keeping the Sabbath, they will be sorrowful because they are not willing to lift the cross.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 3

Matthew 22:34-40. Here we have another case to the point. The lawyer asked Christ, "Which is the great commandment?" The answer was that he should love God with all his heart, and his neighbor as himself. "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Now it is impossible for us to love God with all our heart while breaking the fourth commandment, for this precept stands in the center of the decalogue, and in obedience fits us for eternal life. We should be as a family of obedient children, having the fear of God before us—not slavish fear, but filial fear. There is promised a reward for the obedient, and also punishment to the disobedient. Should we decree that God's law is not worthy to be kept, are we not enemies of the Lord? Would He not regard us as such? We are God's children. He has placed sacred things in our trust, and if we say we love Him and do not obey, then we have not the love of God perfected in us. But should we have our duty pointed out to us, then we should walk in the light as obedient children. Probation is given us to test us. God will not compel us to be obedient, but we must see our duty, and then as dutiful children walk in harmony with His requirements.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 4

We should also keep in mind that we have a wily foe to contend with, one that is constantly seeking to draw us away from God, but we should be determined that we will be the Lord's. We must not be discouraged and give up, but repent, and thus be represented as the good seed that fell upon good ground. We cannot expect instantaneous sanctification, but we must grow like the grain, as represented by [Christ]—first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain—and thus perfect a Christian character. We must become intelligent and earnest to know what our duty is and then walk in obedience to God's holy will.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 5

Our natural heart has to be subdued, and we will find that it is an everyday work. The promise is to the overcomer; and as we gain an experience on one point, it will strengthen us for the duties that follow; and as we thus draw nigh to God, angels will draw nigh to us to strengthen us for our duty. If temptations come, they will prove beneficial if resisted, because we shall learn to fly to Christ for help, and then we shall gain an experience that will fit us for eternal life.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 6

As God looks upon the wicked cities, He is grieved in seeing the masses turning a deaf ear to His requirements; but when men do walk in harmony with His will, then He will open new beauties and thus educate the mind how best to serve its Creator. We must keep our eye upon Jesus, the perfect Pattern, and if we do so we shall not be spiritual dwarfs. We must obtain knowledge of ourselves and depart from everything that is not like the perfect Pattern. This can be accomplished by a constant effort and by having our conversation in heaven.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 7

And if we are channels of light, we can be helps to those who desire to walk in the light. If we have the true light, we cannot keep it to ourselves, but will be ever seeking out others to whom to impart it. We must search the Scriptures in order to be enabled to discharge our duty aright. It is our duty to perfect a Christian character; and when such character is formed, then our example will tell on the Lord's side. As children of God we should wait and learn what the Lord says to us, and thus we shall receive the needed blessing to enable us to do our duty. And thus we shall lay up treasures in heaven.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 8

The young man spoken of in our text represents a large class. When duty is brought to bear upon them, they see a cross to be lifted. It is earthly treasures that hold the people, and that is the reason that so few obey God. Those who are the true followers of Christ are entrusted with sacred truths to present to the world. We have been entrusted with talents, and when the Master comes to reckon with His servants, it will be seen if we have been faithful. We must not put our light under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that all may see that we have been with Christ and learned of Him. In this way eternal life can be secured.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 9

God has something for every one to do. You may think your efforts will be fruitless, but if faithful by and by your light will shine to all parts from North to South. One will kindle his taper from another and shine. Many lights will shine, and thus God's name will be magnified, and thus we shall be co-workers with Christ.4LtMs, Ms

When Christ comes from heaven in the clouds, He will then give eternal life to those who have been found faithful to their trust. Oh, what joy it will be to those that are worthy! They can then say with the apostle Paul, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Corinthians 4:17. Shall we not work for the Master? We must put our best intellect to work for the Master. We must confess Christ to the world in His matchless charms. Christ will soon come. Have we done our work? Can we say like the apostle, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith"? 2 Timothy 4:7.4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 11

Now is the time to fight the good fight of faith. Satan's power is great, but if we are walking in obedience the angels will assist us in our work. Let us follow Christ and love our neighbor as ourselves. 4LtMs, Ms 39, 1886, par. 12

Sermon/"Come Unto Me"

Nimes, France

October 17, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 70-75.

October 17, 1886, 8 p.m.

(Sermon at Nimes, France, Sunday,)

Text: Matthew 11:28-30. "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light."4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 1

We find in our world everywhere those who are oppressed and are laboring under discouragement. Our Saviour has invited such to come unto Him. And why do they not comply? The reason is that they are separated from Jesus Christ. If they would only come to Him, they would find comfort. But it is a difficult matter to believe. Should we exercise faith, then we should accept the invitation and take the yoke of Christ. But instead of taking the yoke of Christ, many take their own yokes and thus find themselves in difficulty.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 2

The fashion of this age is not to be our standard. Christ in His day had a work to do in breaking the bonds that bound the people to the world. So it has been in every age. Satan makes yokes, and the people take them on. These yokes are heavy because they are not in conformity with the requirements of God and His ten holy precepts, but it is our duty to obey God and wear the yoke prepared by God.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 3

We have an enemy, a wily foe who presents to us that the yoke of Christ is galling. He will represent that we shall have to give up everything that would afford us pleasure, that in obeying God we must yield up our own will and submit to arbitrary laws. Satan is directly opposed to the transforming work that would fit us to be the children of God and to be partakers of His blessing. It is our duty to love God with all our heart and soul and spirit in return for what He has done for us. It is our privilege to live out the principles laid down in the Word of God. Should we do so, and carry out the teachings in our families, there would be a different order of things than we now see.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 4

Great responsibilities rest upon every parent. They have a duty to educate their children and to bring them up in the fear of God. The children need transforming, and this will involve a constant work on the part of the parent. The children must be taught to respect and revere God, and this will take a constant effort. Should this be done, we should see more tenderness of heart combined with all other Christian graces manifested in the children that have been given us. These graces must be instilled in our children, that they may be enabled to resist the evil tendencies of this age. Abraham was faithful in educating his children, and in this he pleased God.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 5

This duty cannot be performed in our own strength, but our help is in Christ, and we hear the invitation, "Come unto Me." [Verse 28.] Now the condition is to come and submit to the conditions laid down in His Word. We are not to contend for our own ways, but to conform to the will of God. We are here as probationers, to perfect character for eternal life. We must realize the merits of Jesus and seek to be like Him, for He is our perfect pattern.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 6

It is the privilege of parents to instill in their children the principles of Christ, and while thus doing they themselves are learning lessons that will fit them for heaven. These lessons will assist us to wear the yoke of Christ. We shall find it perfectly easy, and thus we may find an open door to heaven and light will emanate and shine upon our pathway. Thus every mother can receive help to faithfully discharge her duty to her children.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 7

Again Christ says, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me." [Verse 29.] We are students in the school of Christ, to learn our duty, and this involves a duty to diligently search the Scriptures. In them God, through His prophets, has given instruction as to how to secure eternal life. Shall we be indifferent to this instruction? To understand the truth will require effort on our part, but we can gain that necessary knowledge with the help of Christ. He has died for us, He appreciates all our efforts, and He ever stands ready to assist those who are striving to gain the necessary knowledge.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 8

Here is the admonition, “Come ... and learn of Me.” How difficult to enter the school of Christ by giving up our wills and submitting to the will of our heavenly Father! Christ knows our weakness. He has given us promises to encourage us by the way and is ever ready to bear our burdens for us if we will bring them to Him. In Christ is all fulness, and the Father has acknowledged Him as His Son, and at His baptism the words were heard from heaven, “This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” [Matthew 3:17.] Through Christ we can gain access to the Father. The door of heaven is ajar, and light will come to us as it did to Jesus Christ, and we can be lights to the world. We must learn humility. When this lesson is fully learned, the yoke will rest easily upon us.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 9

The question is, Are we learners in the school of Christ? Are we making advancement in divine life? Are we better acquainted with our duty today than in the past? Are we ready to confess Christ to our fellow men? If so, then we are learning the lessons required, and as Christ knows every one of our sorrows, He stands ready to render that help that we need. But if our lives are not in harmony with our divine Master, then the yoke galls. If Christ tells us to come unto Him with our burdens, why not come and find rest in Christ? We have a heaven to win. We must be sanctified through the truth in obedience.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 10

Then again there are our children. They must be guarded on the right and on the left, for temptations will meet them on every hand, and they need to be taught to come to their Saviour for divine help. Educate them to wear Christ’s yoke.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 11

It is our privilege to be co-workers with Christ. It is a great blessing to be thus connected with the Majesty of heaven. We are commanded to come out from the world; and if we comply, the promise is that He will be a Father unto us. [2 Corinthians 6:17.]4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 12

“Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.” 2 Corinthians 7:1. Here we are exhorted to keep ourselves unspotted from the world in order to be partakers of the joy of heaven. That inheritance will measure with the life of God. Should we receive the honor of this world, we cannot expect to receive the honor of heaven. What we need is a strong hold on the throne of God.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 13

Our only hope is in Christ. If we reject the Star of Light, then He will reject us. Had He not made the sacrifice for us, then there would have been no hope, and every child of Adam would have been left in bondage of sin. The golden chain that unites earth and heaven is to elevate man and bring him on a higher plane, and thus bring him in connection with the rays of light from heaven. Thus we can be made more precious in the sight of God than the golden wedge of Ophir.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 14

I wish that I could carry your minds to the future glory and could impress upon each the great sacrifice that had to be made to redeem man. It rests with you whether you will enjoy this glory. To obtain it, the will must be brought under subjection to the will of Christ. The rebellious cannot enter heaven. Satan was the first in rebellion, and his work is to lead others to disobey the mandates of Jehovah.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 15

To each one God has given talents, and if we neglect to cultivate them, we shall fail and lose eternal life. Everything has been done for us that could be done to elevate man, and if we fail on our part, then the sacrifice has been in vain so far as we are concerned. Shall we be weighed and found wanting? Or shall we be with the white-robed throng? This will depend upon your course of action. If we are in the workshop of God, He will beautify us and polish us, and we shall be fitted for the heavenly mansions.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 16

Oh, the matchless charms of our loving Saviour! There is nothing in earthly treasures. It is enough to look to Calvary. I want every one to accept the salvation offered. All have something to do, and if they come off victors, they will cry, Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain for us.4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 17

Will you have eternal life? If so, you must turn away from the pleasures of the world. The wickedness in this age is as great as it was in the days of Noah. But one man was found that walked with God even in the crooked and perverse generation. Enoch kept his mind stayed upon God, and God did not leave him, but finally took him from this sinful world. This man was a representative of those who will be translated to heaven when Christ comes to gather His people. Are we ready for the appearing of Christ? Are we constantly seeking God for strength to stand against the wiles of the enemy? Have we washed our robes and made them clean in the blood of the Lamb?4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 18

God is in earnest with us and claims all the power of our being. We need the great Physician to heal us. We need more of heaven and less of self. We must be partakers of the divine nature. Oh, what love has been manifested for us! The divine Son of God left the throne of heaven and gave His life for us, and for our sakes became poor. He clothed His divinity with humanity. Now in return are you willing to deny self and follow your Saviour? Oh, do not trifle away the few moments left us by seeking worldly honor and thus lose the precious boon of everlasting life!4LtMs, Ms 40, 1886, par. 19

Sermon/Walk in the Light

Nimes, France

October 18, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 75-81.

October 18, 1886, 8 p.m.

Sermon at Nimes,

Text: "He that hath My commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him." John 14:21.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 1

Here we have our duty defined, and are told that if we keep the commandments, we shall be loved of the Father. When those who claim to love God do not keep the ten precepts, it is evidence that the love of God does not dwell within them.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 2

The light of truth is permitted to shine that we may know our duty. The question is, Shall we follow the light, or shall we walk in darkness? Christ has told us that if we follow the world, we are not His. Why is it that we do not love the truth? It is because it cuts across our pathway.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 3

Our precious Saviour came to this world to bring blessing to us. He left His seat in glory to lift man from his fallen condition. Oh, that we would appreciate His great sacrifice! While here He was met by the archenemy, the adversary of souls, and He resisted his temptations. Christ did not leave His seat of glory to mingle with the rich and great men of the earth, for they would not receive His instructions, but He chose the poor who were willing to receive Him. There were some rich who did believe, but were unwilling openly to acknowledge Christ. We find in our day men of wealth, men the world call great, who, if the message for this time were presented to them, would turn from it because of the cross. God does not design to leave us in error, but sends us messages of mercy that we may have eternal life. Shall we accept or reject?4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 4

In Christ's day, how few realized the great privilege they might have enjoyed. The infinite God gave His Son, the most exalted gift that could be given, but it was not appreciated in that day; and while our Saviour tried to gain an entrance to hearts, they would not let Him in. They knew not that they had the Majesty of heaven in their midst. When He saw the stubbornness of their hearts, He wept over Jerusalem, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Luke 19:41. The reason they rejected Christ was because the customs and practices had more weight with them than the precious boon that Christ came to bring them.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 5

The same thing is acted over in our day. Light is sent us from heaven. Will we reject or receive it? It is our privilege to gather up the rays of light, and the more we seek for it the more the light will increase. Could our eyes be opened, we could see angels from heaven interested in our salvation, and again we should see the adversary of souls scattering darkness. All heaven is interested in the children of men. Angels are watching us and are bearing tidings to heaven of our dangers, and they are constantly drawing us to Christ. Our safety is in taking hold of our duty and gathering up the rays of light.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 6

The admonition of our text is to walk in harmony with God's holy law. By obeying it we can form characters that will enable us to stand. Should we reject the advanced light that God is now giving us, we shall be left in darkness.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 7

It is the love for souls that brought me from my distant home in America. Had I not a special message, I should have remained at home, for it is not pleasant to journey from place to place and endure the hardships of traveling. I dare not to choose my own pleasure, but to follow the light from heaven; and I must give it to the people. The end of all things is at hand; and as the people are trampling on the law of God, they must be warned of their transgression. 4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 8

John, in looking down through time, saw a remnant that would be gathered from the world, who would be in harmony with the precepts of Jehovah; and he exclaims: "Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Revelation 14:12. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in His temple the ark of His testament." Revelation 11:19. What was it that the ark contained? It was the law of God that points out our duty. John saw the people's attention called to those ten precepts; and as the light is seen, we shall be held responsible if we reject it. 4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 9

God's truth is being revealed to men, but in this age there are many false teachers who turn away the ears of the people from the commandments of God. But we should enquire, What is truth? What does the Word say? And our anxiety should be, What can I do to save souls? There is great value attached to the souls of men for whom Christ died, and if we neglect to receive and impart the knowledge given, we are doing it at the peril of our lives. 4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 10

Obedience to the will of God will involve a cross. Christ says: "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth." "I came not to send peace, but a sword." Matthew 10:34. And we find that the truth for this age, if lived out, will "set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Verses 35, 36. 4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 11

Christ will soon come the second time in power and great glory, not as He appeared the first time, when He wept over Jerusalem as the western sun was about to set. Christ was a sun and a light to that people, but that light was about to be withdrawn because of the stubbornness of those whom Christ had come to redeem. The disciples expected to see Jesus rejoice over the city as He approached it, but what a disappointment when they saw His anguish of soul and His tears, and heard His broken utterances as He spoke these solemn words: "If thou hadst known, even thou, ...

the things which belong unto thy peace!" Luke 19:42.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 12

Here was a nation that was to be let go for their iniquity. One soul is of great value, but what is that to compare with a whole nation that was about to be cast off because they would not receive the light? This is what brought tears from the Son of God. Christ well knew the result of rejecting light. He could look forward and see the strong armies of the earth encompassing that once favored city and the destruction of its inhabitants. What more could Christ have done for His vineyard? Why did not Jerusalem know what was for her good? Christ had knocked at the door of their hearts, but they refused the offered mercy.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 13

There is a boundary to the mercy of God, for He does not always strive with men. A record is kept of all the blessings offered and how those blessings are treated; and if we neglect our duty, we shall soon see, as did the Jews, that the anger of God is not withheld, but we shall be given over to the power of Satan. While it seems astonishing to us that the Jews rejected Christ, we ourselves will act out the same thing if we refuse the light for this time.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 14

The message now due to this world will continue till the close of time, and it will shine to all parts of the earth. Moral darkness has covered the earth like a pall of death, and it will continue to darken as the light is rejected. "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matthew 24:37-39.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 15

Now there is no sin in eating and drinking, but in the excess. The blessing of food has been turned to a curse by intemperate habits, and this we find in our own day. The same evils of intemperance engross the mind so that spiritual blessings are not discernible. We must put away every hindrance to our spiritual growth. When this is done, then the true light will shine.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 16

It is the humble ones that God accepts. When Christ came from His home in glory, He did not go to the talented and great men of the earth to choose teachers, for He knew He could not educate such ones. He selected poor fishermen as His companions and scholars. To these He gave lessons of instruction that would fit them for their future duties, and these lessons are recorded in the Word of God and will have their weight until the end of time. Judas was not such a learner as was John. He did not let the lessons given have a sanctifying influence on his heart; his natural disposition was not brought under discipline, and it finally led to the betrayal of Christ. But John not only learned the lessons, but put them in practice, and after the death of his Master, when assailed by the enemies of truth, he stood firmly upon the principles which he had learned.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 17

Christ did not long remain silent in the grave, for a beloved angel came and rolled back the stone, and Jesus walked forth from the tomb in triumph. After His ascent to His Father He revealed Himself again to His disciples. After this, those that crucified Christ were astonished to see the boldness of the disciples and to hear the excellent instruction that they gave to the people, knowing them to be ignorant men; but they had been with Jesus and had learned of Him. These lessons of the apostles are handed down to us, and when we connect with God, the light given to the apostles will be imparted to us.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 18

We must have more of God's goodness and more of heaven. We must work for eternity. Christ's coming is near, and we want to be like Him, for we want to see Him as He is. He will not come as the man of sorrows, to be insulted and derided, but in place of the old kingly robe, He will wear a robe so white as no fuller's soap can whiten. In place of a crown of thorns, He will have a crown within a crown, and His countenance will shine brighter than the noonday sun. Shall we then be acknowledged of Him? Shall we be cleansed and made immortal? If so, now is the time to form the character and put on robes of righteousness. Now we are to make peace with God by doing His commandments, and that will insure us an entrance in through the gates into the city.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 19

I look forward to the city of God with great joy. In my girlhood, light shown upon my pathway, and the glory of heaven was open before me. I gave myself to Christ, and it is a pleasure to serve Him. No earthly attractions shall eclipse my mind from my duty to serve God. If the curtains of heaven could be rolled back, and we could see the glories therein, this world would have no charms for us. Thank God strength will be imparted to every soul that will put his trust in God. God help us to overcome, that we may receive the crown of life that is in store for the faithful, is my prayer.4LtMs, Ms 41, 1886, par. 20

Sermon/The Ladder to Heaven

Nimes, France

October 20, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 81-88.

8 p.m., October 20, 1886

(Sermon at Nimes, France,)

“Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.” 2 Peter 1:1.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 1

Here Peter addresses his brethren, those of like precious faith, and he appeals to them to move understandingly and intelligently. And he says that he desires grace and peace to be multiplied unto them through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord. Here is a necessity presented before them of adding knowledge to knowledge, for he continues in (verse 4), “Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.” 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 2

Now if we are partakers of the divine nature, we shall have a warfare with the power of darkness. Satan will oppose every advance step, and we need not think that we can make advancement in divine life without special help from God. We must have strength from heaven if we expect to advance in divine life. We cannot overcome in our own strength, but grace will be given to every one of us. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 3

The Saviour condescended to come to this earth and give His life for us, but the world would not receive Him and in return for His goodness and mercy rejected Him. But what a condescension on the part of Christ to leave the royal throne and to make the infinite sacrifice, to clothe His divinity with humanity! Here was the Creator of the world, and the ones He came to bless rejected Him. How can we account for this insult to the Majesty of high heaven? Only on the ground that the heart is carnal. It is not in the natural heart to love the Christian graces, but the Spirit is given us to help our infirmities. Is it not a marvel that Christ came to this world, that He, being the Creator, has a special interest for the human race, and that His matchless love yearns for us and He invites us to come unto Him and gain happiness and rest? This can only be done through the knowledge of our divine Lord. By obtaining this we have strength to overcome. The flesh will war against the Spirit, but by divine power this knowledge can be obtained.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 4

The apostle continues, “And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.” 2 Peter 1:5-7. We see but little true godliness in the world. And we see a great work to be done in character building. Those who have no love for God have no relish for holy things. The first step to take to gain a relish for heavenly things is to add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge. It is no credit to remain in ignorance. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and this is to have understanding and to fear to offend our Creator.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 5

As we add the Christian graces, we are being prepared to assist others in the divine life and present to them the true principles of a religious life. I have made it my duty to instill into the minds of my children true principles that they may escape the corruptions that are in the world in order to be successful in character building. We must begin at the very foundation and carry the mind upward in knowledge, for every capacity is to be used in glorifying God. In addition to the principles mentioned, temperance is enumerated. Here you see the importance of principle, and combined with this we must be temperate or else we shall make a failure. Therefore we must add grace to grace.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 6

“For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. ... If ye do these things, ye shall never fall." Verses 8, 10. But in order to accomplish this we must be purged from our old sins. "Wherefore," says the apostle, "I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things." Verse 12.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 7

The reason why more do not lay hold of the religion of Christ is because they fear they could not hold on to their profession; but it is by faith we must stand, and unless we have faith we cannot glorify God. Christians are expected to grow to the full stature of our Lord and Master. Those who expect to be followers of Christ must make daily advancement; if they fail in this they will fall and lose eternal life. There is no safety for us unless we are going forward step by step. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 8

We have men claiming sanctification. Their works will show if they are transformed into the image of Christ. Sanctification is not brought about instantaneously, but it is accomplished by climbing the rounds of Peter's ladder of eight rounds. We must step on the first in order to reach the highest. This ladder reaches from earth to heaven, and every soul that enters the city of God will have to climb this ladder by self-denial, and this can be accomplished by laying hold of the merits of a crucified and risen Saviour. Without this strength, temptation will sweep us down the current to final destruction. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 9

But we are expected to shine; and how is it with us—do we possess the Christian graces? Are we in possession of kindness? If we are in possession of this grace, then the fruit will appear. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 10

We must put on the whole armor in order that we may secure an entrance into the city of God. We have heaven to win or lose, and to accomplish this we must take our eyes away from the things of earth and center our minds upon heavenly things. Temptation will assail us all the way through. Our aim should not be to reach the world's standard, for it will be seen in the day of God that that standard will count for nothing. Those who reach it will not hear from the lips of Christ, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

[Matthew 25:21.] 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 11

We should give our best affection to our heavenly Father. How my heart has been grieved as I have seen, in galleries of art, pictures representing Christ. The executors have shown their true understanding of the mission of Christ and His character. They have not even approached the reality, and we had better spend our time in contemplating the true Artist of nature. See the flowers, how beautiful nature has painted the various colors! Christ has spoken of the lily of the lake, and He said that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. [Luke 12:27.] If we want to instruct our children, let us take them to the lake and show them the handiwork of God, explaining to them the pureness of the lily, that gathers up the properties that are essential to build up itself to its height of purity. From it they may learn the lesson not to be contaminated with impurity. Teach them the lessons that Daniel learned. He refused that which would not assist him in building true character, and although surrounded as he was by evil influences, he stood firm upon principle, refusing to partake of those things that would have retarded his progress in divine life, and for his integrity God gave him wisdom and influence. If these lessons are learned by us, then we shall have made a good record and shall not be afraid to stand when the Son of man comes. We must not be swayed by every temptation, but must constantly grow in grace. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 12

It is our privilege to gather rays of light and not to be content with present attainments, for the Lord has an abundance of light for us. Are we pressing on to know what the Lord would have us do? When Christ comes in power with His holy angels, we shall want to be children of God and we shall want to hear Him say to us, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." Matthew 25:34. On the other hand there will be those who will cry for the mountains and rocks to fall upon them to hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Revelation 6:16, 17. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 13

The Lord of heaven has an eternity of happiness for His children in the earth made new. John says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.” Revelation 21:1-4.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 14

Here are inducements for those who will live holy lives; and those who will not earnestly comply with the requirements after such inducements are offered are like those whom Paul admonished in the following words: “O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth ...?” Galatians 3:1. If the fear of God is before us, then we shall be enabled to endure and to have a recompense of reward. I see that many of the youth will have a terrible disappointment when they find that they have lost heaven. Oh, how important it is for us to understand our relation to God and to know that we are in harmony with His divine will! 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 15

Darkness covers the earth, and it is time for God’s servants to “cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show My people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins.” Isaiah 58:1. Where is a voice of alarm to be heard? The Christian world need to be aroused, that they may stand. The ladder must be climbed. Jacob saw that it reached from earth to heaven. When at Bethel, while fleeing from the wrong he had committed, as he was lying in his lonely condition, God had pity and compassion upon him and revealed Himself to him. There was presented before him the plan of salvation. Angels were seen ascending and descending from heaven, and Jacob was permitted to see the court of heaven; and there he saw that the light was permitted to shine from heaven to the inhabitants of the earth. 4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 16

Christ is the ladder. All our blessings come from Him. May God help us to work upon the plan of addition, and He will multiply grace to us as we need. There is an abundance of light in heaven, and our heavenly Father wants us to have confidence in Him. It grieves Him for us to doubt His promises.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 17

But as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be at the coming of Christ. As men resist the Spirit of God, His Spirit will be less and less manifested in the earth. It will be a fearful time when the angels fold their wings and cease their watchcare over those who have resisted the Spirit of God. It will then be too late for wrongs to be righted. There will be no more prayers to prevail in behalf of the rejecters of light. The cities around us are filled with wickedness, and after the message of warning has been given to them, no more words of peace will be given. Christ is coming, and God will laugh when their fear cometh. But while probation continues, Christ is ever willing to help us to resist evil. But oh, the iniquity that is in the world! It is high time we put on the whole armor, lest we drift down the current and be swallowed up with the besom of destruction. A record is kept of how we treat the Spirit of God. Our characters are recorded in the books of heaven, as are our faces on photo-plates here. So our character photos are in heaven, and by these records we shall be judged. May God help each one of us to do his whole duty and get ready for what is before us, is my prayer.4LtMs, Ms 42, 1886, par. 18

Sermon/Search the Scriptures

Nimes, France

October 21, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 88-93.

3 p.m., October 21, 1886

(Sermon at Nimes,)

Text: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts: Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Peter 1:19-21.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 1

We see and feel the importance of each having an understanding of the Scriptures. There may be those who will tell us of the things contained in the Word of God, but that will not meet the requirements. We must search the Scriptures for ourselves. There are special points that we must understand pertaining to our own time. We are living in an age of error and heresy on every hand. Christ has told us that "there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, who shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matthew 24:24. These teachers spoken of by Christ will come in sheep's clothing and will delude the people with their heresies, and this we shall see more and more as we draw nearer the end. Consequently it is of the greatest necessity that we search the Scriptures for ourselves and learn their contents.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 2

Our text tells us that we have something sure, and that is the Scriptures that are revealed to us, and this is the voice of God that is speaking to us. One may come and say that he has truth, and such teachers will multiply, but we must not take their word in the matter. We must go directly to the Word. Feelings should not be our guide. The plain declaration of the Word is what is required. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Timothy 3:16, 17.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 3

You could not make a greater mistake than to take the voice of man. Those who will not hear truth, when it crosses their pet theories, will often place themselves out of the reach of hearing when they should be the very ones to hear. The same thing is acted over today as it was in the days of Christ. The Pharisees then turned a deaf ear to the instructions of the divine Teacher. But it is our duty and privilege to be learners in the school of Christ. We want to learn of Him who is meek and lowly in heart, who said, "Come unto Me ... and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light." Matthew 11:28-30.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 4

Everyone should feel that he is responsible to God. There are great interests at stake. It will make a great difference whether we walk in condemnation or not. When we are walking contrary to God's Word we are stirring up rebellion, and thus we bring the displeasure of God upon us. When Christ comes we want to be found on the side of the loyal and true. If the whole world were in opposition to God's law, it should make no difference to us.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 5

In the time of the flood, nearly all the inhabitants of the world thought that they were right and that Noah was wrong. They claimed that they knew more than that faithful servant of God, and thus closed their ears to words of truth, and darkness came upon them. There were those then, as today, who explain away the truth by false science. They branded Noah as a fanatic. They explained to the people the foolishness of Noah's statement that a rain would come upon the earth, when no signs of such had ever existed. God's message was to come to them through Noah, but they laughed and mocked at his words, and said, Does he not speak in parables? But their unbelief did not prevent the flood, and they finally drank the waters that covered the earth. We do not want to be like them.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 6

When Christ made His first advent, the same unbelief was manifested, and it has always been the same—that unbelief rejects the very truth that is necessary to their salvation. Faith comes by hearing and hearing by the Word of God. We must encourage faith and abandon unbelief, for it is a barrier to our spiritual prosperity. We must listen to the message of the third angel. This message is now due, and it presents to us a present truth. Therefore we must search the Scriptures and lay aside our opinion and be governed by the teachings of the Bible. We need to seek God in prayer that we may not be deceived, for it is a matter of great consequence that we take hold of truth. 4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 7

There is to be a mighty angel to assist the third angel in his work. The whole earth is to be lighted with his glory. The proclamation as presented represents a people crying the very words. Christ's riding into Jerusalem when the people cried "Hosanna to the Son of David" (Matthew 21:15) was a fulfilment of prophecy. The Pharisees were disturbed to see the attention paid to the Son of God. Their understanding was so blunted that they could not see in this very act the fulfilment of prophecy, and some of the Pharisees said, "Master, rebuke Thy disciples. And He answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Luke 19:39, 40. God has shown John in vision the work in the future. It was while the apostle was on the isle of Patmos that these truths that are now due were presented before his mind, and no man can stop the proclamation any more than they could stop the voices of those that cried, "Hosanna to the Son of David." [Matthew 21:9, 15, 16; Luke 19:39, 40.]4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 8

We must not be discouraged if there are only a few that believe the present truth. It is not the great numbers that follow Christ. In answer to the question, "Are there few that be saved?" the reply was, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke 13:23, 24. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matthew 7:14. Now we see only a few who regard the commandments of God, and those who will not lift the cross after having a knowledge of their duty will finally meet their destruction. We should not turn to the right or to the left, for if we do we shall find a dish of fables in place of truth.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 9

The whole world perished in the flood. Only two or three were saved at the destruction of Sodom, but they had the warning. We must not follow the majority, for if we do so we shall not see heaven. Daniel and his three companions stood alone, yet they would not yield to the influence that surrounded them. Daniel had purposed in his heart not to partake of the portion allotted. Finally the test came. But when the leading men of the realm had conspired against Daniel, he could not be turned away from God. He prayed as firmly as before, with the window opened towards Jerusalem, and he showed to his enemies that he was no coward because he had learned to depend upon God. Daniel did not try to save his life. "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it." Matthew 16:25.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 10

Now we want every one to count the cost, not from impulse, but search the Scriptures and thus learn your duty. We should dig deep and obtain the precious jewels that can be found in God's Word. Christ says that "the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field: the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field." Matthew 13:44. This parable of Christ's shows us that the truth is worth digging for. Everything should be secondary compared with the Holy Writ.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 11

We are pilgrims seeking a better country, a city whose Builder and Maker is God. Is our conversation in heaven? Are we preparing to receive the Majesty of heaven when He shall come with all His holy angels to raise the righteous dead and translate the righteous living to heaven? Satan will try to becloud our minds on this important subject. But we must so live that we can say as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." 2 Timothy 4:7.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 12

Let us increase our faith and cling close to our divine Lord, because Satan will oppose. But we should rejoice in the thought that the angels in heaven are sent to strengthen us, and we have not to fight our battles alone. And if we have these heavenly messengers with us, even if trials do come, we shall feel like Paul when he said, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Corinthians 4:17.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 13

We must learn to stand upon the principles of God's Word: "To the law and to the testimony." [Isaiah 8:20.] We need the Spirit of God to enlighten us. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." Revelation 3:20. We want to let the Saviour into our hearts, give Him our best affections, and let the work go on of sanctifying and purifying the heart, and then we shall see the King in His beauty. Let us rely upon God and realize the great sacrifice that has been made for us, and we shall wear the crown throughout an endless eternity.4LtMs, Ms 43, 1886, par. 14

Sermon/The Cross Before the Crown

Nimes, France

October 22, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 93-99.

8 p.m., October 22, 1886

(Nimes, 6th discourse,)

Text: "Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his works." Matthew 16:24-27.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 1

Here we have the plain statement of Christ that if we follow Him we must take up the cross. Self-denial and the cross lie directly in our pathway on our journey heavenward. The consequence of shunning the cross is found in the words of my text: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it." [Verse 25.] The great infinite sacrifice was made that we might be saved. By coming from heaven to this earth, Christ has made a way for our escape.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 2

Our Saviour has represented His first advent, and the treatment He received, by the parable of the vineyard. "A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time." Luke 20:9. The account is continued in Luke 20:10-17. God first sent His prophets to ancient Israel, but their message was not heeded, and as a last resort He sent His Son, that the hearts of the people might be reached and be turned unto God; but they killed His Son. This was the work of Satan by the hands of those that he has gathered under his banner.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886,

par. 3

Christ was “despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.” Isaiah 53:3. What was it that brought such sorrow? It was not on His own account, but for the sins of the people. He realized their condition, and this was the reason that He felt such sorrow as He wept over Jerusalem and uttered the lamentable words, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.” Luke 13:34.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 4

He does not say that they could not, but would not. How can we explain the treatment of Him who loved us to that extent that He laid down His life for us? This treatment was a marvel to the angels of heaven—to see the Creator of this world, the Majesty of heaven, treated with such contempt. His condescension is without parallel.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 5

The souls of men are valued by the Son of God, and if we do not value eternal life sufficiently to make a sacrifice for it, then we shall lose eternal life. What is it to lose life? It is when the truth is clearly set before us and we refuse to accept because a cross is involved. The Creator of heaven has a right to the faculties He has given us, and it is for our own good and advantage that we give these powers to God and to His service.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 6

Here is a business that man cannot give to others, but in which each individual has his own work to do. We need to give our hearts to God. To do this we shall meet with crosses. Nothing should stand in the way of duty. Even if losses in business should have to be made, it should not keep us from discharging our duty. Our purpose should be to obey God so that Christ’s death will not be in vain in our behalf.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 7

We must have the same integrity and principle that were found in Joseph and Daniel. Joseph was so established in principle that he could resist the great temptation that was brought upon him, because he had determined to obey God. Daniel was brought to a test, and he purposed in his heart that he would worship the true

God, notwithstanding the decree. He here saw that principle was at stake, and because of integrity he was cast into the lions' den. But here God did not forget him. All heaven had been watching his case, to see if he would be faithful to his God. When the trial came, angels were his companions. They stopped the lions' mouths and delivered him. When the king saw the real object of the wise men, to rid Daniel of his power, then the king was wroth and destroyed the enemies of Daniel. 4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 8

So it was with his three companions. They were tested in refusing to worship the great image that the king had set up. Those three youths did not fear the king and told him plainly that they could not violate their consciences by worshiping a false god. This caused the king to be furious, and he ordered that the furnace be heated seven times hotter than it was wont to be made and ordered those God-fearing children to be cast into it. But God did not forsake them, and those whom the king had called to execute his demands in order to set before them the penalty of disobedience were consumed by the fire. Here in full view of the king he saw in that furnace those whom he had cast in, walking in the midst of the fire, and he also saw the fourth form like the Son of God. So you can see that the king was not ignorant of God and of His Son. These three Hebrew children had been a shining light in Babylon. This had its weight and influence, and when the king saw that the God they had worshiped was able to preserve them even in such an heated furnace, he called them forth, and not a smell of fire was upon their garments. Then they told the king how their deliverance came. 4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 9

There was the case of the apostle James, who was beheaded. When the king saw that it pleased the Jews, Peter was brought forth and cast into prison; but God sent His angel to deliver him. The prison doors flew open at the presence of this mighty angel. The bands of Peter were loosed. He was awakened by the touch of the angel, and Peter was amazed because of the light. He could not understand it, but thought that he saw a vision. The angel requested him to gird himself and put on his sandals. Peter was so astonished that he thought not of his garments. God always has a care for the true and faithful, and He sent His messengers from heaven and opened the gates and set His servant free. Prayers had been made in Peter's behalf. They expected that he would have to suffer death; and when they heard his voice at the gate, they were astonished.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 10

Case after case of this nature has transpired during the world's history, and the test will come to all who are obeying the truth. He that seeks to save his life shall lose it; but on the other hand, he that is willing to lose his life for the sake of truth shall find eternal life. We want to know that heaven is interested in our welfare. Christ and angels are looking on with intense interest to see if the souls of men appreciate the great sacrifice in their behalf. We should constantly consider that we are in the presence of holy angels.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 11

Satan is also watching his chances to lead us astray. He will present attractions that will lead our minds from God. But shall we not watch his devices, and be constantly seeking the aid of God to keep us from Satan's allurements? We must press toward the mark of the high calling of God in Jesus. We must not lay off the armor for one moment.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 12

You will hear the cry "Only believe." Satan believed and trembled. We must have a faith that works by love and purifies the heart. The idea prevails that Christ has done all for us and that we can go on transgressing the commandments and will not be held accountable for it. This is the greatest deception that the enemy ever devised. We must take our position that we will not violate the commandments at any cost, and be in that spiritual condition that we can educate others in spiritual things.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 13

Saint Paul ceased not his efforts in going from house to house to warn his fellow men of their duty to love God, "Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."Acts 20:21. Repentance of what? Why, of violating the commandments; and faith in our Saviour, that His blood will cleanse us from all our sins.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 14

No one can repent for us. Each individual has this to do. Christ would not have come to this earth if the commandments had not been broken. He came not to save us in our sins, but from our sins. There is no true happiness in transgression, but in obedience. Our merit is in the blood of Christ. But men think they can transgress and shun the cross, and yet enter into the city.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 15

“For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?” Mark 8:36, 37. “For the Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his works.” Matthew 16:27. The reward will not be according to his faith, but according to his works, and the life will be eternal with Jesus. In order to obtain this we must be obedient, and not only apply our powers, but if necessary give our lives.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 16

Satan will bring his temptations, and if he is to be resisted, we must pray to God for deliverance. If there ever was a time that we needed to pray, it is in these last days. The Word is no more bound than it was when Christ was upon the earth. We shall have Satan and evil men to combat, but we also shall have messengers of light to help us. It is for us to gather upon our pathway all the rays of light, and not listen to error, for if we do we shall be turned away from truth. We have no time to listen to fables. Christ’s prayer was, “Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth.” John 17:17. We want the truth and we want to give Him all our powers, that when He comes, His benediction will rest upon every one of us, and we shall receive the reward.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 17

If we have shunned the truth to save our lives, then we shall lose eternal life. We have a soul to save or to lose. We must work out our salvation with fear and trembling. We must press against the darkness and take hold of the mighty arm of God. We have but a little time to prepare for eternity. May the Lord help us to overcome and win the crown and see the King in His beauty. Then we shall have not lived in vain.4LtMs, Ms 44, 1886, par. 18

Sermon/God's Law the Standard of Character

Nimes, France

October 23, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 99-104.

3 p.m., October 23, 1886

(Sermon: 7th discourse at Nimes,)

“Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught. And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me. If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself.” John 7:14-17.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 1

Now we want to know and understand what is the will of God. This will is expressed in the ten commandments, and if we obey them, we shall know of the doctrine. The Lord God of heaven has a kingdom, and this kingdom is controlled by laws, and it is of great consequence that these laws be obeyed. God is the ruler of the universe and stands as head, and all should respect Him as such, and obey His mandates. A father stands at the head of his family, and he requires that his laws regulating his family should be obeyed. If the family do respect his requirements, then you will see order and happiness in that family; but if it is otherwise, there will be confusion. So it will be in the government of God.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 2

Some will tell us that the Word of God is like a fiddle and any construction can be put on it. This belief is due to the rejection of God's law, and confusion follows. If the law were kept, this statement could not be made. But when men tear down the commandments, how can they know the will of God? The law was given at the foundation of the world, and it will exist through all generations; but when man forgets God by disobedience, then he places himself where he does not know the doctrine.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 3

When the children of Israel were in Egypt, surrounded by idolatry, God saw that it was necessary to bring them out of Egypt in order to renew His law to them.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 4

When people will acknowledge the claims of God by obedience, then they have a standard. If every individual would acknowledge the law, confusion would be swept away. We must do the will of God. They that do not accept the law erect a standard of their own; and as there are many minds, diverse from each other, there will be many standards, and this will establish many doctrines. In this age we see determined efforts to ignore God's law, and consequently the doctrine will not be understood. But if we know and do God's will, He will not leave us in darkness, but will lead us to know the doctrine, and that will bring happiness. Obedience is the only course to take.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 5

When Christ taught His disciples, He showed them the magnitude of the law by applying it to all our acts and then showed our duty to our fellow men. The scribes and Pharisees murmured at Christ's teaching and accused Him of doing away with the law of His Father. With what astonishment they must have heard from His lips, "Think not that I have come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." Christ continued, "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matthew 5:17-20. He addresses these words to His disciples, and they will apply all the way down through the stream of time.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 6

Christ's sermon upon the mount was designed to enter into our everyday life. The commandments are so broad that they take hold of even our thoughts. But how few take heed to the words of our Saviour! Consequently we shall have objections to meet. Some will claim that they are wholly led by the Spirit, and consequently they have not much use for the law of God or any portion of God's Word. Those who claim great light and are not sanctified through the truth are dangerous people, but they can be easily tested. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isaiah 8:20. We want to be in that condition that we can discern between light and darkness. 4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 7

Christ has said, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." Matthew 7:15-17. 4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 8

We must not be guided by impulse. The Bible is our guide to lead us to heaven. We do not want anyone to take our word, but go to the Scriptures for light, for we cannot trust to finite man. This thing is to me a living reality. 4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 9

We must expect to be assailed by the powers of darkness, but if we successfully resist, then there will be rejoicing in heaven. The souls of men are valued by the heavenly host. They know of the great sacrifice that has been made for man. When Satan sees a soul struggling for light, then he doubles his energies to bring him back under his banner. Satan is playing the game of life. I feel distressed when I realize the trials that will meet those who desire life; but these things will come, and the question is, Who will be on the Lord's side? It will be those who go to the Standard for their counsel. 4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 10

We must not be under any one's banner but Christ's. The great Teacher has given us His testimony that not a jot or tittle of the law shall in any wise fail. Sin and misery are all around us because of disobedience. If God's law were obeyed, we should see a different society than we now see in families. What is needed is to follow Christ in self-denial and cross-bearing. We need the tenderness of

His spirit to rule our hearts, and then we shall comply with the requirements and enter in through the gates into the city. If we fail, we shall be classed with those outside of the city. "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Revelation 22:15.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 11

"And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and His servants shall serve Him: and they shall see His face; and His name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever." Revelation 22:1-5.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 12

Dear friends, I desire to receive the reward that awaits the faithful. I want a place in glory, and this we can all obtain if we keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. While there are so many deceptions, let me persuade you to plant your feet on the Word of God; and when the light is received, you are responsible to let it shine, and your example will tell—but you cannot expect to have the good will of those in darkness.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 13

Can you tell me why the Son of God came to die for us? It was because of the transgression of Adam. In this he forfeited all right to heaven. Man then became separated from God, but Christ's love for man caused Him to come to this earth, and He clothed His divinity with humanity that man might be reconciled to the Father and brought back to His law. Christ says that He came not to destroy the law, but He came to honor it, to give dignity to it. [Matthew 5:17.] He opened His bosom to suffer for the transgression.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 14

Satan will tell us that Christ did all for us. This we must meet by God's Word. If Satan tells the truth, then it would not have been necessary for Christ to have made the sacrifice. But it is through the doing of the commandments that we can come to God through Christ. And He paid the debt for past transgressions. Christ was accepted as our sacrifice, and on the banks of Jordan the Father declared: "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." [Matthew 3:17.] Here heaven was opened to man, and heaven and earth were again united.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 15

Now let the love of God flow out of our hearts for the gift of His Son. It is our work to come out of darkness and grasp the rays of light that continue to shine upon our pathway, and thus in turn let them shine upon the pathway of others. We have great light. Shall it be established at Nimes? Let us cling to the mighty arm of Jesus by faith and obedience and stand firm for truth, and then we shall know of the doctrine.4LtMs, Ms 45, 1886, par. 16

Sermon/Two Standards

Nimes, France

October 30, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 107-113.

October 30th, 1886, 8 p.m.

(Sermon—11th discourse at Nimes,)

Text: "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Corinthians 2:12-14.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 1

There is a worldly standard and a Bible standard. We can use our powers to meet either. It is a marvel with the angels of heaven that we are so unconcerned in regard to our spiritual interest. There was rejoicing in heaven when there was a plan devised for the redemption of man, and then when Christ came from heaven it astonished the heavenly host because He was rejected of men.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 2

Well could John exclaim, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not." 1 John 3:1. It is an amazing thing that after the great sacrifice had been made, man in return should treat the loving Saviour as he did. Our heavenly Father manifested His love in the gift of His Son for the human race, yet they knew Him not. At His baptism, when on the banks of Jordan, He made the greatest prayer that ever fell on mortal ear, the heavens opened and the voice of God spake in thundering tones: "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” [Matthew 3:17.] How many there are who read over this statement without being impressed. It does not seem to leave an impression that it concerns them. But it has every thing to do with us, for it was the Saviour’s arm that grasped the throne of heaven. Sin had divorced this world from the eternal world, and this is what caused the Son of man to give His life for the human race and connect us again with heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 3

Christ knew that man could not overcome without His help. Therefore He consented to lay off His royal robes and clothe His divinity with humanity that we might be rich. He came to this earth, suffered, and knows just how to sympathize with us and to assist us in overcoming. He came to bring man moral power, and He would not have man to understand that he has nothing to do, for every one has a work to do for himself, and through the merits of Jesus we can overcome sin and the devil. 4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 4

Now the question for us to decide is, Shall we have connection with Christ and the Father? Shall we accept the help needed? Shall we enter the bloodstained path that our Saviour trod? Heaven has been opened before us. Christ has been accepted by the Father, and if we will comply, we can be accepted also. The plan of salvation has been laid for the human race, and they need not be discouraged. Help has been laid on one that is mighty to save. The gates of heaven are ajar to the children of men, to the weakest ones, the ones that need a Saviour the most. When our Saviour ate with the publicans, the Pharisees complained and would make capital of this. Christ’s reply was, “I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.” Matthew 9:13. 4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 5

Every church should be a working church. We should make ourselves useful and do the little duties around us and that will prepare us for the greater responsibilities. When Christ ascended on high, He left His disciples to carry forward the work. However unpleasant it may be, we should take up the humble duties of life. Christ says, “Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me.” Mark 8:34. What is the cross of Christ? It is not an ornament to the neck, but something that cuts right across our pathway. Satan is constantly watching for our souls. He seeks to lead us from the cross of Christ.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 6

God will help us in time of need, but He will not compel us to love and obey Him. We must give Him our undivided love. He wants us to trust Him and confide in Him. He understands our wants and has ample resources to help in every time of trouble. We are not left to fight our own battles, but we have the help of Christ, and in His name we can come off victorious.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 7

One may ask, What is our work? It is to take up duties at home. Cultivate the plot of ground at our own doors. Here are our friends that need help. Will we be workers with God? Every one should be at his post to save his fellow men, and whosoever will accept the plan of salvation will commence to work for his fellow men.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 8

The prospect to save souls may not be very flattering, neither was it when our Saviour came to this earth; but if one soul is reached, that soul will reach out for others, and thus the work is carried forward. It is our business to work for the Master, and if we are faithful in sowing the seed, God will take care of the seed sown.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 9

I have felt that if God would give me my own children, my life has not been in vain, but it has required labor and tears. There is a great responsibility resting upon the head of the family. When I have seen my children wading through temptation, I have spent all night with them in prayer. I am a mother of boys, and my heart is drawn out for every one who has the responsibility of a family. Those who are engaged in the training of children are engaged in a great work. It will take patience and perseverance to do the work aright.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 10

All need much of the blessing of God, and here is the place to be tried. We are in God's workshop. The cleaver of truth takes men and women out of the world, and they have to be refined and fitted for the Master. We must let the truth take possession of our hearts, and then the work can be accomplished for us.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 11

I labored for a young man who was an infidel. He wanted me to place my hand on his head to see how low his reverence was, and he said it was impossible for him to honor God. I told him that he must. I labored and prayed with him, and at times it seemed like a hopeless case, but the Spirit of the Lord followed this young man until one day while on a steamer going down the Mississippi he yielded his stubborn will and gave his heart to God. It makes no difference about the head; if we only have a willingness, the Lord will assist us in overcoming as He did this young man. This man now stands at the head of the General Conference. Now that the Lord has worked for him, he knows how to work for infidels.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 12

God permits affliction to come on us at times, that we may know how to sympathize with others who are passing through sorrow. The Lord has given me my work; and even when physicians have despaired of my life, I have felt it my duty to labor on, even if I died at my post of duty. Our heavenly Father gives us experiences so that we can know how to help others. When the youngest branch of my family was broken off, and I could no longer have my infant by my side, I knew better how to sympathize with the mourning mother. When I laid away the oldest member of my family, Jesus supplanted him, and now I can tell mothers to go to Jesus. When the unexpected blow came to him who had stood by my side for thirty-six years, it was then that I could lean on my Saviour. I was not left alone, for Christ is a Father to the widow. Everyone can benefit others by his own experience.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 13

I would not spend time at the grave to cause a shadow of gloom to beset my pathway, because I know that Jesus passed into the prison house, and He came forth, and this should be a comfort to all who have lost friends who have died in faith. I am left here to take the work of my husband, to carry it forward, and I have no complaints to make, for the gate of heaven is ajar and light is shining on my pathway.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 14

I would say to all, Come to Jesus just as you are. He asks for your heart. He has paid the price for us. Now He wants our affections, our intelligence—in fact, all our powers belong to Him. And after we have done all, it is a small gift on our part.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par.

We may work intelligently and be laborers for God, and in doing this work He will give us strength. If we sow we shall also reap, and an abundant harvest will be gathered. In order to work the works of God, we must have the help of Christ. We should not be satisfied by working out our own salvation, but we must work for the salvation of others. There are hundreds around us that need our personal efforts. It will be our rejoicing to see souls saved through our instrumentality. The work done here for God will show throughout all ages, so all should work while there is an opportunity. There is a work for all to do; and if we will let the refining influence of the Spirit of God sanctify us through the Word, we can be fitted to reach others, and the glory that awaits the faithful is beyond our comprehension. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." 1 Corinthians 2:9.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 16

Then let us take hold of the lifework, that we might bring others to see the importance of the truth. There is a heaven for us to win and a life that will measure with the life of God. Can you not give to God the little time you have, and also your best affections? Give Jesus your polluted soul, and have it washed from all its stains. Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold of eternal life.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 17

I would entreat those here to think of these things. Go to work for the Master. Take the Lord with you, and then you will hear from the lips of the Master, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." [Matthew 25:21.] Heaven, sweet heaven of rest! It is then that we shall cast our glittering crowns at the feet of Jesus and touch our harps and sing the song, "Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that died for us." I see in Him matchless charms. I want all to have a part and share in the eternal weight of glory and to sing songs of rejoicing throughout the endless ages of eternity.4LtMs, Ms 46, 1886, par. 18

The Battle Following Conversion

Nimes, France

1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 117-119.

[Words of counsel to the church at Nimes, France.]

All heaven is interested in the work that has been going on in this wicked city of Nimes. Victories have been gained and souls have been wrenched from Satan's grasp. If there is a holding of these victories, there will be the necessity of much help from above. If those newly come to the faith will feel their own weakness and depend upon Jesus for strength every hour, then they can resist the deceptions of Satan and become God's witnesses upon the earth. There is not a soul won to Christ, the message of the third angel does not make its way to a single heart, without defeat to the tempter and bruising of the head of the serpent. This will arouse [the] malice of the adversary to greater activity. When the truth is received into the heart, it commences its leavening, transforming process. Sin will appear hateful. That soul will, through faith and willing obedience to God's commandments, enlist in his behalf a strength more mighty than his own to combine with his human effort to resist the enemy. 4LtMs, Ms 46a, 1886, par. 1

These souls who have decided to walk in the light will have need of great watchfulness and most earnest prayer. As soon as Satan sees one soul breaking away from his deceptive lies and coming to the light of truth, he is actively at work to place every conceivable obstacle in his path. Let a man or woman become interested in the truth and show respect and obedience to the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, let him in good earnest set about the work of repentance and the saving of his soul, and he will assuredly draw upon himself the disfavor and opposition of the circle of his worldly acquaintances. If he is a member of any of the churches, the determined, active opposition of the church members will be set in operation. Every soul who has come to the point to accept advanced truth has realized this in every age of the world.4LtMs, Ms 46a, 1886, par. 2

No man can serve God without enlisting against himself evil men and evil angels. Evil angels well know that one soul accepting the truth as it is in Jesus will by precept and example weaken their hold upon other souls, for the truth is aggressive. Alarmed because he is losing his prey, Satan will first seek to deceive, next to oppress and persecute. Evil men, rebuked by the precept and example of those who come to the light of Bible truth, will become agents of the great adversary of souls and will leave no means untried to draw them away from their allegiance to God and induce them to leave the narrow path of holiness. But none need to be alarmed and afraid. God's word is pledged that if they are true to principle, if they believe and obey all God's requirements, they are members of the royal family, children of the heavenly King. They are certain to have enlisted in their behalf the agencies of heaven and to come off victorious through the merits of Christ—more than conquerors through Him that loved them.4LtMs, Ms 46a, 1886, par. 3

Oh, if we could only see and understand that the repentance of one soul sends inexpressible joy through all the host of heaven. Melody is called forth from every harp and every voice in glorious anthems because another name is registered in the book of life, another light is kindled to shine amid the moral darkness of this corrupt world. The very same event spreads consternation among the fallen angels and humiliates the great leader in the rebellion against God's holy law. The prince of darkness, seeing a soul whom he has counted his own escaping from under his control as a bird out of the snare of the fowler, and making Christ his refuge, works with hellish intensity to again entrap the one escaped.4LtMs, Ms 46a, 1886, par. 4

There is more joy in heaven in the presence of the angels over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance. It is impossible to estimate what may be the work that these souls may accomplish if they go on gathering more and increased light from the Word of God and walk in the way of all His commandments. If they become channels of light to this dark and irreligious city, they will be indeed God's witnesses and through their fervent piety and Christlike example may be the means of winning souls to the truth.4LtMs, Ms 46a, 1886, par. 5

Sermon/"Keep My Commandments"

Torre Pellice, Italy

November 14, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 5MR 262-267.

"If ye love Me, keep My commandments." John 14:15.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 1

Here is presented before us the fact that they that love God will keep His commandments. The Spirit of truth "the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him." [Verse 17.] It should not be surprising to those who keep the commandments of God if they should meet the opposition of the world. The Word tells us to be separated from the disobedient. This will cause a feeling of opposition to arise with those who have a hatred toward the precepts of their Creator. But we cannot afford to be disloyal to God for the friendship of the world. The truth is worldwide, and if we have a knowledge of it, we must not let those who are in darkness lead us from it.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 2

We want to be loved by Heaven, and we have evidence of that love when we look to Calvary. Now it is our duty to love God in return, and we can manifest that love by keeping His sayings. Jesus says that "he that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him." "Many therefore of His disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is a hard saying." John 6:56, 60. "From that time many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him. Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." Vss. 66-68. "And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? Jesus answered them and said, My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me. If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself." John 7:15-17.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 3

“He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh My blood.” [John 6:56.] How can we explain the meaning of these words? “It is the Spirit that quickeneth; ... the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.” John 6:63. So we see the eating of the flesh and drinking the blood is in obeying His Word. “He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them.” John 14:21. “If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father’s commandments, and abide in His love.” John 15:10. Now we want to be in harmony with our Redeemer, and if we are that is evidence that we keep His sayings. The souls of men are of the highest value, and it is our duty to know that we are in harmony with God. We need to cultivate faith in God and His Word. 4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 4

After the resurrection, the disciples went forth to proclaim to men that Christ had risen, but there were influences that opposed them. The Sadducees were grieved that they taught the people and preached through Jesus the resurrection of the dead. They laid hands upon them and put them in hold. Now had the disciples committed an error in preaching that Christ had risen from the dead? Shall we say that the Sadducees were right and that the disciples were wrong? No, it could not be truthfully said, for they were giving truth for that time; but it did not please the people. 4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 5

On the morrow the high priest and rulers and elders came together at Jerusalem. There was to be a trial of this matter, and the question was asked, By what name have ye done this? The disciples had wrought a miracle in their midst by healing the impotent man. They boldly declared before the council that this miracle was done through Jesus of Nazareth, and they said, “This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders. ... Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.” Acts 4:11, 13.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 6

Now we see that here is a people moved by the Holy Ghost. God had given Peter and John a message to give to the people and it was their privilege to accept, but they would not. We can see by the position taken by these professed people of God that they were arrayed against the truth. They said, "What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it. But that it spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus." But the apostles Peter and John had a truth to present, and they would not be stilled by these wicked counsellors. They "answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." Vss. 16, 17, 19.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 7

So we see that it is important to prize what the Lord says and be persistent in declaring the truth whether it is pleasing or not. If we have a desire to know truth, God will open our hearts to receive it, and it is not safe to resist conviction because of opposition. It is for us to accept the light. 4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 8

These disciples of Christ continued to teach. Then "the captain with the officers" came upon them [without] violence, and the only reason given was because they were turning the attention of the people away from the rulers to the gospel of Christ. [Acts 5:26.]4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 9

The Lord would have us look to Him and cry for His Holy Spirit, for there are souls to save. We need not only work out our own salvation, but it is our duty to assist others to become acquainted with God. This should be done with fear and trembling. We should accept the Word of God and have His love in our hearts. Christ says, "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." John 14:15. If we have the love of God in our hearts, we shall be happy. We may be poor in this world, but we are joint heirs with Jesus Christ. 4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 10

We want to be rich in faith. This will require diligence in the study of God's Word. Thus we shall become wise. The rabbis were astonished as they heard from the lips of the disciples the great wisdom that they possessed, knowing that they had not been educated. It was by searching out the hidden treasures of the Lord that they had obtained this knowledge. Even so we, if we search the Scriptures with a desire to understand them, shall know of the doctrine.4Lts, Ms 47, 1886, par. 11

Allow no man to hinder you in gaining an understanding of the truth and in keeping the commandments of God. There have been disciples in all ages who did comply with the requirements of God. For so doing they got into trouble, and so it will be in this age. If you find trouble because of your faith, go to Christ. In Him there is help. I decided when the Sabbath was made known to me that I must obey. We have known what it is to suffer hunger, but we would bow before God and ask for His blessing. We knew that we could not be saved in error as long as the Bible was before us, for it is a plain command that we should search the Scriptures. We must not stop to inquire of others what our duty is. The Word of God is sufficient. If it tells us to keep the commandments, it is our duty to obey at any cost.4Lts, Ms 47, 1886, par. 12

I remember when we could not get together any more Sabbathkeepers than are present here today, but we loved Jesus and we knew that the angels were in our midst and we had strength and support against the opposition that was raised against us. We had the assurance that God would be with us. We did not know but that we should be thrust into prison because we kept the commandments of God.4Lts, Ms 47, 1886, par. 13

We were admonished not to teach the doctrines of the soon coming of Christ and the commandments, but we stated that we had to declare the truth. Windows have been broken because our prayers were heard, but God had a care for us. Officers came to our assistance, and those who wished to see us punished were themselves threatened. God gave us favor.4Lts, Ms 47, 1886, par. 14

We must not question whether we shall have trials. It is always best to be on the Lord's side. More than one scandal has followed me. Should this drive me away from Jesus because I was a partaker with His suffering? We are commanded to take up the cross and follow Him. He suffered reproach that we might be saved from death. Christ says, "If you love Me, keep My commandments."

[Verse 15.] And if we comply, it is an evidence that we love Him. “Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.” Revelation 22:14.4LtMs, Ms 47, 1886, par. 15

Sermon/Third Discourse at Lausanne

Lausanne, Switzerland

November 21, 1886

Previously unpublished.

“But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light.” 1 Peter 2:9.4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 1

There are many who by their course of conduct seem to say that it is a disgrace to be a Christian and a follower of Christ, notwithstanding it is the highest position to which a person can attain. And this elevation must be through the merits of the blood of Christ. When the race fell through Adam, there was no hope. Man was cut off from God. But Christ consented to take upon Himself the work of restoration, and offered Himself as a substitute in order that the race may be brought back into the favor of His Father. Suppose that Adam had been so independent as not to accept of Jesus Christ as a substitute? Then it would have been impossible for him to have been elevated.4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 2

The sin that we now see is the result of Adam’s and Eve’s transgression, and the consequence of sin is death. Christ stepped in between man and His Father and paid the penalty. He laid aside His royal robes for a world all marred with sin. He became a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He did not come with force of arms or kingly power, but with lowliness of heart on the side of the oppressed. It was Christ that opened a communication between man and God. Man by his action forfeited all right to the favor of God.4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 3

When Christ received baptism at the hands of John, He bowed on the banks of Jordan and prayed such a prayer as was never heard by mortal ear. Heaven opened, the glory of God encircled His Son, and a voice was heard to say, “This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” Matthew 3:17. How many read over these words and consider the importance of them? The human family may return to God. Heaven has been opened before them. Christ says, I have opened a door [Revelation 3:8], and His testimony is that He has been accepted of the Father and that we can be accepted through Him. His human arm encircles the [human] race, and with His divine arm He grasps heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 4

Christ has thrown His body across the gulf that sin has made. Jacob saw in his vision that there was a connection between earth and heaven. God stood at the top of that ladder, and the angels were ascending and descending upon it. This is the way we can have access to the Father. We are not to look at the battlements and say that they cannot be scaled, for Christ is a living connection between earth and heaven, and He has made an escape for man if he keeps the commandments of God. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 5

The apostle, writing to the Galatians, says: “O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth ...?” Galatians 3:1. It is a marvel that men are so indifferent when their only hope is in obeying the commandments of God. Our standard is God’s holy law. Those who will take their position on the side of truth are a chosen people. What marvelous light! John saw in vision a temple opened in heaven, and as he sees a people whose minds are directed thither, he is led to exclaim, “Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.” Revelation 14:12. And the song will be, “And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony.” Revelation 12:11. What was seen in the ark? Tables of stone, the cover of which constituted the mercy seat. Christ is ministering in the sanctuary before the ark. Mercy and truth have met and kissed each other. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 6

It is impossible for man to enter the gate of the city, trampling on God’s law. Yet how few there are who pay any regard to God’s requirements. This is in fulfilment of that which the apostle said, that in the last days iniquity would abound, and the love of many wax cold. [Matthew 24:12.] Is it not time that the law of God was vindicated? and shall we be swift to trample upon it because everybody else does? The message says, “Come out from among them;” and the God of heaven will accept us if we come to Him in obedience. [2 Corinthians 6:17.] We must not think that we are belittling ourselves in taking our position on the side of Christ, for this is the only way by which we can be elevated and refined and become members of the royal heavenly family. There must be a line of demarcation between those that keep the commandments of God and those that do not. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 7

“Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is.” 1 John 3:2. But in order to be accepted of God as sons and daughters, we must come out from the world and be separated from them and stand under the bloodstained banner of Prince Emmanuel. God has claims upon every one of us, and in order to comply with them there must be a separation. We do not choose to be singular from the rest of the world, but we must be in order to be obedient. This world is not our home. We are pilgrims and strangers. We should not be building our hopes on this world, but we should be looking forward to the kingdom of heaven. There are great charms for the Christian. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 8

The principles of Christianity elevate. They bring the possessor up on a higher platform. The religion of Christ never degrades, but it reforms the life. Christ has chosen the poor of this world to be heirs of the kingdom. I see great beauty in Jesus. What great things He is willing to do for us to bring us to that elevated position where we can be sons and daughters of God! We are now in a world of misery. We can see the effects of sin on every hand, and if in this world only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 9

“But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light.” 1 Peter 2:9. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 10

In the expression found in the text “a peculiar people,” of what does our peculiarity consist? It is in gathering the rays of light from Him who has brought us to His marvelous light. Christians should of all people be the happiest, because they have a connection with heaven. I point you to Calvary, where light is reflected. A great ransom has been paid for man, and in return for this proffered love we have a great work to do. Every soul should be a laborer with Christ. We should love souls for whom Christ has died. It is not for us to follow the fashions and customs of the world. There is a better work for us, for we are stewards of trust to build up Christ's kingdom on earth and to bless humanity around us.4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 11

“Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.” Matthew 6:19, 20. Now here is where the peculiarity comes in. The world cannot understand why this sacrifice is made, and it is impossible for them to understand until they can see the object of the sacrifice made by Christ. Jesus became poor that we may become rich. Christ has done all for us, and what have we done for Him in return?4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 12

While we see souls to be brought to Christ, we should be careful of our time. We are not the children of darkness, but of light, and how shall we use this light? It is by bringing heaven into our own lives; and then we are prepared to let the rays of light shine to others. We want the love of God in our hearts and to care more for the approval of Heaven than for what the world can bestow. We want to be assimilated to Christ and be obedient to the requirements of God. My work for this past forty years has been to elevate man; and when I have seen a soul turning to the light of truth, then my heart rejoices. There was great rejoicing over the one sheep that was found—more than over all the rest. The winners of souls will have great reward, and while we see a great work to be done all around us, how careful we should be in imparting to others what God has imparted to us. God has given us intellect, and He requires returns. Our duty is to cultivate our powers and acquire wisdom and thus make advancements.4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 13

The prophet Daniel was permitted to see the results of a faithful life. “And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever.” Daniel 12:3. The greatest and best work is to be co-laborers with Christ. The work done for the Master is for time and eternity. It is not hay and stubble that we want to build upon, but gold and silver and precious stones. This material cannot be consumed. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 14

The world cannot appreciate the work of the Christian. We are not living to please ourselves, but to please Heaven, and in this is a cross that the world will not lift. The Christian has a glorious hope just before him. Christ has gone to prepare mansions for His followers, and this is the heaven that they expect to receive when their work is ended. How thankful we should be that grace is promised to all who will strive for the heavenly home. Angels are commissioned to guard the faithful few. Heaven is opened before us, and honest petitions will be heard and answered. We can take all our trials to Christ; His ear is opened to hear, and the grace from Jesus Christ will come into our hearts to bless. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 15

Has not the Christian reason to be happy? Then let us cling to the Source of light and comfort. The world knows us not. They know not the joy that fills the Christian’s heart and the prospect of immortal life. They see not the white robes for the pure in heart. They hear not the anthems of praise that are heard in heaven. These lessons can be learned here, and all can have the privilege of rallying around the standard and be of that number that shall receive the benediction, “Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.” Revelation 22:14. 4LtMs, Ms 48, 1886, par. 16

Sermon/Church Dedication Sermon

Tramelan, Switzerland

December 25, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 3MR 230-236.

Sermon at the Dedication of the Church at Tramelan, Switzerland⁴*LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 1*

[This house was built by the Brethren Roth family and not by the church. Cost 3,300 francs.]

[Two songs were sung by the choir before the service. Then a hymn. Prayer by J. Ertzenberger.]

Text: 1 Kings 8:54-61. Here you see, at the dedication of the temple, the conditions God required of His people in order that they might receive the blessings of God at their worship. David, while dwelling in his palace of cedar, felt disturbed in his conscience as he considered that there was no suitable dwelling place for the ark of God, which symbolized His presence. It still rested in the tabernacle which had been constructed in the wilderness and borne all the way from Horeb to Jerusalem in a pilgrimage of nearly forty years. But now the nation had ended their pilgrimage and obtained a permanent location. And David looked around him upon the costly buildings of cedar, the homes of the inhabitants settled in the goodly land of Canaan, and conceived the idea that a temple should be built, more worthy for the residence of God. The site of the building was indicated and the most complete instructions were given, and Solomon entered upon the great work.⁴*LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 2*

“And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.” Verses 10, 11. Here we learn that God approved of the work of Solomon in the building of the temple. It is true that the company at Tramelan is small compared with the millions of people who worshiped at Solomon's temple, but the Lord's presence is not confined to numbers. He meets with the few as well as the many. The promise is, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." Matthew 18:20.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 3

We are thankful that God has put it into the hearts of the Brethren Roth to build this comfortable, neat house for the worship of God. When God sees the efforts made to build a house for His honor, even if it be humble according to their ability, He will accept it and the heartfelt service of the worshipers. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 4

You will see by the prayer of Solomon that Israel's dependence was in the God of Israel. The people that built the temple were many and the house that they built was large and grand and the Lord God of heaven honored them because they had built Him a sanctuary where they could meet to worship Him. Those that worshiped Him sincerely had His blessing. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 5

The first tabernacle, built according to God's directions, was indeed blessed of Him. The people thus were preparing themselves to worship in the temple not made with hands—a temple in the heavens. The stones of the temple built by Solomon were all prepared at the quarry and then brought to the temple site. They came together without the sound of ax or hammer. The timbers were also fitted in the forest. The furniture was likewise brought to this house all prepared for use. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 6

Even so, the mighty cleaver of truth has taken out a people from the quarry of the world and is fitting this people, who profess to be the children of God, for a place in His heavenly temple. We want the cleaver of truth to do its work for us. We are taken from the quarry of the world. The material must not be a dead substance, but living souls, and these souls must be brought out of the quarry of the world, where the hand of God can fit them for the temple in heaven. We are here as probationers, and we must pass under the hand of God. All rough edges and rough surfaces must be removed, and we must be stones fitted for the building. We are brought into church capacity with defects of character, but we must not retain them. We must be fitted and squared for the building. We must be “laborers together with God,” for we are “God’s husbandry,” we are “God’s building.” [1 Corinthians 3:9.] In view of this we must see that our temple is not defiled with sin. We should be lively stones, not dead ones, but live ones that will reflect the image of Christ. We must be worshipers in spirit and in truth. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 7

Although your company is small, you can be consoled by the words of the apostle, “Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is.” 1 John 3:2. And we should not forget the enjoinder, “And every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure.” 1 John 3:3. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 8

It is not enough to be brought in as worshipers, but the heart must be brought into harmony with God’s plans. We must be spiritual worshipers. If we are to represent Christ we must be living stones “built up a spiritual house.” 1 Peter 2:5. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 9

It is important that we should live as Solomon was admonished in (verses 4 to 6 [1 Kings 9]): “And if thou wilt walk before Me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep My statutes and My judgments: then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel. But if ye shall at all turn from following Me, ye or your children, and will not keep My commandments and My statutes which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them: ...” We see that God’s promises are to the obedient, those that keep the commandments of God. If we depart from His law, then we are separated from heaven. God does not separate from us, but we separate from Him. 4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 10

We are thankful that this comfortable house has been prepared for His people. The first house built in Battle Creek was only about one third larger than this, and when we entered that building we felt happy. The meetings heretofore had been held in a private house. We all felt poor, but we felt that we must have a place to dedicate to the Lord. All exerted their energies to build, as they did in building the tabernacle in the wilderness. It took quite an effort to erect it. In two years it had to be given up for a larger one, as it was impossible for it to accommodate all the people that attended our special meetings. And it was not long before the third had to be built, and then the present one which will seat three thousand persons. And we may have to enlarge our borders still. God has blessed in the effort to increase the accommodations for His work in Battle Creek. We may have to exert all our efforts in doing the will of God, but He will bless according to our faith. We must act as men of faith, and after we have done in accordance with the will of God, we do not find ourselves any poorer.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 11

In California it seemed almost impossible to obtain a suitable place in which to worship. The church was poor, depending on their hands only, but they said that they would build. It was also the same with the San Francisco church. Both houses were commenced, but they said, Where is the means? and asked Brother White if he could help them. The reply was: "Yes, but I shall have to sell everything in order to do it." In this transaction we lost $1,700 in exchange, but we cared not for that, for we were helping the cause. The houses went up, and the one in Oakland has already proven too small, and it had to be sold and a larger one must take its place.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 12

We hope that the Lord will so bless your work that this house will prove too small for you. We expect to see other houses erected by our people, and in this our faith will be revealed, for faith without works is dead. This house, so small as it is, is recorded in heaven. I can come to visit you with more courage now than heretofore, because the people will see that you mean business. They expect something of you. God will honor those that will honor Him.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 13

I thank God that I have the privilege of speaking to you today. This little house is just as precious in the sight of God as a larger one would be, because you have done what you could. Now you can teach reverence in coming in and going out. When meetings are held in a room used daily by the family, every day and for every purpose, there is not much respect shown as a place of worship.

Everything the people look upon is associated with everyday affairs.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 14

In entering the house of worship you should remember that it is the house of God. Respect should be shown by the removal of the hat, remembering that you are entering into the presence of God and angels. You should teach the children reverence. Let earnest efforts be carried forward to this end, and remember that you are the temple of the living God.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 15

Ephesians 2:1-19; 4:1-6. Now if we had a most splendid temple and our hearts were not right, it would amount to nothing. Our greatest anxiety should be in regard to our spiritual condition. We must educate our children that God meets with His people and direct their thoughts heavenward.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 16

The only day that God has set His seal upon is the seventh. While He has given us the six days, He has taken the seventh as His, that His order of worship might be preserved. Neither the house of God nor His day should be used for visiting, but our thoughts should be upon heaven and heavenly things. Let there be no disunion one with another. If feelings should arise in your heart with a brother or sister, do not let the sun go down until such feelings be removed, that you may retain the blessing of God with you.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 17

Christ says you may be known by all men if ye have love one for another. [John 13:35.] Now in order to have this love in the heart one for another, it must be cultivated; and if this grace is attained, then you will be a spectacle unto the world and to angels. We have a great truth, and we must seek to be in harmony with it. If we are living stones, we should emit light and have an influence upon others for their good. If every member should seek to honor God, then you would be a power that would be felt. We want an increase of faith. We need a faith that will enable us to meet infidelity.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 18

We want the Spirit of God to come in to meet with us in our worship. When we enter the house, it would be pleasing to God if all would lift up their hearts to God in secret prayer. On entering the desk, every minister should drop on his knees to implore divine help. We do not take hold as we ought of the divine arm. We might be stronger spiritually. Every defect of character must be removed in order that we may stand before the great white throne. There the books will be opened, and from them we are to be judged, and we do not want to be ashamed to meet our record. If we manifest great zeal in worldly business, and are dead in spiritual things, it will be manifest in the house of God. The meetings can be made more interesting if all would have more earnestness in spiritual life. God is full of blessings, but if we do not prize them we suffer loss. We need to take hold of the arm of God, and God will meet you in this house.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 19

Above everything else, be at peace among yourselves. Strive to see eye to eye and be members of the royal King, and the blessing of God will rest upon you as it rested upon Solomon's temple. And from this place may light and truth go out, and work upon the hearts of the people, and then your testimony will be felt. We must weave the principles of truth into our character, and thus we can be prepared for the temple of God and be privileged to join in the anthem, Worthy is the Lamb.4LtMs, Ms 49, 1886, par. 20

Economy

Christiania, Norway

July 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 3SM 330-331.

There is altogether too much money expended for needless things for the ornamentation of houses, and for expensive furniture. While the heart may not worship these things, those who expend their means for jewelry and for things to beautify, to please the eye, may be under condemnation from God because the means is only lent them of God—entrusted to them to be traded upon, to be used to bring talents to the Master. As long as there are missions to be established, meetinghouses to be built, missionaries to be supported while doing their work, souls to be saved, youth to be educated, there must be a careful and wise use of our Lord's money, that it shall not be spent upon needless things and foolish indulgences. There are souls to be saved, and God's work is to be supreme with us. There are great possibilities, and high and pure principles are to govern those who have chosen salvation. Let every one be careful how he moves.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 1

Many catch at ideas and see great importance in these ideas when they are not sound. They are side issues, false waymarks, pointing away from great and solemn truths which are God's tests. The third angel's message is infallible and is the great, decisive test for the whole human family, and Satan will seek to switch men from the track into bypaths. Let every worker stick to the message (Revelation 14:6-10) and let the truth do its work. Let it be in the mouth of the messengers, to cut away the evils, for the truth will be as a hammer to break the flinty, rocky hearts and as a fire to consume the dross and the rubbish of error and sin from the soul. Let every one look to God in earnest faith to set his own soul in order.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 2

How many establish barriers between themselves and their devotion to God by their friendship for the world, which always results in their hearts being at enmity with God. There are but few indeed who have an eye single to God's glory, and who will pursue a course discreet and wise before the world, and yet will not sacrifice one atom of principle to gain its favors.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 3

The idol money has power over thousands who trust and love wealth more than they love or trust in the living God. The things of the world are sought after and considered worthy to be admired and enjoyed by all those who are not lovers of the cross of Christ and who are not spiritual worshipers. The fashions of the world, the desire of the eye, the love of self, the vainglory—all are obstructions to piety and separate the soul from God. Should we take up these hindrances one by one and strike to destroy them, it would be like picking off the leaves of a tree, which would only put forth its green foliage again. The truth, Bible truth, the message God has given to us, is the axe to be laid at the root of the tree.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 4

If all our treasures which are hindrances to spirituality were removed, it would come close to every one of you. The greatest hindrance to some and that which is a positive idol is their habits of eating and drinking. Parents and children with their wrong habits are injuring their physical, mental, and moral capabilities. Tea and coffee drinking are marked as idols. These things are a positive injury to the physical, mental, and moral powers, and those who indulge them will never advance in spirituality until these evils are given up and they sign the teetotal pledge. Intemperance in these things excites the nerves, and when the immediate influence is gone there is a letting down and a feeling of exhaustion. The flagging energies must be stimulated by more tea, more coffee. The habit of frequent lunches is a positive injury to health.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 5

Now shall we leave the great principles of the third angel's message to carry the burden of these things? We must take the Word of God and let it cut to the very root. There is very great need of individually seeking for meekness and learning to be like Jesus. We must learn to cut off the tendencies to expend means upon needless things. Souls are perishing for truth and light. Their peace and well-being consist in loving God and keeping His commandments.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 6

It is a difficult matter for men and women to draw the line in the matter of picture-making. Some have made a raid against pictures, daguerreotypes, and pictures of every kind. Everything must be burned up they say, urging that the making of all pictures is prohibited by the second commandment; that they are an idol.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 7

An idol is anything that human beings love and trust in instead of loving and trusting in the Lord their Maker. Whatever earthly thing men desire and trust in, as having power to help them and do them good, leads them away from God and is to them an idol. Whatever divides the affections, or takes away from the soul the supreme love of God, or interposes to prevent unlimited confidence and entire trust in God, assumes the character and takes the form of an idol in the soul temple.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 8

The first great commandment is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Matthew 22:37. Here is allowed no separation of the affections from God. In (1 John 2:15-17) we read, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Now if the pictures made have a tendency to separate the affections from God, and are worshiped in the place of God, they are idols. Have those who claim to be followers of Jesus Christ exalted these things above God and given their affections to them? Has their love for treasures filled a place in their hearts that Jesus should occupy?4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 9

Have those who have burned up all their pictures of friends and any kind of pictures they happened to have come up to a higher state of consecration for this act, and do they seem in words, in deportment, and in soul to be ennobled, elevated, more heavenly minded? Is their experience richer than before? Do they pray more and believe with a more perfect faith after this consuming sacrifice which they have made? Have they come up into the mount? Has the holy fire been kindled in their hearts, giving new zeal and greater devotion to God and His work than before? Has a live coal from off the altar of sacrifice touched their hearts and their lips? By their fruits you can tell the character of the work.4LtMs, Ms 50, 1886, par. 10

Human Lips to Give the Message

NP

1886

Previously unpublished.

The message of truth is to go forward like a lamp that burneth. David exclaims from the fulness of his soul, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, ... and I will declare what He hath done for my soul. I cried unto Him with my mouth, and He was extolled with my tongue. ... God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us; ... that Thy way may be known upon the earth, Thy saving health among all nations." Psalm 66:16-67:2.4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 1

The Lord would have His people feel that they are His servants to do His work upon the earth and thus be co-workers with Jesus Christ. God can promote the gospel without our instrumentality. But it is for our present and future good to know our individual duty. Angels are not commissioned to come to our world and proclaim the messages with an audible voice, but they are sent to help human beings to proclaim the messages of truth to a perishing world. 4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 2

Everything in nature declares that there is a living God, but it does not define to man that in order to have communication with the God of heaven man must be obedient to all His commandments. How shall the people believe and be obedient if they have not heard this message from human lips and traced the words written by human pens? Many people in America and Europe, in cities and villages, have never heard the message of mercy, and yet there are those who feel at ease, feasting upon the truth, and not making an effort to get it before those who are in darkness. 4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 3

Look at Europe, and see so few laborers to preach there! I hear the word of Christ, "Go teach all nations. When the gospel has been preached as a witness to all nations, then shall the Lord come to our world with power and with great glory. The end shall come. Lo, I am with you even to the end of the world.”4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 4

We feel thankful to our heavenly Father that a light has been kindled in many places in these kingdoms. Denmark, Sweden, and Norway have churches standing in defense of the faith once delivered to the saints. But workers are needed in every city, and the little companies that have been raised up need encouragement and instruction.4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 5

We feel grateful to God to see those who embrace the truth willing to do what they can both with their means and with their influence to make known the truth to others. Those who see and feel the preciousness of the truth will not be satisfied unless they shall impart to others the light so precious to them. They will pray that the Lord will send laborers into the vineyard and that the Lord will send means to carry forward His work.4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 6

The Lord tests and tries our faith. If we have greater faith, we shall have greater facilities to work with. We shall not only have workers, but means to bear the solemn message of mercy to our world. We do not dare to lessen, in the slightest degree, the responsibilities of the workers in opening the Scriptures to others. We would not lower the standard, but elevate it. The missionary spirit must come upon those who believe the truth.4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 7

There should be two who labor together, and care should be exercised as to the qualifications of those who present themselves to engage in this solemn work. Are they sound in doctrine? Are they sound in experience?4LtMs, Ms 51, 1886, par. 8

Visit to Bienne

Bienne, Switzerland

March 19, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in CTr 326.

In company with Brother Whitney, W. C. White, and Mary K. White, I left Basel March 19 to visit the church at Bienne. The weather was all we could desire, pleasant and favorable for our viewing the scenery through which we passed.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 1

The distance from Basel to Bienne was only sixty miles. We were four hours in the cars, and as the cars glided slowly along we had a fine opportunity of seeing the country through which we passed. On this line we have diversified scenery. There are settlements lying in between the mountains. The houses appear very ancient. Many of them are several hundreds of years old. Many are uncouth, without regularity, showing not much artistic skill in their form and arrangement. Then we pass by large cities and my thoughts are these: Who will give to these towns, villages, and cities the truth from the Word of God? These people, many of them, are in the darkness of error. We see chapels built, as in Italy, high up in the mountains. Castles are built upon the very brink of precipices, and we saw a church close by one of these. We would have been gratified could we have learned the history of these old castles and chapels.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 2

Here among the rocks and caverns of the earth the Lord has provided a hiding place for His people. These chapels, built so high upon the precipitous rocks that seem inaccessible to man, were thus arranged for safety and protection. They testify to us that there was a time when the people of God were suffering because they, like Daniel of old, purposed in their hearts that they would worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. They could not consent that man should be conscience for them, and they felt more secure in the wildness of rocks and mountains, where the wild beasts make their home from the snare of the fowler, than to trust themselves to the mercy of human beings who were infected with an erroneous religion and satanic zeal to maintain the customs and traditions of men, which were in direct opposition to the religion of the Bible. These were cruel as bloodthirsty wolves to extirpate all who should dare to differ with the doctrines of papists—men and women who would take the Bible and the Bible alone as their foundation, until its glorious beams scattered human tradition from their path, making clear the way of the Lord. The prince of darkness has marked these men as he marked Jesus the Light of the world.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 3

The man of sin is Satan's agent. He sets his inventive powers to work, and Satan plans, and the followers of Jesus must prepare for a life-and-death struggle. The authority of the church, combined with the authorities of the nation, set themselves to work to cripple the consciences—to be themselves conscience for all men. For men to differ, and stand in opposition to these great men of the world in their religious faith and worship, would raise endless questions, and they could not keep this light to themselves. The more they pondered the question, the more they saw was involved in turning from old traditions to the Word of God. But they must face the conflict, harness for battle, rise above human littleness, and not have thoughts of self-preservation detain them in the prospect of unmeasurable danger and peril. The world's Redeemer had given them in His life an example of what they must do and what they must be in order to win eternal life. This Jesus was a man of sorrows. He had suffered hunger and thirst and met the temptations of Satan with "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." [Matthew 4:4.] Jesus had told His followers that they must be ready to lose their lives if necessary for the truth's sake.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 4

But our contemplations are broken in upon to view a mountain cataract, and then another scene opens before us. We view a round castle upon a high precipice. The walls are standing, and from this castle trees are growing. Near this castle quite a large church is located. It does not appear to have fallen into decay. We have a desire to know the history of this church, but we must, although reluctant, remain in ignorance. We pass through a much larger valley than we have yet seen. The snow-clad mountains surround the valley as a wall.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 5

Delemo is a very pretty town. It is a Catholic town. Here were carloads of wood, made up into small parcels—little sprouts of trees tied together with strings—to be marketed.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 6

We passed through a tunnel formed in the rock, and next was an iron foundry. The refuse of this iron is used by making it into a superior quality of brick. We saw houses, built of this brick, which looked very fine. Gigantic rocks we see everywhere. Birs River, which we have followed all the way from Basel, has been a rapid stream coming out of a rocky mountain, its head at Bienne. We see a most curious structure of rocks. Layer upon layer are distinctly seen. We see four tunnels at once through the heart of these rocky mountains. We pass through one tunnel and immediately enter a second, and then a third and fourth. Motier valley is beautiful and healthful. The cascades come down from the mountain sides. Another comes forth from the heart of a rock. Far down into a wild, deep chasm is seen a stream of water. The rocks rise perpendicularly from this gorge.4LtMs, Ms 52, 1886, par. 7

At Bienne

Lausanne, Switzerland

March 22, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in EGWE 172.

Left Basel March 19 for Bienne in company with Elder Whitney, W. C. White, and Mary White. We had a most favorable day for viewing the scenery, which was very grand. We were four hours on the cars, making the distance of sixty miles. The cars moving so moderately gave us a favorable opportunity to view the scenery as we glided slowly along. When a few miles from Basel we viewed a castle at our left, built upon the brink of a high precipice; and still a few miles on we viewed another castle of larger dimensions. These old ruins have a history, but we are none the wiser for it at the present time. Why did they build their castles in so wild and mountainous places, and the castles themselves upon the brink or edge of precipices of rocks?⁴*LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 1*

The cars passed through a tunnel in the rocky mountain directly under a grand old castle. Still farther on, at the left, we viewed the ruins of another castle. The walls still remain upon the very edge of the mountain rock which ascends hundreds of feet from the valley below. We pass those ancient scenes with feelings of regret that we cannot be informed in regard to these scenes. We have a varied scenery. Mountains clothed with shrubs and trees, and the bare perpendicular rocks rising to a great height, and then valleys of all shape and dimension lying in between the mountains.⁴*LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 2*

Villages are frequent—some quite ancient in appearance. The ancient houses now standing are several hundreds of years old, and they are very uncouth in appearance, without form and comeliness. The steep roofs tower up very high, and in these steep roofs are windows, tier above tier, showing that there are several stories reaching to the highest peak. These houses are huddled in close together as in the largest cities. The houses are not placed regularly, with any uniformity of arrangement, but they are ill-shaped and irregular.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 3

We see men and women both at work on the land that can be cultivated—women with their hoes and spades, digging in the soil with diligence and energy. Men are working also, with far less diligence. One or more is standing by with his hands in his pockets, looking on or directing these women in their work. The working women in Europe generally bear the heaviest part of the burdens. It is a common thing to see women walking, driving the load, with two or three men riding upon the load drawn by a couple of large cows. Sometimes horses draw the load, but this is rare. Most of the work is done by milk cows.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 4

Every spot of land that can be used is improved. The rocky hills are set out to grapes. Higher and still higher the vineyards extend, terrace above terrace to the very mountain top. Stone walks are made around these terraces to prevent the earth from washing away. In many places the earth is carried upon the backs of men and women and laid on the rocks, and then the grapes are set and the moisture from the rocks keeps them nourished and in a fertile condition, although they are upon the rocky mountain, stretching upward, steep as the roof of a house. Little women and men are engaged in trimming the grapes, and every little bit of vine is preserved and carefully treasured, cut in lengths, about one foot in length, and tied up in bundles for sale or for use as home fuel.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 5

There are waterfalls that come tumbling down from the very tops of the highest mountains. There are rocks, mountains of rocks of every conceivable shape, and they look as smooth upon the surface as if they had been washed by the waters of the ocean; and upon those bare rocks fir trees and shrubs are flourishing. Nothing can sustain them, but the moisture drawn from the rocks. In many places nature has thrown up a massive wall of rocks, almost regular in shape, like masonry, which extends for a great distance. There the scene is enlivened by a forest of fir trees and cataracts pouring down from the heights above. Then rocks, massive and grand, thousands of feet high, and then of less heights—natural fortifications resembling the work of art. The train wound through rocky gorges.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 6

Small farms nestled in among the mountains and foothills. We passed some wonderful rocky scenery, and there was revealed a narrow strip of land and a farm house and orchards. There was a wall of rock, slab-like in appearance, as if rocks were set on edge; and on the very top of these pointed rocks a chapel was erected, called the House of Prayer. We could not see how the people could get access to this chapel, for there was a precipice on the front and back, and these pointed rocks set on edge reached a long distance.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 7

We see chapels placed upon the sides and top of high, perpendicular rocky heights, and these were built in this way that the Protestants might have the privilege, at great cost to themselves, of getting together to worship the Lord according to the dictates of their own conscience. They felt more secure amid the wild, ferocious beasts of the mountains than among human beings who were more cruel than bloodthirsty wolves, if men and women dared to differ from them in their religious faith. The men and women who would not sacrifice principle, but who claimed it as their right to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience and to take the Bible as the foundation of their faith, were hunted down by the Papists like beasts of prey. God's people met together to worship Him in these secluded mountain retreats, unapproachable upon two and three sides, and reached only by a bridle path which was guarded. Yet they dared not worship without taking their arms of warfare. Sentinels were placed to guard the worshipers from being surprised, and if danger arose, through the crusaders who had the command from the pope or legates to exterminate every reformer, they could either flee or make a defense.4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 8

Their only crime was in making the Bible the foundation of their faith, and not receiving the doctrines of men. In searching the Scriptures they found that Jesus Christ was their only Saviour. Their confessions must be made to Him, for there is only one Mediator between God and man, only One who can forgive sins. They were almost overpowered with this new light, and with the sense of how worthless had been their formal worship, the adoration of images, the worship of the pope, and the confessions made to men. In refusing to give to man that devotion which belonged alone to God, they must stand alone against customs and practices that were separating the people from God. The cross was a heavy one to lift and endangered their every earthly prosperity and even life itself. They would be branded as criminals, as blasphemous—their reward to be poverty, shame, and death. 4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 9

Crosses we saw erected everywhere. Niches had been drilled out in the rocks and images of the Saviour on the cross placed in them. There was much outward show of respect for Christ, but the people were as destitute of the Spirit of Christ as were the men who cried out, “Crucify Him, crucify Him.” [Luke 23:21.] They were Christ’s enemies, full of wrath and bitterness, because they themselves were not obeyed as God. The Word of God was taken by the conscientious ones seeking for truth as the voice of God to them, which was more powerful than the mandate of kings or popes or prelates. 4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 10

Within those men who began to search the Scriptures, the Lord put a spirit that would not be satisfied with forms and ceremonies and doctrines of men. They longed for something loftier, more spiritual, and with a more sure foundation. The Word of God supplied this lack. 4LtMs, Ms 53, 1886, par. 11

Diary, April to May 1886

[Torre Pellice, Italy]

April 18 - May 19, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in OHC 245, EGWE 177, 187.

[Written as an installment letter to J. E. White and wife, and Frank and Hattie Belden.]4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 1

Torre Pellice, April 18

It is raining. All is astir in Torre Pellice as early as five A.M., and there is a constant clatter, clatter of big wooden shoes on the stone pavements. I opened my sash door, which is the only window in my room, stepped out on the balcony, and looked at the sky draped with clouds upon the Alps covered with snow, and then upon the foothills and valleys clothed with a garment of living green, and upon the cherry and plum trees white with blossoms. The pink peach trees contrast with the white, fragrant blossoms of apple, pear, plum, and cherry, and the atmosphere is fragrant with these beautiful blossoms. And my heart is filled with love to God.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 2

I see a providence in all of God's works. Clouds are not pleasant for present convenience, but an unseen hand is at work blessing the earth, making nature very lovely. The clouds and rain, as well as the bright sunshine, have their mission in blessings to man. The God of nature knows just what we need, and He moves forward in a straight line, sending blessings upon the just and upon the unjust. I am so grateful that finite minds cannot have the ordering of things. What cross purposes would be revealed!4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 3

Notwithstanding the rain, we hired a horse that would not go up the ascent of the mountain to Villar Pellice, where I had an appointment at four o'clock, and our livery team went only on a slow walk, making us late to our appointment. Elder Bourdeau opened the meeting and talked some minutes before we arrived. The house was literally packed. The peasant women were dressed neatly, with their cap-like bonnets of pure white. Their dresses were all blue—some a darker shade than others. I never saw a space so literally packed as was that house.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 4

I spoke upon Christ's riding in Jerusalem, His weeping upon the crest of Olivet over the devoted city, because of His mercy and love being rejected. I dwelt especially upon the mercy and love of Jesus in dying for sinful man that he might not perish in his sins. I had great freedom. I could scarcely contain my feelings. How I longed to lead them to the fountain of living waters. I longed to have them see and obey the truth. Many were affected to tears, and several understood English. But we cannot expect that with the errors they have accepted, sound doctrines will be seen by them at once. We must have great patience with them. The pastors have not led them in advanced steps, for they remain stationary themselves. Old customs, traditions, and false doctrines satisfy them.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 5

I have sought to urge upon the people that God wants them to advance step by step, walking in the light as He is in the light, going forward and upward toward heaven. Truth and duty must now engage their attention. I tell you the Lord will break down these barriers and permit us to reach the people where they are, notwithstanding the efforts of the ministers to prevent this and to keep the people in darkness. The message given to them from heaven will reach them in God's providence. Meanwhile we will watch, we will pray, we will work wherever we can.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 6

When the meeting closed, all pressed about me to speak with me and to shake my hand. All had words to speak in thanks to me. I pointed them up to thank God. One who spoke in French said, "My sister, you have worked well tonight." While I was speaking, some of the people who could talk French tried to translate to their Italian friends, but none of these things disturbed me.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 7

When we arrived at Brother Bourdeau's, we found letters from America, and how eagerly we perused them. You will have to have the experience in order to appreciate this pleasure of receiving news from friends from whom you have been separated a long time.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 8

April 19

Raining still. Remain indoors. Could not go to my appointment at Villar Pellice, five miles. Elder Bourdeau went, however, and the room was crowded, and more than one hundred were outside who could not get in. Elder Bourdeau went on foot. The people expected to hear me, but I could not go because of rain.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 9

This is a hard field, but we are to sow beside all waters. These valleys have been watered with the blood of the Christian Waldenses, and it must be that the seed of truth will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. We will work, we will pray, and we will believe. It is no harder a field than Jesus found when He came to our world. He had hearts fully as hard, fully as difficult to reach. It was then as it is now, the teachers stand directly in the way of the message of mercy and truth's reaching the people. Jesus met with discouragements, and so do we. He worked on earnestly, unselfishly, so must we. A Paul may plant and an Apollos water, but God giveth the increase.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 10

We feel an intense interest for these Waldensian valleys, that the light of truth shall be set upon a candlestick that it may give light to all in these valleys. God has given us our work, and He has not left it for us to choose the easiest places. We must work wherever we can, in opposition, in discouragement, in hope and fear and much trembling, lest our labors will be in vain. We must meet obstacles and in faith surmount them. It is no easy matter to come up square against forms and customs and tradition and try to show them a better way. Lord, help us; Lord, bless us; Lord, open the way before us, is my constant prayer. The light shines, and its rays will shine in upon the moral darkness of the people in these Piedmont valleys.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 11

A rainy day, but we will not let one shade of the outside gloom into our hearts or into our home here. We must make sunshine in cheerfulness, in grateful praise to God, that we have a precious Jesus who loves us and is this moment interceding for us. Praise His holy name. We have devoted the day to writing. Have an appointment three miles out, at St. Johns. We hired a horse and carriage that was covered and did not get wet. We found a small hall full, and there were in the congregation eight who understood English. One was a man who had spent three years in England and learned English. He interpreted for me once. There were two ministers and one school teacher and his wife present. These understood English. The Lord blessed me in the presentation of the truth. Nearly all greeted me heartily by shaking of hands and expressing their thanks for the good words spoken. I did not get to rest until about midnight. 4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 12

April 22

Early in the morning the clatter, clatter, clatter of the wooden shoes forbids sleeping. It is market day. Men, women, and children are rushing over the stone pavements, dragging hand wagons or carrying baskets and bundles on their heads. There is bright sunshine today, and all are preparing to exhibit their wares in the market place. Here comes a woman with a long stick on her back from which is dangling a dead kid. Two more peasant women with dead kids hanging from a pole on their backs; a woman has a live kid in her arms; a man passes with three dead kids, and now there is a full cart full of the same article—kids for market. In the market everything is displayed—drygoods of a very nice quality, socks, yarn, silk handkerchiefs, all kinds of vegetables, and an array of shoes from the finest grade to the most clumsy wooden shoes which go clatter, clatter, clatter, making a deafening sound. 4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 13

April 23

Rode out again to St. Johns and had a very interesting meeting. The Spirit of the Lord was in our midst, His power and Spirit were upon me in great measure. I know that others felt the presence and blessing of God. Many shook hands with me and expressed their thanks for that discourse. One minister said, "That was a beautiful text. I praise God for the words spoken tonight." His brother, a minister, said, "I never heard humility spoken upon as you have treated it tonight." My text was Mark 9:33-37. Others spoke in Italian, others in French. Although I could not understand their words, I did understand the quivering lips and the tearful eyes. I left an appointment for the next Tuesday. And as soon as we stepped into the carriage, the rain just poured the whole three miles. W. C. White was outside the cover and got very wet. It was eleven o'clock before we could get comfortably to bed. I did not sleep until about one o'clock. My heart was filled with such yearning of soul for these who were in darkness and who needed the light of truth. My earnest cry went up to God for special help, special wisdom to meet this people.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 14

This much of my diary I write you, but if I get this in the mail—I must send it without delay. I wish to say that good news has come to us from Italy. One intelligent worker in the Baptist church has come out decidedly on the Sabbath. He will, if he holds fast, be a great help. I hear that Brother Conradi baptized twenty at Lausanne last Sabbath and will baptize six more this week. This has taken some of the best working members from the Methodist church. The churches are terribly stirred up, both in Torre Pellice and in Lausanne. The ministers cannot stop this work. Brother Bourdeau writes that he has large congregations in Villar Pellice and in St. Johns. The ministers say they do not know what to do. They have said and done all they could, and yet the people will attend these strange meetings to hear strange doctrines. They have the promise at Villar Pellice of reinforcements in the line of a new minister to see what he can do. I spoke in Geneva once on our return route from Italy and three times in Lausanne. The work will go—praise the Lord, it will go—and man cannot hinder the work of God. Well, it is too dark for me to see to write.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 15

I did mean to get this into the mail, but failed. I will send it today. We have mail days to send letters to America—Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. These days there is generally a close application to writing.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 16

I have written a long letter to Brother Littlejohn, asking Addie to replace the one thousand dollars to this mission in Basel. It was cut off from this mission to give to her. I asked Littlejohn to place one thousand by its side and help us in our great need. I am doing all I can, and so is Willie, to get something started in the line of books printed at this office that will bring in some returns.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 17

I can tell you, children, that there is not much chance for idleness here. Every one has all that he can possibly do. I can see no way to leave here until one year from now. Brother Whitney will, we think, go to the conference. W. C. White and I shall not go. This is our plan—W. C. White to remain to see to things here while Whitney can go to the conference.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 18

Mother.

I will add a few words more. Are you children, while associated together, growing in grace? I feel an interest for Frank and Hattie. Where are these dear children standing today in the Lord's vineyard? What are they doing for Jesus, who has done everything for them? Is there not danger of your all making child's play of life? God wants you to rise to a noble, elevated standard. Jesus has left nothing undone on His part that you should not be elevated, ennobled, sanctified. Are you seeking God most earnestly? Are you active in the service of Jesus Christ? Are you leaning upon your own strength, or are you making God your strength? Moments are precious—not one is to be unemployed.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 19

God has given you ability, both of you, Frank and Hattie. He requires far more of you than you give Him. He asks your whole heart, your undivided affection. Your hearts are altogether too insensible to the love of Jesus which He has given you. You need to be excited to love and good works by the sight of Calvary. You need to abase yourselves and exalt Jesus. We are in the great day of Atonement. Be careful how you do your work. Do it to God's glory.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 20

Give the child God has given you a right mold of character. She is entrusted to you not as a mere plaything, but as one who has a soul to receive correct impressions, to become lovely in disposition and character, fitting up for Christ's kingdom.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par.

Oh, let your hearts be broken before God. Overcome every defect in your characters, for unless you are pure and holy and undefiled you will not have a place in the kingdom of God. Let your life express the meekness of Jesus Christ. Let not pride of heart keep you separated from Jesus. Jesus loves you, and He is disappointed in you because you fall far below what you may be. God will work for you if you will place yourselves in right relation to Him. But you need His grace daily. You need to study the Scriptures to be better acquainted with the Word of God. You need to grow in reverence and trust and love to Jesus, and you need to know your own weak points of your character, and then appreciate the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth you from all sin. You should bring piety and religion into your everyday life. Grow in self-distrust, but depend more and more on God. Grow solidly in Christian experience. Your example will be a blessing to others. 4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 22

How much have you grown in grace and the knowledge of your Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Are you not dwarfs in religious growth? Look and see if you have an experience proportionate to the light which has been shining upon your pathway. Your accountability will be according to the light given. My precious children, what a victory we must gain to enter the holy city of God! If we lose heaven, we lose everything. 4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 23

Now may the Lord bless these words written to you in love. I have risen before four o'clock and have written this before my breakfast. I beg of you to make a business of serving God. You have not yet learned to be faithful soldiers of the cross of Christ. It is late in the day but by diligent, earnest effort you can make a success of perfecting Christian characters. Children, unless you learn these lessons you will never, never join the happy family in heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 24

I do wish I could see you and talk with you, but do not move impulsively; do not, in your business, embrace too much. Bind about as much as possible. In my last letter I wrote you that we were going to a picnic. We did so. We rode out several miles. The party went in the cars, and it was a respectable-looking company. They had to walk three miles from the cars and three miles back to the cars, which was all the exercise they needed for once.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 25

After arriving at the mansion on the hillside, they went one mile up, up, up to an old castle. This castle was built upon a rocky eminence, strikingly romantic. First there was a wall, many feet high, which enclosed the court. In this court was a garden, well cultivated. Then the dwelling rooms were built inside this rocky wall. This castle is about twelve hundred years old. The sight from this wall was most grand. There were windows in the wall, and holes for muskets to pour fire upon besiegers.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 26

There are many ruins of these old fortified castles in Switzerland and other parts of Europe. After we had enjoyed the beautiful scenery from this height, we went slowly down. It took me quite a while to climb this eminence, Willie helping me, and some time to get down—but I did it, lame as I was. I do think, children, that Switzerland contains some of the most beautiful scenery that is not equaled by any in our world. It is impossible to describe this view. If I can get a description you shall have it. I think Sister Boners [?] is now translating it from German into English.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 27

There are other interesting points, two more of equal eminence, all in sight of each other. There were four sisters who were Catholics, but did not live very pleasantly together. They had a very large amount of money and selected sites on these mountain heights for building. One stands very near us in Basel. It is a beautiful view—a chapel and houses connected with it, called St. Margaret's. I never tire of looking upon this scenery. Another is St. Chrischana, which we shall visit next. One other sister built on this summit of a richly wooded hill five miles from Basel. There is an ancient church of St. Chrischana. Ages ago it was built there and dedicated to the virgin saint. It fell into ruins and so remained until the last forty years when it was rebuilt and dedicated to Christ, although it still retains its old name, Chrischana. Around this center are grouped several houses, the largest of which will accommodate some sixty persons.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 28

These buildings constitute the training college and headquarters of the Pilgrim Mission. The company educated there is gathered from the peasantry of Germany and Switzerland—young men who have been accustomed to manual labor and who are willing to labor still as it may be required of those who purpose to engage in missionary work, either in their own lands or in the uttermost parts of the earth, on any mission of a pilgrim.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 29

Immediately opposite the Cathedral are the students' premises, including a spacious dining hall, the rooms devoted to study, and the dormitories—the whole bristling with life. The students were everywhere, save in the dormitories. Some were engaged in study, others were working in the extensive printing establishment, or in the bookbinding department, or in some other manual employ. For it may be noted there are tailoring and shoemaking departments in active operation, as well as gardening and field operations to be attended to, and certain hours of the day are given by most of the students to labor for which their hands are best fitted. The whole of the work necessary for the carrying on of the institution seems to be performed on the spot. The students wait on themselves, and keep their own premises in order, no servants being employed in their quarters. A homelike feeling pervades the place and an earnest religious life animates all its proceedings. It is refreshing to think that all who dwell there are of one heart and one aim, that aim being the highest which can animate the mind of man. Here is where Ertzenberger received his education.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 30

Well, I have wandered from my subject. After we came from viewing the castle, we spread our lunches upon tables in a park under horse chestnut trees and took our dinner. The hotel furnished the party with milk, hot and cold, and with butter. After dinner we held a meeting in the open air. I spoke to our party upon God in nature, then other exercises followed. We had several from the hotel to hear us, and I hope on the whole that it was not time spent in vain. The workers in the office needed this recreation. They are very diligent workers, excellent young men. Brother John Vuilleumier and Brother Fry, who embraced the truth since we came to this place, are my interpreters. Fry in German; John in French. I tell the workers here that they should grow constantly, for it may be they will be called to present the truth to the people who are in darkness. The Lord does help me. I know He gives me His blessing in rich measure, and I am not discouraged.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 31

May 19

Here my letter had to stop. I had a great weakness come over me. My heart was affected, and it seemed for a little time the lamp of life was to be extinguished. Yesterday was a very bad day for me. For three days I have been down with nervous prostration. I have a little more strength this morning. I have appointments in three different places: Neuchâtel, Chaux-de-Fonds, Bienne. We must start with our carriage tomorrow. W. C. White, Sarah McEnterfer, and John Vuilleumier, interpreter, accompany me. Our carriage is easy, and I hope it will prove a blessing to me. Mary remains at Basel to see to the book we are getting through the press—morning talks and history of the work in Europe. Our household are usually well. My hope and strength is in God. I have worked so constantly that I am really worn out, but God will help me. I have faith and put my trust in the promises. Be of good courage, and the Lord will bring you out all right.4LtMs, Ms 54, 1886, par. 32

Visit to Bobbio, Italy

Bobbio, Italy

April 25, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in VSS 400; CTr 29; 2MR 303-304; 5MR 273.

Sunday, April 25, 1886. We rode up to Bobbio which is two miles above Villar Pellice. We left the horses and carriages at a stable and then climbed up, up the winding path of the steep ascent to the house which was occupied by the Vaudois in the time of their persecution by the Catholics.⁴*LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 1*

On our way to this place we were much surprised to meet hundreds of people who had attended services—some the Catholic service, some the Protestant chapel. All, both men and women, greeted us respectfully as we passed through the crowd. I was informed that many of the company had come down from the mountain summit to which they resort in summer with their cattle—cows and goats and flocks of sheep. The houses in the valleys are left almost entirely empty.⁴*LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 2*

We attended our appointment at Villar. The room could not possibly hold one third of the people. The seats were removed and placed in the yard in the open air, with the canopy of heaven for a covering. Women and young girls, with but few exceptions, were dressed with white cap-like bonnets, white as snow, with quilted fronts, and light and dark colored blue cotton dresses. They looked neat in their Sunday best. Between three and four hundred composed the congregation. But one third could be provided with seats. The rest were obliged to stand through the services. I expected the novelty of having a meeting in the open air would lead some to feel at liberty to amuse themselves and disturb the meeting, but I was happily disappointed. With but few exceptions they were as quiet and orderly as in a meetinghouse, and the only disturbance was when some new ones would come in to find a place favorable to hear. To hear a woman speak and to have services in the open air was to them an entirely new thing. After I had spoken a few moments there was the best of attention. A solemn hush seemed to be upon the people. Young men and young women looked serious. Many were in tears. My text was Matthew 9:28-30. The congregation were, many of them, intelligent men and women. I presented the truth in its simplicity, that old and young could understand. This was the manner of Jesus' preaching. He taught the people in simplicity. He used no large words that the unlearned could not understand. The unlearned, the veriest child, could understand His words. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 3

Jesus declared in Nazareth, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." Luke 4:18. How many of the professed ministers of Jesus Christ are copying this example of our divine Teacher? 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 4

The elder of the Baptist church sent a request by one for the privilege of asking some questions and making some remarks after the discourse. Some prominent members of his church were present. He stated he wished to present his ideas. Elder A. C. Bourdeau said he would have a few words with the gentleman first, else he could not give him permission to speak. He chose not to have an interview, and the meeting passed off without anything unpleasant. None of these men will open their churches for us to speak to their congregations, and yet when we have to crowd into little rooms and go out in the open air, they would press their opposition to the truth even under these circumstances. We rode back to Villar and two meetings were held—one Bible reading and one giving instruction as to the best and most successful manner of giving Bible readings and doing missionary work. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 5

[April 26]

April 26 we had profitable conversation with Brother Biglia in regard to his future field of labor, as he is now desirous to give himself fully to the work. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 6

We see how difficult it is to reach the hearts of the people with the truth when customs, traditions, and the testimony of the fathers are brought in to take the place of the Word of God. Fables are ready and presented to every one who has any inclination to turn from the truth of the Bible. The spirit that is prevailing in Italy and in every place in Europe is to make of none effect the Lord's great moral standard of righteousness. Here, especially in these Waldensian valleys, as far as doctrine and faith and vital godliness are concerned, it is exactly the reverse from the ancient Waldenses. There seems to be a most discouraging condition in regard to religious faith. The teachers do not lead the people to the light of the Bible for they themselves are ignorant of the Scriptures and the power of God, and the greatest effort is made to shut out any advance light that may come to the people. God can change this order of things, and He will do it. He will break this spell upon them.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 7

We felt distressed and sore at heart to have men, professing to believe the Lord is soon coming, as does Elder Grant, confuse the understanding of a people who know so little of the Bible and excite their prejudice and opposition against the law of God; and while claiming to be sanctified, transgress the commandments, standing by the side of one who is filled with bitterness against the truth. These men have done their work in sowing the seed which they will harvest in the near future. We were obliged to say some things in answer to the statements these two men have made, which places them as bearing false witness. If they did not originate the falsehoods they have uttered, they have loved them and eagerly gathered them up, going back forty years and gathering up reports from some of those who have been reproved for their dishonesty, their sins and wickedness.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 8

Notwithstanding these reports have been answered and proved to be false, yet that makes no difference to these men who love to have it so. And why is Elder Grant so earnest to present me in this light while he unites in his work with men who break God's law and whose spotted characters leave wretchedness and ruin in their track wherever they go? Can these claim holiness after God's standard? No, but after their own standard.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par.

The testimony of those who have heard the calumny of these men is that one of these—Elder Grant or Mrs. White—must be wrong. I answer them, I have no controversy with anyone. It is not my work to devote my time to the vindication of myself and the denial of the reports of these men. They love this kind of work. They have educated themselves for years in this work, and they know not any other way. You have a sample of a similar work done by the scribes and elders and Sadducees in Christ's day. If the pure and spotless character of Christ, all His precious teachings and the works of mercy and love that He wrought, did not guarantee Him freedom from reproach and from the tongue of slander, what could the followers of Christ expect? The very bitterest and most vile implications came from those who stood in high places.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 10

When some things which had been spoken against me were repeated to me, and the remark was made, "Both cannot be right. The one who reports these sayings or the one of whom these things are said must be wicked," I answered, "Elder Grant has never come to me like an honest man who loved his neighbor as himself and asked me if these things were so." While he claims to be sanctified, he is dealing in slander and falsehoods. That which he dares not utter in public he will talk in private families. But if they falsified the purest Model that the world ever had, what may I expect? I could go around from place to place and call the people together and testify to the falsity of these statements, but did Jesus do this? He told the men who accused Him, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do" (John 8:44); and those who do just as the accusers of Christ did have the denunciation of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 11

There is nothing which wings its flight so swiftly as calumny. Nothing is uttered in a smoother tongue. Statements may be made that it is with grief and sorrow they say these things; but while the words are as smooth as oil, the poison of asps is under the tongue. Nothing is listened to and relished with more readiness than slander. Nothing is dispersed more widely. Should you attempt to meet it in one place, and root it out, it will appear with added intensity in another. The tongue of slander is never tired. It keeps itself in constant employment. Sometimes it drips honey, sometimes gall. It assails or insinuates according to circumstances. It hides a curse under a smooth word and administers poison. "What shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?" (Psalm 120:3) the prophet exclaims. The treatment is hot coals of juniper.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 12

The work of Satan is to accuse the brethren before God day and night. Then we may expect that those who do not reverence God, who break His commandments and teach others to do so, will not respect the work or character of anyone who does not believe just as they do but, who is engaged in doing a work entirely the opposite, who is keeping and teaching others to keep the law of Jehovah.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 13

I would remain entirely silent upon this point were it not for those who know me not, who have had no knowledge of my work in seeking to win souls to Christ, either in speaking or in writing. I take no credit to myself in this work. The Lord has put His Spirit upon me; and as the end is near, the Lord has said, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew My people their transgression, and the house of Israel their sins." Isaiah 58:1. I have a work to do—not pleasant at all times, or agreeable—but I will not consult my wishes and choose the easy part of saying Peace, peace, when there is no peace for the transgressor. Warnings must be given, messages from heaven must be borne to them. Whether they will receive or reject the voice of God speaking to them, the warnings must come to them all the same.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 14

It is not the work of the messengers of God to make men believe. This is left to the will of the individual. And the positions men take in receiving or rejecting the message God sends them determines their case. Their names will be registered in the book of life if they are loyal to God. If they choose to war against the law of Jehovah, then they take sides with the first great rebel, the prince of darkness and all evil. There can be none of this special enmity between fallen angels and fallen men who are engaged in the same work of making void the law of God. Both are evil, both have forsaken God. While the Jews claimed to believe in God and worship Him, Christ calls them children of their father the devil, doing his work, possessing his spirit. [John 8:44.] So not all who claim to have the knowledge of the Scriptures and to be teachers of the people are safe guides. Some have rejected light given them of God because it did not come in the manner and suggest the things agreeable to their ideas. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 15

Christ said of these teachers, “Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.” Matthew 22:29. They had blocked out their own way of being saved in the place of taking God’s way. They had forsaken the path of self-denial, had mingled the commandments of men with the commandments of God, and presented and urged all upon the people as if direct from God. The commandments of God were not kept by them and carried into the practical life, and the purity which distinguished the life and character of Christ was dropped out of their religion. Evil, wherever it exists, is in rejecting light and truth and departing from the living God; and then there is enmity always against those who cherish the light and walk in its rays. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 16

These words would not have been written except to put some honest souls on their guard. When men claim to be sanctified, see wherein the sanctity consists. Is it in slander? In falsehood? Does it consist in tearing down God’s great moral standard of character, and tearing down every one who does not agree with them in doctrine? Then know that they claim sanctity by a standard they have made for themselves. They are not only breaking God’s law, but teaching others to break it. Beware of the man—or the woman—who tells you he is sanctified and holy. You cannot have a more sure evidence that in heart he is the exact opposite of what he professes. Those who have no reverence for the holy law of God and can say such bitter things against it, and will pervert the Scriptures and wrest them from their true meaning, will not have any compunctions of conscience to assail the characters of those who stand in defense of that law which they are trampling in the dust and upon which they pour contempt. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 17

The work of seeking to do good to those who are in midnight darkness is uphill work. Jesus met the spirit of prejudice, envy, and opposition at every place where He entered with His teachings.

There was an element to resist Him, and this element was the strongest among those who claimed the greatest piety. It was the Jewish nation who made the work of Christ so exceedingly hard. Jesus, the great Teacher, had a work to do in introducing a new principle into the hearts of men who claimed to be righteous above all others, but who taught for doctrines the commandments of men. When there had been no power to rise above this deceptive influence, the divine Teacher brought to man divine aid to help him in his depraved nature, with a renovating moral energy, so that he would not love sin, but be endued with a hatred of sin. Through this divine aid he could resist the natural passions which held sway within his heart and overcome day by day the temptations of the great adversary of souls, who claims dominion over the earth.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 18

This principle must come alone from the One who kept all His Father's commandments, who was without stain or spot during the great rebellion in heaven. There is not enmity between fallen angels and fallen men. Both are evil, both are doing the same work, both are in apostasy and rebellion, both claim to be that which they are not—angels of light—and are covering their transgression with robes of righteousness and apparently pure angel garments. They deceive the children of men.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 19

Evil, wherever it exists, will always league against good. So fallen angels and fallen men will join in a desperate companionship. The lofty prince of darkness calculated that if he could induce men—as he had induced angels—to join in the rebellion, he should have them as his working agents, his allies, in every enterprise against heaven. There was no enmity between himself and the spirits who had joined him in the effort to change or annul the law of God and make his own word and his own commands equal with that of Jehovah. Whatever contentions there might be among themselves, which were many, in one thing they were united as with iron bands—that of opposing the law of God and with determined energy tearing down the great moral standard which governs all intelligences in Paradise and in the many worlds which God had created.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 20

We see and feel the same work of Satan carried forward in our world through his generalship, to unite all diverse elements on one point—that is, to make void the law of Jehovah. Not all the human race will fight against Satan. The enmity is exercised through the Spirit and power of God. Only a portion of the race will return to their loyalty to God. All who stand on Satan's side of the question will perish in their sins. Satan is the root of rebellion and transgression, and all who are engaged in doing the same work of transgression will receive the same wrath of God, and therefore all will finally perish, root and branch.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 21

Sin is the transgression of the law; and never was there a being on earth who had so intense a hatred of sin as Jesus Christ, who came to destroy him who had brought sin into our world. All sin was odious in His sight. It was the purity and holiness of Christ which stirred up against Him all the malice and hatred of those whose carnal hearts were not in harmony with God's law. He provoked from the despisers of God's law the assaults of reprobate spirits. A perpetual reproach was thrown on a proud and sensual generation by the spotless life of the righteous Son of God who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth. If vice had not received so severe a rebuke from the Son of God in His blameless life, the multitude would never have been worked up to demand His crucifixion. All who follow Christ will bear the reproach and the shame and contempt that Jesus bore for them. They can expect no better portion in this life than that which was given to our Lord. If the Master of the house suffer, how much more they of His household. See Matthew 10:24, 25.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 22

April 27

We have another beautiful morning. The snow-covered Alps look beautiful with the sun resting upon them. Brother Bourdeau, Brother Geymet, W. C. White and his wife, and I started, some on foot and some in a carriage, to ascend the mountains to Angrogna. We went up and up. We had a strong horse and carriage, but much of the way I was the only one in the carriage. This is the most striking scenery we have yet seen. It resembles Colorado very much in its wild rocky mountains, precipices, gulches, deep ravines, and very narrow valleys. These mountains of so great height are cultivated to the very summit. Dwellings are like nests, glued to the mountainsides, and houses are built upon the tops of the mountains. There are three villages in this mountainous place.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 23

These villages were once inhabited by the Waldenses. But the Catholics came in from Milan and Turin, both strong Catholic cities, and persecuted the Waldenses. One village that we are now in has been burned several times. The inhabitants were driven from their homes and burning buildings, surrounded by their inhuman persecutors, and driven off from a high precipice. We left the carriage and walked on the very spot where those poor souls were compelled to go. It is a beautiful, level, grassy plot of ground, and hundreds, yes, thousands, could be congregated here. I was thinking what a beautiful place for an out-of-door meeting. Here a large congregation could be assembled to hear the truth.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 24

A venerable looking Vaudois, about sixty-eight years old, was at work in the field. He gave us information concerning the events that had taken place which are mentioned in history. He led us along to the edge of this smiling, grassy field, and we looked over an abrupt, deep precipice, hundreds of feet down. Here the poor souls were driven. Being too few to help themselves, there was no escape for them. They were thrown off from this height upon the jagged rocks which composed a part of the embankment of the precipice and into the deep ravine below. And the only reason was that they did not receive the Catholic faith, but made their home in these wild mountain regions to escape their persecutors and that they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Thousands found their graves in the ravines below this precipice.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 25

We read in Luke of a time when an attempt was made upon the life of Christ, when He announced His mission in Nazareth. See Luke 4:18-29. The first impression made upon the hearts of the people by the Spirit of God broke down their prejudice, and they witnessed to the gracious words that proceeded from His lips. But unbelief, whispered to them by the enemy, turned the current of their feelings, and next they were filled with madness because they thought Jesus reflected upon them for their lack of piety and loyalty to God, setting before them their spiritual apostasy. They rose up, thrust Him out of the city, and led Him with no gentle hands to the brow of the hill whereon the city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong and murder Him then and there. But His time had not yet come. His mission was not ended. Heavenly angels guarded Him and held the eyes of the infuriated priests and elders of Israel so that Jesus passed through the midst unharmed to prosecute His work in cities more favorable to the reception of light and truth.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 26

The very same enmity that was in the hearts of these would-be murderers of Christ was in the hearts of the murderers of the Vaudois—the Catholic religious zealots—making them satanic in their character. These are the religionists who display the cross of Christ and the image of Christ and the apostles and the virgin Mary as objects of worship. While they have the symbol of the cross, they have none of the spirit of Him who bore the cross. Should He come on earth today as at His first advent, they could be of the number who would cry out, “Crucify Him, crucify Him,” as did the Jews [Luke 23:21], because the life and mission of Christ would strike directly at the root and foundation of their religion. These men claim to be Christ’s representatives on earth, as the priests and rulers claimed to be the exalted of God in the days of Christ, and as Satan claimed to be an angel of light. He was the first great rebel. He deceived thousands and thought to deceive the Son of God with his pretentious claims, and to overcome Him with his temptations.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 27

Christ was our example in all things. Where do the Romanists find the first intimation of an excuse for their wicked cruelty? Is it like Christ? No, but it is precisely like the character of Satan and his works. When John felt wounded in spirit because he saw that his beloved Teacher was insulted and treated with contempt by the Samaritans, the indignant spirit of revenge stirred his soul and he asked with deep earnestness, “Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?” Luke 9:54. Christ did not justify this spirit for a moment. He replied, “Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.” Verse 55.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 28

The Son of man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. The manner of spirit these men are of, who claim to be Christ's representatives upon the earth, yet who would torture and murder, is not that of Christ. They are men moved upon and controlled by the spirit of their master the devil, and by their pretentious claims they deceive many honest souls into the belief that they must be revered and worshiped as Christ Himself. Herod was a murderer. Stirred up by the chief priests, in union with Pilate, he killed the just and holy Son of God while they supplied the place of Christ with a murderer. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 29

The Catholic hierarchy is not tested and proved by having the Son of God in its midst to reprove its hypocrisy and rebuke its corruptions as Jesus did those of the priests and Pharisees. Its emissaries show the same spirit against Christ's followers and treat them exactly as [they] would treat the Son of God were He in their place. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Matthew 25:40. Christ identifies His interest with suffering humanity. Christ's great heart of love was ever ready to sympathize with suffering humanity and to relieve human woe and affliction. The spirit of persecution of those who claim religious freedom to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience is not of Christ, for there is not a vestige of this spirit in all His life or in any of His teachings. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 30

The Lord said concerning Satan, that old serpent, that he should bruise the heel of Christ, but Christ would bruise his head. Thank God, he cannot touch the head. "With the mind I myself serve the law of God" (Romans 7:25), said the prophet. The mind and heart are enlisted in the service of Christ, while Satan has enlisted men and fallen angels to join in his company to league against good. They can only bruise the heel, while in the very act, when Satan seems to have triumphed in putting them to torture and to death, the faithful who stand in defense of the law of Jehovah are wounding the head of the great rebel. 4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 31

This prophecy of enmity between Satan and Christ is far-reaching. It is a delineation of an unwearied conflict between Christ and His followers and Satan and his angels and fallen men united in a desperate companionship to reproach, bruise, wound, and exterminate the followers of Christ to the close of time. This controversy between Satan and Christ was carried on here in this world. Satan was constantly afflicting the Son of God and creating prejudice in the minds of men. Not only were Christ's doctrines and teachings perverted, misinterpreted, and wrested from their true meaning, but falsehoods followed Him everywhere. His pure character was assailed, and He was compelled to flee from one city to another because of the spies upon His track. The falsehoods and misrepresentations that the chief priests and Pharisees and Sadducees poured into the ears of the people appealed to the worst passions of adulterers, fornicators, and dishonest men, exciting a burning prejudice that made it almost impossible for Him to live upon the earth for even three years and a half after His public ministry began. Why, then, should those who bear the truth of God to the world be discouraged and fainthearted? Christ has said, "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you." John 15:18. Ye "are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." John 17:14. They will "revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My name's sake." Matthew 5:11. "Yea, the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father nor Me." John 16:2, 3.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 32

Satan's malignity reached its height when the Lord of glory was crucified, and we may expect in our day that men's hearts will be open to prejudice and to the falsehoods and wicked misrepresentations and slander of those who love this kind of satanic work. It is a wisdom from beneath. It is hell-born, and its results will be as in Christ's day. "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on Him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." John 12:42, 43.4LtMs, Ms 55, 1886, par. 33

Traveling in Switzerland

Laufen, Switzerland

May 20, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in TMK 146, 360; 10MR 367-370; 3Bio 343.

We are about fourteen miles from Basel, sitting upon the grass under a large, widespread oak, which is a shelter to us from the rays of a noontday sun in May in Switzerland. The horse Dolly is unharnessed. John Vuilleumier and Willie are at work rubbing him, using hay in the place of a curry comb; then he is left free to graze and do as he pleases. John and W. C. White walk to the nearest house, which is not far distant, for milk to be used with our dry lunch. A bed has been made for me under the shelter of the friendly tree where I may lie down to rest. Sarah McEnterfer prepares the luncheon, which is spread upon the grass upon smooth Manila paper used as tablecloth. The prayer is made for the blessing upon our food, and the simple lunch is eaten with a relish. W. C. White engages in writing letters on the calligraph. Sarah has arranged the dinner basket, washed the dishes in a stream of water close by, and E. G. White lies down hoping to sleep. She has been sick for several days and has not slept as many hours as health required. John Vuilleumier takes the German and French papers to the house where the milk was obtained, to do some missionary work and obtain names to whom he can send these little messengers of light and truth.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 1

Being refreshed with a short nap, I begin to use my pen. Not many miles from Basel we had an interesting sight of old towers upon high rocks. These had fallen into decay. We came to a very interesting spot where there were ancient castles. The cars pass through the rocky foundation of one ancient castle which is in very good repair and is inhabited at the present time. One castle at our right was built for a prince, but is now turned into a school room.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 2

We pass through the defile of the Jura Mountain Range. Beyond these are the Alps. The scenery is indeed very beautiful and interesting. We are now seated near a massive rock which Napoleon Bonaparte approached from the rear; and he planted his cannon upon these very rocks. He set his heart on taking this place, but it is a strong fortification; battlements of rock range on either side of this valley. It is God's great work of masonry, and a passage is left only wide enough for the cars and the carriage road and between the two the swift-running waters of the Birse. Napoleon did not succeed. He was badly beaten and had to retreat.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 3

There are in this village three ancient castles. One stands at the entrance of the village. We pass through the archway directly under the castle where once stood heavy gates to the entrance of the village. There are stores and workshops. We pass through the city, through another arched gateway under the second castle, and are out of the village enclosure. One large castle at the entrance of the village has been remodeled and looks very pleasant and convenient. These castles have three or four watchtowers. These towers are built round, and extend up high, overlooking the valleys for a great distance. There are small slits of crevices in these towers, and from these openings, with the aid of a spyglass, armies with hostile intent could be at once detected. Napoleon desired greatly to command this place, for it was the entrance to the valleys in Switzerland; but if kept from this point, then they could not take the villages in the valleys.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 4

The horse is again harnessed, the things packed up, and we hear the cry, "All aboard."4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 5

May 21

We have rested well through the night. We found accommodations in a very nice hotel in the village of Moutier. This is a very beautiful valley. It has seemed as we were winding our course through the defile of the mountains that we should come to where the mountains would block our way, but the road winds on through the openings of the mountains.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 6

The scenery through which we passed was altogether too majestic, too awfully grand, to give anything like a description that can compare to the scenery as it really is. The battlements of rocks—the time-worn rocky walls that have stood since the flood, washed with the mountain torrents—stand out smooth as if polished, while rocks diverse from these in shape are seen in regular layers as if art had fashioned them. Here on this ride, from three o'clock until past six, we viewed the most interesting, grand scenery that our eyes ever looked upon. The rocks ascend higher and still higher from the earth, and growing from these rocks are beautiful, dark-colored pines intermingled with the lighter and most beautiful living green of the maple and beech. These rocks are covered to the very summit with their garment of rich foliage which nature has furnished. The heart of these mountains of rocks are tunnels, one after another, many of them close together.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 7

We have thought we should see nothing more grand and striking than the towering rocky heights of Colorado, but this scenery far exceeds anything we there witnessed. Such wild grandeur, such solemn scenery, carries one back to the period when the waters rose to the highest points of land, and the unbelieving antediluvians perished for their great wickedness in the waters of the flood.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 8

As we look upon the openings in these rocks—the caverns that open to the sight, the deep channels worn by the mighty cataracts—and the rocks of every conceivable shape, we say, “How wonderful, O Lord, are Thy works in all the earth.” The softening, subduing touches penciled by the great Master Artist in the beautiful arrangement of dress of dark and living green, this beautiful combination of colors to cover the rugged, time-seamed rocks! Then the deep gorges, the noisy, fast-running streams, and the grand mountains covered with forest trees in their beautiful summer robes! The view is grand in the extreme and presents to the senses such high and holy and strong and sacred ideas of God our Maker.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 9

And then the thought that we may call Him Father! We will not look upon the magnificent works of His almighty power and forget God. This did the inhabitants of the world before the flood. The giant forests—trees that knew scarcely anything of decay—the blooming gardens resembling Eden, the bubbling fountains, the running streams, the beautiful lakes, the rich minerals, the precious metals—gold and silver and precious stones—were given of God to enrich the earth for the good of men. But all these things did not inspire them with love, with gratitude to the Giver. They looked upon all these precious things of the mountains and the glorious things of the valleys as exclusively their own, as if they themselves had brought them into existence, and the very treasures God had given them as a means of remembering Him, they made the means of forgetting Him.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 10

My meditations were traveling back. In my mind's eye, there was the picture that had been presented to me of the Eden glories. Marred because of sin, yet although the blight of God was upon it, the curse did not rest heavily. As after the curse man set himself to devising ways and means to indulge in sin and disobedience and forgetfulness of God, the Lord sent the message by Noah that at the end of one hundred and twenty years He would send a flood of waters upon the impenitent inhabitants of the earth. Oh, if they had only repented, God would not have destroyed the inhabitants of the old world!4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 11

But I looked upon deep gorges, the seamed and cleft rocks, the varied shapes and structures, and then thought how the people had brought all this curse upon themselves because of ingratitude to God and disobedience to His law. The torrents of rain descending from the heavens above, the fountains of the great deep broken up, the trees which men had enjoyed and idolized uprooted and swept away with the inhabitants, the groves, the palaces, the costly works to satisfy the pleasure lovers—all swept away. Those places where men had placed their idols and worshiped the works of their own hands were filled with masses of rubbish and earth, and rocks which were concealed under the surface of the earth were thrown up above the earth, covering the most lovely places that man had adored and glorified. The fruitful trees, the shady avenues, the beautiful forests and gardens they had enjoyed were utterly destroyed. The lovely home God had given to man was turned to a broken, uneven surface, and the earth was a frightful solitude. Here before me was the evidences of the destruction of the old world by a flood because the law of God was not observed.4LtMs, Ms 56,

1886, par. 12

And then I looked forward in prospect to the day of the Lord's coming, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate and destroy the sinners thereof out of it. The mountains shake and tremble before the tread of the Lord's hosts. The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Conqueror, comes to be glorified in His saints—those who love His appearing. Before the glory of Him who is to reign, the mountains will tremble and bow, the rocks will be moved out of their place; for once more will the Lord shake not alone the earth, but the heavens also. The scattered ones who have fled for their lives to the rocks, the dens, the caverns of the earth, because of the fury of the oppressor, will be made glad at the voice of God.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 13

As John, exiled upon the Isle of Patmos, was startled from his contemplation of [the works of] God in nature and as on bended knees he was praying to Him, he hears a voice, saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." [Revelation 1:11.] At the sound of the voice, John falls down in astonishment as if dead. He is unable to bear the sight of the divine glory. But a Hand raises John up, and the voice he remembers as the voice of his Master. He is strengthened and can endure to talk with the Lord Jesus. So will it be with the remnant people of God who are scattered—some in the mountain fastness, some exiled, some pursued, some persecuted. When the voice of God is heard, and the brightness of the glory is revealed, and the trial is over, the dross removed, they know they are in the presence of One who has redeemed them by His own blood. Just what Christ was to John in his exile, He will be to His people who are made to feel the hand of oppression for the faith and testimony of Jesus Christ. These very martyrs will one day be resplendent with the glory of God because He has faithful ones who have been loyal where the world, the churches, have made void His holy law. These were driven by the storm and tempest of persecution to the crevices of the rocks, but were hiding in the Rock of Ages; and in the fastness of the mountains, in the caves and dens of the earth, the Saviour reveals His presence and His glory.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 14

Yet a little while, and He that is to come will come and will not tarry.

His eyes as a flame of fire penetrate into the fast-closed dungeons and hunt out the hidden ones, for their names are written in the Lamb's book of life. These eyes of the Saviour are above us, around us, noting every difficulty, discerning every danger; and there is no place where His eyes cannot penetrate, no sorrows and sufferings of His people where the sympathy of Christ does not reach. They reach the persecuted ones everywhere. Inasmuch as ye have done this to one of the least of My brethren, ye have done it unto Me. Every deed of darkness that Satan united with wicked men may do, Christ's eyes like a flame of fire detect, and it is noted and registered by the great Heartsearcher. 4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 15

The child of God will be terror stricken at the first sight of the majesty of Jesus Christ. He feels that he cannot live in His holy presence. But the word comes to him as to John, "Fear not." [Verse 17.] Jesus laid His right hand upon John; He raised him up from his prostrate position. So will He do unto His loyal, trusting ones, for there are greater revelations of the glory of God to be given them. 4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 16

There is also to be a revelation to the transgressors of the law of Jehovah—they that made void the law of God, that have taken their stand on the side of him who thought to change times and laws. From the terror-stricken myriads comes the cry, "The great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Revelation 6:17. 4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 17

We can never describe the scenery, for it is indescribable. This view of Switzerland by carriage ride makes me desire to travel more by private conveyance. We have roads that cannot be excelled. The public roads are kept in excellent condition. Men are employed and make it a business to break up stone very fine. This crushed stone is kept constantly applied, and these roads are white as limestone and as level as the floor. There is not a bad depression, not a hole, not a rut or anything of the kind. When it rains, men have it as their business to scrape all the mud from the road. It is left in piles along the roadside, to be taken off in a cart. There is seldom much dust flying, because of the care taken of the roads, and this is seen in Europe everywhere. We are traveling in a low, heavy, covered coach with four persons, and luggage that makes the load equal to five persons, but the carriage rolls so easily on these roads that one horse easily draws such a load.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 18

If anyone can look upon this scenery without being impressed with the greatness and majesty of God, his heart must indeed be unimpressible. I do so long for a closer connection with God. This God of majesty and might may be our Father, our Friend, our hope and crown of rejoicing.4LtMs, Ms 56, 1886, par. 19

In Norway and Sweden

Christiania, Norway

July 8, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 3Bio 347-349; EGWE 203.

I had written you quite a lengthy letter, but W. C. White says I must not send it now, for there are ideas he wishes to retain to make an article. So twice you have lost a letter you otherwise would have had. Well, I will write out some things more.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 1

We left Orebro June thirty and had a great time getting on the cars. We made close calculations, which is not always safe to do. Sarah and I went on our way all safe and arrived ten minutes before the time, but W. C. White was coming on with a lot of baggage in a small handcart. The last bell was ringing and no Willie. Sarah started up the street to find him when he came running with great speed. He purchased the tickets and afterward our baggage came just in time. The handcart wheel had come off, and he had to hold up one side of the cart while another was drawing it; but when Sarah found them she grasped what baggage she could. Two women came running with loads of baggage, and we were rushed into a compartment with three gentlemen. And what a sight was W. C. White, with perspiration running down his face, every nerve strained, his pulse going on the gallop! I was so anxious and troubled that I could not get calmed down for some time.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 2

Our principal business that afternoon was to change cars. Our accommodations were not very excellent, but hard and trying; but the last part was better, much better. We met Oyen and Cecelia Dahl at the second change of cars. They had come from Stockholm and were traveling on the same train, but not in the same car. Sister Matteson and Brother Olsen's son, Oyen and Sister Dahl, went in third class; we in second.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 3

We went as far as the cars went that night, and at half-past nine o'clock we were making our way, by the still shining sun, to a hotel. We found good accommodations for our party, but I was too weary and sick to sleep much. Fire had been set to some brush, which filled our room with smoke, which was anything but pleasant. This place was Charlottenberg, a small place pleasantly located.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 4

In early morning we were again on the cars. Had a compartment all to ourselves, and there was some sleeping done by us all, I assure you. It was a rare thing for me to sleep as I did that forenoon. We reached Christiania at 11 o'clock. We had some very nice scenery of beautiful lakes and islands, places of resort; and as we approached Christiania, there were mountains and hills which made it much pleasanter than the flat lowlands of Sweden. But there is abundance of rocks, rocks, rocks, as if sown there, as if some vast mountain of rocks had tumbled to pieces. How the people can live in these countries is a mystery to me. I do not wonder that so many emigrate to America. There was nothing of special interest on this journey.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 5

We took a hack from Christiania and came to the rooms which were prepared for us—two rooms. The first was for W. C. White, with single bed, sofa, and chairs like the sofa, upholstered. Then we entered our room through W. C. White's. Here was a single bed and a bed lounge for Sarah, washstand, pitcher, and towels, etc., etc. There was a hall and then a kitchen, and a woman to cook for us and do our work. So you see we were provided for. Miss Casperson, who accompanied Brother Oyen from American here, does our work. The new paint has affected my eyes and my throat so that I am afflicted, but otherwise I am gaining somewhat.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 6

I spoke Sabbath to our people in the new meetinghouse. I spoke with great plainness and did not cut the corners of the truth to please anyone. I have been writing pointed testimonies for this church that are in a demoralized condition through several reasons—a neglect to keep the Sabbath properly and a tolerating of meddlers. There are talkers here whose tongues are set on fire of hell. What shall be done to cure these talkers is the difficult problem to solve. After the discourse there were many good testimonies borne, interpreted to me by Brother Clausen.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 7

At half-past ten p.m. we rode in hack to the steamer and rode that night about one hundred and ten miles to a place where Brother Edwin Olsen had been laboring. Thirty had embraced the truth, some excellent people. The name of the place is Laurvig. This has been and still is cursed with fanatics. The holiest class that claims the name. One claims to be God, another Christ, and every species of error exists here; yet the standard of truth has been planted in this place, and it may bring out numbers still to the truth.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 8

There are many acres of beech forest which is the only beech grove in Norway. There is an ordinance that no beer or strong drink shall be sold on these grounds. This is a wonderful thing in Europe, for every available spot near a house which could have the slightest attractions is converted into a beer garden. This is so in Sweden, in Switzerland, and in Germany and Denmark. But here the beautiful beech forest, with its noble, majestic trees, is not disgraced with the drunken brawls of the inebriate. Here are many attractions for pleasure seekers as well as for invalids. Mineral springs have great repute here as a curative of many ills. We climbed a rocky ascent and could view the surrounding country to a great extent and look upon the waters of a lake which makes the scene one of beauty.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 9

At four o'clock we went to a hall and had a good audience. I designed to speak to the hearers words that would not in any way offend them, but the Lord gave me a message to the people in regard to the false theory of sanctification, and I brought the law to bear as close upon them as they ever heard it.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 10

I did not know what would be the result, for it was not in the style of Norway, but in true American style. It almost frightened Brother Edwin Olsen, for he said they had never had such talk as that before; but I had to give them the message the Lord gave me for them, and I could not get away from the subject to any other. I presented before them the true Bible sanctification in contrast with the false, and the Lord gave me much freedom in doing this. Brother Edwin Olsen came to the hotel and stated that the believers were very much pleased and benefited, and that it was just what they needed. 4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 11

Monday morning at 9 o'clock we stepped on board the steamer to return to Christiania. The scenery was beautiful, as we did not go out of sight of land, and the waters were smooth; but I was sick—not seasick, but in a high fever. Was unable to sit up and took no dinner. We arrived at Christiania about four o'clock. We visited the bathhouse and took thorough bath, but the distance was too great; in returning I was very weak and could scarcely walk to our rooms. I continued very much indisposed. Next night took a bath at home, which seemed to break the fever. It is the paint, I am sure, for all three of us are affected more or less. 4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 12

July in Norway seems like October in America. I wear all the clothing I have worn in winter in Switzerland and have them provide an extra ulster much of the time to keep me comfortable; so as yet we have not seen or felt any warm weather. 4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 13

Tuesday Brethren Olsen and Matteson came from Denmark. They report an excellent meeting there, that the work is further advanced than in Sweden, for they have had more labor. I was glad to hear this report. I conversed with them Wednesday quite freely in regard to the condition of the church—the elements in it which have degraded the church by much talking. One told Matteson that he lied, right in meeting, and accused another of being a thief—and all this in meeting. Her tongue seems set on fire of hell, and yet they are so blind that some voted for this woman to be on the board, and she is on the board. I talked decidedly in regard to this matter and showed them the way they had neglected to do their duty. They wanted me to bear my testimony. I told them it would do no good. My testimony was not received by those who wanted to do as they pleased, and they must do this work themselves, for God would say to them as to Joshua, “Neither will I be with you any more except ye destroy the accursed from among you.” Joshua 7:12. This work has been neglected and the reputation of the truth greatly demerited by the very ones who claim to believe it.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 14

This morning, July 11, I meet with the committee and bring before them another matter. Within the enclosed yard, within a few feet of the office and meetinghouse and directly beneath us in the basement of the building composing the old office, are premises rented out to a blacksmith; and while services are being held, there is the ringing of the hammer, the pounding, and all the noise which can be made in a blacksmith's shop. So the prayers and preaching and exhortations on the Sabbath are mingled with the sound of the hammer and the anvil, while in the next apartment is a marble shop where tombstones and monuments are manufactured, and there is the sound of the chisel and the hammer upon the granite and marble. This has been going on for six years, and how God can look with any favor upon a people claiming to believe the truth and yet so blinded to the fitness of things seems incomprehensible to me.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 15

I present this before the people this morning, for I would not leave this place until I do this and free my soul from this burden. I marvel not that the church are not in a higher state of spirituality. I wonder that they are in as good a condition as they are; and if God will help me, I will set this matter before them in its aggravated character as God sees it.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 16

I spoke yesterday upon the solemn scenes of the judgment, and we had a very solemn meeting. Matteson spoke and confessed somewhat his neglect of dealing faithfully in the church. Olsen made some excellent remarks which Oyen interpreted to a number of us who could not understand the language. Many testimonies were borne, but the work has not touched the bottom yet. It is surface work. I told our brethren plainly I would not get under the church here as I did in the fall when I labored for them without sparing myself. It was months before I recovered from the effects of this labor. But it has made a change here for the better at great cost to health and strength when, if the workers had kept up to standard, bringing up the people, all this extra wearing, tearing labor would not have [had] to be done.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 17

I am feeling the labor I put forth in Sweden. It was needed there, and much labor is needed here. But how hard it is to take up dropped stitches, how hard to put a new mold upon a people, when they have been permitted to go on year after year in a demoralized condition! Sometimes it seems that my sense of these things will kill me, while those who have received this mold seem as unconcerned as if they were perfect before God.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 18

I tell you it is impossible for our brethren to come to Europe and rush from place to place and rush out of Europe and do any great amount of good. They need to stay long enough to get hold of the inward working of things and then begin to reconstruct, to remodel. Had we come here and remained only about three months, that which we might have attempted to do would not be one-quarter done and would have slid back again. It must be work, hard work, constant work, effort made upon effort, by pen, by voice, by influence, line upon line, precept upon precept, until the leaven of reform leavens the lump. I tell you that it is much harder than to take the work from the commencement, because those who have become established in a wrong course think the Lord has blessed them in doing this, and it is next to impossible to make them see that they should make any improvements. The moral tone once degraded and demoralized cannot be brought up without a most thorough conversion. The Spirit of the Lord alone can help the people in this state of things. This is wearing work. My heart is sick and sore and pained beyond anything I can express. Now we must work with all our might and mind and soul to bring in altogether a different order of things.4LtMs, Ms 57, 1886, par. 19

Visit to the Hansen Home

Christiania, Norway

July 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 8MR 122-123.

By invitation we visited Brother and Sister Hansen in their island home. They had a retired residence which was reached by a half-hour's ride upon the steamer from Christiania to the island or peninsula. Here we met brethren and sisters from America.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 1

Brother Hansen took us in a rowboat to the king's summer palace on this island. There are buildings in which the family of the king spend some time in summer. They overlook the lake, and it is a very beautiful location for its fine scenery. These grounds are kept in order, no one living in the tall mansion, but one has charge of the buildings. Here are treasured antiquities of kings. Many things were curious and ancient. There was a museum of old costumes of the kings. There were the bridal dresses of the queens—heavy, white satin, trimmed with silver and gold. The trail was several yards long, and in walking an attendant followed the queen, holding up the long trail of her dress. My mind was active while looking upon these things. I was considering that those who love God and keep His commandments are members of the royal family, and they shall be kings and priests unto God. Those who have the precious white robes of Christ's righteousness will have a wondrous garment purchased for them by the blood of Christ.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 2

Not far from this palace is a church hundreds of years old. It is in a retired spot in the borders of a grove of forest trees. It overlooks the lake, and it is a very beautiful location. These grounds are kept in order. No one is living in the tall mansion, but someone has charge of the buildings.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 3

We were to leave Christiania, Norway, July 16. I spoke for the last time to the church from (Philippians 2:1-5): “If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.”4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 4

The Spirit of the Lord moved me to speak plainly to the church and to present before them the necessity of a thorough change in the characters of all those who claim to be children of God. Then they would come to worship God with subdued hearts, with reverence. They would feel that the house of God, which in His mercy had been built for the worshipers, was a sacred place—not a place for unholy feelings, malice, faultfinding, and bitterness of spirit. They would, if united to Christ, have the mind of Christ and would preserve order in the house of God.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 5

I presented before them the importance of their being in accordance with the light God had given them in the observance of the Sabbath. This house dedicated to God would not bring them at all nearer to God. Their hearts must be cleansed from all their spiritual defilement before the Lord would signally bless them as His chosen people. The work has begun in the church. Let it go forward to completion. Let there be no half-hearted work, but thorough repentance, thorough conversion to the truth—which many church members have never experienced.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 6

There should be deep repentance and confession and forsaking of the sins which have shut away the sweet spirit of Christ from the church. When this work is carried forward as it should be, there will be not one or two, but many who will fall upon the Rock and be broken. When the heart welcomes Jesus and He abides therein, then there will be love, tenderness, compassion, and all bitterness and evil speaking will be forever put away. We then called for those who would take a decided position on the Lord's side to come forward. Many responded. Good testimonies were borne and fervent prayers were offered by Brethren Matteson and Olsen. We hope this advancement is but the beginning of a decided advance move upon the part of every church member. Our meeting closed at a late hour.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 7

July 16 we stepped on board the steamer for Copenhagen. Many friends accompanied us to the steamer, and a very fine bouquet of flowers was handed me as a token of friendship. I love flowers. Jesus said, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." [Matthew 6:28, 29.]4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 8

We rested well in our stateroom. This passage on the water was very pleasant. We saw the early morning sun at three o'clock. We were scarcely out of sight of land. The scenery of the landscape was very fine. When we reached Copenhagen, Brother Brorsen and others were waiting for us. Our party was taken to a hotel. We climbed sixty-five stairs to reach pleasant rooms, high up. We had a very light lunch for our breakfast, but we obtained nothing more to eat until four o'clock. This is the customary hour for dinner.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 9

Our location is pleasant. There is a botanical garden just opposite us. We walk through this garden nearly every day. Here we had early morning meetings. I spoke to those assembled about thirty minutes. Elder Olsen interpreted for me in these meetings; Elder Matteson in the evening when I spoke at length. The meetings seemed to be a blessing to those assembled. After I had spoken there was a social meeting. Many excellent testimonies were borne.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 10

There have been several valuable additions to the believers in this place. Those who have received the truth have come very cautiously. Some have been six months searching their Bibles like the noble Bereans to see if these things that had been taught them were the truth. One of these was a retired sea captain. He was connected with the Methodist church. He was the teacher of a Bible class. He understands and speaks English. The class he taught were much attached to him, and he hoped, by moving with great wisdom, to bring some of these along with him to rejoice in the light of truth. But the minister was troubled and said they could not have this; he could no longer teach the Bible class. He bore evidence of moving understandingly. His testimonies revealed the deep interest of his heart in the work. In one testimony he said the light had gone from the East to the West, and now he thanked the Lord that He was sending the precious light of truth from the West to the East.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 11

In one of our meetings after I had spoken to the people in regard to the light that is shining in our world, a stranger arose to speak. He said he had not been to Copenhagen for years. He could not see anything good in Copenhagen, but he thanked the Lord he had come. He never listened to such things as he had heard in this meeting; it was wonderful. He believed that the time had come spoken of by Joel the prophet: "I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out My Spirit." Joel 2:28, 29. He seemed to be deeply moved and expressed a desire to go with this people. He attended the Sabbath school and bore another testimony. It was something he had never seen anything like before; he must go home and tell his Baptist brethren all about the things he had seen and heard in these meetings.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 12

After one of our meetings, the wife of this man came to me, grasped my hands, and saluted me. I learned she had been a firm, consistent believer for several years. Her husband had opposed her. She stated—interpreted by Sister Matteson—that she was so glad to see me. She was acquainted with me by reading my books, and she never expected to have the privilege of seeing me and speaking to me.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 13

There is one brother and his wife who recently embraced the truth. He is a first-class carpenter and earns good wages. When he made his statement of his faith to his employer and told him that he could not work on Saturday, his employer did not discharge him, but kept him and allowed him to keep the Sabbath.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par.

I had these thoughts: whatever trade men may learn, it always pays to be thorough, to be constantly learning and perfecting themselves to do their very best. Such men will find employment when many who are less capable and efficient will not be retained. Such men, who are thorough in their business, will be thorough and efficient in their religious life. God grant this may be the case with this dear brother.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 15

Some have embraced the truth who are firm and decided; and although some have to take lower positions because they keep the Sabbath, yet they are not discouraged, but are fully decided to obey the truth, to keep God's commandments. In this great city are others who are fully convinced and are seeking to arrange their business so they can keep the Sabbath according to the commandment. We hope the leaven of truth will continue to work in this city. We noticed one encouraging feature—that they were all earnest to have special efforts made in these large cities, well knowing that all such labor involves responsibilities and personal efforts.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 16

Elder Matteson remained two or three weeks to labor after we left. If those who have the light will reveal to those in moral darkness the living and true God, in holiness, condescension, goodness, and love, they will be a power for good in the world. We are among a nation of idolaters, and this is especially true in Copenhagen. These souls may not, many of them, bow down to graven images, but their affections are placed upon earthly things. The truly converted souls will, like Daniel, Ezra, and other faithful servants of God, be God's witnesses amid the almost general apostasy. They will catch the divine rays of light shining from the Word of God and reflect this light on the world. If the servants of God under the Old Testament were to shine brightly, as lights, how much more brightly should those living in this age shine. We have not only all the light those faithful ones had, shining down to our time in firm, steady rays, but all the increased light that has been shining from the Word of God, from His dealings with His people, and from the manifestation of His greatness and His majesty.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 17

When the Christian church was established, the light of heaven was in their midst, and its bright beams diffused light everywhere. God has given the individual members of the church in these villages natural faculties adapted to exert an influence on other minds. God expects every one who has the knowledge of the truth to improve in ability by putting to exercise the talents He has lent them. The pen, the power of speech, the sanctified affections are to be used in His work of enlightening the world and in working in God's lines. God is constantly renewing, sanctifying, elevating and increasing the moral power of the light-bearers to do a great amount of good. God has brought truth to them. They see it, they love it. The believer sees that he has a Bible full of important truth, and God's voice is heard and acknowledged in His Word. This to him is a treasure superior to everything else. He no longer asks what is agreeable to self and his own interests, but what is God's will, what is for His glory and for the good of his fellow men? How shall I be instrumental in the salvation of souls? Let every one who claims to believe the truth in these cities feel the burden of souls. If he is indeed a partaker of the divine nature, he will feel the burden, he will love as Christ loved, he will work as Christ worked, expecting the reward at the end of the warfare. 4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 18

Saul's life was most pitiful. None need to envy the honors of a king whom God does not bless and honor. Saul felt that his soul was divorced from God, that he no longer had His favor, but was left to his own will and his own judgment. It is a fearful thing to be left to the damning power of evil. It is a terrible calamity to sin against light and to grieve the Holy Spirit of God away forever. The king was forsaken of God. Saul's life was one of unsubdued pride and remorse. There was living at Endor a famous sorceress. She was called the witch of Endor. Saul, in his desperation, went to this woman for counsel. He concealed his identity as king of Israel by assuming the common apparel of a citizen. He went in the darkness of night. The very man who had made laws to cleanse the land of familiar spirits and wizards sought one himself. This witch knew the sentence had been passed to put all such characters to death, and she did not discern that her visitor was the king of Israel until his request was made to bring up Samuel. Then she discerned the true state of things. "Wherefore," said she, "layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?" [1 Samuel 28:9.] Saul gave his oath that no punishment should come upon her. 4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 19

Samuel did not come from the dead. There is no earthly or satanic power that can bring up a child of God from their rest in the grave—nothing but the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. But Satan will work marvels for the guilty rejecters of truth who have connected themselves with him. And Satan did personate Samuel. Here was a revelation of satanic power. And the very one who had tempted Saul to rebellion, disobedience, and stubbornness now charged his crime home upon him and uttered a declaration against him in his speedy ruin.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 20

Oh, how much the vitalizing Spirit of Christ is needed in every church, if it is to be a growing, working church. It is not a form that you need so much as the spirit of Christ—piety, deep, earnest, practical piety. In Christ we can do all things; without Christ we can do nothing.4LtMs, Ms 58, 1886, par. 21

Sketch of Journey to England

NP

September 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in 3Bio 354; EGWE 216-217.

In company with Brother Aufranc and Sister McEnterfer, we left Basel September 14 at half-past nine o'clock p.m. We were fortunate in having a compartment where there were three passengers besides ourselves—an English-speaking lady and her two children. There was not room for us to lie down, with the exception of myself. The seats were very hard, and we could not obtain much rest or sleep; we were very glad to hail the first tokens of the day. At twelve o'clock we crossed the channel, which is always rough.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 1

There was a crowd on the boat, and, as we had second-class tickets, we were assigned a position in the boat that was anything but desirable. We thought best to pay our two English shillings each for a more favorable position in the boat [than] to sit upon benches without cushions, and in the confusion of all the sailors passing before us, coming and going, and passengers on every side with white, sick faces with a wash bowl before them. Sarah became very sick and lay down upon the baggage, for she could not sit up. There was no other way but for me to be sick. The boat was pitching and rolling. One moment I would be in a profuse perspiration and the next a chill. But few men and women escaped being sick.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 2

How glad we were when the boat reached its destination. We had been only two hours on the boat, but long enough to get generally stirred up, for everything seemed to be in motion, and it was joy to leave the boat and look upon something that stood still.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 3

Our party had scarcely strength to roll up our bundle. We were weak, nervous, and trembling. This delayed us some minutes, but we found it was to our advantage, for all the second-class cars were occupied and the conductor opened a first-class apartment, and for the first time we rode in a car that was equal to the palace cars in America. The conductor said he would see that we went through to London all right. It was a great blessing to lie down upon the soft, cushioned seats and give ourselves up fully in our weakness to rest and sleep.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 4

We were conveyed [in London] in a cab quite a distance to the great Northern depot, deposited our baggage, and went only a short distance to the Great Northern Hotel. Here we were conducted up several flights of stairs to the fifth story and found pleasant, commodious rooms and excellent beds. We were weary enough to sleep well.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 5

We left London at a quarter-past five A.M. for Great Grimsby. Changed cars twice. We were glad to meet Brother Wilcox and Sister Ings at the cars, and soon we were in the mission home, being welcomed heartily by Brother and Sister Lane.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 6

I awoke early in the morning with a great desire for the Spirit of the Lord in large measure to be imparted to me. I arose early and sought to draw nigh to God. I felt wholly inefficient for the work before me unless the Lord should help me then and there. How could I be a help and blessing to others unless my own soul was quickened and abundant grace supplied? I must work for the Master, giving myself unreservedly to Him; and, catching the divine rays of light from Jesus, I must impart them to others. This is the work of every Christian. He must live to do others good. There were important questions to be settled; and without the wisdom that cometh from God, we should make very imperfect work. I was in great need of physical strength and spiritual enlightenment. Without more than human wisdom, we would accomplish nothing. We have a part to act. Without Christ, all we do will be defective. We must sow the seeds of truth; we must sow no tares.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 7

My soul yearned after God, and I was enabled to exercise some faith in the promises of God and wait to see what opportunities I shall have for doing good to others.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 8

Friday. This day opens without fog or clouds, but a strong east wind. I joined [our workers] in their early morning meeting. I gave a short talk to those assembled. "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you." James 4:8. About thirty were present. I felt that Jesus was very near us and that to bless. There were a number of excellent testimonies borne; and I hope and pray that this day may be a blessing to those who have come in to the meetings.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 9

The meeting in England, from the commencement to the close, was one of great labor for me as well as for others. We had some precious seasons, but not all that we might have had. We did not break through and receive the rich blessings that we might have had. The Spirit of the Lord is grieved with the spirit of self-sufficiency so natural to the human heart. There is not that living faith and love that should exist in large measure with those who have the solemn work before them of giving to the world the last message of warning.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 10

How important are these councils where business is being transacted which shall reach into eternity. And earnestly should every one seek God and make most earnest efforts to rid the soul of everything of a selfish character, that love and union and harmony may characterize these meetings. None should watch to see if they cannot find an opportunity to dissent from their brethren's propositions.4LtMs, Ms 59, 1886, par. 11

Text: Titus 2:11-14.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 2

This is the mission of Christ—to give salvation to all who will be reconciled to God.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 3

He came to turn sinners from their sins. He has invited the penitent to come to Him with all their sins and iniquity. In the day of judgment there will be no excuse for sinners, for all has been done for man that could be done to bring salvation within his reach and to bring to him divine aid that he might perfect a Christian character.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 4

After Adam and Eve had fallen, the gospel was presented. They were told that a Saviour would be provided and that the Seed of the woman should bruise the head of Satan who was the instigator of sin, and that Satan should bruise His heel. Genesis 3:15. Christ “was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him.” Isaiah 53:5. When He came to this world, He laid aside the glory that He had before the world was, and He clothed His divinity with humanity. What a display of unselfishness on the part of our Saviour! Christ saw that it was impossible for man to overcome and become a conqueror in his own strength.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 5

It would be well for our minds to be carried back to the time when the Son of God was made flesh. Behold Him in the manger, and remember how the angel of the Lord appeared in great glory to the shepherds who were watching their flocks by night and announced to their joy a Saviour born in Bethlehem. There was also a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Luke 2:14. There were also wise men who had been guided from the east by a star to the place where the child Jesus had been born. They came to worship Him, and they brought their gifts to Jesus—gold, frankincense, and myrrh. This was oblation offered by these men who were neither Jews nor Gentiles, but were men who had lived up to the best light they had. They had been searching the Scriptures, and as they traced the lines of prophecy, they ascertained about the time that Christ would come. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 6

When Christ entered upon His mission at His baptism, heaven was opened and the glory of God encircled Him, and a voice was heard to say, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Matthew 3:17. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 7

Many read of this circumstance and do not realize that it particularly concerns them, but it is by this proclamation that we may know that Christ is accepted as the Beloved, and His long arm encircles the human race, while His divine arm grasps the Infinite, giving to humanity special power. What force has this to the race of mankind? It means that heaven is opened to the sons and daughters of Adam. After the transgression heaven was shut, and man was separated from God because of the transgressions of His law. Christ gave Himself as a substitute and surety for man and thus opened a way by which man could be brought back into harmony with God. Thus all that would avail themselves of the proffered mercy could be saved. Oh, what a work was this! It was making a martyr of Himself, but through Him men are placed where they can become sons and daughters of the Most High. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 8

Let the words spoken from heaven, "This is My beloved Son," have an effect upon our hearts. These are precious words. The gates have been left ajar, and man can have access to the Father. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 9

After the baptism of Christ, He was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, eating and drinking nothing for forty days, and Satan tested Him on three leading temptations. The first was on the point of appetite, but in this Christ came off conqueror. He met Satan with the Word of God, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Matthew 4:4. Satan knew also how to quote Scripture, and he knows how to lead into temptation. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 10

Jesus passed over the ground where Adam fell. He knows just how to help those who are tempted on appetite. Yet how many there are who have fallen on the same point, just because they do not go to Christ for help, and will sell their God-given reasons for a glass of stimulant. The mental power has degenerated from generation to generation. No one can realize the power of sin on the human race until he can understand what Christ suffered in order for us to perfect a Christian character. When we are tempted we should remember Jesus, who fasted forty days in our behalf. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 11

The second temptation was on the glory and honor of the world. "And the devil, taking Him up into an high mountain, showed unto Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. And the devil said unto Him, All this power will I give Thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it. If Thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be Thine." Luke 4:5-7. But in this our Saviour came off victor. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 12

The third temptation was on presumption. "And he brought Him to Jerusalem, and set Him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down from hence." V. 9. And then Satan quoted Scripture to Him, and Jesus met him in the same way, and Satan left the battlefield a conquered foe, and it is possible for everyone to become victor. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 13

John, while in vision, saw a company clothed in white robes. An elder asked him who they were. "And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.” Revelation 7:14. They were seen in the temple of God. This will be the result for all who will lay hold of the merits of Christ and wash their robes in His blood. Every provision has been made so that we can sit with Christ upon His throne, but the condition is that we be in harmony with the law of God. We must forsake all unrighteousness and comply with the conditions; then all heaven is opened to our prayer. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 14

Christ says, “If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.” John 5:7. Here is a precious promise, and the Lord would have us take hold of His Word and by faith lay hold of the promises. Oh, that all would place themselves in that condition where they would feel the need of a Saviour and be forgiven and cleansed from all unrighteousness! 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 15

We cannot afford to lose heaven. We ought to have our conversation on heavenly things. There, there is no death nor pain. Why are we so reluctant to talk of these things? Why do we dwell upon earthly things? The apostle exhorts us to have our conversation in heaven. Philippians 3:20.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 16

“If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry.” Colossians 3:1-5.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 17

Here is everything to think of. Christ will soon return to gather those who are prepared and take them to this glorious place. “So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation.” Hebrews 9:28.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 18

Do we love to think of this event, or do we want to put it off? We must set our affections on the things above. The more we talk of Jesus, the more we shall reflect His divine image. By beholding we become transformed. We need to bring Christ into our religious experience. When you assemble together, let the conversation be on Christ and His salvation. Here is a subject we want to talk of. The more we talk of Jesus, the more of His matchless charms we shall behold.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 19

We are not to study the world's standard, but the Word of God. Let us contemplate the great work that has opened a way for our salvation. Shall we be careless in this matter? Christ has brought salvation within reach of all, and we want to lay hold of the hope that is set before us. Satan has almost everything his own way, because we do not resist him. We place ourselves within his reach. We must set a sentinel to guard against his attacks. Eternal life is worth everything, and we should be willing to sacrifice, for it is worth persevering effort. Every one can have access to the Man of Calvary. He will give us of His Spirit.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 20

Should we have to suffer for Christ's sake, we should not complain, when we consider what has been done for us. We should extol the Son of God and thus bring heaven near to us and put our whole trust in God. If this advice were followed, we should not have so many trials in this life. We should rejoice in place of complaining.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 21

Yesterday was Christmas. Did you do as the wise men did by offering your gifts to Jesus? Or has the enemy changed the order of things and directed the worship to himself? The gifts are now bestowed upon friends instead of Him who has made so great a sacrifice for us. All the gifts should flow in another channel, where they could be used in the salvation of men.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 22

The New Year is just before us. Shall not the gifts be turned to a better account than heretofore? Shall not confession be made, and shall we not avail ourselves of the blood of Christ, who is able and willing to cleanse from all sin? For our sakes Christ became poor.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 23

In the last great day we shall be judged in accordance with what we have done. Christ will say, "I was an hungred and ye gave Me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in: naked and ye clothed Me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited Me not. Then shall they also answer Him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee?" Matthew 25:42-44. Christ will then say, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." V. 45. And Christ will say, "Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." V. 41.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 24

Christ came and set the example in sacrificing; and if we are Christ's, then we will do the works of Christ. Instead of pleasing ourselves, we will be seeking to do others good and to impart benefits to suffering humanity. And unless this is done, we can not expect to have a part with Christ. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 25

There are souls to be saved all around us, and each has a work to do to be reconciled to Christ. This is the work to take hold of in the New Year. We are living for time and eternity, and we want the light to flash upon our pathway, and in return we want to extend its blessings to others. The only way to be representatives of Christ is to love one another; and if we reflect the image of Christ, then when we enter the gates of the city, it will be said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Matthew 25:21.4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 26

Let each strive to have a better record for the coming year, and live so near to God that you may be surrounded with the atmosphere of heaven, and thus be a representative of Christ. 4LtMs, Ms 60, 1886, par. 27

New Year's Morning, January 1, 1886

Basel

We have a cloudy morning. Light fall of snow. Clear before noon. It is bright sunshine. We make no provision for New Year's. Have written thirty pages of note paper today.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 1

I have had a singular dream last night. I thought I was attending meeting in a new place. A lady introduced her husband as a doctor. As soon as the introduction was ended, I saw, directly opposite me, W. C. White looking so natural, but very serious, I thought. I turned to those around me and said, "It is Willie White risen from the dead." I embraced him and kissed him. Said I, "W. C., you have come a long journey." "Yes," he said, "but I must return." "How did you get up here?" Said he, "The doctor brought me in his carriage." I turned to the friends. Said I, "What a wonderful miracle is this!" Willie said, "Mother, I have a message for you. I would like to see you alone." I went to find a place of retirement, but I could not find Willie; and while searching the house, he was gone.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 2

This morning Kristine came into my room very early and wished to talk with me. She stated she wished to be a Christian and to be baptized today. Oh, how thankful I felt that she had strength to do this—to identify herself with the people of God.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 3

It is rather unpleasant and cool today. Meetings were held as usual. Sabbath School in forenoon. I spoke to those assembled at half-past ten from John 5:28, 29. I was followed by two interpreters, German and French.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 4

In the afternoon two were baptized. One was Kristine Dahl, a young girl living in our family. She came with me from Christiania, Norway. Her mother and sister, living in Norway, both believe with us and both were very anxious for Kristine, that she should believe the truth. She has now taken her stand and prays with us at the family altar. We all read at family prayers, some of us read in English. Mary in French.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 5

The sacrament was administered in the afternoon. After a discourse on baptism, three were immersed, and then followed the ordinances. We received several letters from America.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 6

Walked out with Mary and little Ella. It was very disagreeable under foot. The rain and sun had melted the snow, so it was wet and muddy under foot. We called upon Sister Ertzenberger, but she was prepared to walk out to call upon Brother Aufranc. We walked with her and called upon our Brother and Sister Aufranc. He has served as translator for the office in Basel for years. His health has failed, like many others, when obtaining an education. He studied too hard to obtain his diploma and entered upon his work a broken-down man. He has been much afflicted of late and if we may judge by present appearances will not be able to serve in any capacity long, for he is a broken-down man.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 7

This has been a day of labor for me in preparing and writing communications. Some have been struck off on the calligraph and some written by my hand. Sent many pages to Brother Ings and several pages to Brother and Sister Lockwood. This has taxed me sorely. My head pains me. My left eye is inflamed, but I am glad the letters are off and I will now feel free for a time. Sent letters to Brother Butler and W. C. White.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 8

Arise as usual at four. Enjoyed a sponge bath and went to work, but grew faint. My head ached. Was obliged to lie down, and the morning reading and prayers were without me. I had a sick day all through Tuesday. Could do but little.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 9

I rested better last night than I have done. Walked out with Ella. I was unfortunate enough to get lost in the streets of Basel, Switzerland, and no one that I met understood English and could tell me my way to our printing office; but after walking one hour, we found the railroad that went by the street where we lived. We followed the track and found ourselves in the right road to our home. I felt really grateful to God for this, for I might have been much troubled to find my way because I could come across no one who understood English. When we reached home we found our friends much troubled, and all were about to go in search of me, when they saw me in the distance.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 15

My heart was drawn out in prayer to the Lord for health and strength. My eyes have pained me for more than one week. My head has been congested, forbidding my using the pen, but my prayer is ascending to God for healing power to come to me and fit me up for His work. He will hear, He will not turn me empty away. I shall be healed. I shall be renewed by His power to continue my writings. The Lord Jesus seems very near to me today, and I will trust in Him with unwavering faith. I have precious seasons of prayer and communion with God.⁴*LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 18*

Brother Whitney has received letters from Russia, from India, from Italy—from parts of Italy our people have never yet visited. They express great thankfulness for the Signs. One from Italy wishes Brother Whitney to thank Sister White for the articles in the paper. He said they had been a great benefit to him, and not to him only, but to many others who read them. The writer of the letter said he had come across an almost worn-out paper, French Signs, and was so interested he sent for them, wishing to become a regular subscriber. The letters from Russia and India are really encouraging, showing that the standard of truth is being raised in all countries. From France there comes a letter from a young man who has accepted the truth from reading the French Signs. He presented the arguments in favor of the Sabbath.4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 19

Mailed today to Daniel Bourdeau eight pages letter paper; Ademar Vuilleumier two pages letter paper; to A. C. Bourdeau seventeen pages, partly letter paper and nine pages of scratch book. Wrote two articles for workers at Lausanne. Monday, wrote eight pages to

R. G. Lockwood, two pages for Johnny. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 24

Friday, wrote eight pages note paper to Elder Rice; six to Eliza Burnham. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 25

Mailed four pages to A. C. Bourdeau, five pages to Mary Chinnock, four to Professor Brownsberger, six pages to Brother Lockwood. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 26

March 19, 1886

Left Basel at two p.m. for Bienne, sixty miles from Basel. We were four hours on the route. We saw mountain scenery. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 27

Spoke to a room crowded full in Brother Virgil Vuilleumier's house. Brother Ademar Vuilleumier translated for me. The text was, "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil. ... Sanctify them through Thy truth; Thy word is truth." [John 17:15, 17.] The people manifested deep interest. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 28

Slept but little during the night. We assembled about the breakfast table. Four women were seated at table, all with plain white sacks over their full [?] skirts. These skirts are quite nice. They are black, quilted on the bottom. Our food was baker's bread, hot milk, fresh butter, and a dish of sauce—a simple preparation, and healthful. All ate heartily. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 29

I spoke in the forenoon from James 3:13-17. I had much freedom in speaking. I was advised to sit down because of my crippled ankles, but I chose to stand, even with pain and inconvenience. The people seemed to receive the message given them. Supported by W. C. White, I ventured to walk on the ground a short distance, which I have not ventured to do for weeks. 4LtMs, Ms 61, 1886, par. 30

Bernese Alps

The sky is clouded, but the sun's rays are beaming upon the snow-covered Alps, making a most magnificent picture. We see on the right one yard terraced by stone walls to the very top of the mountain. Second Visit to Italy

April 15, 1886

Left Basel en route for Italy. We see beautiful scenery—valleys nestled in among the mountains; high-peaked, unique houses; steep, hilly, and towering mountains. To our right, on steep rocks upon the very top of a high mountain, is an old castle, built in 1660, and partly hewn out of the rock. It is now used as a prison and arsenal.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 1

This is a mountain region. The brown earth, mingled with the bright green, graces the orchards. The houses are thickly settled. The roofs rise in a most remarkable, homely, unattractive style. We see little chapels, oblong, rounded like a tower at the ends. A very pretty little valley. The background is walled in with high, regular-looking rocky walls.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 2

We pass on to Aarburg, a wide, extended valley in the highest state of cultivation. A man is ploughing with a horse for leader and two cows behind. The fields of living grain are irrigated by trenches conducting the water from the mountains. Interspersed are planted forests of pines. The rise of grounds, mound-like, clothed with their dress of living green, with pine groves look very beautiful. We came to quite extensive forests of pines that have been planted. We pass rocky mountains, towering towards the heaven, appearing to touch the sky above, and we pass gorges where we look down hundreds of feet below us to the noisy waters running over the rocks. The water presents a green hue.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 3

I have thought that there could be nothing to exceed the grandeur of the Colorado mountains, but we see that which is fully as grand and which awakens in the soul reverence for God. We seem to behold His majesty and His power in His marvelous works. The varied scenery in the towering mountains and rocky heights, the deep mountain gorges with their rapid, noisy streams of water coming from the mountains above, the many cataracts that come tumbling down from the tops of the mountains, the waters breaking as they strike the rocks and scattering into spray like a veil render this scenery altogether one of surpassing beauty and grandeur.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 4

Mountains contain God's blessings. I have seen men and women look upon the majesty of mountains as though they were really a deformity of nature. They would sigh and say, "How needless! Let me have the level plain, the broad prairies, and I should be happy." The mountains contain treasures of blessings which the Creator bestows upon the inhabitants of the earth. It is the diversity in the surface of the earth, in mountains, plains, and valleys, which reveals the wisdom and the power of the great Master Worker. And those who would banish from our earth the rocks and mountains, the wild gorges and the noisy, rushing streams, and the precipices, as unsightly deformities in nature, and would have a smooth level—their senses are too limited to comprehend the majesty of God. Their minds are bound about with narrow ideas.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 5

God, the great Architect, has built these lofty mountains, and their influence upon climate is a blessing to our world. They draw from the clouds enriching moisture. Mountain chains are God's great reservoirs to supply the ocean with its water. These are the sources of the springs, rills, and brooks, as well as the rivers. They receive, in the form of rain and snow, the vapors with which the atmosphere is charged and communicate them to the parched plains below.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 6

The irregular mountains of the earth we should look upon as God's fountains of blessings from which flow forth the waters to supply all the living creatures. Every time I look upon the mountains, I feel gratitude to God. My heart is lifted up in praise to Him who knows the wants and needs of man. If the earth had been a uniform level, there would be stagnant marshes.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 7

April 16, 1886

Milan, Italy

We arrived at Milan about eight o'clock p.m. A hack took us to the hotel, where we had good accommodations for the night. It was some time before we could compose ourselves to sleep. In the morning we had a season of prayer. Took breakfast, then walked in to see the great cathedral which is one of the largest in the world.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 8

April 17, 1886

Torre Pellice, Italy

Slept well last night. In one of the upper rooms occupied by Brother A. C. Bourdeau, we met the little few who are keeping the commandments of God. Notwithstanding it was a rainy day; there were twenty assembled. 1 Thessalonians 4:16-18. I had much freedom in speaking to the few. The little few assembled were blessed. We felt that indeed we had the presence of Jesus in this upper chamber. My own heart was softened and subdued by His presence.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 9

Only the day before we had viewed one of the most costly structures in Europe, the giant cathedral. As I walked through this lofty building which had been hundreds of years in being constructed, as I looked upon the men and women coming and going, touching the holy water and making with it the form of the cross, and as I viewed the worshipers bowing with greatest reverence before the graven images—Christ upon the cross, the Virgin Mary, and the apostles—I felt a coldness almost like the chill of death come over me. I contemplated these worshipers. I thought of how little of the real true spirit of the cross of Christ enters into these worshipers.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 10

I felt no inclination for such a religion of forms and ceremonies and image worship. Several women were waiting their turn before the confessional box. One was kneeling, confessing her sins to the priest within. How I long to point these deluded souls to Jesus Christ alone—the only One who can pardon the sinner, the one Mediator and the only one between man and his God! My spirit was stirred within me as I saw intelligent-looking men and women down to the very beggars look with clasped hands and with devotion and rapt reverence to these images. I wanted to cry out, “Jesus and Jesus alone can forgive sins, and He alone is worthy to receive honor, and glory, and majesty.” A costly, magnificent building! Beautiful the structure, but—like the religion—cold as marble within, the heart untouched with the glowing fire of God’s goodness and love!4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 11

Here in this little upper chamber of a dwelling house, there was nothing in the exterior to charm the eye, nothing in the interior to absorb or attract, but we had a Guest that day, and we all felt the warmth of His love and the value of His pardon. This precious Jesus could forgive sin. There was no uncertainty here. It was a precious season. I had not one desire for the grand temple and its cold worship. I prize the warmth of Jesus’ love. I sought to impress upon my hearers the privilege and opportunity now within their reach of becoming more and more like Jesus in character, becoming more refined, more ennobled by the sanctifying power of the truth.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 12

We must be learners. Truth as it is in Jesus is not cold and lifeless and formal. Love of Christ will pervade the soul. Truth is full of warmth, of evidence from the presence of Jesus. While we shall be meek and lowly of heart as we learn precious lessons from the school of Christ, we are growing strong in His strength, and yet meek as a little child. Whosoever shall claim to believe the truth and yet be unpleasant in his words and deportment commits sin against God.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 13

We have a message to bear to the world. It involves a cross. The truths are unpleasant because they require self-denial and self-sacrifice. Then how essential that those who bear the truth, as they speak the truth faithfully, shall by every word and act show that the love of Christ moves them. Truth is never repulsive, but is always lovely, and those who live the truth as it is in Jesus should study how to present the truth so that its loveliness may appear. But many cover its loveliness with their coarse, rough words and uncultured and uncontrolled spirit. Self is mixed and mingled with all they do and all they say.4LTMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 14

Oh, that all who name the name of Christ would feel that they are disloyal to the Prince of life when they present the doctrines of the Bible in a manner to make the truth repulsive! Christian tact is heavenly wisdom, full of mercy and good fruits.4LTMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 15

This has been a season of refreshing to my soul. I love Jesus, and I want more of His Holy Spirit and His patience, meekness, and the sunshine of His presence in my heart.4LTMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 16

Torre Pellice

It still continues to rain. In the early morning there is the novel sound of clatter, clatter of wooden shoes on the rocky pavement. No more sleep for any one after this constant travel and clatter of many feet clad with wooden shoes. I have taken some cold.4LTMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 17

I look out upon the sky draped with clouds, upon the Alps covered with snow, and then upon the fresh green grass, the plum and cherry trees covered with their pure white sweet blossoms, and I see a divine providence at work for the good and blessing of all. The sunshine is more agreeable than clouds and rain, for present convenience and present cheerfulness and joy, but the clouds and the rain have their work to do in causing vegetation to flourish and in making all things look new, smiling and flourishing in nature. The God of nature knows just what we need, and that which will be for the good profit of His creatures He will bestow. I am grateful for a divine Mind to order things both in sunshine and in clouds and storm.4LTMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 18

Notwithstanding the rain, we decide to fill our appointment five miles from here, up in the mountains at Villar Pellice. We hired a horse and covered carriage, but the horse would not go faster than a walk, so we were late to our appointment. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 19

Elder Bourdeau opened the meeting and talked some with the people. The house was literally packed. The peasant women were intelligent looking, dressed neatly with their white caps—or shaped more like bonnet—with heavy quilted ruffle front. Both men and women were mostly of the intelligent class of people, and they listened, crowded as they were, for one hour while I spoke to them of Christ's riding into Jerusalem and weeping over the devoted city because of His rejected mercy and love. I tried to point them to the mercy of love of Jesus in coming to our world to die for sinful man. Brother Bourdeau interpreted. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 20

How my heart longed to lead these souls to the fountain of living waters! How I longed to have them see and obey the truth! But we must not expect that things will move fast. The pastors have not led them in advanced steps, but their labor has been to prevent them from advancing, to keep them in the old customs and traditions, and give them nothing new. God wants us to advance, leading the people step by step upward and onward to God and heaven, to truth and duty, to be engaged in the work that He has given them to do. The Lord will lead the people, notwithstanding the efforts of the pastors to keep them in darkness, if they will only hear the message given to them from heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 21

When the meeting closed a man seemed anxious to speak to me and shake my hand. This I was more than willing to do. Many thanked me for the words spoken, and one said, "You worked well today." Some before me understood English, and they seemed to enjoy the season much. Some few tried to take the words interpreted into French by Brother Bourdeau and translate them into Italian, for some present could not understand either the French or the English language. There were about one hundred present—some coming for about seven miles. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 22

We are constantly praying and planning how to reach this people who know so little of the truth contained in the Scriptures, and who know so little of what is required to be children of God. When we returned, we passed over the ground much faster than we ascended. Found letters from America, from Healdsburg, which we read with interest.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 23

It continues to rain softly, a drizzling, dreary rain. Devote the day to writing. Mailed twelve pages to Brother and Sister Lockwood. Brother A. C. Bourdeau went in the rain five miles to attend appointment. He had to go on foot.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 24

It is a hard field, but not any harder field than Jesus had to work in—no harder hearts than Jesus had to meet, no greater discouragements than Jesus met daily. Then all we can do is work on, sowing the seed of truth, and trusting in God to give the increase. We so much desire that a work shall be done here. A light set on a candlestick, that it may give light to all that are in the house. God has given us our work, and He has not left it for us to choose the easiest places. We must work wherever we can, in storm, in sunshine, in opposition, anywhere and under any circumstances, meeting obstacles and in faith surmounting them, meeting difficulties and going through them by faith and earnest prayer. It is hard work to meet prejudice, customs, and forms, and try to show the people the better way.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 25

All day it has rained and seems very gloomy, but now is the time to bring in the sunshine of cheerfulness. The hope, the courage must appear, surrounding us with an atmosphere of fragrance rather than of gloom. Our prayer to our heavenly Father is that light may shine in upon the moral darkness of the people here in these Piedmont valleys.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 26

True measure is everything. It is the very law of God. He puts His law into the least of men's acts and dealings, that learning and living it they may be elevated, ennobled, and sanctified in heart and affection—faithful in the least, the mere wheat measure. They shall live and rule among the greatest, to be entrusted with the divine cause, to take the power and grace brought to them through Jesus Christ and by the will of God build up a character after the divine model, preparing for the glory to be revealed. To love God supremely and his neighbor as himself is the whole duty of man. The spiritual measure is God's measure of the man. Elevated and ennobled through divine grace, he is a true man; but these true men are not appreciated by men unenlightened by the Spirit of God, because men have made false signs, false values, and have let them stand in place of God. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 27

God sent a man with a measuring line in his hand to measure Jerusalem in the sight of His delegated prophet. And He sent a message of another angel after him. "Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon." Zechariah 2:7. Ezekiel saw in the vision a man whose appearance was like brass. He stood in the gate of a house and he measured all the building with the reed in his hand—all the little chambers and doorways and arches and pillars, and the great gate looking toward the east, and every least item was recorded, according to the measurement by the reed. See Ezekiel 40-43. Then the glory of God came in and at the end He said, "Show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern. ... This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house." Ezekiel 43:10-12.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 28

We do now most need to see persons whose characters and works measure life and things by the exact measurement of God. A righteous life in honest, faithful dealings makes the whole righteous stature and structure. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 29

We have a rainy day, but we do not become discouraged. The rain has now fallen steadily since last Friday night. We devote today to writing and reading manuscript. We hired a horse and carriage and rode out to St. Johns to attend appointment. We had the small hall full. There were some intelligent hearers present who understood

English: the two Brethren Mons [?], their wives and the son of one, a school teacher and his wife who was an English lady. The Lord helped me to speak with great clearness and power to those assembled upon walking in the light. It was past 10 o'clock when we reached home. There was but little sleep for me that night. I was studying the situation of this people. The Vaudois ministers are satisfied to be supported, to keep the people in a state of ignorance. They are religiously without life and practical godliness and are content to remain so.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 30

It has ceased raining and the sun shines brightly. M. K. White and I walk out, the first opportunity we have had since coming to this place five days ago. We hired a carriage and rode out, Sister Bourdeau and Sarah accompanying us. We drove very slowly, for the horse, although strong, had no idea of hurting his constitution. We passed through the stone works where many are employed working on the large flat stone. We passed over a long bridge and saw a nice house in a beautiful high location. It is some government house I am told.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 31

Met Mr. Mallon who lives at St. Johns. His family were with him. We spoke with them. Brother Biglia arrived here. He called on Mr. Mallon and expected to meet him as he had done, but was treated very rudely. We had met him only about an hour before. Brother Biglia had not heard of his apostasy, and he was greatly shocked. He asked where A. C. Bourdeau lived and if Brother White had arrived at Torre Pellice. He answered roughly he knew nothing about them and he had nothing to do with them. We had met the man only one hour before. His spirit seems to be satanic. Brother Biglia found his information from some other source. He went up with Brother Bourdeau to Villar Pellice five miles from here.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 32

I arise this morning thankful to my heavenly Father for a good night's rest. About five o'clock the clatter of the wooden shoes upon the stone walk forbids sleep. I have prayed most earnestly that the Lord would give wisdom that we might know how to give counsel and advice to others. We are wholly helpless unless we have special help and counsel from the God of wisdom.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 33

There are now crowds of men and women hastening to the market place with their baskets of produce to sell. One cripple, whose limbs look as if they could not bear him up, is drawing a handcart filled with dry goods, cloth, flannels, cotton cloth. Now comes a woman with a stick over her shoulder from which is dangling a dead kid. We see two more peasants with dead kids hanging upon their back to sell. A man is passing with a live kid and a woman with a live kid in her arms as you would carry a kitten. A man passes with three kids hung upon a stick borne from his shoulders. A wagon drawn by a mule and filled with dead kids for market has stopped before the window where I am sitting.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 34

Brother A. C. Bourdeau reports that last night, April 21, the meeting room was crowded and there were from one to two hundred outside who could not find an entrance. Brother Geymet spoke to those out of doors who could not get in while A. C. spoke to those in the house. There is certainly an interest to hear the truth that should have special attention.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 35

W. C. White, Mary, and I enjoyed a very pleasant walk.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 36

In the afternoon we visited the Catholic church. Several nuns passed in as we were about to enter and bowed to us. There were, I should think, about one hundred worshipers there, chanting.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 37

April 23, 1886

Torre Pellice

Last night we were taken by our hired team to the meeting three miles distant. It had not rained through the day, but began to rain a little before we stepped into the carriage. We had a room full and more of the better class than Tuesday evening previous. Both evenings there were some of the first class. My text was Mark 9:33-37. The Lord gave me great freedom in speaking. His power was made to be felt in my weakness. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 38

Many shook hands with me and expressed their thanks for that discourse. Mr. Mallon said that was a beautiful text, and his brother said, "It is the first time I have heard humility spoken upon; it was good, so good, but I will not praise you, I praise the Lord." Others said some things in Italian and others in French for which I was none the wiser. I could not understand a word. Gave out an appointment for next Tuesday night. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 39

Soon after we stepped into the carriage it began to rain and then to pour down from the heavens. Mary and I were protected with cover, but Brother Biglia and Willie, on the front seat, had to take the rain in full, but they were well protected. W. C. White was driver. We reached home and retired at eleven o'clock, but I could not get let down enough to sleep until one o'clock. I awoke at half-past five in the morning. It is raining again today, but the Lord knows just what kind of weather to send, and I am satisfied with His providence. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 40

Sabbath, April 24, 1886

Torre Pellice

W. C. White and I walk out. The rain has ceased. Elder A. C. Bourdeau went five miles out to attend his appointment. The house could not hold the people. Many went away and more than one hundred stood out of doors. Elder Bourdeau raised his voice so that all might hear, but this was difficult. There is a Vaudois church and a Catholic church in this place, but the Protestant church is as firmly closed against us as is the Catholic. We will have to reach the people through God in some way. A tent is sent for, and that will be tried ere long. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 41

A letter came to Elder A. C. Bourdeau of inquiry as well as objection to the Sabbath. He will answer the next time he speaks. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 42

Today there is Sabbath school, then I speak to a small company of hearers who, with few exceptions, keep the Sabbath. My text was, "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." 1 Peter 3:15.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 43

I sought to impress upon my hearers the importance of meekness in opening the truth to those who are in darkness. There are too many who love to fight, and they have not the meekness of Christ. This is a great work, and most solemn, and must be carried forward in great wisdom. Our words must be well chosen, our deportment of that character that will recommend the truth we profess, because of its sanctifying power upon our own character. The Lord blessed me in speaking and the people in hearing. In the afternoon there was a social meeting. Good testimonies were borne, an evidence that the word spoken in the forenoon had been received and was making impressions upon hearts to the good of souls and to the glory of God.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 44

Sunday, April 25, 1886

Torre Pellice

We had this morning a fair sky. The air seems just cool enough to be bracing.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 45

Had consultation in regard to the manner of laboring to reach the hearts of the people. Brother A. C. Bourdeau read a letter from Mr. Mallon. Satan is working through this man to perplex and annoy those who would work to advance the truth in these valleys. The man is determined to be Satan's agent to the bitter end. We must think and pray over this letter. He threatens to appeal to the law, because he says an undue influence was exerted over him which led him to embrace the truth. He claims to have lost means thereby. He has been loaned sixteen hundred dollars by our people before he apostatized, and I think he purposes by some blackmailing to obtain judgment against us, and withhold the money or secure a portion of it for silence money, but we shall trust all in the hands of God and make no compromise. Let him do his very worst. The Lord can take care of us and take care of His work and His people. We trust Him to do this.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 46

W. C. White, Mary White, Brother A. C. Bourdeau visit Brother Vaucher [?] to have a missionary meeting at 11 A.M. We—Brother Bourdeau and wife, W. C. White and M. K. White and myself—ride to Bobbio, which is about two miles from Villar Pellice. We left our horses and carriages in a stable and walked up the steep ascent to the house which was occupied by the Vaudois. Catholics surrounded and attacked the house, and although they held out long, they were overcome. Some escaped, many were wounded, and some fled to a cave close by—where we took our lunch—and were smoked out by these demons in the form of men.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 47

We were surprised to meet so large a number of people who had just come from meeting. There were hundreds, Catholics and Protestants. The women and young girls were dressed, with but few exceptions, with clean, blue cotton dresses and white and neatly done up bonnets with wide quilted ruffles, resembling a lace cap. We had a praying season near the cave mentioned, and then slowly descended the steep hill to get in our carriages and go to the place of meeting.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 48

We found a large number assembled, altogether too many to get into the house. Seats from the house were arranged in the yard before the house, and there the congregation was accommodated with room, although not more than half could obtain seats.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 49

I expected the novelty of having a meeting in the open would lead some to feel they had a license to amuse themselves and be unruly. But with few exceptions the congregation were as quiet and orderly as in a meetinghouse. It was entirely a new thing under the sun for them to hear a woman speak, and yet after I had spoken a few moments there was the best of attention. I spoke to about three hundred people. Some were seated upon the wall of the enclosure, some on steps that led to the meeting room above. The piazza above was well filled with people. It was to all a novel meetinghouse. We had the canopy of heaven above us for a covering, the earth—which is the Lord's—beneath our feet. And this, God's house, was free. Sect and doctrine may exclude us from the meetinghouses, but in case of necessity we can speak to the people in the open air.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 50

My text was Matthew 9:28-30. The congregation—many of them—were intelligent looking. All were dressed neatly—the women and children in their peasant dress of blue calico and dainty little white bonnets. I wished to present the truth in simplicity, that all could understand, old and young. I had much freedom in speaking. The Elder of the Baptist or Vaudois church and some of his prominent members were present to take notes and designed to show opposition; but I preached Christ and Him crucified, and our meeting passed off pleasantly.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 51

The Elder of the Protestant church requested that he have the privilege to ask some questions and make some remarks. Elder A. C. Bourdeau sent him word that he wished to see him and converse with him first, but this did not suit him, and he gave it up. These men will not open the doors for us to preach in their church, and yet they would oppose in our own place of meeting. There are certainly some impressions being made on this community.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 52

The largest number of the audience live in houses on the mountainside, all the way up to the very summit. We drove our carriage as far as any carriage could go. The only means old or young have is to walk up the mountain on a narrow footpath and carry up their provisions on their backs. They bring down butter, eggs, and cheese on their backs. A donkey or mule is sometimes used for this purpose, but these are rare. Two meetings were held in the room for meetings, after we returned from Villar. A Bible reading was given upon missionary labor, and another meeting was held in which W. C. White spoke in regard to the best manner of doing missionary work. Both meetings were profitable. We were impressed by the spirit of Christ's teachings, the striking simplicity. When He was surrounded by large numbers, oft of the lowly class, how simple was His manner of teaching. Christ's teachings were oft before thousands and in simple figures that the lowly could understand.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 53

Monday, April 26, 1886

Torre Pellice

It is a beautiful morning. We have some conversation with Brother Biglia in reference to Cocorder. His life and his character are very bad. He has a very soft, musical voice, and he insinuates himself in families and seduces young girls. He has one or more illegitimate children. This is the man who claims that the law may be kept only in spirit, and this is the spirit in which he keeps the law. This is the man Elder Grant stands up with to sweep away the law of God.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 54

We rode out after having a consultation with Brother Biglia in regard to the field of labor he should accept and do what he could to convey the truth to the hearts of the humble class. In the evening we had an interview with Brother Mallon, a young man who has attended our meetings quite regularly. He is leavened with the doctrine that the law of God does not mean the ten commandments. This was the position Grant took here in the valleys, and those who see how unpopular it would be to accept the Sabbath of the fourth commandment are ready to accept this, to them, pleasing fable.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 55

The spirit that is now prevailing in these valleys to evade the truth is wonderful. Everything as far as doctrine and faith are concerned are exactly the reverse from the ancient Waldenses. What will awaken the people professing godliness to be firm for the truth and duty? Maybe persecution. The perils of the times may arouse in them the spirit of faithfulness and religious fervor and steadfastness to the faith. Certainly perils are before us; and if these perils of the last days will bring into exercise the power of piety and self-denial and cross-bearing, which has died out of their churches, we may see an army of faithful ones brought out of the Piedmont valleys and from the Alps mountains who show the graces of the Spirit of Christ as true followers of the true Shepherd.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 56

In the days of persecution, men and women and children were educated to take the Bible as it reads. Abounding fables were discarded. There were those who stood firm amid the test and trial, amid sword and flame, who counted not their lives dear unto themselves. Their faith was tried, purified. The principle that sustained these true followers of Jesus was, "The love of Christ constraineth us." [2 Corinthians 5:14.] They overcame by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. They counted the cost of their profession. Truth was richer and dearer to them than life in disobedience and sin. They had the testimony that their ways pleased God. In the strength and grace given them of Jesus, they counted not their lives dear unto themselves, so that they might finish their course with Jesus. They suffered for the truth's sake. They were persecuted and tortured, not accepting deliverance by sacrificing the truth. They went into the dens and caves of the earth. These souls we can look upon, of whom the world was not worthy. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 57

Tuesday, April 27, 1886

Torre Pellice

We have another beautiful morning. There is no fog in northern Italy. The atmosphere is good. Brother Bourdeau, W. C. White, Brother Geymet, M. K. White, and I left Torre Pellice for Angrogna. We had a good strong horse, rather a heavy carriage. We went up, up, up. All walked nearly all the way but myself. The scenery resembled that of Colorado—deep ravines, high mountains, and very narrow valleys. The mountains are cultivated to their very highest points, and houses are built all along the mountains to the summit. We have most romantic scenery. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 58

Angrogna was once inhabited by the Waldenses, but the Catholics came in from Turin and burned the first village. More than once the inhabitants were forced from their burning buildings. They were surrounded by their persecutors, who were demons in the shape of men. We walked over the beautiful green sward of level tableland. A Vaudois, a sensible, venerable-looking, white-haired man led us through this beautiful place which ended abruptly. A ledge of sharp, rugged rocks composed a part of the embankment and projected out from the sides of the precipice hundreds of feet below. There the Vaudois were hurried and thrust off from this precipice for no other reason but religious prejudice, because these souls had not yielded heart, soul, and body to the service of Catholicism. We are told that thousands were driven off from this precipice to be mangled and torn to pieces or instantly killed by their descent upon the sharp and jagged rocks. Some bodies were suspended upon the pointed rocks, which fastened in their clothing, and their remains were found two or three weeks afterward. And this is the church which claims to be a successor in the direct line of Jesus Christ and the apostles!4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 59

We read in Luke [where] Christ, in the synagogue of Nazareth, announced Himself as the anointed One, as He read from the prophet Isaiah: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. ... And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him. And He began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears. And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth.” Luke 4:19-22.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 60

Then Satan whispered his unbelief, and they said, “Is not this Joseph’s son?” [Verse 22.] Then He told them plainly the true position. How quickly the current changed, and they were filled with madness and rage because Jesus set before them the true spiritual apostasy. They “rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong.” Verse 29. But Jesus was protected in His mission by the heavenly angels. Passing through the midst of them unobserved, He went His way.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 61

The same enmity that was in the hearts of the apostate Jews, that would lead them to murder the Son of God, was in the hearts of these Catholic religious zealots and made them altogether satanic, to persecute those who were struggling for religious freedom and to lead hundreds of souls to the edge of fearful precipice and dash them over upon the ragged rocks. These who pretend to be Christ’s vicegerents upon earth do the works of their father the devil. When did Christ leave them an example of putting to death either Romans or heathen because they did not believe His doctrines?4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 62

When John saw the insult put upon his Master in the deportment showing insult and contempt toward Jesus, he felt the wound for his Master, and asked: “Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?” Luke 9:54. Christ answered, “Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.” Verses 55, 56.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 63

Herod and the wicked authorities killed the Just One, but Christ never killed anyone, and we may attribute the spirit of persecution—because men want liberty of conscience—to its origin—Satan. He is a deceiver, a liar, a murderer, and accuser of the brethren. He loves to see human misery. He exults in distress, and as we view the cruel persecutions of those who would obey God according to the dictates of their own consciences, we may know that this is the mystery of iniquity. The Lord said to Satan, that old serpent, “It [the Seed of the woman] shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise His heel.” Genesis 3:15. Christ in a special manner bruised the head of the serpent, but the prophecy is far-reaching. It is a declaration of an unwearied conflict between Christ and His followers, and Satan and his angels and human agencies on this earth, to the close of time.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 64

This conflict was opened upon the Son of God. He was afflicted, He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. The Majesty of heaven had to leave the scene of His labor again and again because of Satan’s bruising His heel, and finally Satan’s malignity reached its utmost power when Satan inspired and controlled the minds of wicked men to crucify Him. He has followed the children of God, causing them disaster and death. But woe to those agents who have lent their powers to be controlled by Satan to harm God’s little ones! Isaiah, Daniel, and St. John have in prophecy announced these very struggles and conquests which God’s people would pass through, and the triumph of Satan in his supposed victories.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 65

The enmity of Satan will continue fierce and determined against the followers of Jesus. Christ has said to His faithful ones, “They have persecuted Me; they will also persecute you.” John 15:20. There can be no enmity between fallen angels and fallen men who have practiced the very works and sport of Satan. Both are evil—both have forsaken the good, the pure, the holy character which distinguished the life of Christ. Evil, wherever it exists, in rejecting light and truth and departing from the living God, will always league against the righteous and obedient. Fallen angels and fallen men join in a desperate companionship. This is the very union that the persecutors of the faithful entered into. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 66

Satan made his calculations that if he could induce men, as he deceived and induced the angels who joined in his warfare, he should have them as his allies in every enterprise against heaven. Jarrings and discord, envy and jealousy, hatred and fraud were the elements that reigned among Satan’s kingdom; but when opposing Christ and those who believed on His name, they were bound firmly together as the bands of steel. The no-law question was their present truth. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 67

Persecution of the Vaudois has ceased, but they are not the people they once were. Shepherds are hired to be missionaries, but they have lost their power, their faith. They have not walked in the light. Piety and the beauty of holiness are not seen in the church. They have become sectarian. Errors and traditions and formality characterize the church. The truth, Bible truth, they will not receive. The living faith may be cherished by a few. The Bible is not opened to the people. There is a constant jealousy lest some shall come in to take away their congregations from them. The people are taught to look to their ministers alone. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 68

If God has a message to this people, as He has sent messages of warning and reproof, the way is barred so it shall not reach them. The ministers will not, like the noble Bereans, search the Scriptures to see if these things are so, that as faithful watchmen they may warn the people. A firm breastwork is preserved that seemingly the truth cannot enter. But we have faith that the arrows of the Almighty will penetrate the barriers, that the people held in bondage may see what is truth. The ministers give false interpretations to the Scriptures—spiritualizing away the literal interpretation. Ignorance of the Scriptures exists. The people are fettered and blinded and are but a few paces removed from the spirit which prevails among Catholics, and Protestant reformers have planted themselves where they will not move forward. God has light for them—peace and joy if they will have it; but they refuse—perfectly satisfied.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 69

The Lord has light and truth if they would receive it, to awaken the old fire of zeal and practical godliness, but they refuse the only means God has ordained to reach His people by the barriers they have themselves erected. Superstition, unbelief, and ignorance prevail here in Italy among these Vaudois. Has the glory forever departed from this people, the descendants of the Waldenses? The religion, systems, and forms have sunk into apostasy. Will they never rise again?4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 70

There is in Christianity that which these churches do not possess. The truth does not present ideas mingled with traditions and fables. The religion of Jesus Christ presents the truth, pure and undefiled. It will bear investigation, and honest seekers after the truth will have it. True religion does not excite the mind and feelings, but appeals to the intellect and to the heart. It is constantly developing and rising higher and higher heavenward. God can work for this poor people.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 71

In the days of the apostles the truth was mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan. The fire of devotion was kindled. All felt that they must have a living Saviour, for Christ had risen from the dead; and, trusting in a living Saviour, they were braced to receive martyrdom. God can effect great results by small means. Men of common abilities, humble men, may connect themselves with Jesus Christ. “The entrance of Thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple.” Psalms 119:130. Men who devote their lives to God will feel the power of God’s Word in their hearts. They will feed the souls starving for the bread of life and the water of salvation.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 72

Declamations are made from the pulpit as empty and Christless as was Cain’s offering. The glowing fire of Christ’s love has never burned upon the altar of the hearts. Their discourses are filled with the testimonies of the fathers and human opinions and traditions— cold, unimpressive, without heavenly moisture. Subtlety and human inventions can be met with subtlety and human artifice. The Word of God alone, taken just as the voice of God to man, clothed with power and majesty, will clog the wheels of the reasoning machine. The Scriptures opened to the people in clear, forcible arguments reveal truth in its simplicity, but with such power that the hearers will say, as they said of Christ, “Never man spake like this man.” [John 7:46.] God will tear away the trammels which hold the people in the Waldensian valleys. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 73

These were in ancient times a people who looked with a horror upon the abominations of the church of Rome and sought to worship God in peace, according to the Word of God. They could not do this without coming into collision on every side with the opinions of Rome. While they [the Vaudois] had not a clear and distinct view of justification by faith, these were a step behind the Waldensians, who in purity of doctrine composed a long line of witnesses to the truth. They made their homes in the Piedmont Alps. The seclusion helped to maintain their purity. From the mountain heights, Waldensians protested against the corruption of the Roman church. They contended for the faith once delivered to the saints: that Christ is our Mediator, and His merits alone can cleanse from all sin. And yet their faith needed elevation. True progress did not mark their course; for they were tintured with the customs of Rome. But gradually the clouds of error were rolling away in other parts of the world. Just as soon as Rome saw that men were searching for truth, digging for truth as for hid treasures, and not receiving their faith from Rome, then she was stirred. The Roman piety was the only piety that must be current. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 74

Attended my appointment last night and felt it my duty to stand in vindication of the law of God. I had been told, “Mrs. White, the people will hear you speak until you will say something upon the Sabbath and the law, and then they will come no more. You will have empty seats.” Nevertheless, I felt it my duty to speak plainly in regard to the law of God which was being made void in our world, not only by those who do not profess to have the fear of God before them and to be governed by religious principles, but by those who claim to love God and worship Him. And this is the reason it is so difficult to reach the unbelievers. In Christ’s day the greatest difficulty He had to meet and the ones who most obstructed His work in saving souls by the light of truth were the teachers of the people, the priests and the rulers.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 75

Now if the people had not been afraid of these priests and rulers, and if they had not placed such entire confidence in them because they were educated men, then they would have commenced to think and study and search the Scriptures for themselves. They allowed the priests and rulers to be conscience for them, and Christ called these teachers false teachers, blind guides. They interpreted the Scriptures to suit their ideas. They wrested the Scriptures, and Christ once said to these professedly pious men, “Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures nor the power of God.” [Matthew 22:29.] He said on another occasion, “Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cumin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.” [Matthew 23:23.]4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 76

Now the terrible responsibility of the position of these great men and teachers of the people was not understood. They led them wrong. Blinded and prejudiced themselves, they led the people who were not as well informed as they, and who were willing to be led without taking the trouble to study and search the Scriptures for themselves, so that they all united in rejecting Christ with priests, rulers, and people, and they did the terrible deed of crucifying the Son of God.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 77

Left Torre Pellice at five o’clock A.M. A. C. Bourdeau accompanied us to Turin. Here we had nearly two hours before the cars went to Geneva. We were glad to be well situated in the cars at last. The scenery is very grand on this route. With pen in hand, I sketch down the scenery as the cars move swiftly along. Now on either side of us rise almost perpendicular mountains, pointing towards the heavens, and between these mountain gaps are seen in the distance mountain peaks above mountain peaks. These mountains are cultivated in patches to their very summit. We see the goats feeding among the high rocks, where it appears there is not a green thing, and how they can keep their foothold appears a mystery. We come to fertile valleys. The plain, level land is highly cultivated on either side. There are orchards and horse chestnut trees. Villages are quite frequent here and there on the mountain sides, and in the valleys are planted forests of evergreens. Then we come to rocks, bleak and bare like masonry towering up to an immense height. We pass through a tunnel and look down thousands of feet into a wild rocky ravine where the green waters are running over the rocks. And we see mountains of rocks again on either side of the deep ravine. Now is the green valley, first on one side, then on the other, and a stream of water flowing through.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 78

Then we reach again the high precipitous mountains. Houses are built, terrace after terrace, to the mountaintop, that looked as if hanging like nests to the very rocks. These huge masses of rocks of every conceivable shape rise high up thousands of feet, their sides and summit jagged, and between the rocks are yawning fissures, many feet in depth.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 79

Our track was cut through the heart of rocky mountains. Upon the highest rocky eminence we saw reservoirs were being built of stone, round and pointed, resembling towers. We came to a village. It is very old. Its name is Chiomonte. It stands two thousand feet above the level of the sea. These houses are roofed with dark brown flat stones, which give them an ancient appearance. The mountains rise up thousands of feet above the village, and houses are located in the very rocky heights, one above another, and little bright green patches of land reveal their farms.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 80

Why the settlers should build in such high places, where no carriage can possibly go, is more than we can conjecture. Some houses are built upon rocks and surrounded with rocks. High above them, and sometimes below, are little patches of living green.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 81

We pass through tunnel after tunnel. We emerge from one quickly to enter another. With pen in hand I have not chance to write more than one word before we are enclosed in darkness. We emerge from the fifteenth tunnel, and a beautiful scene is opened to our view. Down, down, a long way below us is a valley which is nicely cultivated land. This smooth plain of grass and grain of living green extends to some distance. There are houses far below us. there is a stone wall—large, but in ruins—while on the tops of high mountains are buildings and ruined castles.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 82

And now we come to precipitous mountains, with houses at the base. High up on the sides of the mountain is quite a large village meetinghouse, rising in silent grandeur from the rocky heights which are its foundations, and the towers a little farther on are revealed, and smaller villages in among the rocks.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 83

Then we can discern where sheep and shepherds with their flocks of goats are feeding. Women and men are both employed in tending their flocks. We had some most beautiful views of God's mighty power in the things of nature. In America no one would attempt to cultivate that which appears to be rocks, nothing but rocks, but the little patches of green tell us there is some soil there. Here are terrace after terrace, up hundreds of feet, built of rock walls to keep the little narrow strips of cultivated land from being washed away.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 84

We pass through a tunnel seven miles long. We pass mountains and ravines and come to where the houses have not so ancient an appearance, and we strike another village that looks hundreds of years old and mountains very high, with villages built upon their sides. In the ravines are swift-running streams, beating against the large boulders in their rapid flow. Now we come to a cleft in the mountain. From top to base is lying deep in snow. Rocks, massive, grand old rocks! Amid these have been planted a pine forest. Rocks, rocks, and yet high, very high up, are dwelling houses—little patches of grass or grain compose their mountainside farm. Oulx is the name of this place. Here goats and sheep make their way and find something to live on, but it is difficult to tell what. We come to a small, old-looking village, hundreds of years old, and next a forest of planted pines by the railroad track and extending up the mountain steeps.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 85

At 3 P.M. we enter a corner of France. We left Italy at the station back, Madan [?], about twelve o'clock and entered Switzerland; and after travelling some hours we reached this place, France, which is a beautiful country, and the climate is mild and healthful. This scenery is composed of hills and mountains, with beautiful trees. The earth is now most lovely, clothed in her garments of living green; the trees are covered with the loveliest green foliage, and the fruit trees, many of them, are in full bloom. The apple, plum, peach, and the horse chestnuts and hedges of lilac make the air fragrant with their blossoms. There are trees that bear a rich pink and red blossom resembling a tulip in shape. There are also trees with pure white blossoms of the same description. These broad valleys with the mountains in the background are clothed with forest trees. Up on the high mountain summits are built round towers and observatories and castles.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 86

The varied scenery is a scene of indescribable loveliness. As I look upon the marvelous works of God in nature, I am filled with amazement at the ingratitude of men, that their hearts are not drawn out in love and adoration to God. This earth could be enjoyable, most akin to heaven, if it were not for the perversity of men, whose hearts are set in them to do evil and that continually.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 87

If everything in God's works looks to us so beautiful, and the majestic mountains and towering stern old rocks have attractions, how far exceeding it in beauty, in grandeur and loveliness, was the world before the flood, which was destroyed because of man's sinfulness. God had surrounded them with the precious things of earth because He loved them. But these blessings were turned into a curse, and they used the precious things of earth to gratify their pride and to glorify themselves until the Lord destroyed them and the earth which was defiled by their violence and corrupting works. Even now, if the curse of sin were not corrupting the earth, it would be a happy place, but every place inhabited by human beings is debased with sin.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 88

The rocky mountains rise abruptly and seem to tower upwards, reaching to the very heavens. At my left is a grand old castle standing upon the mountaintop, and in the distance rises another mountain far above. The peaks reach almost to the heavens—a mountain that to human eye appears inaccessible, rising thousands of feet above the level—and on the very summit is a tower. It may be for observation. The ambition of man will not be restricted. And we come to scenery that appears to our senses as indescribably grand. Mountain peaks rise above mountain peaks, the massive, curiously splendid shaped rocks that were heaved up by mighty agencies and sculptured by the storms of ages—the bare, naked crags, rough hewn. Then there comes a little tableland high between jutting rocks. Up, up nearly to the top, men have made their dwelling. There are seen the peach and plum and cherry trees in full bloom.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 89

I turn my eye from the mountains to the valleys. There are long stretches of hedges of lilacs in full bloom, the chestnuts with their white blossoms, and trees that look like the chestnuts—a red pink, almost red. Then the beautiful green trees, the apple trees, the peach, the plum, the cherry, with their fragrant blossoms, and the fields of green waving grain. Then, lifting my eyes, I see in the background in striking contrast the Alps covered with their eternal snows.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 90

This place I have described is Chambering [?] in France. It has 18,550 inhabitants. This is a place thickly studded with houses. The houses, many of them, look very old, but the situation is one of surpassing loveliness. There is a diversified scenery, both tame and wild, grand and awe-inspiring mingled. This is the prettiest and grandest varied scenery combined I have seen in Europe.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 91

I begin at once to meditate—has the message of truth reached these cities and villages? Has its sound ever reached this city? I see evidences of Catholic religion in the cemeteries and the crosses and the stone arches, whereon are images of Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the apostles. I see people pass these and bow and make the form of the cross. I am told that there are only a few scattered Protestants in these cities and villages we have passed.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 92

The inquiry arises, How are these people to be reached? How is the message of warning to be given to them? Where are the men, the missionaries, who will feel the burden to enter these places with our publications and who will open the Bible to one here and one there? They need not expect to get the crowds, for they cannot reach them. God has ways and means to break down the walls of religious prejudice that have been built up to keep away the truth from the people. Our heavenly Father gave His own dear Son a ransom for man; and after such an infinite sacrifice has been made to save them, He will not leave them without warning and destitute of the light of truth.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 93

I see old stone buildings that must be centuries old going to decay, and man is passing away. He will live again, but how will his destiny be determined? Men are inclined to sin, to transgress the law of God, and what need of these senseless images made with man's hands to symbolize God? Our heavenly Father has furnished us with tokens of His greatness and His majesty. Especially is this so in a wonderful degree in these mountainous regions.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 94

The great God has reared His mighty structures in the granite rocks, in the towering mountains, in clefts, in the gulches, in the gorges, and in the castle rocks and the caves of the earth; and with these surroundings of evidences of God's power, how thankless the heart that needs images of man to worship! The heathen who worship nature, the works of the divine hand, are idolaters, but does not their worship strike the senses as more sensible than the worship of images, having the mould and impress of finite man? Everything about us teaches us from day to day lessons of our Father's love and of His power, of His laws that govern nature and that lie at the foundation of all government in heaven and in earth.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 95

These rich tokens of God's matchless power, if they will not call the mind to the Creator of heaven and earth, if they will not awaken gratitude in these dull and thankless hearts, will images and shrines of dead men do this? We look upon nature, we see the fields clothed with their carpet of living green, we see the variety of His works in this house God has builded for man. Every part of this house differs, it may be, from another, but we trace in unmistakable tokens the handiwork of the great Architect. There is beauty in the valley's awful grandeur, in the solemn, massive, cleft rocks; there is majesty in the towering mountains that look as if they touched the heavens. There are the lofty trees with their delicately formed leaves; the spires of grass, the opening bud and blossoming flower, the forest trees, and every living thing—they all point the mind to the great and living God. Every faculty of our being testifies that there is a living God, and we may learn the most precious lessons from the open book of nature in regard to the Lord of heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 96

In this study the mind expands, is elevated and uplifted, and becomes hungry to know more of God and His majesty. We have awakened in our hearts feelings not only of reverence and awe, but of love, of faith, of trust and entire dependence upon One who is the giver of all good. And as I look at His marvelous works and see the evidences of His power, I instinctively inquire, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that Thou visitest him?" Psalm 8:4. All the greatness and glory of these wonderful things in God's house can only be appreciated as they are connected in the mind or associated with God; and the future home of bliss He is preparing for those who love Him. The precious things of the lasting hills we enjoy, but these will be as nothing compared with the glories that shall be awarded to the worshipers of the true God. 4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 97

We shall have in this life cold and heat, fogs, storms, and tempest, the oppressive heat of summer, but in heaven will be no extremes. We may in the place of bowing to images, the works of men's hands, bow to God and through the name of Jesus receive the rich blessings of heaven. These images are said to be representations, to call the mind to the real, but there are thousands of minds that know not how to rise any higher, and remain in ignorance of the true and living God, through these very miserable substitutes which take the place of God in the human mind. The Lord has made all these cheap, dumb idols entirely unnecessary to keep the living God in mind. His own handiwork is presented before us, whichever way we look, wherever in God's house we may make our home.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 98

Ministers and teachers should esteem these solemn lessons which are in this great house of God so full of interest that, as they shall learn the lessons from the book of nature, they can call the attention of the people and educate them to study the Lord's book of nature, which He has opened before them that they may become acquainted with Himself. Who can doubt His power or His love as he sees the thoughtfulness and wisdom of God in all His arrangements? God wants that men should not center their hopes and experience in men, but learn the lessons which He teaches every devout and attentive mind. The Lord would have us discern His wisdom. We may study the book of nature, discovering the glory of God in every page that is laid open for our inspection. God's work, how mighty! It is, indeed, past finding out!4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 99

It is the work of Satan to draw down the minds from the grand evidences of God's majesty to inferior things, as images of Christ and the apostles, and praying to them and reverencing the senseless bones of reported saints. God has spread His works before our senses. These testify of His power, and the souls that are bowing to these images may be uplifted and become elevated through the revelations of God in His created works, and they may be inspired to worship Him who is the only true and living God.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 100

Men may trace, in the broken surface of the earth, the evidences of the flood. Men thought themselves wiser than God, and altogether too wise to obey His law and keep His commandments and obey the statutes and precepts of Jehovah. The rich things of earth which God had given them did not lead them to obedience, but away from obedience, because they misused their choice favors of heaven and made the blessings given them of God objects to separate from God. And because they became satanic in their nature, rather than divine, the Lord sent the flood of waters upon the old world, and the foundations of the great deep were broken up.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 101

Clay, lime, and shells that God had strewn in the bottoms of the seas were uplifted, thrown hither and thither, and convulsions of fire and flood, earthquakes and volcanoes, buried the rich treasures of gold, silver, and precious stone beyond the sight and reach of man. Vast treasures are contained in the mountains. There are lessons to be learned in God's book of nature.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 102

While we talk freely of other countries, why should we be reticent in regard to the heavenly country, and the house not built with hands, eternal in the heavens? This heavenly country is of more consequence to us than any other city or country on the globe, therefore we should think and talk of this better, even an heavenly, country. And why should we not converse more earnestly and in a heavenly frame of mind in regard to God's gifts in nature? He has made all these things and designs that we shall see God in His created works. These things are to keep God in our remembrance and to lift our hearts from sensual things and bind them in bonds of love and gratitude to our Creator.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 103

We see in the broken face of nature, in the cleft rocks, in the mountains and precipices, that which tells us a great wrong has been done, that men have abused God's gifts, forgotten the Creator, and that the Lord was grieved and punished the wicked transgressors of His law, and as the result we have its effects in creation. Storms rage with destructive violence. Harm comes to man and beast and property. Because men continue to transgress God's law, He removes their defense. Famine, calamity by sea, and the pestilence that walketh at noonday follow because men have forgotten their Creator. Sin, the blight of sin, defaces and mars our world, and agonized creation groans under the iniquity of the inhabitants thereof. God has given us faculties to be cultivated, to be improved to His glory and for eternity.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 104

These mountains and caverns and clefts of the rock which we behold have a history. Martyrs have perished here, and these places will never reveal their sacred trust until the Life-giver shall call them with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God from the rocky caverns, the dungeons, the caves, and the clefts of the rocks. They died in exile, some by starvation, others by the cruel hand of man. They walked with God, and will walk with Him in white because they are found worthy.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 105

This earth is not deprived even now of angel visitors. They come in the guise of men. They communicate to the children of men, but their eyes are holden and they know them not. All that God has given us in the treasures of the earth is to draw our minds to Him. The most wonderful sacrifice has been made in our behalf, and shall anything come between our hearts and our God?4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 106

What a sight will it be when the dead shall come forth from their graves among these Waldensian valleys! I was informed that, not far back, in these Catholic villages, when working about buildings or digging in the ground, there are found heaps of bones of human beings, and in these bodies are seen long spikes, sharpened at both ends, attached to the back skull bones and running down the back. These things stir the enmity of Protestants to the depths of their souls. A little may be revealed now and then, but chapters of the book of history of sufferings will never a page of it be opened, that any one may obtain a glimpse of the work of Satan, accomplished through wicked men claiming to be serving God. The mountains, the dens, the caves of the earth, the dungeons lying beneath the monasteries have a history which the great retributive day of God's judgment will reveal. From these hidden pits where human beings have been buried will start into life those who counted not their lives dear unto themselves, who valued integrity of soul to God above ease, above property, above life itself. From beneath the molding majestic walls is ground cursed by the Roman power, but sanctified by the blood of martyrs; and as the blood of Abel cried to God from the ground, so will the blood of these slaughtered ones cry to God from the ground for vengeance.4LtMs, Ms 62, 1886, par. 107

Journey From Italy to Switzerland (Supplementary Account)

NP

[April 29, 1886]

See Ms 62, 1886. Previously unpublished.

On the cars from Torre Pellice to Geneva the mountains are stretching upward to a very great height on either side of us. These mountains are cultivated nearly to their summit. We come now where we look down thousands of feet, and there is a ravine in which is a swiftly running stream. It is [a] mountain of rocks on either side of this deep precipice. We see most beautiful green valleys and orchards, houses all built in the mountainsides.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 1

We come to a village, very, very old—Chiomonte. There are many houses built standing two thousand feet above level sea. The roofs are of broad, flat stones which give them an ancient appearance.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 2

Now the mountains run up thousands of feet above the village, and houses are built upon the steep mountain sides to the very summit which seems to touch the heavens.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 3

We come to another precipice. We have passed through ten tunnels, one following another in such quick succession that I have been able to write only this one page. We pass now a tunnel. Below us is seen, way down in the valley, which is nicely cultivated, walls of rock that once composed a building, but it is now in ruins. Up hundreds of feet is quite a large village—tunnel. This is a varied scenery. Now is the terraced mountain. Rocky walls are built to keep the mountain from washing away; and then there are the little patches of green mingled with the brown cultivated land; and this is repeated again and again.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 4

Up, up, thousands of feet we pass through a tunnel seven miles long. There is a flock of goats up amid rough, bare rocks. Above these cragged, rugged rocks, there are houses built.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 5

Now we come to more modern houses and again a village—ancient buildings, centuries old—tunnel—ancient village very old. Up on the side and summit of mountains are dwelling houses. In the ravines is a swiftly flowing stream. There is snow in a gulch, very deep. This snow reaches from the top of the mountains to the gulch below. Rocks, rocks, nothing but rocks, except there has been planted pines for a forest—tunnel.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 6

Flocks of goats upon the apparently bare rocks very high up. Rocks, rocks, and yet away up hundreds of feet there are dwelling houses and little patches of grass. It is surely curious to see the mountain trail made in the side of the rocky mountain. Oulx is the name of the place. Here the goats and sheep make their way and find something to live on. It is difficult to tell what. Small old village—a forest of evergreens that has been planted by the railroad track and on the mountainsides.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 7

France, 3 P.M. We are passing now through a corner of France. We left Italy at Modane about twelve o'clock and entered Switzerland, and now we are in France—a beautiful country surrounded with hills and mountains; beautiful trees; the earth is in her new dress of green; the trees covered with the brightest green foliage; the varied scenery of indescribable loveliness. This earth would be indeed beautiful if it were not for the foul blot of sin that corrupts it in every place where human beings inhabit it.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 8

The rocky mountains rise abruptly, and the tops seem to touch the heavens. At my left is a grand old castle situated upon the mountaintops; and still higher towers a mountain that, to human eye, appears inaccessible, thousands of feet, and on the very summit of the highest point is a tower. Ambition of man will do great things. This is a beautiful valley. Forests rise above fresh snow-clad mountains. Hedges of lilacs, horse chestnuts in full bloom, and a tree just like the chestnut filled with blossoms—deep pink. Chambery in France has 18,550 (eighteen thousand, five hundred and fifty) inhabitants. This is a thickly settled place. The houses look very old, but it has for situation a beautiful valley. It is wonderful to see the trees—apple, plum, peach trees, horse chestnuts in full bloom—and inhale the fragrance; and then in striking contrast only a little from this are the snow-covered Alps.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 9

This is indeed the most beautiful tame and wild scenery blended I have looked upon in Europe; but there is one thing that spoils it all—Catholics have a stronghold in all these beautiful places.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 10

And the inquiry arises, How are these people to be reached? How is the message to go to them? How will they be warned? We can only wait the providence of God. He has means and ways by which He can reach the people. The work is the Lord's. He so loved man that He gave His own life a ransom, and He will love them by giving them opportunities to know what is truth.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 11

I see a large granite structure. On its top are towers, and on the highest points of rock towering [upwards] that seems to touch the very heavens is placed a cross upon this battlement of rocks, dark and without verdure, stretching for a distance. This is Aix-les-Bains, the great watering place—not sulphur springs. There is an immense building on the right, four thousand, four hundred inhabitants; on the left are high pointed mountains; at the base a beautiful valley with its cultivated lands and very fine poplars. It was dark when we passed this point before.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 12

This town is of modern mold. We come to a valley planted with rows of poplars. On the left are high, sharp ranges of rocks, vineyards, lake, beautiful rocks, sharp and edgewise.4LtMs, Ms 63, 1886, par. 13

Labors in Switzerland—No. 5

April 30, 1886

Geneva

We arrived at Geneva about eight o'clock last night. We found Brother Daniel Bourdeau's family waiting at the depot for us. We found ourselves in a rainstorm. Our baggage was soon placed in a truck and we were taken to Brother Bourdeau's house, where we were comfortable and cordially entertained. We retired early, as we had risen at four o'clock in the morning. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 1

We rested well until about five o'clock, then arose and commenced writing. Mary and I visited a bathroom and were refreshed by a good bath. Then I lay down about half an hour. Could not sleep, and arose and engaged in writing. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 2

We had an interview with a gentleman that Brother Bourdeau had become acquainted with. His brother was his companion in Grand Lion Mission, Canada. His name was _____. This man had received letters from Illinois repeating the same scandal that Elder Grant repeated in Torre Pellice, Italy. One of the editors of a paper received the same scandal and printed it. One of the same denomination, a man of influence, sent him a reproof and told him that was not the way for a Christian to do—to put down that which they considered error in doctrine by assailing the life and character of individuals. We had a very pleasant interview with this stranger. I gave him Volume IV of Great Controversy. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par.

Friday night at eight o'clock, after the commencement of the Sabbath, I spoke to a number assembled in Brother Bourdeau's house. The president of the temperance society was present, and several others who understood English. I was much blessed in this meeting and several were in tears. The Lord is not confined to the large assembly. We hope the meeting will do good. A Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 4

Geneva

I did not rest well last night, after speaking and feeling intensely for the souls of those to whom I spoke. It is impossible for me to throw off the burden of the work, the deep earnestness that souls shall be converted to the truth.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 5

We took the cars at half-past seven for Lausanne. We arrived at Lausanne about ten o'clock and walked directly to the hall hired by our people in which to hold meetings. I spoke from the last verses of the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah. I was followed by Elders Bourdeau in French, Conradi in German. I felt assured that the presence of the Lord was with us.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 6

After I had finished my discourse, we had a social meeting. Many testimonies were borne by those who had recently embraced the truth. Three took their position decidedly that day to observe the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. If there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, there must be joy in heaven over the seventy souls who have, through searching the Scriptures like the noble Bereans to see if these things were so, seen evidence from the Scriptures and taken their position upon the commandments of God. The experiences given by those who have recently come to the truth were earnest and sincere and evidenced that the Lord had been at work with their hearts. We rejoiced to see that the efforts made in Lausanne had not been fruitless. If there can be a light set on a candlestick in this beautiful city, that it shall give light to all that are in the house, we will give God the glory and take courage.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 7

In the evening I spoke to the Germans, Brother Conradi interpreting. I believe the Lord set home the words spoken to the hearts of many. My text was Luke 10:25-28.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 8

I spoke to the workers today about one hour as to the best manner of reaching the people. Brother Ademar Vuilleumier translated for me. I sought to impress upon the minds and hearts of those present the necessity of daily learning in the school of Christ lessons of meekness and lowliness of heart, that they may be able to reach people through God. We hope this effort will not be lost upon the workers.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 9

In the evening we met a good congregation in the hall. This evening the translation was in French. All listened with deep interest and I felt deeply for the souls present. Quite a number were in the valley of decision. Bible readings had been given to many families and some very interesting cases were developed, but will they obey unpopular truth? Brother Conradi called upon several in the afternoon of Sunday. We had Bible readings with several. We called upon one lady who had manifested considerable interest in the Bible readings. There was a Methodist minister who had come to the place.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 10

Tramelan, Switzerland

We have had a very interesting morning's ride, fifteen miles from Moutier to this place. We arrived here about noon. Were heartily welcomed by Brother Roth (pronounced Rote). They have a large, interesting family. Seven boys and three girls are living. One died in the faith a few years since. They are engaged in business and live in a large house. They have a merchant tailor establishment, another department for groceries, another for hats, another for shoes and sundries, and a large bakery establishment. They have a good business and are in very superior circumstances for Switzerland. Their children are all with them in the truth. They have two sharp, intelligent boys—one nine years old, the other eleven or twelve.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 14

Friday night eleven came from Chaux-de-Fonds and our meeting room was in a good-sized room of Brother Roth's house. I was requested to speak to those assembled, and did so, although I was much tired. I did not sleep until after midnight. When before the people, I feel so deeply in earnest that they should come up to the holy standard erected by our Lord that I am unable to lay off the burden.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 15

Sabbath, May 22, 1886

Tramelan

The church in this place has an interesting Sabbath school. I then (after Sabbath school) spoke to the congregation from Revelation 15:2-4. The Lord gave me freedom in speaking and the Lord did bless the hearers. The room for meeting was crowded full and many present were affected to tears. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 16

In the afternoon there was a social meeting and many good testimonies were borne. Nearly all present took part in the meeting. I slept but little that night. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 17

May 23, 1886

Tramelan

We rode out about five miles. The scenery was beautiful. Tramelan abounds in rich pine forest groves. It is mountainous. There is fine pasturage for cattle. Cows seem to be in great abundance here, and in this respect the milk, butter, and cheese must be far superior to that in Basel, where the cattle are mostly tied up in stables, or used as oxen to work the land. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 18

After dinner we rode about ten miles out to visit an old convent nearly two hundred years old. On the way the clouds began to gather, the lightning to flash, and the thunders to roll, and soon came a violent shower of hailstones, some as large as hickory nuts. The cattle, cows, and horses were running wildly about as if distracted. We drew up our cover to the carriage, put on our wraps, and were comfortable, but the horse was drawing the heavy carriage up the rising ground and he made haste slowly. Brother Oscar Roth was driving. He called to men at a farmhouse, who threw open the doors of their barn, and we drove in, horse and carriage. We were thankful for a refuge. 4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 19

A man and his sister lived in the house joined to this barn—for universally the barn is one half of the house. The smallest half is the dwelling part for the family. These two, brother and sister, are strong Catholics, and they are devoted to the Catholic religion, but they treated us with the greatest courtesy. They wanted to make us a dish of coffee or tea, or serve us with cake and wine, but all this was declined. They urged us to come into the family rooms, but I could sit in the carriage and look out through the large open doors and see the showers of hail, and I did not wish to go into the house where I would be deprived of this sight. The shower of hail came thick and fast, but the hailstones were less in size. We gathered up handfuls of the hail and ate them.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 20

The master of the house unharnessed our horse and put him in the stall and fed him with grain. He was well acquainted with Oscar Roth, and he told him that he did not want anything more to do with him since he published such things as he did about the Catholics in the French Signs. He said he was greatly offended, and Oscar told him that neither he nor his sister Mary, who was with us, was responsible for these pieces being put in the Signs. He smoothed down after a time and said, "Well, we will talk no more about it. We will talk of something else." We look upon this as being an interesting little bit of experience.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 21

In the morning it was thought to be too warm even to ride out. All the forenoon it was very warm. At about three o'clock we had the thunder, lightning, and hail. Then it was as pleasant and mild as we could wish. After the rain ceased we pursued our journey. We were free from dust and everything in nature looked refreshed and smiling. We were upon a high elevation and the scenery in forests of dark green pine, intermingled with the bright and living green of the maple and ash upon the mountainsides, made a picture in nature that the penciling of artistic skill cannot possibly approach.4LtMs, Ms 64, 1886, par. 22

Second Visit to Sweden

June 15, 1886

We left Basel, Switzerland, in company with Sarah McEnterfer and Kristine Dahl, evening of June 15, at 10:00 o'clock. We were in a compartment with one lady. There are no sleeping cars, as in America. There are compartments which they call sleeping coupes, which would cost our party eleven or twelve dollars for one night's ride. We had narrow seats and it was difficult to obtain much sound sleep long at a time. We were more than glad to have morning come.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 1

June 16, 1886

We changed cars twice, once at Mainz, then after riding about one hour we changed again at Frankfurt. There we tarried two hours and a half before we left for Hamburg. We were pleased to be once more seated in the cars. When we passed through this place last October it was raining, and we had a similar experience on this occasion. The first part of the journey in the forenoon we had a compartment to ourselves, and there was considerable sleeping done by us all. Then our compartment was filled in with three ladies.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 2

We met W. C. White at Hamburg. He left Basel in the morning, June 14, accompanying Brethren Whitney and Conradi to Leipzig to attend to business relating to the publishing house at Basel.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 3

We were obliged to wait two hours at Hamburg. Here we found in this large city the poorest accommodations for travelers. The waiting room was small. Adjoining it was a restaurant, and in this room tables were placed before the lounges, where the passengers could sit, in such a way that you could not be seated unless this table was before you, which was for the purpose of having beer and refreshments placed upon it. We saw only the beer accommodations. Two young men about twenty-five years of age came in and called for beer. First they sipped some kind of liquor from a small glass, then the foaming mug of beer was drunk, and this was repeated at the other tables. Then came the indulgence of the narcotic tobacco, filling the room with the poisonous effluvia. We felt not at home and removed to the long narrow passage called a hall. A chair was brought for me, and the rest had the privilege of standing or sitting on the floor. We were relieved to be again seated in the car.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 4

We traveled until one o'clock and then were transferred to the boat. We had our stateroom, but it was so arranged that it was not a protection from the tobacco poison. At this late hour—or early hour of morning—men were fumigating themselves with the tobacco smoke which filled our stateroom with the disagreeable, sickening smell. We could obtain but little sleep and felt unrefreshed, unrested the next day.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 5

We were again transferred from the boat to the waiting room. We ordered from the restaurant hot milk and bread, which resembled in its principal make-up that which is called doughnuts in America. We called again for bread and more of the same was brought us. When we had our baggage transferred to the car, we were placed in a compartment with the gentlemen, and it was not an easy matter to dispose of all our baggage. We found by examination that one of our satchels was missing. We knew, upon calling up our thoughts after W. C. White had gone to the custom house and to the boat and returned without the missing article, that the satchel was surely placed in the waiting room and some one must have taken it by mistake. We transferred our baggage to the platform, but on afterthought placed it back in the car, for if the satchel was on the car with us, our waiting behind twenty-four hours would not be of the least benefit. After we had passed on to the next station, where the train stopped a short time, a gentleman was seen swinging the missing satchel from the car window. He afterwards explained that he was an American and had lots of luggage with him. His daughter, in looking for something, discovered that the satchel—just like one they had—was not theirs, and so we came in possession of our goods once more and were very thankful we did not lose a day by remaining behind.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 6

We arrived at Copenhagen at about 11 o'clock, and our baggage was transferred to a hack which took us directly to the boat, which would leave in half an hour; so we were favored beyond our expectations and were not obliged to spend a day and night in Copenhagen as we had feared. We were about three hours on the boat, which took us to Malmo. Here we stopped one hour and took our lunch. Here arrangements were made. Then there was no difficulty to find our route. A tall, fine-looking man in the office could speak three different languages, which to us was a relief. We then stepped on the train again, which was to bear us on our way to Orebro. We were told we must change at midnight. We had a compartment to ourselves and made the most of it in sleeping. As night approached we were abruptly aroused and told to change then. All we could understand was, "strax, strax" (immediately), and we would not have to change in the night.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 7

It was rather difficult for the Swedes to understand us or us to understand them, but we understood we must get out of the car at once and we did so, gathering up blankets, shawls, and satchels and taking them to the platform where we stood in stupid confusion. A porter soon took a satchel and led our way into another car. So we had the compartment to ourselves again, but the seats were without springs, and we found ourselves unable to lie in one position but a short time. The troublesome hip of mine was not inclined to be quiet with such accommodation.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 8

About two o'clock daylight came, and at four we were again told we must get out of the car "strax" immediately. Not expecting this extra change we were unprepared, but we gathered up our goods and with them were hustled out on the platform; then we were placed at once in another car, and in about one hour the command came again “strax”—go get out and take another car.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 9

We had by this time become used to being ordered to leave the car “strax”—immediately. This time we wasted one hour in the depot and then were seated in the car which would take us to Orebro without more change.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 10

When we arrived at the depot at seven o’clock, we looked in vain for some one to meet us, but no one came. We could not talk, neither could anyone talk to us. We left our luggage safely cared for and started on foot for Sister Jacobs, who entertained us when we were here before. We found our good brethren O. A. Olsen, Brother Oyen, and Brother Matteson just up and dressed. Said they had been to the cars for us several times for two days and on this occasion did not expect us, as they were told we could not possibly come in until the noon train.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 11

We were glad to get with our brethren who could understand and talk English. We were happy to meet Elders Olsen and Oyen, and we had much to say. Rooms had been rented for us all furnished, and we went to them at once and were pleased to see that we could be pleasantly situated through the meeting. We cook and provide for ourselves, and we feel quite at home. This is an important season for those assembled. They may never be as favorably situated again to be instructed. There is an early morning meeting at half-past six, next there is an exercise in bookkeeping, then a training of the colporteurs by Elder Olsen. There is a Bible class also, and preaching in the evening.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 12

Sabbath, June 19, 1886

[Orebro, Sweden]

I spoke to our people in the afternoon from Luke 13:23, 24. I had freedom in speaking, and the people seemed to listen with deep interest. Afterward there was a social meeting. Elder Matteson interpreted to W. C. White and myself the testimonies borne. We could but say, One Lord, one faith, one baptism. The brethren in Sweden have the very same experience as our brethren in America. This was a good meeting. Brother Oyen spoke in the evening. 4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 13

Sunday, June 20, 1886

Orebro, Sweden

Attended meetings in the morning and gave a practical talk. I spoke again in the evening at six o'clock. When we came to the house of meeting, we found the hall full and many at the door who could not find entrance. We slowly worked or crowded our way up to the stand. The Lord gave me much freedom in speaking to the congregation from (Revelation 22)—the whole chapter. I saw that quite a number understood English. These came and spoke to me after meeting, with many who do not understand our language. Elder Matteson interpreted. This was a chapter of deepest interest. We could not dwell upon the chapter, so full of precious truth, as we wished. A deep interest was manifested. We felt the Holy Spirit of the Lord was upon the congregation. We felt the precious truth of this chapter, and the congregation manifested the deepest earnestness to get the understanding of the precious words. We hope the Lord will impress the hearts of the hearers with these precious truths, so deep, so far-reaching, so solemn. 4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 14

June 21, 1886

Orebro

Attended the morning meeting, but we were locked out. Brother Johnson had the key. We all had to wait from ten to fifteen minutes before we could find entrance to the house. I spoke to those assembled in regard to the man who came to Jesus, saying, "I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest." Jesus answered, "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." Matthew 8:19, 20. I sought to impress upon those present that they must not be discouraged at trials and opposition, and faint at hardships, for we should surely have these. They are a part of the Christian legacy, and if the Majesty of heaven left His royal throne, left His heavenly home, His honor and His glory, and came to a world where He was not appreciated—where He was despised and rejected of men, why did He come—He who was the only begotten of the Father? To save perishing souls.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 15

If the Master of the house suffered in order that we might have eternal life, we must not complain, but cheerfully be partakers with Christ of His sufferings. Then we will be partakers with Him of His glory. Whosoever doeth his duty to the blessed Saviour in the home life and in the church life, seeking to sow the gospel seed in all places, some will oppose, misrepresent. Whosoever becomes a faithful steward of the grace of Christ wherever he may be, if for well-doing [he suffers] unkindness and hatred of men, let him represent Christ in meekness and unhatred of men. Let each say in all Christian duties, “They hated me without a cause.” [John 15:25.] We should not worry about the mischief of unruly tongues. None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. Bear the testimony of truth, and stand faithfully, bearing the last message to a guilty world.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 16

Orebro

I arose at five o'clock. Sought the Lord earnestly in prayer. I believe the Lord, that He will hear and answer me according to His promises. At half-past six attended morning meeting and spoke to those assembled about fifteen minutes from 1 Peter 3:8-12.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 17

“Be pitiful, be courteous.” [Verse 8.] This is essential for the worker if he would have success. Courtesy gains access to hearts, gives finish and perfection to the character. It is essential that those who work for Jesus Christ shall in character represent the meekness and the gentleness of Christ while they shall be firm as a rock to principle. They are to be kind as well as faithful, manifesting Christian politeness, which is a grace of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 65,

1886, par. 18

While they should give attention to the weightier matters of the law, they should preserve and exercise the little proprieties of life. God would have us in our life and character be fragrant, refreshing, and blessing others. In this way we make the truth attractive. The Christian should see the necessity of cherishing whatever is amiable in temper with whatever is firm in principle—being just, true, honest, and yet kind and forbearing, pitiful, courteous. God does not require us to be like a prickly burr, but to cultivate everything lovely and attractive in our manners and disposition, for this is the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 19

Verses 13-16. We may cultivate the character in the home life that will represent or symbolize the church above.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 20

1 Peter 4:7-13. Every one in the family circle should have his words and works after the works of Christ. All should stand wholly under the control of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 21

Ephesians 6:10, 11. “Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.” Verses 12-18.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 22

June 23, 1886

Orebro, Sweden

Attended the morning meeting. Spoke a short time upon the necessity of broader plans. “Go forward,” was the word spoken by God to Moses when the armies of Israel were hedged in by the Red Sea and surrounded with inaccessible mountains on all sides. [Exodus 14:15.] At God’s command, “Moses stretched out his hand over the sea.” [Verse 21.] The waters of the Red Sea parted and stood congealed like mighty walls on either side of them, leaving an open path for God’s people, and they passed over safely. Their enemies attempted to follow in that path of the Lord’s opening, and the mighty arm that held back the waters of the sea was removed. The walls of water, unrestrained, flowed together with resistless power, bringing destruction to their enemies.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 23

Testimonies were borne, evidencing that the Lord was moving upon hearts, and they were ready at the command to “Go forward” to obey. What a work is before us! Forward, brethren, forward, and not one step backward! Bear in mind that you are being led by the Lord Jesus. There is a large amount of latent energy lying dormant. If you purify your souls by obeying the truth, you will be directed and led by the Lord Jesus. You will be properly directed, and you can be laborers together with God. Every church might be a power in convincing the world of Bible truth. As you train your capabilities in faith, your mind will unfold under the influence of the Holy Spirit’s guidance. There must be in this country a training of Christian workers.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 24

June 24, 1886

Orebro, Sweden

Attended the early morning meeting. Spoke a short time to those assembled on the importance of those who thought to give themselves to the work of advancing and of making every effort in their power to qualify themselves for the grand work. I am obliged to speak. The meeting was good. I said, “The Lord is in our midst, and good is being accomplished.”4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 25

I attended the conference meeting in the forenoon and spoke to the brethren upon the importance of working more earnestly and being united in their labor after Christ’s order. I related how we had worked in America, and I could not see but that we must work in the same manner here in the kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, although through an interpreter. It is true the brethren are poor, but no more so than when the work was in its infancy in America. We worked then according to the directions of God with what facilities we had in establishing systematic benevolence and organizing tract societies. We showed by our works that we expected the Lord to do something for us, and the Lord honored our faith. We think that there will be most decided moves from this point and that the Lord will open the way for His message to go to all classes.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 26

Today large preparations are being made by the citizens to observe their holiday. It is midsummer, and they observe this as we observe the Fourth of July in America. Standards are decorated with flowers. Shrubs, trees, roses, branches of trees—anything that will be a fitting emblem of summer is made the most of. Tomorrow they go out into the grove and spend all day and all night in celebrating the summer.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 27

Orebro, Sweden

It is a holiday. The citizens close their business and make the most of this season marking midsummer. All is festivity. Sunday Schools march by our residence with teachers at the head of different sections, and all seems to be animation and gladness.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 28

But there is a sadness with it all. Bottles of beer and stronger drinks are continually passing, and we see well-dressed young men staggering in the streets and men of gray hairs reeling the drunkard's reel. These things make my heart ache. I ask, "Can nothing be done in this beautiful city?" One of the most common commodities of merchandise in carts—large wagon loads—is kegs of beer and bottles full of their beer. What can be expected of a people who thus indulge perverted appetite and confuse the brain? If they could be educated to keep the mind clear and the nerves steady and to use their money to give bread to their families, and, those who are wealthy, to bless the poor, what a different state of things would exist!4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 29

I spoke at four in the afternoon to a house filled with interested hearers. The Lord gave me much freedom, and many wept. Here all my talks have to go through the lips of the interpreter, and I see many weeping. I am encouraging every church to be educating and training workers, that companies may be thoroughly organized. As the ablest men are set to work earnestly, they will improve in capabilities. By using their present knowledge, they are becoming qualified to present the Bible truth in its true importance. I entreated them not to delay. Ministers who have a knowledge of the truth are to show all kindness in the work of educating others. Never was there a time of more solemn features in our experience than the present.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 30

We are to make plain through our interpreter the solemnity of the binding claims of the seventh-day Sabbath, appointed of God to be observed. Whether our congregation be in number large or small, the light must be given. Through our interpreter—wherever we go we must through our interpreter give the important matter of Bible-testing truth in the third angel’s message, for this is our sign of distinction from the world and our relationship to God. Thus saith the Lord, “Verily My sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between Me and you throughout your generations. ... It is a sign between Me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested, and was refreshed.” “Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.” Exodus 31:12-17.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 31

The Sabbath was given of God as a sign of the relationship existing between God and His people, a sign of their being His true, obedient people. Thus observing the Sabbath is the Lord’s means of distinguishing God’s people as His obedient subjects.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 32

Sabbath, June 26, 1886

Orebro, Sweden

Through my interpreter I spoke to the people from John 7. This whole chapter is full of grace and truth. Read and be instructed by the whole chapter. We had a good audience. Many strangers were present. I tried to present the true significance of the cross of Calvary, and deep impressions were made upon the people. A gentleman and lady entered when I was nearly through. They listened with deep interest. They remained through the social meeting and listened to sensible testimonies that were a recommendation to the doctrines we profess to believe.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 33

I tried to present the truth in regard to the delusions of those who profess what is called holiness or sanctification. I am aware that this is one of the masterpieces of false religion and a satanic delusion. They are the most hopeless of any class, as far as reaching them with the truth is concerned. As they have no reverence or respect for the Bible, they have taken impressions or feelings as their guide, and many of them declare they have no longer any use for the Bible. The Lord leads them. The Lord tells them just what to do in everything. They are even too holy to be obedient to God's sacred commandments. They have taken strides far in advance of the prophets, the apostles, and of Christ Himself who declared, "I have kept My Father's commandments." [John 15:10.] They have made them a standard, which is impressions and feelings. 4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 34

Those who are indeed sanctified will at least show the meekness of Christ and will never claim to be holy; but if they are unholy, unsanctified, and in deception, they will take any position however inconsistent with revealed truth, for Satan is their leader, not Jesus Christ. They stand under the banner of the great deceiver, and Satan has made this deception the most fatal because they reject the Bible. They say they have no longer any need of the Bible. Thus they claim to be taught by the Spirit. But all such are taught of a false spirit. Christ says, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of Me." John 5:39. 4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 35

As soon as I commenced to speak, and brought in the law of God—not impulse, or impressions, or feelings—as the standard of righteousness, one man grasped his hat and fled. This man claimed to be sanctified. Brother Matteson met him on the boat and talked with him. He said the Lord taught him everything, and he would not look at the Bible, he had an inward teacher so much better than the Bible, he no longer needed the Scriptures. This poor man's heart was not at all under the divine teaching. Had he been thus, he would not have turned from God's voice in His Word to the uncertain voice of his human understanding. 4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 36

Satan is willing that all shall claim piety and sanctification if he can use them in his service to deceive those who are both ignorant of the Scriptures and the power of God. God's Word is the only standard of righteousness, and Satan is well pleased to see God's moral law torn down and manmade standards erected—God's Word discarded, and man's human wisdom in control—while they claim that every thought and word and feeling is inspired of God.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 37

Still another takes his hat and walks out decidedly, because the law of God is named among them. A lady sits before me, one of the holy, sanctified ones, and whenever the Bible is presented as the rule of life, and the law of God as the only test of character, she touches her neighbor with her elbow and titters and laughs, and puts her handkerchief before her face as if something very comical were being said. Then she whispers and diverts the attention of those about her by her remarks. Of the character of her talk we are not enlightened, but every time the Word of God and the law of Jehovah are mentioned, the same indecorous conduct is manifested, until near the close of the discourse, when she listens decently.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 38

Will true sanctification to Christ lead its adherents away from common decency of behavior? Will it lead to rudeness, while listening to a most solemn truth from God's Word? Will it lead to evils of conduct, boldness, disrespect, and irreverence?4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 39

What is sanctification? It is to give one's self wholly and without reserve—soul, body, and spirit—to God; to deal justly; to love mercy and to walk humbly with God; to know and to do the will of God without regard to self or self-interest; to be heavenly-minded, pure, unselfish, holy, and without spot or stain. "By their fruits ye shall know them." [Matthew 7:20.]4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 40

Was the exhibition before me that day of a character to lead me to have confidence that the Lord Jesus was abiding in her heart? Could I conclude she was a person whose whole will was God's will? It was exactly the opposite. Of this there was nothing in the face, in the deportment, that savored of the sanctification to God of soul, body, and spirit—of which God is the Author—but every token was that of one bold, presumptuous, sinful, and defiant against God and the light of His Word.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 41

Paul describes their condition. The natural heart is at enmity with God. It is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Now this false sanctification is eagerly grasped by all who hold their own ideas tenaciously, for their own will to carry out their unsanctified wills under the pretense of doing God's will.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 42

God weighs motives, purposes, character. All men are weighed in the balances of the sanctuary, and God would have all realize this fact. Hannah said, "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by Him actions are weighed." 1 Samuel 2:3. David hath said, "Men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity." Psalms 62:9. Isaiah says: "Thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just." Isaiah 26:2. "All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits." Proverbs 16:2.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 43

The God of heaven is true. There is not a motive in the depths of the heart, not a secret within us, not a design that God does not fully comprehend. But what is the standard of justice? God's law. God's law is placed in one scale, His holy immutable law whose claims are specified, taking, in the first four commandments, supreme love to God, and in the last six, love to our neighbor. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, ... and thy neighbor as thyself." [Luke 10:27.] From this standard we will not subtract one atom. God requires all the heart, mind, soul, and strength, and "love thy neighbor as thyself." This is placed in one scale, while every individual character has to pass the weighing test by being placed in the opposite scale. And by its just comparison every man's doom is irretrievably fixed.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 44

Only think of the years we have passed in careless indifference—days passed without thought or sense of responsibility due to God, years when selfish interest alone has been consulted. Sin, rebellion, unbelief—one long struggle against God's will and God's way. In one scale is the perfect, unchanging law of God—demanding perfect, continuous, unswerving obedience—and in the other sin, disobedience, wilful departing from light.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 45

Shall there be written, “Weighed in the balance, and found wanting”? [Daniel 5:27.] If found wanting in the day of God it will be a terrible thing, therefore we want to be closely examining our own motives and actions by the holy law of God, to repent of every act of transgression, and as sinners lay hold of the merits of Christ to supply the deficiency. The blood of Christ alone will do this.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 46

I spoke in the hall, filled with people, from Revelation 20:11-15. The Lord helped me by His Holy Spirit to give a most solemn discourse to this people in regard to the future judgment, when every case would be decided and justified or condemned according to their obedience or disrespect of God’s law and disregard of His requirements. I felt urged to make a most solemn appeal that none should trifle with their soul’s salvation. Eternal interests are to be their first consideration. To do God’s will is to obey His commandments.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 47

(Exodus 31:12-18) specifies the definite day God has specified should be kept. I warned them not to venture to trifle with sacred and eternal interests, that they would surely find that they could not trample upon the law of God with impunity, and that God’s holy law was the only unerring standard to judge every soul, to decide the fitness of every character for heaven.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 48

Impressions and feelings are no criterion. God’s Word is the only rule of faith and action. All the feelings, emotions, and impressions are unreliable. All their dreams and exercises must bear the test of “What saith the Scriptures?” “To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.” [Isaiah 8:20.] What is the chaff to the wheat? Are impressions, exercises of feeling, ideas, or anything of this character compared with a plain “Thus saith the Lord”?4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 49

The people are dispersing today. Elders Matteson and Olsen go to Denmark to have a conference with the Danes. We remain in Orebro until Thursday noon. I have taken cold and am threatened with sickness. I can do but little else than lie down and rest and try to prepare for my journey to Christiania, Norway. Sister Matteson is helping Sarah, that she may be free to write out discourses.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 50

My mind is much exercised in regard to the means and ways of reaching the people in Sweden. There is, I know from that which God has shown me, better material than those who are now keeping the truth. There are here in this kingdom many who have not as much as heard whether there be any third angel's message or second or first. These messages are to be proclaimed to all nations, tongues, and people, and those who believe the truth are not working with zeal and earnestness proportionate to the light which God has given them. Work, brethren, work; secure co-operation of all who will be sincerely in earnest. Gradually will this training unfold the mind and improve the language of every tongue and nation, that they can express the truth. Laymen must educate themselves, training their own minds by much prayer and going forth in humility. In training themselves to explain Bible truth, they are working in safe lines to convict and convert others. Take classes along with you. Have them thoroughly organized to do Christian work in the saving of souls.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 51

I thought to do much writing today, but my head aches. I am obliged again to say I am sick. How precious will be that home in the city of God where none shall say "I am sick," where there will be no sighing or crying and no more death. [Isaiah 33:24; Revelation 21:4.] I suffer here with infirmities and sometimes think that my work is nearly done. Then I consent to give appointments again and have renewed strength to bear my testimony. I was sick when I left Basel, but moved out by faith, trusting in the Lord, and His blessing has rested upon me. I have been sustained in a remarkable manner. I have consented to visit Christiania, Norway. May the Lord strengthen me to bear the message He has given me to bear to the people.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 52

The weather is windy and quite cold. Walked out before breakfast. My lameness prevents my venturing to walk out much. The rough stones of the pavements are very hard and dangerous for my ankles, but I think of the words in the Scripture, "Then shall the lame man leap as an hart." [Isaiah 35:6.] Oh, will not I appreciate this privilege! Both ankles have been disjointed seriously several times, and I have to guard every step lest I shall be unable to walk at all. I am so thankful I am blessed of the Lord. I suffer much pain, but if I can have my speech, I will endure the suffering with my ankles. The Lord has encouraged me, and I am blessed in understanding how to speak easily and clearly to reach the large company, being compelled to exercise my abdominal muscles in order to talk at all after the affliction of suffering with my broken nose. I then had to learn the most profitable lesson of my afflicted life—to use the abdominal organs.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 53

I am still afflicted with indigestion, loss of appetite, and pain in my head; suffer with sore throat. The wind is strong. I walked out. The parks are very nice places, but beer gardens are connected with these parks, and many resort to these places to gratify perverted appetite. The principal business, I should judge, is merchandise in this commodity, even among church members.4LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 54

This day at half-past 12 P.M. we take the train for Christiania, Norway. There was Sarah, W. C. White writing, and we had merely time to take dinner at Sister Jacob's before going to the cars. Sarah and I walked on ahead, waiting for others to come with the baggage on a little cart. They delayed so long we feared we would be left.

Sarah went back to find them. The cart wheel had come off, and they had to hold up one end of the cart and thus came over the rough stones. W. C. White ran to the depot, and we had barely obtained our tickets and stepped into the car before the train was in motion. I decided we would after this make our calculation to be in season and leave a little time for unforeseen difficulties. We changed cars three times on the route. Reached Charlottenberg here at ten o'clock P.M. and found good beds in the hotel near the depot—the same place where we stayed overnight last fall. We called for milk and bread and took some refreshments.⁴*LtMs, Ms 65, 1886, par. 55*

Second Visit to Norway

July 2, 1886

Christiania, Norway

Arrived at Christiania some after ten o'clock A.M. Found Brother Clausen and Kristine Dahl and her mother at the depot to meet us. We secured a hack and were taken at once to the rooms in a part of the old office building close by the new building. We find two rooms fitted up comfortably for us and a kitchen to cook in. We will be comfortable here a few days while the meetings last. Brother Hansen called and was very sociable. Glad to see us. Anna Rasmussen also was with us some time. Brother Clausen and wife took dinner with us. We went in to town and bought shoes, which we much needed. Sabbath drew on, and we have daylight until past nine o'clock at night. We are so thankful to make connections. I miss so much the strong arm of my husband to lean upon. He sleeps in Jesus. "Blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep." 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 1

Sabbath, July 3, 1886

Christiania

We are not any of us feeling as well as we could wish. I am strangely nervous. Sarah has severe headache. 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 2

I spoke to the people in Christiania from 2 Peter 3:11-14. I spoke very plainly to the church upon the necessity of being diligent, to be ready for the appearing of Jesus Christ. Some strangers were in to this meeting. A Methodist minister and his wife were present. We hope the seed sown may do some good. After the discourse we had a very good social meeting, which Brother Clausen interpreted. At half-past ten o'clock we took a hack for the boat and rode on the steamer to Larvik. The berths were all taken in the staterooms. We had beds made on the seats in the ladies' cabin. Eleven others slept in the same saloon. The seats were hard and it was a hard night for us both—Sarah and me. All the windows were closed but one, and it required all the persuasion we could give to get consent to have the privilege of this one window, but we succeeded, much of the time. The water came in once and it was closed, but opened again. It was a long night, and we were so glad to see the preparation by the red eastern sky for sunrise at two o'clock A.M.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 3

Larvik, Norway

We reached this place at five o'clock. Brother Olsen was not at the boat, for it came in one-half hour earlier than the usual time. We started with our satchels to walk up to Brother Olsen's when he came in sight with a carriage he had ordered for us. Sarah and I rode to the hotel where a room was provided for us. After taking breakfast, we slept a large share of the forenoon.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 4

We took dinner at Brother Olsen's and then walked in a large fine park, a grove of beech trees. It is a very fine place for the people to get out of the city into the country, for it is a woods thickly set with trees. There are buildings in this grove wherein mild, simple drinks, as soda water, are dealt out, but no beer or liquor of any kind can be sold in the place. How pleased we were to have this accommodation.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 5

I spoke in the afternoon at five o'clock from Luke 10:25-28. The hall was not crowded. I was led to a train of thought which exalted the law of God, showing that obedience was required of Adam and no less so of every one of the human family—obedience to all of God's requirements. I presented before them what constituted true holiness. It was obedience to God, not transgression. Those who love God will cheerfully yield obedience to all His commandments, because it is the law created when the Lord made heaven and the earth. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all the work which God created and made." Genesis 2:1-3. This is the Lord's own work, requiring perfect obedience. 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 6

Monday, July 5, 1886

Christiania, Norway

It is a beautiful morning. It has been daylight since two o'clock A.M. We leave this place at half-past 9 o'clock. Sick on the steamer all the way. Was glad to get to our rooms again in Christiania. 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 7

Was sick through the day, yet I am not discouraged. The Lord knows all about the matter. He sees the effect this cold atmosphere has upon my throat and lungs. He is able to relieve me. I have a testimony to bear to this people, and I will bear it in the name and strength of Jesus. I shall not have come this long journey to have the enemy stop my voice and close my lips. I shall speak the messages of warning. I shall be enabled to present the truth as it is in Jesus. I shall be able to exalt the standard of God's law where it has been lowered and left to be trampled in the dust. My prayer is that the Lord will give me grace, and enable me to bear just such a testimony as shall reach the hearts, and break up this self-satisfied feeling that seems to exist, saying, "I am whole and have no need of a physician" when they are sick, spiritually sick, from the crown of the head to the soles of their feet—deceived by sin, unchristian in words, unchristian in works, and yet pleased with themselves, walking in darkness, and flattering themselves that they are in the light. Oh, what deceptions Satan can bring upon the human minds! 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 8

I cry unto the Lord to help me. Infirmities come upon me, and I no sooner obtain the victory by faith than I am again afflicted, to battle with these things that cause suffering and pain of heart. But for one thing, I thank the Lord—that when speaking before the people, however weak before going to the stand, I have no realizing sense of this weakness. I am lifted above all sense of weakness and can say, “Praise the Lord who hath strengthened me by His own power, that I might speak the truth in freedom and feel its saving power in my own heart.” I will not complain. Satan afflicts me, but Christ restores me.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 9

Tuesday, July 6, 1886

Christiania

I am again afflicted, but not discouraged. The air is cold and raw. The rooms have been newly painted, and they affect my eyes and my throat. Inflammation is very severe. But I see no way for us but to endure it. Went some distance to the bathhouse for a bath. Felt some relieved. We are all poisoned with the white lead in the paint. We make some purchases in the city.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 10

We are seeking to devise means to reach this people in Christiania, but how can we reach them? How can we elevate the minds of those who profess the truth to the sacred character of the truth, that they will be truly followers of Jesus, and correctly represent the truth? We feel compelled to acknowledge that the cause of present truth has been sadly disgraced here in Christiania by the unchristian conduct of some of those who claim to believe the truth. Better, far better, had it been if they had never embraced the truth than to hold the truth in unrighteousness. The element of the character of some is to be contentious, to be unsparing with their tongue, to say very wicked things and then claim that the Lord compelled them to do it, that it was their duty to do this. But the spirit is exactly the spirit of the devil, full of bitterness, sarcastic, reproving, saying things that only wound and bruise the soul. I spend much time in prayer. I am receiving grace for every day. Oh, I experience rich blessings.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 11

Christiania

Elders Olsen and Matteson came from Denmark where they had been holding meetings. They bring a good report of the meetings. The brethren seem willing to work and make advancement. They have done remarkably well, poor as they are, in keeping up their finances. We are pleased to see any tokens for good, and we will bless the Lord for His help, which He is willing to give to all who help themselves by doing what they can on their part. We must not complain, but talk faith, hope, and courage, and bring in the sunshine. Faith, that faith we all need, is a working faith. It works by love and purifies the soul. I have a message for this people. Christ had a message to bear to a world where even His own nation clamored for His death and crucified Him because His message did not exalt them in their wicked course of action.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 12

July 8, 1886

Christiania

Our meetings commence in Christiania. I had quite an earnest conversation with Elder Matteson in regard to retaining members in the church who were unworthy, that the blessing of the Lord would not come into a church where there were members whose course of conduct was unchristian, their spirit fierce and overbearing, critical, and denouncing. The Saviour has told us the course we should take in dealing with these offending ones, and the Bible rule should be followed. If they do not repent and reform, then they should be separated from the church, for they greatly weaken the church.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 13

I said, I am sorry I came here, for I do not see how I can help you. There seems to be no chance for me to get hold unless I plainly show how matters in the church have been left lax and loose, and sinners have had their own way and done as they pleased, if they felt like it, which feeling was generally present. They would talk in an unchristian manner. They developed a spirit of envy, of jealousy, of hatred against their brethren, and called it the Spirit of God, and yet there was no action taken upon their cases.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 14

This spirit which has nearly leavened the church is worse than the sin of Achan, for its influence is not confined to themselves and their families, but it is a root of bitterness whereby many are being defiled. God will not bless the church unless these things are taken hold of and dealt with according to Bible rules.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 15

God said to Joshua as he was mourning over the defeat of the armies of Israel, "Get up; wherefore liest thou upon thy face? Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed My covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff. Therefore the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, because they were accursed: neither will I be with you any more except ye destroy the accursed from among you." Joshua 7:10-12.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 16

The sin of Achan was not developed, but the sin was made chargeable to Israel until they had searched it out and dealt with the offender according to his sin, as God had directed.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 17

But in this case sin was known. There were those who were transgressing the express commands of God in breaking His holy commandments. They are bringing their own work into the Sabbath and continue to do this. They have talkers among them who go up and down as talebearers, blackening characters, inspiring others with their malicious tongues, accusing and condemning. And they carry these things to the door of their neighbors, and they listen to the words of the false tongue, which is bearing false witness and is guilty of slander. No one, not even the messenger of God who bears to them the truth, is spared. Their tongues are set on fire of hell and are uncontrollable. There is a time to speak and a time to forbear, but sin is to be called by its right name. I have many things to say, but you will use the things, should I speak, to oppress souls.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 18

Spoke at six o'clock. Luke 19:10. This whole chapter is to be a lesson for all. In the morning at 9 o'clock, went into the committee meeting and bore my testimony in plain language, which was reported, in regard to the condition of the church. I told them I did not expect that they saw their condition and my words would appear to them as idle tales.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 21

No sooner had I sat down than Brother Hansen, to whom my words applied in regard to the observance of the Sabbath, arose, and several started to their feet at the same time. He said, "These words are not regarded by me as idle tales. I believe them to be truth and mean to act upon them." Others arose and made the same statement. These testimonies from my brethren I accept. They do me good, and I shall not regret coming to Christiania if the church will be instructed and will make a decided change throughout her borders.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 22

This bearing plain testimonies affects me much. I always dislike to give pain, but when I see evil and its tendency to weaken and destroy the church discipline where it exists, I cannot hold my peace. I have to speak and in the name of the Lord seek to repress the incoming tide of evil, that it shall not overwhelm the church and make them an offense to God.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 23

I was weak as a child after bearing the plain testimony and felt unable to write. W. C. White saw my condition and he hired a team, and I rode out for the first time in four weeks. We rode several miles in the country and were much pleased with the city grounds and forests that were open to the poor and to all who wished to go out in the country. These extensive grounds are reserved for the city that they may have places nearby to take their children. This is a blessing.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 24

We saw an old church—Catholic—in the forest of _____. It is six hundred years old. We went through it. Whoever was the designer, it seems like a relic of the Dark Ages in every sense of the word. Close by was an old log house, hundreds of years old, in which were treasured old-fashioned dishes, platters, and every kind of cooking utensil, and every odd, homely, curious article.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 25

But we saw far greater beauty in the works of God in nature—the lofty trees, the waving grain, almost ready for the sickle, the hay ready for the scythe, the sweet-scented red and white clover that perfumed the air. There are bathhouses built close by the water, one arranged for men, the other for women. Many people resort here on Sunday. We saw men, women, and children with baskets and baby carriages with the precious little ones, all hurrying to get into the country—blessed country. Precious are the forests and groves to the poor, tired, weary ones who own no land of their own.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 26

We enjoyed this ride very much. We felt peaceful and rested. I spoke in the evening to a houseful upon Luke 19:42, 43. I had much freedom. The power of the Lord was upon me as I presented to the people the blessed heavenly home that awaits the faithful. There was deep feeling in the congregation. Many wept. I know that the Lord impressed hearts. My heart was filled with praise and gratitude to God for His special blessing upon the people.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 27

We had an interview with Brother and Sister Hansen. We had a very pleasant interview. Monday evening three were disfellowshipped from the church. There was not the wisest course taken. These offending ones were cut off while a spirit of harshness and severity was manifested, rather than a spirit of sorrow and pity and love for them. This awakened in them a spirit of combativeness and retaliation, and the offended ones, in the place of having a spirit of repentance and sorrow, became defiant and accusers. They manifested a satanic spirit; and when action was taken to disconnect them from the church, a few voted in harmony with the proposition, while others did not vote at all; and some who had felt and expressed their grief at the course pursued by these men had naught to say.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 28

This led Brother Matteson to feel that none, scarcely, stood by him, and again he was unwise and resigned his position as president of the publishing association and elder of the church. Thus matters were in a bad jumble. But this also was necessary that it should develop that the church was holding together like ropes of sand; that there was no real, genuine harmony and unity with its members; that but few had any real sense of the order that should exist in the church, and they had no real sense of sacred and eternal things. The sacred was brought down upon a level with common things. The molding influence had not been of that character to elevate and lead them up, upon a high plain of action. They were very bad representatives of the truth before the world.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 29

W. C. White and I had a long talk with Elder Matteson. I think we were able to help his mind some on several points, and to have him see he could not now lay down his responsibilities.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 30

We visited Brother Hansen in his island home. At 9 o'clock we took a boat which brought us near to Brother Hansen's in about fifteen minutes. It took us some longer than this to reach the boat.4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 31

Very busy today in packing up and preparing to leave on the morrow. I became very weary, but some company came, and I spoke in the evening to the church from Philippians 2; Psalm 15. I presented before the church the necessity of a thorough change in their characters before God could acknowledge them as His children. I urged upon them the necessity of order in the church. They must have the mind which dwelt in Jesus in order to conduct themselves aright in the church of God. I urged upon them the importance of a correct observing of the Sabbath. The people were called forward, and many good testimonies were borne. Some confessions of wrong were made, but the work was but just begun in the church. If it continues to go forward, then there will be a hearty repentance and shame and confusion of face before God for the unrighteous course that has been pursued toward the brethren and sisters. With this meeting my labors closed in Christiania. 4LtMs, Ms 66, 1886, par. 32

Second Visit to Denmark

Friday, July 16, 1886

Friday, half-past twelve o'clock we stepped on board the steamer for Copenhagen. We were very unwilling to travel upon the Sabbath, but there was no other way for us to do and reach our appointments. We retired early, before the Sabbath commenced, and we had a good night's rest.⁴*LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 1*

Saturday, July 17, 1886

We had a cup of hot water in the morning and a little bread. We did not reach Copenhagen as early as usual because of head winds. Brother Brorson was at the depot waiting for us, and we took a hack to our rooms secured in a hotel, and we could get nothing to eat until four o'clock. We had eaten only a portion of bread and a few strawberries which we brought with us, and hot water, since Friday noon, and we were faint and hungry upon the boat. We rested much and slept considerable on the boat.⁴*LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 2*

I have written a letter of eight pages to Dr. Kellogg on letter paper. Spoke in the evening from Hebrews 6[?]:24-26. This is a pleasure-loving city. Dancing and amusement of every kind are engaged in with zeal and earnestness, as though their eternal interest would be best secured by self-indulgence. There is beer drinking, card playing, and profligacy. The religious element of the churches is "Enjoy yourselves." Self-denial and bearing the cross are not brought into their religious life. What kind of heaven would it be if these classes go there without a thorough transformation of character? Jesus the precious Saviour is not loved and honored by them here by practicing His life of humiliation. Christ's life has no charms for them. Then how will they enjoy His presence in the world made new, or in the city of God?4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 3

The Lord blessed me in speaking. The hall was well filled. Many were obliged to stand, yet they all listened with attention; and I do hope the words spoken may set some to thinking and inquiring, "What shall I do to be saved?" [Acts 16:30.] If I had not felt the power of the Lord sustaining, I should have felt discouraged. But for the thought that this would be the sowing of seed which would bring forth good fruit, I should not have had any hope that our labors were producing results. But I was sustained in bearing the straight testimony. I had the assurance that Christ was by my side, inspiring my heart to utter the very message He gave me, and I was encouraged by Christ's presence. I felt a signal manifestation of His rich grace and the interesting coincidences evidenced that the Lord Jesus was in the assembly.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 4

Attended morning meeting. Only twenty-four were present. Workmen have to be at their business or lose their place, and this would be a great calamity, for there are thousands in this city who can get no employment up to this time. There has been much building going on, but the times have changed. [Now there is] but little building, but little painting, and want and starvation are the only prospect before a large number of poor families. Those who came out were much interested. I spoke from Nahum 1:7. After I had ceased speaking, many excellent testimonies were borne. One man has been for six months searching the Bible and moving cautiously upon the truth. He was a sea captain; was a Methodist class leader; can speak English. The class he taught in Sunday school were much attached to him, but the minister told him it would not do to have him teach the class any longer. He has not yet united with the church, but intends to walk carefully. He is much respected. He has a commanding appearance.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 5

There is still another man who has newly come to the faith who designs to do colporteur work. He bears a good appearance. He and the sea captain and all present wept and seem to feel deeply impressed. They bore excellent testimonies. W. C. White and I walked out in the botanical garden. These grounds are open most all hours for all to enter, and there is a great variety of trees, shrubs, and flowers. We conversed some in regard to future plans and could not make decisions long beforehand, for we knew not what changes may take place with us. Our lives and time are the Lord's. He will direct us as fast as He sees it shall be for our good and His glory.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 6

Arise at four. My heart is drawn out in earnest prayer to God that I may have His presence to go with me. I am weak and unworthy; but if the Lord can use me, frail and imperfect, to act a part in His work, I will consider it the greatest honor. How carefully we need to walk before the Lord, lest we shall feel self-confident and go forward in our own spirit. Jesus says, "Without Me ye can do nothing." [John 15:5.] Then we must not leave Jesus, but the language of our heart should be, "Abide with me." I feel this morning that confidence in God that I can commit the keeping of my soul to Him as unto a faithful Creator. I would trust Him as fully and simply as a child its earthly parents. It seems to me this morning that we can go about our work, doing our very best with watchfulness and with prayer, and dismiss our many anxieties and worries. The Lord would have us bring our burdens to Him, and He says He will give us rest. Do we believe His word? Will we comply with the conditions? Will we come to Jesus? If we remain apart from Him, we cannot wear His yoke, neither can we lift His burden. If we come to Him, we shall not be disappointed. He said, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." [Matthew 11:28.]4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 7

We left Copenhagen Monday morning. After riding two hours stepped on board the boat at Corsia for Kiel. We were surprised to find so large a number of English-speaking people on the boat. W. C. White generally writes on the cars and on the boat. While he was writing as usual, many gentlemen and ladies collected around him to see the calligraph, which was a new machine to them.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 9

After the wonder was over, several had something else to attend to. A man of the higher class of society began to smoke. He bore an intelligent, good countenance, but his face was very red. Others joined him and regaled themselves with tobacco to their hearts' content. Then refreshments were called for, which consisted of a platter of fat pork and beer without bread. The red-faced gentleman and his lady enjoyed this repast. If it were to be a rough passage, it would do them no harm. The wind became very strong and the water somewhat rough, and the lady lay down on the upper deck.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 10

I had been up early preparing for our journey at 3 A.M. and went below into the ladies' cabin. The atmosphere was not fresh, but musty and oppressive. I slept a short time and began to feel premonitions of sea sickness. I went at once on deck, where W. C.

White was, and though the wind was blowing strong, it was grateful to me. I finally overcame the disagreeable sickness, but was giddy headed. I did not venture to trust myself below, but I observed several of the beer drinkers were throwing up their pork and meat.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 11

The lady who had eaten the pork and drunk the beer became very sick, as I expected she would. Her good-looking, red-faced husband kept up a continual smoking. She motioned to him that his cigar was making her sick. He turned his head a trifle but continued to smoke. Sarah went down below and lay down, and the lady had to be helped below by her husband. He kept up his smoking. His wife was very sick, and she moaned and cried like a child being punished. I think her pork on this occasion did her no harm.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 12

We were not any of us very level headed when we arrived at Kiel. We were not sorry to leave the boat. The waiting room was much larger than at Hamburg, but was arranged in a similar manner. A restaurant seemed to all the specialty here as in Hamburg. At every sofa was placed a table, and soon every sofa was occupied with families or gentlemen and ladies, and soon the foaming mugs of beer came on, and after the performing of clicking the mugs together they drank their beer. Some called for bread and cut it and drank the beer and placed the foaming glass to the mouths of their little children. And women drank just as freely as the men. Then that which I had dreaded came—the cigars—and there was the most earnest, devoted smoking, and this was continued. The gentlemen, if I may call them so, send forth clouds of poisonous tobacco smoke, puffing it directly into the faces of the ladies by their side. The effluvia of tobacco was almost unendurable, and this is all the room there was for the accommodation of travelers.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 13

We had favorable accommodations—a compartment to ourselves. We rode about two hours and changed cars at Hamburg. Our baggage had to pass through the custom house for examination. We were again favored with a compartment to ourselves and had good accommodations for the night. We have no sleeping cars attached to the trains as in America. In some compartments the seats can be adjusted and form a very good chance to sleep.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 14

Passing out of Hamburg we passed a beer garden. It is more than one hundred feet long by about forty feet wide. Although it was ten o'clock at night, this beer garden was well patronized. The garden was made most attractive. Large chandeliers hung from the ceiling, for the garden was roofed and the sides open. There were most beautiful plants, shrubs, and flowers and music, and here were men, women, and youth all engaged in beer drinking. I thought if tact and skill were employed to make eternal considerations attractive, then many more would be withdrawn from Satan's snare and be attracted to truth and the loveliness of Christ. Any amount of money is expended to appeal to the senses, to allure away souls from God to travel the broad path that leads to perdition.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 15

July 27, 1886

We have passed as comfortable a night as possible on the cars, without sleeping berths. We reached Cologne about 9 o'clock. There we changed cars. In order to be free from tobacco we chose seats outside the depot, but we were not relieved, for tobacco smokers were before us and on every side, puffing their smoke directly into our faces. But this poisonous atmosphere we must breathe must be endured.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 16

This place has a cathedral which building was commenced in 1232. The spire is five hundred thirty-two feet high, and the building is the same number of feet long. This is over five thousand inches. Services are held there every day, and people go to the confessionals. If the extravagance displayed here had been spent in making the auditorium comfortable for the worshipers, it would be far more appropriate; but it is a mass of money spent in making a costly, extravagant display, while the worshipers are not benefited a whit by this outlay of means.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 17

Now come the market women. There are hundreds of them. They come—young women, middle-aged women, young girls, old women of grey hairs—with heavy, loaded baskets upon their heads, full of fruit and vegetables. They bring all kinds of products to market. It is raining, and the dresses are tucked up around the waist. One girl of eighteen has loaded herself down completely—a very large basket upon her head, two baskets on one arm and another with bouquets.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 18

We rode all day until eight o'clock at night when we reached Basel. We were thankful to be at home again. We found our dear ones all safe and well. Mary and Ella are well. Marian looks badly. She is not doing well at all. I am so sorry. She keeps up as well as possible.4LtMs, Ms 67, 1886, par. 19

Spoke to the people in forenoon from 2 Corinthians 4. I spoke to the people with great earnestness and sought to impress them with a sense of their responsibility. There had been much levity and some things which had separated them from God. I read to them Romans 2:6-11. In the afternoon I spoke again from Colossians 3:12-17. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 3

We consulted with Elder Buel Whitney and decided it would be best to have an effort made to draw nigh to God, commencing Tuesday. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 4

We rode out into Germany. Passed through one or two villages, and in these villages were places where there were one or two good-sized trees. Seats and tables were under these trees, and all who could be accommodated were drinking beer. We met many hundreds that were flocking to these places where there were accommodations for beer drinking. In several places there were no trees for shade, but right upon the sidewalks, in the streets, were beer tables, and all who could were accommodated. We saw tents, and in them was a circular whirl-i-gig of some kind where men, women, and children were upon wooden horses, being whirled round and round. There was still another machine—a swing, turning. A man was turning a wheel which carried it round and round, the seats adjusting themselves as they were being whirled around. This is the Sundaykeeping we have in Switzerland and Germany. This keeping Sunday means their going to meeting once, and the rest of the day they can play—do anything they please. Just across the road eastward is a most lovely garden, and a building has been erected at great expense. Evenings—Sunday evenings especially—there is a wonderful flocking to these extensive gardens, seated and provided with tables for beer drinking. They have musicians and the most beautiful music to attract the people. There is dancing and drinking beer in the most refined manner. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 5

We commenced our morning meetings. I spoke most earnestly to those assembled from Ephesians 6:10, 11. I tried to urge upon them the necessity of a close connection with God, that He will help us in the work of warfare in which we are engaged if we will only give to Him our whole heart's trust and affection. I spoke to the people with much freedom from the words found in Mark 13:33-37. I had on this occasion for German one who is translating my works into German. He is a fluent translator. John Vuilleumier translated into French. The German translator is not a Christian. He does not believe the Bible, and I do not think he ever will. I spoke many plain things that hit him hard. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 8

Spoke in the morning meeting from these words, "Be not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." [Romans 12:11.] I sought to present to the workers in the office the necessity of faithfulness in discharging all their duties in the office. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 9

We rode out again and while trying to get into the country passed into Germany and the streets seemed full of people. Some looked so tired. It was the first really hot day we have had. Men and women with baskets, children and babies with them, large beer mugs and baskets containing bread in their hands. They resort to some particular place under the shade of some tree or trees, and then eat their bread and drink their beer. I had never seen so many people on the streets at one time. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 10

We were disappointed, for we wanted retirement and we were in a crowd, whichever way we might go; but we changed our course, hoping to get where the streets were not thronged. We succeeded. We found in our experiment a most desirable road to travel. It was really among forest trees. Roads were made through these thick woods—perfect roads—and on the hottest day there was shade. This wood extended, I think, for miles. Here, then, was what I had been seeking for ever since I have been in Switzerland—a wood where we could go and feel free. We thought this was a matter for rejoicing. We shall visit these forests often in the sunshiny weather. 4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 11

The past night has been one of great affliction. My diseased tooth gave me but little rest. At midnight I arose and tried to find relief, but it came not. I lay down again. Tried to sleep. Find some sleep, about two hours. Arise at three o'clock and write eight pages to Elder Waggoner. Rode to the dentist and had the tooth extracted—a tooth which I had tried to save for one year, suffering much pain. After the tooth was drawn the pain was very great, much more severe than I had ever experienced after a tooth was extracted. We returned home and treated my swollen face with hot fomentations. I used nothing, but what a work it did for me! The pain ceased and I obtained a few moments' sleep. I awoke relieved. I am quite weak, for I have not been able to eat much since being afflicted with my tooth.4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 13

At five o'clock rode out into a beautiful forest road. We picked some flowers in the woods. The night was disturbed with music from a beer garden just across the road. They have beautiful music, and after the effect of beer drinking [is felt], much boisterous noise. This beer garden is the property of the city and is under their supervision, and every preparation has been made to entice men and women to come to this place to leave their money and drink the beer.4LtMs, Ms 68, 1886, par. 14

Second Visit to Great Britain

September 14, 1886

Left Basel in company with Brother Aufranc and Sarah McEnterfer. We had a compartment with an English-speaking lady. She had one boy and one girl. There were too many for us to be able to lie down, with the exception of myself. But the seats were very hard. Every bone in my body ached. We were glad to hail the morning light.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 1

September 15, 1886

We crossed the channel at 12 o'clock A.M. There was a crowd on the boat and no conscience for sick passengers. Many were sick and had to sit up on hard seats and take the dreadful bowl in their laps. Sarah became sick and lay down on the floor. I sat upright, sweating and sick, for the boat tumbled considerably. We were all sick, but not distressingly sick. We were two hours on the boat, and we were thankful to get where something stood still. We could not find a place on the second-class cars; they were all crowded, but the conductor opened for us a compartment in the first-class coaches, so we had an excellent chance to rest until we arrived at London. Seven P.M. took a cab for Great Northern depot. We stopped at Great Northern, close by the depot. We mounted seventy-three stairs. Found a pleasant room, with excellent bed, and slept quite well.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 2

Great Grimsby, England

We left London at quarter-past five A.M. Changed cars at Peterborough and again at Boston. Arrived at Great Grimsby 38 minutes past ten A.M. We were glad to meet Sister Ings and Brother Wilcox at the cars. We had not seen Sister Ings for about one year. We were glad to meet Brother and Sister Lane and to find them cheerful and happy.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 3

Slept well last night and feel a great longing for the Spirit of the Lord this morning. I believe the Lord will help me. I look to Him. I trust in Him, and He will give me strength and grace and His salvation. I must have it. I can do nothing of myself. I must have the grace of Christ with me continually. My cry is, "Lord, give me physical strength. Lord, give me Thy wisdom. I need it so much." What can we do without the grace of Christ?4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 4

We had early morning meeting. I gave a short talk to those assembled. "Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you." [James 4:8.] There were about thirty assembled. There were a number of excellent testimonies given. We hope and pray that the Lord will make this day a day of great blessing to His people.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 7

London, England

quarter before six—en route for London. We had compartment to ourselves and had a very pleasant five hours' ride. We met William C. White in London about 12 M. Walked out to a restaurant, vegetarian, and obtained wholesome refreshment. Walked to some of the stores. Returned and lay down to rest in our rooms and had good sleep for about one hour when Brother Ings arrived, in company with Sarah McEnterfer, who was detained in Grimsby and took the 9 o'clock train. In evening walked out with W. C. White and Brethren Whitney and Ings and wife and Sarah. Decided upon the purchase of blankets for the Mission in Basel.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 8

October 12, 1886

London

I have enjoyed an excellent night's rest. Arise at five A.M. Light my candle and dress. Wrote twelve pages and with other letters entrusted them with Elder Whitney for America. Rained all day. Left at six P.M. for Dover. We were placed in the worst compartment for second-class we have had in all our travels. Ride two hours and a half and then change into a better compartment. Ride half hour. Come to Dover. The rain pelted against the window, and we were conscious we were having a heavy gale. We left the cars at Dover. A porter harnessed our baggage upon his person, and we followed him. We had to walk quite a long distance to the wharf, and as we neared the wharf we saw the waves running mountain high. The salt spray dashed over the wharf and across the path we had to travel. The porter said it was a strong gale. Sister Ings lost her hat and chased it quite a distance. A small boy recovered it at last. While the hat was being rescued, our party—consisting of Elder Ings, my son W. C. White, and Sister McEnterfer and myself—consulted together and decided to remain at a hotel at Dover rather than venture across the channel. We turned back and retraced our steps. Found a good hotel where we could all be accommodated for the night. Beds good, rooms tidy, but the rain poured from the heavens so that we could not have the air I so much needed.4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 9

The rain has ceased, but we have wind this morning. I was so very weary I could not sleep until past midnight. I was afflicted with rheumatic pains. We stepped on board the steamer at ten o'clock. By paying one dollar and a half Sister Ings, Sarah, and I had a convenient location on the sofa in ladies' cabin. The boat tossed about considerably, but we lay still and were not sick, although we were considerably stirred up. Willie was very sick and made thorough work of throwing up. Elder Ings looked very pale, but was not sick enough to throw up. We were very thankful that we left the boat and had crossed the dreaded channel. We had a compartment all to ourselves and rested some, although the seats were tediously hard. We arrived at _____ at half-past six. Brother Garside met us at the depot and took us to a hotel close by, where we were well accommodated. We had to mount six long flights of stairs, and it was an interesting sight to look down from high up, where were our lodgings, to the streets below, to see the flashing lights upon the carriages passing to and fro. We feel thankful so much of the journey is accomplished. Twenty-four hours' more ride on the cars will bring us to Nimes. 4LtMs, Ms 69, 1886, par. 10

First Visit to France

October 14, 1886

Paris, France

I arise at 5 A.M. and write several pages by the light of a candle before others are up. I seem to be transferred back to old times when candles were the only lights used except whale oil in our lamps. We took breakfast at a restaurant. Then we walked out, with Brother Garside to accompany us. We walked to the broker's exchange and went up in the second-story galleries where we could look down into the room where the business was going on. What a scene! Their voices were clamoring for the supremacy and they resembled wild beasts rather than sensible men and women. Men were pushing and crowding one another, screeching at the top of their voices. Many were hoarse, and yet they shrieked on louder than ever. Hundreds were there, and men were coming and going, wrestling, crowding one another like mad men. And what was this all for? Trading in stocks. Some would gain, others lose. And it was all for a little of the inheritance in this life. Should we press in the value of the gift of eternal life, should we present the heavenly treasures, they would not be attracted for one moment. I thought of the scene when the day of judgment should take place. What confusion would come to all who have not made God their dependence and were not prepared for the great day of final decision. Let us make our calling and election sure.⁴*LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 1*

Paris

We visited the palaces of kings. There was an extensive building that had once been the home of the great, the crowned. Monarchs dwelt in these lofty, grand halls when France was under kingly rule. We view the bedchambers where kings and queens have slept, and the dining rooms where kings have feasted and the council rooms where great men of earth have planned to increase their glory and widen their kingdoms by aggressive warfare. But to me these historic halls are dark in their dark-colored paintings and designs, and I should regard them gloomy, resembling prisons, if I were compelled to live in them. In shape, the palace of kings resembles a hollow square and covers many acres of ground.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 2

These historic halls are now the property not of kings but of the government. There are many things of interest to look upon—the armors, the shields, the veritable saddles that they placed upon their horses. They appeared to be very heavy and were richly adorned and must be very expensive. These halls are now stored with historic mementoes and things which belonged to olden days, while other buildings are devoted to statuary and paintings of artists. These paintings might have been seen through other eyes than mine and be adored as evidences or specimens of wonderful taste and skill. But I have had my mind so completely satisfied and at rest with the works of God brought to our senses in nature, and have been so fully satisfied in viewing the glory of the heavens, the works of God's creation, that these things in imitation of the natural seemed to fall so far below the works of the great Master Artist who made our world and everything beautiful in it, that these pictures could not charm my senses and meet my ideal.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 3

We visited [Les Invalides]. Here a guide urged himself upon us and by paying him a franc he told us the history of the things we looked upon. The remains of Napoleon were entombed in this building, and the marble tomb contained all that there is of this once great man, before whom kingdoms trembled. There were tombs of his great generals who shared his triumphs, his glory, and his defeats. The history of each of these was repeated by our guide.4LtMs, Ms 70,

The best part and the most interesting part to us was the relation of the fact that this grand building was presented to the government for a hospital or asylum for old soldiers who served in Napoleon's armies. Their families and their children and grandchildren were to be taken care of. There have been as many as five hundred sick and disabled soldiers in this building at one time. Their preparation for cooking is very extensive. These soldiers are supported by the government.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 5

We assembled in our chamber after ascending six flights of stairs—Willie, Brother Garside, Brother and Sister Ings, Sarah McEnterfer, and myself—and ate a simple lunch, preparatory to taking the hack which would take us four miles across the city to the depot where our train would be found to take us to Nimes. After eating we had a solemn season of prayer in which Brother Garside joined. We then stepped into the hacks—Sarah and Willie to go in one direction, which would take them to Basel; Brother and Sister Ings and myself in another direction, on the way to Nimes. We did not take our seats in the cars until past ten o'clock. Rode all night. Two other were in the compartment with us. We rode all the next day.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 6

Friday, October 15, 1886

Arrived at Nimes about six o'clock. Found Brethren Bourdeau and Comte and Badaut waiting for us. We took a tram which bore us to the home of Brother Bourdeau. Mounted two flights of stairs and found him in very comfortable but humble quarters. Those who depend upon hired homes in these large cities cannot always find places that are such as they would choose. They must accommodate themselves to the situation and be content in the name of the Lord.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 7

It is Sabbath. Brother Ings spoke in the early morning meeting, also in the afternoon upon the restoration of the Sabbath. All seemed to be pleased with his talk. I spoke in the forenoon and evening. In the afternoon there was a social meeting, and sixteen intelligent testimonies were borne by those who had embraced the Sabbath. All were much pleased to listen to these testimonies which were interpreted to us. These witnesses for God were indeed to reflect light in this wicked city.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 8

We walked out. The stores were most of them open, as on any other day, the market just as active as on any day of the week. The noisy clamor, the exchange of produce, the buying and selling were like the temple courts in the days of Christ—as if Sunday to them had no sacredness. We visited a building called the square house. There was a large portico or piazza sustained by many pillars. Within were relics and ancient inscriptions, and in the enclosure where the house stood were large slabs of granite with inscriptions upon them. This building was erected before Christ, built by Augustus Caesar for his sons. It is very ancient in appearance. It was covered up with rubbish in the destruction of buildings in Nimes, but was unearthed and stands just where it stood before Christ.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 9

Sunday afternoon Brother Ings spoke. There were quite a number present, and I had freedom in speaking in the evening. Mr. Gilly, the Evangelical minister and preceptor of school as well as an asylum for orphans and fallen women, was present and I was introduced to him. He reminds me of Dr. Lewis in size and features and deportment. Elder Bourdeau is very feeble, and he needs much strength for the labor he has to perform.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 10

I spoke in the afternoon with much freedom. Then after speaking Mr. Gilly conducted us to an old castle up a steep ascent. We went up the winding stone stairs and had an extensive view from the tower of the surrounding country. Olive trees were growing in profusion everywhere. I thought while so high up from the earth of Satan's taking Christ upon the pinnacle of the temple and presenting before Him the whole world in its glory in a moment and tempting Him by offering it to Him as a bribe if He would worship him. We had a pleasant association with Mr. Gilly.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 12

Brother Ings spoke in the forenoon. I spoke in the afternoon. An Evangelical minister associated with Mr. Gilly in the work came into meeting after I had finished my remarks. He was accompanied by the directors and his wife. They called upon us in Brother Bourdeau's hired house, and we had a very pleasant interview. I spoke in the evening, and the minister and the preceptress and the minister's wife and about fifty of his students came out to the meeting. We hope this acquaintance may be in the providence of God a blessing to them and to us.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 18

These are especially festive days with the Catholics. We hear them all times of night calling upon their dead friends to come and visit them. They believe that the dead come from their graves and communicate with them, and they declare that they see them and talk with them, and all through the night there is carousing and singing and loud voices going through the streets, calling upon the dead to appear. Oh, what ignorance and heathen superstition! I saw the most extravagant display of wreaths, beautiful bouquets, and flowers arranged in the form of a cross. These were taken to the graveyards and in honor of the dead placed upon their graves. I learn that they believe the dead respond and reveal themselves. This is Spiritualism.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 19

Monday morning at half-past eight we left Nimes and journeyed six hours and a half on the road toward Turan. Stopped at Valence. There are a few here who are keeping the Sabbath. Brother Ings spoke some time to them, then I spoke about three quarters of an hour. We felt so great interest for them here that we consented to stay one day and speak to them once more. There was one present who had with the rest started to keep the Sabbath and had given it up. We hope the remarks made may have a good influence upon him.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 21

Tuesday, November 2, 1886

Valence, France

I arose early and engaged in writing. Brethren Bourdeau and Ings were accommodated at another place. We went to the house and found Brother Ings sick. He had a hard night. Elder Bourdeau went ten miles in the country to get a brother to come to the meeting, but his mission was fruitless as the brother was away from home and the rain increased so that he could not have attended had he been at home. We had, however, a good season with the few.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 22

We visited the cathedral. It was a dismal, dark place, but there were services. The officiating priests had dresses of white and over this a surplice of black velvet trimmed with gold braid and the form of a cross upon the back. They keep their backs to the people. They repeated words of prayer and then they chanted hymns. These cathedrals, so very expensive in their designs, are most uncomfortable within for the worshipers. The roughest kind of chairs are furnished, and before these flag or splint-bottom chairs is a small chair, inclined forward by the front legs being much shorter than the hind legs, in which the worshipers kneel in their devotion.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 23

There was nothing cheerful about the premises, nothing bore the least resemblance to heaven and heavenly things. Candles were burning before the pulpits and altars which were necessary, it seemed to us, to be substituted for the light which they had not. The divine enlightenment was wanting.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 24

We looked upon the bust of Pius VI. The marble statue beneath the bust contained the heart of the pope. This is the pope specified in prophecy, which received the deadly wound. He was carried captive to Valence, and we looked upon the tower where he was confined and where he died. From this tower he could look upon the beautiful waters of the Rhone, and this gave him much delight. It was a gratification to look upon this representation of the pope which prophecy has so faithfully described. We looked upon a black cloth stretched across the walls of the portion of the building where the people were worshiping the second day of November. This black cloth was adorned with ghastly death's-heads and bones in white, which looked frightful. But they were observing the feast for the dead. These vestments of the priests, symbolically adorned with large figures of the cross and with a variety of colors, bore no resemblance to the simplicity of worship. But priestly ceremonies burdened with pompous display, processions, and art to produce effect are abundant. Lighted tapers and outward display are very poor substitutes for spiritual vitality, which was wanting.4LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 25

November 2, 1886

Valence

We had last evening a profitable meeting. The rain kept away some who designed to come, but we felt just as much interest, and even more, to speak to the few as to the many—the very few who had not been blessed with ministerial help, and yet had held fast their faith in the truth. These few had not been without trials, and the blessing of the Lord rested upon us while we sought to strengthen their faith and courage—the courage of the few. There was a young man of excellent capabilities—a bookbinder. He had been learning the trade for nearly three years, and for his labor he was paid only three dollars per week and boarded himself. His keeping the Sabbath threw him out of two days. His sister has a good education, but keeping the Sabbath places her where she labors daily for twenty cents per day in doing common serving. She would make a good missionary worker if she only had the chance. Her mother engages in working in the field, receiving twenty cents when she can obtain work. We must seek to connect with the office in Basel.⁴*LtMs, Ms 70, 1886, par. 26*

Third Visit to Italy

November 3, 1886

We left Valence in early morning for Torre Pellice. We thought something could be saved by taking third class. Our only fear was we could not control the passengers if they chose to smoke, but as we could save twenty-one francs we concluded to venture the first part of the journey. We did well, but when we had to change cars we were to obtain seats in a car when every compartment seemed to be full. There were thirty-three emigrants from America just left the steerage, and they were dirty and ignorant, but we endured it till we reached Modane; then we purchased tickets on the second class, which seemed to us like a palace compared with the third class. We reached town several hours earlier than had we ridden on the third class. We went to a hotel and had good accommodations at reasonable rates. Next morning, November 4, we found it most difficult to obtain any information, as the official within did not talk French or German, but only Italian. This language Sister Ings could not understand, and after much perplexity and fear that the car would leave us, we were arranged in the car for Torre Pellice. Elder Bourdeau met us at the station, and it seemed like home to get back with him again.4LtMs, Ms 71, 1886, par. 1

Sunday, November 7, 1886

Torre Pellice

We rode to Villar Pellice. I spoke to a hall filled with people, with freedom. We arrived home just at dark, and I spoke at the Hall in Torre Pellice with freedom. It has rained almost constantly since we have been in the Piedmont valleys. We see so much poverty and decrepitude and distress, it is painful to look upon, but when we see the ignorance, the gross ignorance and the absence of conscience in those who claim to be Christians, we are led to groan in spirit, for we know such an experience will be valueless to them. Christ must be brought into our lives and into our characters, else our profession of the Christian name is worse than not to have known Christ or the truth. We feel deeply over the religious torpor that prevails on every side. There are men who are with all their powers warring against the law of God. They are breaking that holy law, and their carnal minds are at enmity with God, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, unless, like Paul, they are thoroughly converted.4LtMs, Ms 71, 1886, par. 4

November 11, 1886

Germain

We took the cars at 9 A.M. for St. Germain. The fog and rain prevented us having a clear view of the mountain scenery. We rode fifteen miles to Pinerolo and there waited one hour and three quarters for the train to take us to Germain. We were seated at last in a little box-like car. There were two of these, each containing two apartments, first and second class. All the difference in these was one apartment, the second class had no cushions and the first class had cushions. We took the second class and rode five miles, then we stepped out in the rain and in the mud and walked about a quarter of a mile to the hotel. After going up three short flights of stairs, we went through a large room that had several openings, but no windows. This was the room in which they dry their clothing. This opened into a room at the left and one at the right. Brethren Bourdeau and Ings occupied the room at the right, and Sister Ings and I the room at the left. Here we found a blessing in the room having two windows which gave us a view of the mountains. We placed our simple lunch upon the table and called for a little hot milk, and we enjoyed our dinner. There was no carpet on the floor, and it looked as though it had not been washed for one year. The bed was very good. A few little withes were put into the broad fireplace to make a fire, and then a stick or two of wood was added. It was dark and disagreeable. Sister Ings lay down upon the bed and I on the lounge and had a good sleep. When we awoke the fog had passed away a little so that we had from the balcony a very fine view of the mountains.4LtMs, Ms 71, 1886, par. 5

The Alps seemed to rise in grandeur and touch the very heavens. This is located in a basin-like valley while the mountains rise upon every side, high up to the heavens. We walked in the mud to the meeting and the hall was crowded, and many left because they could not find entrance. I had freedom in speaking to those assembled through Elder A. C. Bourdeau. Spoke to many and shook hands with them. We walked back to the hotel and retired for the night.4LtMs, Ms 71, 1886, par. 6

November 12, 1886

We arise in the early morning. Spread our humble fare upon a table and eat our breakfast. Walked quite a distance in the mud and rain to reach the tram, a small car run by steam which took us to Pinerolo from Germain. There is no depot, and we had to wait out of doors about fifteen minutes in the rain. We reached Pinerolo and waited there one hour and a half on our upward route. We visited a cathedral. There was a large congregation worshipping. I thought of Paul's description of the people of Athens. They know not what. There stood those dignitaries with white robes embroidered round the bottom and over these a black velvet surplice, or jacket. 4LtMs,

Labors in Switzerland

December 24, 1886

In early morning we took the cars for Tramelan—Elder Ings and wife and I. Waited one hour at Tavannes, then we were taken in dummy to Tramelan. We had just five seats in the cars, and a small stove. We had just had a heavy snow storm at Basel, but there had been a greater fall of snow as we neared the mountains. We passed slowly along and the trees looked very beautiful, laden down with pure, fresh snow. Some trees had blown over, one uprooted. I think I never saw anything equal to this for beauty—the tall evergreen trees, their boughs loaded with snow. It is a picture of added loveliness. We have not seen a sight like this in magnitude for very many years. I was back in my girlhood in my native state, passing through the pine forests and exclaiming with delight at the lovely picture presented, but I had seen nothing to remind me of this scene so thoroughly as this morning. Thirty years ago such scenes were familiar in the State of Maine. We waited at depot some time for conveyance. At length Brother Roth's son came with sleigh for us, and we had the first sleigh ride we have had for years. It was quite mild. We were welcomed by Brother Roth's family, and all was done for us to make us comfortable. In the evening Brother Ertzenberger spoke to the Germans. Several came in from Chaux-de-Fonds and Lausanne. Friday night we had a heavy fall of snow. At Tavannes wrote to Professor Brownsberger.⁴*LtMs, Ms 72, 1886, par. 1*

December 25, 1886

Tramelan, Switzerland

There have been meetings this forenoon. Brother Ertzenberger spoke in the forenoon. The dedicatory discourse fell upon me. I spoke with much freedom in regard to the temple of Solomon and the sacredness that should be observed by all in a home dedicated to God. They should remember it as a place where God meets with His people, and no angry feelings toward earth should exist in the hearts of the worshipers, for this would shut away the Spirit of God from them. This was a very solemn meeting. In the evening some little attention was given to the children of the Sabbath School. They had exercises and were entertained with recitations of Scriptures. In the evening Elder Ings spoke to the people. Wrote several pages to Elder Corliss. 4LtMs, Ms 72, 1886, par. 2

December 26, 1886

Tramelan

There were meetings in the morning on business. We saw men collecting around some object some little distance from the house on one of the country roads. We were told it was the body of a man who was frozen to death. He started Saturday evening from Tramelan intoxicated, and was unable to proceed through the deep snow because of being intoxicated, and lay down and died. He had a mother living. He had been a great grief to that mother, and now there will be mourning for this poor son who died in consequence of strong drink. Sunday afternoon I spoke in a large commodious hall to about three hundred people. Brother John Vuilleumier interpreted. The audience was attentive and intelligent, and may the Lord bless the word spoken to their good. Tramelan was the place where the truth first found entrance. This was the first church raised up in Switzerland. 4LtMs, Ms 72, 1886, par. 3

Sunday at six o'clock we took the cars for Basel. I had been quite sick, but the Lord helped me to speak to the people. Malaria was upon me. At Tavannes the waiting room was so full of tobacco smoke I dared not enter and remained in the hall, walking to keep warm. Arrived at Basel about eight o'clock. So thankful to get home. 4LtMs, Ms 72, 1886, par. 4

Falling Stars—Italy

Standing upon a piazza in Northern Italy, I saw a sight to me very wonderful. The evening was mild. We had but just arrived in Torre Pellice, Italy, when we saw stars flashing across the heavens in numbers and then disappearing. We gazed upon this sight with awe. We called to mind the words of Christ, “The stars shall fall from heaven” “as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.” [Matthew 24:29; Revelation 6:13.] There are large, noble fig trees in my orchard in California, and this figure I could understand. When the tempest shook the trees the untimely figs were scattered everywhere. And here I was looking upon a sight I never expected to see—the starry heavens ablaze with shooting, falling stars, each leaving a tail of light in its passage across the heaven and then disappearing. They were crisscrossing in every direction, yet we could not miss any of these bright jets of light. With emotions I cannot describe, we looked for hours upon these shooting, flashing meteors. I looked upon the snow-capped Alps, and the flashing lights seemed to fall directly upon them.⁴*LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 1*

There seemed to be disorder among the starry host, as though that which appears the brightest of all the hosts of heaven was brushing across the sky, leaving its trail of brightness in its wake and disappearing, going out in darkness. What did it mean? When we returned at midnight the same scene continued. But for all the hundreds of stars flying across the heavens, we could not miss one—not a single glory in the starry host seemed to be missing. The following nights we had no such scene repeated. God’s host still shines in the firmament of the heavens.4LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 2

On the Cars En Route for Bienne From Basel

We are moving very slowly, and we can get a nice view of the scenery. It is more striking and grand than the scenery in Colorado, the Rocky Mountains. I had to hold my pencil still. We have passed through a long tunnel made in the solid rock. When we emerge from it, the scenery is indescribably majestic. Rocks of a wonderful formation impress us with the grandeur of God's work. We have passed through three tunnels since writing these few lines, and the rocks are a wonderful layer upon layer of such curious formation, running up thousands of feet, and the cataracts come from the highest of these rocks, towering heavenward. Hundreds of cataracts are frozen up, and the ice is as white and pure as pure can be.4LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 3

We pass the rocks, and there are mountains covered with trees. There is on the summit [a] tableland covered with snow. This land is a little plain in the forest of fir trees and is cultivated. We cannot see how it is possible for any vehicles to be drawn up these mountain steeps.4LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 4

Mountains and Rocks

When our Creator formed the world to be a habitation for man, its arrangements were prepared by the God of wisdom to help the mental as well as the physical wants of man. The great Architect has formed and fashioned the scenes of nature, that they may have an important bearing upon man's intellectual and moral character. These are to be God's school to educate the mind and morals. Here the mind may have a vast field for study in the display of the majestic works of the Infinite One.4LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 5

The rocks are among the precious things of earth, containing treasures of wisdom and knowledge. In the rocks and mountains are registered the fact that God did destroy the wicked from off the earth by a flood, and the broken surface of the earth reveals, in the gigantic rocks and towering mountains, that the Lord's power has done this because of the wickedness of man in the transgression of

His law. The evervarying scenery that meets the eye is the work of the God of wisdom, that in His stupendous works men may discern that there is a living God whose power is unlimited. The marvelous works of majesty are to refine the soul and to soften the roughness of man's nature, to help him in character building.⁴*LtMs, Ms 73, 1886, par. 6*

Visit to Paris, France, and the Louvre

France

October 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 40, 44; CTr 292.

Visit to Paris and Versailles, France; Pomp of Earthly Kings
Contrasted With Sacrifice of Jesus 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 1

In Paris we visited the buildings which were formerly the palaces of kings when France was under kingly rule. Here was their home. The buildings cover acres of ground and are arranged in a hollow square after this order. These extensive buildings and grounds are now government property and are used as art galleries and for storing ancient curiosities. We passed through and viewed Napoleon's first bedchamber, his rooms for councils, and his dining rooms. Crowned heads had here sent forth their mandates. These rooms have been occupied by successive kings, prior to Napoleon. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 2

We were not much enchanted with the taste of the artists in representing Bible scenes in the life of Christ. We thought how true it is that spiritual things are spiritually discerned. Sensual and earthly-minded men may be skilled in their science of art, but how utterly unable they are to approach the divine Model. Not in one case was Christ represented anything near as He might have been portrayed. They utterly fail to reach anything like the real being, Jesus, as when in this world, when His divinity was clothed with humanity. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 3

It was painful to look upon these representations of the Majesty of heaven, the divine Son of God. It was a disgusting botchwork. My spirit groaned within me. But these pictures bore on the face of them the fact that the artist was not a partaker of the divine nature; the impossibility seemed to be revealed of the workman divesting himself of the earthly mold of mind and being able even to approach to the elevated, noble, heavenly conceptions to represent Christ in anything but a commonplace, cheap, earthly style. I turned away with disgust.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 4

I felt stifled in those grand, historic halls and begged of Willie to take me down the stone stairs where I could get into the garden and look upon the works of the Great Master Artist in nature. I think I never enjoyed so much looking upon the shrubs, the lofty trees, the flowers in their simple, beautiful adornment, as on this occasion. I never appreciated more deeply than on this occasion the words of Christ addressed to His disciples—"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Matthew 6:28, 29. The divine Artist had tinted and colored these flowers of natural loveliness with His divine hand. No skill of human artist can reach this perfection. It is beauty that speaks loveliness, that has vitality and life, and speaks to the senses in language that need not be misunderstood.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 5

But again I mounted the granite steps and commenced to range through the long galleries of art. And those are the scenes, thought I, that charm and fascinate the senses of men and women in this age. Pictures were displayed that the eyes of children and youth and no human eye should rest upon; they were earthly, sensual, devilish, traced by pencil and brush of a hand with a corrupt soul; and yet ladies, artists, were transferring some of these very objectionable pictures to canvas.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 6

I thought, How little would men and women of such taste as was revealed in these pictures enjoy the pure, holy scenes of heaven! The purity of everything the eye would rest upon would be painful. Their imaginations would not be met. The mind and faculties that God had created for high, elevated, holy employment had been debased to low, sensual things, the imagery of which was worked out by pencil and brush. Here were the thoughts, the ideals, the projects of the brain which revealed the cast of mind and the characters of the workers. They cannot approach to the representations of heavenly things or of divine characters. Their imagination seems palsied in this direction.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 7

My thoughts were first upon the kings who had once traversed these grand halls and figured in these galleries. Where is their human greatness now? “Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.” [Genesis 3:19.] How many decisions were made in these council rooms that blasted human expectations and deprived those of lofty rank of their earthly honors and of life itself! How much strife for the supremacy has been revealed in these grand halls and chambers! How much lofty grandeur has been here displayed in crowned monarchs of earth!4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 8

We have read of those who with earthly honors bestowed upon them have not lost their noble impulses and sympathy for humanity, men whose hearts have been touched with the infirmities of age and with the sorrows of the afflicted. But a different picture is presented to our imagination, a picture of human tyranny, of power used to oppress and grieve and create human misery.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 9

Then we remember Jesus, who came to our world with His blessed purposes of love, divesting Himself of His royal robe, His royal crown, stepping down from the royal throne, clothing His divinity with humanity, and coming to our world to be a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. We see Him among the poor, blessing the afflicted, healing the sick, soothing the infirmities of age, reaching with His divine pity the very depths of human woe and misery. He even noticed the sorrows and needs of little children. He blessed the mothers who felt their burden of care for their offspring.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 10

Angels have been sent as messengers of mercy to the distressed, to the suffering. These angels from the world of light, from the infinite glory of God before the throne, are on missions of love, of care, of mercy for the suffering ones of humanity. But there is a picture of greater condescension than this: the Lord, the Son of the Infinite Father, He who styles Himself as the Faithful Witness, the First-begotten of the dead, the Prince of the kings of the earth, Him that loved us, Him that washed us from our sins in His own blood. He says, “I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ... which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.” [Revelation 1:8.]4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 11

What is the work of angels in comparison with His condescension? His throne is from everlasting. He has reared every arch and pillar in nature's great temple. Behold Him, the beginning of the creation of God, who numbers the stars, who created the worlds—among which this earth is but a small speck, and would scarcely be missed from the many worlds more than a tiny leaf from the forest trees. The nations before Him are but “as a drop of a bucket,” and “as the small dust of the balance.” “He taketh up the isles as a very little thing.” [Isaiah 40:15.] Contemplate Him, the Lord, the all-glorious Redeemer, an inhabitant of the world He has created, and yet unacknowledged by the very ones He manifested so great interest to bless and save, that He might make them happy in this life and eternally happy in His kingdom. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 12

What condescension to the fallen men of earth! What wondrous love! And yet this heavenly Messenger is repulsed. Hear, O heavens, and be astonished, O earth! This royal Messenger, showing such interest, such sympathy, such amazing condescension, is unwelcome. He is repulsed by indifference, repulsed by unkindness, by neglect. His patience might long ago have been exhausted, His pleadings silenced, and His warnings and entreaties stilled; but listen to His words: “Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of His understanding.” Isaiah 40:28. “For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.” Malachi 3:6.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 13

The obdurate hearts of men, like adamant, have resisted His entreaties and warnings. The pleading of Christ with sinners to come to Him for refuge still continues. What patience! What inexhaustible love! The Lord speaks through His prophets, “O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God! Behold, the Lord shall come with strong hand, and His arm shall rule for Him: behold, His reward is with Him, and His work before Him. He shall feed His flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young.” Isaiah 40:9-11.4LtMs, Ms 75,

Thus is the work of Christ in our world represented, and the blindness of the impenitent is because Satan has the controlling power over them, and they choose his service before the service of Prince Immanuel. Isaiah represents that the world would not receive and acknowledge their Redeemer. "Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? For He shall grow up before Him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see Him, there is no beauty that we should desire Him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from Him; He was despised, and we esteemed Him not. Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed." Isaiah 53:1-5.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 15

Well might all heaven be astonished at the reception their loved Commander received in the world! That a nation claiming to believe prophecy should deny Him, that they should go forward in face of warnings and predictions, close their eyes to light and fulfil the prophecies' every specification and yet be so blind, so deluded by the enemy of souls that they claimed to be doing God service! And how amazing that a world should reject Him, as did one nation! The Son of God humbled Himself to save the fallen race, and they refused His mercy. The Lord speaks through His prophets, foretelling future events. Let us hear what He has to say in regard to this royal, heaven-sent Messenger.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 16

The question is put by the Lord in the words of the prophet to call attention to the fact of the greatness and majesty of the royal Messenger: "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance? Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being His counselor hath taught Him? With whom took He counsel, and who instructed Him, and taught Him in the path of judgment, and taught Him knowledge, and showed to Him the way of understanding? Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, He taketh up the isles as a very little thing.”4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 17

“To whom then will ye liken Me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One. Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: He calleth them all by names by the greatness of His might, for that He is strong in power; not one faileth.” Isaiah 40:12-15, 25, 26.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 18

This description is given of the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. He made the world, and yet the world knew Him not. Friends denied Him, forsook Him, and betrayed Him. He was assailed by temptation. Human agony convulsed His divine soul. He was lacerated with cruel scourgings. His hands were pierced with nails, His holy temples were crowned with thorns. He was indeed bruised by Satan, who nerved his agents to do most cruel things. He endured the contradiction of sinners against Himself. It was the working of Satan’s machinations that made the life of Christ one dark series of afflictions and sadness; and at last he compassed Christ’s death, in which act he demolished his own throne.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 19

In the act of dying, Christ was destroying him who had the power of death. He carried out the plan, finished the work which from Adam’s fall He had covenanted to undertake. By dying for the guilt of a sinful world, He reinstated fallen man on condition of obedience to God’s commandments, in the position from which he had fallen in consequence of disobedience. And when He broke the fetters of the tomb and rose triumphant from the dead, He answered the question, “If a man die, shall he live again?” Job 14:14. Christ made it possible that every child of Adam might, through a life of obedience, overcome sin and rise also from the grave to his heritage of immortality purchased by the blood of Christ.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 20

Our salvation was wrought out by infinite suffering to the Son of God. His divine bosom received the anguish, the agony, the pain that the sinfulness of Adam brought upon the race. The heel of Christ was indeed bruised when His humanity suffered, and grief heavier than that which ever oppressed the beings He had created weighed down His soul as He was engaged in paying the vast debt which man owed to God, which man could never pay to redeem himself from bondage. On Him was laid the transgression and grief of us all. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 21

All the griefs of humanity which disquieted His soul were in consequence of the sins of men in transgressing the holy law of Jehovah, and that law exacted its fullest claims of man's Substitute and Surety. The battle was fought here on this earth, and blow after blow was dealt against the tyranny of Satan and his oppressive power. Satan bruised the heel of Christ, which reacted, in the work of redemption, in bruising the head of Satan. Satan afflicted the heel; he could not touch the head. Had he succeeded in his deception and snares in corrupting the soul with one evil thought or action, then the head of Christ would have been bruised. While he could bruise with agony, he could not defile with impurity. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 22

Can men and women for whom Christ died have any just sense of the sufferings of God's dear Son to bring salvation within their reach, that the sons and daughters of Adam might be brought back again to their Eden home? From the first, Satan was seeking to seduce men to be disloyal like himself, to be his companions in rebellion, that a kingdom might be established in opposition to Christ's kingdom, with laws of government in defiant opposition to God's laws of government. Thus he would carry out to the fullest the rebellion he commenced in heaven. If the Son of God had not pitied man and undertaken the work of redemption, Satan would have had the whole human family on his side, at war with God and the law of His kingdom which governs human intelligences. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 23

But help was laid upon One that was mighty; a stronger than Satan interposed, and Christ came to the help of the human family, measuring weapons with the prince of darkness. In this world was the battle carried on between these two great generals of armies. Christ overcame Satan in the wilderness of temptation, but at what a cost! For forty days and forty nights, without food or drink, He battled the wily foe and overcame him. The conflict was so severe that He was fainting and apparently dying on the field of battle, when angels from the world of light came to the royal Sufferer and ministered unto Him and strengthened Him with food.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 24

In the garden of Gethsemane and on the cross, Jesus' soul was bruised. He carried the guilt of the world. He bore the hiding of His Father's face. The Son of God endured the wrath of God and the punishment for the transgression of the law of God, but not to give to man liberty ever after to continue in transgression of God's law. This might just as well have been done without all this suffering, if it were a possible thing to do, but the law of God was changeless in its character; not one jot or one tittle would fail. Therefore man must cease to transgress the holy law of Jehovah and come under the loyal banner of Jesus Christ, who declared He had kept all His Father's commandments. [John 15:10.]4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 25

The work of Christ was to make it possible for man to obey God's law, and his efforts be acceptable, through the pure, sinless, perfect character of Christ's being made an offering for the guilty race, and thus Christ's righteousness being imputed to sinful man. Man was not to be saved in his sins, but from his sins. Christ was wounded and bruised, and He agonized in the terrible conflict, but He was triumphant. His triumph was complete, making it possible for man to be conqueror in his own behalf, on his own account, through the merits of the blood of a crucified and risen Saviour.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 26

Jesus ascended on high from the field of conflict, bearing in His own person His bruises and scars as trophies of His victory, which was to result in annihilating the power of the first rebel, who was a chieftain in glory, an exalted angel in heaven. There was rejoicing in heaven, and the proclamation was carried to all worlds that the ruined race was redeemed. The gates of heaven were thrown open to the repentant race who would cease their rebellion and return to their allegiance to the law of God.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 27

The Lord ascended on high from the scene of conflict, but the great

Head of the church left His work with His delegated servants to carry forward in His name. They were to be His representatives—not to break the law of Jehovah and do the devil’s work, but to keep the law of God and do Christ’s work in the earth, to bring back to repentance and obedience the children of Adam who had divorced themselves from God by transgression. Christ’s followers are not left to carry on this conflict against Satan in their own finite strength; the Captain of our salvation stands at the head, unseen by human vision. The eye of faith discerns their Captain and obeys His orders.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 28

Our weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of the enemy. “We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.” Ephesians 6:12. This is the work of Christ’s followers. From the very first, as is seen in the case of Cain and Abel, there are two distinct classes, and the righteous have been objects of the combined assault of evil fellows and evil angels.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 29

The enmity against righteousness and truth has been strikingly developed. On the one hand it has been the work of the righteous to follow the example of Jesus Christ, to vindicate the honor of God and arrest the workings of wickedness; on the other hand it has been the work of Satan and his agents to bring in evil and increase rebellion, to transgress God’s law themselves and teach others that it was a virtue to discard and trample down God’s great moral standard of righteousness.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 30

Satan and his agents have at times seemed to have wonderful success in sweeping from the earth the representatives of Jesus Christ. The promise has been that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church, and they have not. The promise has at times seemed to be ready to fail, as a measure of success has attended the workings of Satan. The fiercest persecutions have seemed to make Christianity at times almost extinct. But the seeds of truth have sprung up, watered, as it seemed, by the blood of martyrs; and notwithstanding the sowing of error and of all kinds of heresies to bury up the truth out of sight, yet the truth lived and again sprang up afresh to bear its harvest. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 31

The sword and fagots in the hands of Satan's agents made terrible vacancies as thousands were slain, yet thousands of others sprang up to fill the breach. Although the tares of error have had a rank growth, yet there have been witnesses for God upon the earth, staunch advocates of truth, to keep alive faith on the earth. Thus the work has moved forward, and now as the end of all things is at hand, those who are representatives of Christ must carry forward the work He came to our world to do. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 32

There is no ease, no resting from our labors; we must be constantly watching, constantly fighting the battles of the Lord. The offense of the cross has not ceased. Satan may profess to be converted, but he is all the more dangerous for being clothed in angel's robes, and we are constantly in danger of overlooking the great fact that his deceptive workings will be more deep and earnest and determined as he sees and knows that he has but a short time to work. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 33

The form of Satan's working will be changed as the circumstances change. He adjusts himself readily to circumstances, but his hatred of truth and righteousness will be peculiarly manifested near the close of time. Religion is obedience to God's law, and Satan will so deceive minds that have not been open to receive the truth that truth will be regarded as error, righteousness as sin. Parents will be enraged against their children and disown them. Fathers and guardians will change their wills and pervert their trusts to their children because they conscientiously keep the commandments of God; this will be a matter of actual experience. "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Timothy 3:12. 4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 34

To live as obedient children is to have enmity put between those who serve Prince Immanuel and those who serve the prince of this world. Christ said in His day, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other." Matthew 6:24. In this age, as we near the close of time, it will be seen and become a reality that no man can serve God in verity and truth, having an active piety, without uniting against himself evil angels and evil men controlled by evil angels.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 35

Satan and his angels are not asleep and have not been converted. They are alarmed that their prey is escaping from their grasp. The evil works of the children of men are rebuked by the obedience of the children of God to all God's commandments. The law of God Satan hated, the law of God he transgressed, and for this he lost heaven. And to see the sons and daughters of Adam walking in the way of God's commandments, adopted through faith into God's family, and made more than conquerors through obedience to all God's requirements, is sufficient to stir up the worst opposition of Satan. He will set every power of his to work to delude, to allure them from the narrow path of holiness into the broad paths of sin and transgression.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 36

The conflict will continue as long as life lasts; and if one is at ease and undisturbed, be assured that Satan has ensnared him, for the conflict will be long, continuous, and painful, and he will experience many painful defeats. He will be surprised into sin if off his guard for a moment. But as sure as Jesus lives to make intercession for us, through His name we may overcome the enemy and persevere to the end.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 37

We cannot overcome in an idle dependence, saying, Christ has done it all; we need not keep the law of God; it was done away at Christ's death. O fatal delusion, suggestion of Satan similar to his temptations of Adam and Eve in Eden! There is no such thing as being saved in transgression of God's law, when the light has come to us, showing us that transgression of God's law is sin.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 38

The world's Redeemer did not die to give men the privilege of trampling under their feet one of Jehovah's laws. He did not suffer the agonies of the cross to give Satan all he claimed, the right to disobey God's commandments, the right of man to depend on what Christ has done for him and do nothing himself. Man must show himself a warrior against wrong, against sin, and fight manfully the battles of the Lord. It requires earnest effort, unceasing watchfulness, and earnest prayer in order to prevail against Satan and bring honor to Jesus Christ. There is work for every soul. If the believer comes off victorious, he must fight, inch by inch, his ground to freedom and his possession of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 39

The repentance of even one sinner sends joy all through heaven; there is rejoicing among the hosts of heaven, and anthems of praise echo and re-echo through the heavenly courts. The same event causes consternation and rage through the legions of Satan's army. Nothing so humiliates Satan as to lose one soul whom he has counted as his own. To have that soul flee to Christ for refuge, and lay hold of His righteousness, causes Satan humiliation, and then he doubles his efforts to regain the mastery over those who are standing under the banner of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 40

God has singled us out in this world corrupted by sin, and shall we who are made objects of such marvelous love and inexpressible mercy refuse this great salvation and voluntarily choose the side of the transgressor? Shall we choose as our portion the fate of those who break the law of God and teach others to break it? or shall we put enmity between us and the serpent? If you are not at enmity with sin and with Satan, his control is over you; you are his subject, building up his kingdom in rebellion against God and the laws of His government.4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 41

You will have trials if you follow the footsteps of Jesus Christ; but if you follow on to know the Lord, you will, like Jesus, be an overcomer and sit with Him upon His throne. The heavenly benediction will be given to you, "Blessed are they that do His commandments," for they shall have right to the tree of life, and "enter in through the gates into the city." [Revelation 22:14.]4LtMs, Ms 75, 1886, par. 42

Recollections of Early Days of the Message in America

Europe

[November 1886]

Portions of this manuscript are published in 4MR 402-403; EGWE 266.

I have now been in Europe fifteen months. I have visited and labored in Switzerland, Italy, England, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and France. In all these places the banner of truth stands unfurled—the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus—and yet there are very many large cities as well as small that have not had the message proclaimed to the inhabitants. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 1

We consider how the work of God has steadily advanced in America from a very small beginning. We are well acquainted with the difficulties to be encountered and overcome. We knew what it was to practice close self-denial, and we knew what it was to make sacrifices for the truth's sake. We remember when the Adventists keeping the Sabbath could be readily counted and epistles were addressed to all in a day. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 2

We acted a part in the first conference that was ever held among Seventh-day Adventists, which was convened in Connecticut. My husband, my sister Sarah, and myself lived in a room in the house of our much-respected Brother and Sister Howland, which they furnished us without cost. We had nothing in our possession, but our spare wardrobe and a firm faith and confidence in the truth, dearer to us than life itself. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 3

The light upon the fourth commandment, which was new and unpopular and generally rejected by our Adventist brethren and sisters, we had accepted. If we had trials and difficulties before this, in accepting the message that the Lord would soon come the second time to our world with power and great glory, we found that accepting new and advanced truth brought us into positions of still greater difficulty. It brought down upon us not only the opposition of the Christian world who refused to believe in the Lord's soon coming, but opposition unexpectedly came upon us from those with whom we had been united in the faith and glorious hope of the second advent of our Saviour. In the place of closely investigating the Scriptures as did the noble Bereans to see if these things were so, there were those with whom we had taken sweet counsel together who denounced the third angel's message as heresy. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 4

The beams of light were shining forth from the open door of the temple of God in heaven, and our attention was called to the ark of God in that temple, containing the tables of stone, upon which were engraven the law of God. We saw, in tracing down the commandments, that the fourth commandment—placed in the very bosom of the decalogue—had been perverted; that we had ignorantly been keeping the first day of the week, a common working day, as sacred, when the fourth commandment stated that the seventh day was the Sabbath ordained and set apart by God Himself for man to keep holy. He sanctified the day, and man was to show special honor to God in observing the day He had given him. This commandment is the great truth which unites the two dispensations, the Mosaic and the Christian, and the light upon the sanctuary shows their relation to each other. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 5

A few began to search the Scriptures after the disappointment in 1844, and the result was light in regard to what constituted the sanctuary. This searching revealed the fact that the prophecy referred not to this earth as the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the days, but to the heavenly sanctuary; and this truth explained our disappointment in 1844. Investigation of the Scriptures also revealed the light upon the Sabbath. 4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 6

Now we saw a great work to be done to present this light to the people, for the sanctuary question, if understood, would remove all perplexities as to where we were standing in prophecy and explain clearly the disappointment in 1844. The light of prophecy would then appear clear and forcible to those who would search the Scriptures with hearts open to receive the truth which had been so undiscerned. New hope and courage took possession of our souls, and although at first unwilling to accept the Sabbath and to acknowledge we had been ignorantly keeping a common day, which had been substituted by the man of sin in the place of God's holy day, yet the light was so clear from the Scriptures and from the convictions which attended the searching of the Scriptures that we could not be found fighting against God.4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 7

Now the work was before us to proclaim the third angel's message. We were poor, destitute of means, and disease was upon us, yet we had faith and courage in the Lord.4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 8

My husband engaged to work at hauling stone for the purpose of building a culvert for the railroad in Brunswick, Maine. He often came home with his fingers bleeding because the skin was worn through. I bound up his fingers at night, and next morning he went to his work as usual. But when pay day came, he was told he could not receive his wages. All had been paid out; there were no funds left. "Well," said my husband, "we have nothing in the house to eat. My wife fainted this morning for want of food." His employer took him to the storehouse and put in a bag some flour, meal, beans, and various things tied up in parcels. He said, "It will keep you a few days."4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 9

It was raining when my husband entered the house with this bag on his shoulders. He was wet and tired. I looked into his face and said, "Husband, has it come to this? Has God really forgotten us?" [Unfinished.]4LtMs, Ms 76, 1886, par. 10

Labors in Tramelan, Switzerland

Switzerland

[December 1886]

For portions of this manuscript, see RH 04/05/1887.

December 24 we left Basel for Tramelan in company with Brother and Sister Ings to be present at the dedication of the first chapel built in Europe by Seventh-day Adventists. Brethren Ertzenberger and John Vuilleumier were also present on this occasion. Brother Ertzenberger was my interpreter upon the Sabbath. He also preached to the Germans. 4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 1

This small but neat house of worship was built by the family of Brother Roth. Hitherto the meetings had been held in private houses. We felt that the Lord would honor this movement made to His glory. Friends came in from Bienne and Chaux-de-Fonds. We had a profitable and solemn meeting. The Lord gave me His blessing in seeking to present to the people the necessity of cultivating respect for the place where they assembled to worship God. We had excellent meetings upon the Sabbath. 4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 2

Notice was sent in to the National Baptist church that Mrs. White would speak in the national chapel Sunday afternoon, but the minister refused to read it to his congregation because he thought Mrs. White would speak upon the Sabbath question. Nevertheless there were from two to three hundred people present, who gave the best of attention. Brother John Vuilleumier interpreted for me. 4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 3

The Lord blessed me with His Spirit as I presented before them the plan of redemption and what constituted genuine faith in Jesus Christ, the atoning Sacrifice. Faith in the Son of God goes deeper than many discern. "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" John 9:35. This inquiry is of deep spiritual import and of the uttermost importance. It is not to admit our faith in the world's Redeemer, but do we believe in Him as our Saviour? Have we an intelligent faith? To accept Christ as our Saviour as an article of faith is not enough. We are not to lay this knowledge aside as a memento to look at occasionally, but to believe on the Son of God as our own Saviour and bring Him into our life, practicing His virtues, the very life hid with Christ in God. To believe on Christ is to have God dwell in the soul; and the words and works and even the thoughts are brought into subjection to the Spirit of Christ.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 4

The general expressions were, "I shall take home that which I have heard." "I see nothing objectionable in that which we have heard today." One man in response as to what constitutes genuine faith uttered his sentiments. When asked, "What do you think of that which we have heard?" he answered, "Oh well, it does not affect me; I am saved; I am saved."4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 5

The national minister expressed regret that he had not read the notice. Said he would have done so if he had known Mrs. White would speak on that subject. We left that night to return to Basel, praying that the seed sown might find lodgment in some hearts. We learned that the impression made upon the community was good. Much prejudice was removed.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 6

By special invitation we left Basel February 4, accompanied by Brother and Sister Ings and our interpreter Brother John Vuilleumier. Friday night we had a meeting with the church in the new chapel. Sabbath in the forenoon Elder Ings spoke to the people with much freedom, and all seemed to be deeply interested and profited. I spoke in the afternoon from Malachi 3:16-18. The Spirit of the Lord moved upon hearts.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 7

After the discourse we had a social meeting, and many excellent testimonies were borne. One young man had not taken any part in meetings for more than one year. He had been overcome through temptations and fallen under discouragements. He made humble confessions, with weeping, and there took a decided stand for the Lord and expressed his determination to seek to help others all in his power. His mother had not taken part in social meetings, but she bore her testimony and several others confessed and wept before the Lord. We felt that the deep movings of the Spirit of the Lord were in our midst. The Lord was at work, softening and subduing hearts.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 8

Brother G. made very interesting remarks. Brother John Vuilleumier interpreted. He said he had for years been praying for his brother, who lived some miles away, that the Lord would draw him by the cords of His love, that he would take hold of the truth. During the Week of Prayer he made the case of his brother a special subject of prayer. He went to see his brother, to see if he could say or do anything to help him to walk in the light. He found that his brother had been deeply convicted. He stated that while engaged in work upon the Sabbath his tools seemed to be heavy; he could scarcely hold them in his hands; it seemed that he must drop them and keep the Sabbath. He read the tract that had been translated into French on The Sufferings of Christ, and that decided him to obey his convictions of conscience and keep the Sabbath. He told his employers he could not work on another Sabbath, expecting to receive his discharge, but he was told to continue his work.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 9

Brother G. was filled with joy and gratitude to God that his prayers were answered. He stated that there were others who were also convicted, one a man of influence.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 10

I had tried to impress upon them the importance of laboring for those close by our own doors, each follower of Christ feeling that he had a sacred duty to bring others to Christ, and thus each becoming a missionary for God. This was responded to heartily, and many resolved that they would take hold heartily and in faith, have more patience in well-doing, and not become weary and so quickly discouraged. Our meeting closed with the blessing of God.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 11

After the meeting we had an interesting season in the house of Brother Roth. The young man who had resolved to be on the Lord's side, his wife, and his sisters were present. I was requested to pray for him, which I did, interpreted by Brother John Vuilleumier. The Lord did bless and hearts were melted into tenderness. The young man then with affection and tears kissed his sisters and the brethren Roth. There had been some unhappy feelings of difference, but all was confessed and forgiven, and the room seemed to be filled with the peace of Christ. Sister Roth made the statement, "The peace of Christ has come to this house." These precious tokens of God's love should be highly appreciated by us and never forgotten, but should awaken gratitude in our hearts continually.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 12

I spoke in the national chapel Sunday afternoon upon the subject of temperance. The national minister who refused to give notice of my appointment was present and opened the meeting by request with singing and prayer. He is president of the temperance association. I had much freedom in speaking to an attentive audience. Brother John Vuilleumier interpreted for me. Although I am obliged to reach the people through an interpreter, my constant prayer is, Lord speak Thou to the hearts of the hearers. Impress the truth upon the soul.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 13

Elder Ings spoke in the evening in the new chapel.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 14

Tramelan is the first place where a church was raised up in Europe, and this is the first chapel built, aside from our missions. Our people feel grateful to God for the victory gained in this place. Prejudice has been overcome, and the doctrines we hold are looked upon in a very different light than heretofore. The way is preparing for a course of lectures to be given in Tramelan; and if the church will be laborers together with God, we believe that the Lord will increase their numbers, and many souls will be saved.4LtMs, Ms 77, 1886, par. 15

Nearing the Judgment

NP

1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 218.

We are nearing the judgment. Shall we have less and less religion? Shall we be found in conformity to the world? Never could our youth be better described than in these words: "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." [2 Timothy 3:4.] Serious thoughts are not entertained. Fear and love of God are not cherished. One that is not connected with God can teach evil so much sooner than the God-fearing can teach purity and goodness, for the latter are not palatable to the pleasure lovers who do not love to retain thoughts of God. Oh, if they could only know how God loves them! He wants to make them good and pure, noble and kind and courteous, that they may ever live with the pure, holy angels through eternity. The love Christ has evidenced to them should awaken a response in their own hearts. 4LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 1

Jesus loves the youth. He died to save them. Oh, if we had the love of Jesus in our hearts always, we would be so anxious to do the youth good! We should associate more with them. We should engage in conversation with them upon the Christian's hope. We should talk of the Christian's heaven. We are certainly nearing the great day of God, and our brethren and sisters are losing precious opportunities of doing good because we do not try in little things to show our interest in and affection for the youth. 4LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 2

The youth have strong temptations. They need a strong, patient, kindly, earnest, faithful hand to hold them back from evil. They need some one to speak the truths of the Word of God, to keep His claims before them personally. Family religion is greatly wanting. There is infidelity insinuating itself into the hearts of our youth, which is closing to them the gates of Paradise. There is a false philosophy which is undermining the foundation of true religion.

Science “falsely so called” [1 Timothy 6:20] has bewildered the senses and left the slimy trail of that old serpent the devil behind him. The Word of God has lost its value, its sacredness.4LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 3

The college was established to be far above what it ever has been able to attain, because men engaged in the work there have been of divided hearts. There was no need for a college to be built and sustained at great expense merely as an institution of learning. There was no want of colleges in our land if merely learning from books was to be considered. But this was only one object. There were greater and more weighty considerations. There are youth who embrace the truth who need to be taken hold of by the firm hand of faith by men who shall be connected with the college, and who will patiently and prayerfully educate them in the knowledge of the Scriptures.4LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 4

Many have been sadly disappointed in our college. They expected to find help in their research of the Scriptures that they have not had. The very men who have been moved upon by the Spirit of God to give themselves to the work of the ministry have not been encouraged in their solemn purpose. Everything has been brought down to follow the example of other schools. The Bible has had but a very small consideration in the school. Paul enumerates the advantages of the Jews above the Gentiles. “Chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.” [Romans 3:2.] This, chiefly, is the advantage the college among our people has over every other college. “Unto them is committed the oracles of God.”4LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 5

There is too much chaff among the youthful teachers, too much froth and too little depth, too little religion. They themselves do not understand the deep things of God. The advantage of making the Bible a book of study is that it is ever elevating. The better it is known by research, the more highly it is prized. Those who prate about science and casting God’s Word in the shade, those who would exalt nature as the book of study, cannot understand or read nature without the Bible to interpret and explain it. The Bible is not only the revealer of God to man, but his grand interpreter as the God of nature. The Bible in revealing God has given us the key which unlocks the mysteries of creation. The Bible should have been made one of the principal studies in our schools.⁴*LtMs, Ms 78, 1886, par. 6*

Sermon/At Orebro, Sweden

Orebro, Sweden

June 24, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 331.

“And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.” Daniel 12:3.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 1

The work of every one who claims to be a follower of Jesus Christ is presented before us in these words. Not one of us is excused from doing that which God has given us to do. God has not given us reasoning powers, and ability, and intellect to be used exclusively for worldly matters. He desires that we should use these precious talents to His glory. Although God is our supreme Ruler, He has given man the privilege of being a co-laborer with Christ; as soon as the truth of God finds an entrance into our hearts, it is our duty to give the precious truth to others. 4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 2

If our neighbors were perishing for bread, we would be thought very uncharitable if we did not supply their wants. There are those among us who have never had the Word of God brought to their minds or understanding; they are perishing for want of the Bread of Life, and is it not in us an expression of great selfishness when we keep these sacred truths to ourselves and do not give to those who are famishing? 4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 3

Our heavenly Father gives the rain, the dew, and the sunshine from heaven to refresh the flowers and to cause vegetation to spring up and flourish. But man has a part to act, to prepare the soil and to put the seeds into the ground in order to have a harvest. If he had folded his arms and said, “I will let things take their course. I have nothing to do. God will give the harvest. He will give the sunshine and the rain from heaven, and I will take my ease,” what kind of a harvest would come? Man must co-operate with God, and act his part in preparing the soil and in sowing the seed, and God will give the increase.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 4

Our heavenly Father has not sent angels from heaven to preach salvation to men. He has opened to us the precious truths of His Word and implanted the truth in our hearts, that we may give it to those who are in darkness. If we have indeed tasted of the precious gifts of God in His promises, we are to impart this knowledge to others. Every individual that is connected with the Source of light and truth is to gather the divine rays of light from heaven and scatter them upon the pathway of others.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 5

We are individually to work as though a great responsibility rested upon us. We are to manifest untiring energy and tact and zeal in this work and take the burden, feeling the peril in which our neighbors and friends are placed. We are to work as Christ worked. We are to present the truth as it is in Jesus, that the blood of souls shall not be upon our garments. At the same time we are to feel entire dependence and trust in God, for we know we cannot do anything without His grace and power to help.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 6

A Paul may plant, and an Apollos water, but God alone can give the increase. Then we are indeed to go forward to the work, weeping, sowing the precious seeds of truth, and trusting in God to give the increase. Every one who claims to be a disciple of Christ, who tarries at home with the family, has a work to do as a home missionary. He must keep his own soul in the light and love of God and help to build up the church. All are to be faithful sentinels. While ministers are called to open the Word of God to others, the individual members are to work, and as the church is kept a working church, it will be a living church. Another's indifference or carelessness will not excuse your neglect. You should open the door of your heart, that Jesus can take possession of the soul and perform His will and work through you.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 7

The greatest power will be felt in the church where there are well-ordered and well-disciplined families. The children should be educated from their very childhood to love the things of eternal life. This life is but for a moment; it passeth away, and we want a firm hold of the future, immortal life. When we set up the standard of righteousness in home religion, angels of God will minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation; and as you go to the house of God to worship Him, you bring angels of God into that house.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 8

Every one who has the Word of God as a living flame burning upon the altar of his heart can present the truth as it is in Jesus by precept and example. A living church is one that would have a saving influence upon the world. Every member should feel that he must make every effort in his power to build up the church of Christ, and as all work according to the light God has given them, then the ability that is devoted to this work of winning souls to Christ will continually increase. We must each one do our work, sowing the truth in meekness and humility, and then have faith that God will do His part. But what account will we have to render to the God of heaven when we surround the great white throne, for the opportunities and privileges He has given us here, which we have not appreciated and improved? We do not want to make any mistakes in regard to our duty to our fellow men which God requires of us.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 9

Christ left the mansions in heaven and came to our world to be an example for us to imitate, and He was the Majesty of heaven, the King of glory; but He exchanged His crown of glory in the kingdom of heaven for a crown of thorns on this earth. He stepped down from the royal throne, clothed His divinity with humanity, and accepted His life of self-denial and self-sacrifice. For our sakes He bore insult and shame and mockery. And did His own nation open their hands and hearts to receive Him in His work? No. God had given them the best gift that heaven held, and yet they did not appreciate it. The Son of God had to go from city to city because those whom He came to save sought to take His life. Was it because He was a criminal? No; there was no fault in Him. It was because He taught the truth from heaven. The truth was clothed with the beauty and brightness of heaven's light, but they would not receive it. He came into this world to be the light of the world, yet that light was not accepted by those He came to save.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 10

Jesus says, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." 1 John 3:1, 2. What a privilege is this, to be brought into relationship with Christ! If we exhibit the piety and righteousness of Christ, we need not expect to be in any greater favor with the world than was Christ. We need the Holy Spirit from heaven to come into our hearts, that we can see Christ as He is and comprehend His great love wherewith He has loved us; then we shall love one another as Christ has loved us. From His own lips came these words, "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13:35.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 11

We are not to grasp in the arms of fellowship those only who profess to believe just as we do, who accept our views of truth. We are to have a burden for perishing souls who are out of Christ. Our message is to the world. Our work is to save the lost for whom Christ has died. If our Saviour met with disappointments, we should not be discouraged if we meet with disappointments. Why was it the world did not know Christ? It was because He brought meekness, purity, and virtue into the world, and the world understood it not. Men could not harmonize with this purity. And those who are connected with Christ in His work of self-sacrifice and self-denial will not be known by the world.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 12

Must we, then, leave the world in darkness to perish? No; we must be a living channel of light to the world. If we abide in Jesus, all heaven is at our command; the power from on high will work with the laborer in his efforts to win souls. Jesus will not leave His people with this great responsibility resting upon them and not give them divine aid. The reason why there is not spirituality and light in the church is [that] we do not have the spirit of labor.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 13

We should take the Scripture and search the pages of the Word of God and understand it for ourselves. We should bring God's Word into our daily life and character, and have that burning, living faith in our hearts that we shall seek to save those around us, who are perishing in sin and iniquity. Everywhere we go, we see souls who need light and truth. They are the purchase of the blood of the Son of God. What are we doing for them? Are we seeking to open their understanding that they may accept Jesus in the truth and in the Word He sends them? To the minister also will He say in that day, What have you done for Me?4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 14

Brethren, have you that earnestness of soul for those out of Christ that you cannot rest without working for them and doing your utmost for their salvation? How careful should you be in your family to keep the family altar erected! Take your children in the arms of your faith to Jesus, and teach them that He is the very best Friend that it is possible for them to have. Teach them that they can go to this precious Saviour with all their trials and sorrows, and He will sympathize with them. Do not present before them our heavenly Father as a God of tyranny, but as a God of love; and thus educate your children that they will want to be children of God and followers of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 15

If any of you succeed in your efforts and win one soul for Jesus, that soul, endowed with the Spirit of God, will seek to enlighten others; and if they are the means of converting one soul, that soul will go to work to save other souls, and thus the work will go on and you can never know the result of your influence until the judgment is set and the books are opened.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 16

Since I have been here in this place, I have seen youth, for whom Christ has died, reeling through the streets because intoxicated with drink; and I have thought, Is there not an arm that can be stretched out to save these youth from perdition? Have those who claim to be Christians given them up as hopeless? Let us work with all the ability that God has given us, that we may save fallen men, perishing for the truth. Jesus has done everything for man's rescue that a God could do in working out the plan of salvation for the fallen race. Those who profess the name of Christ will so closely connect with Jesus and His might and power that they can co-operate with Christ in this great work of saving souls.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 17

themselves to the missionary work. I wish there were one hundred instead of two or three. God will accept the strength of the youth if they will only consecrate themselves to His service. And what a work is this that they are doing in saving souls to Jesus for time and for eternity! Many are sowing to the flesh in the indulgences of appetite and gratification of their base passions, but a time will come when they must reap the harvest they have sown. Those who consecrate their lives to the service of Jesus Christ who gave Himself for them will reap life everlasting.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 18

Jesus invites the youth to come to Him just as they are. He says, "My son, give Me thy heart." [Proverbs 23:26.] The precious Saviour will take and wash away our stains in His own blood and fit us for the mansions in glory. Many seem to think that Jesus is a great way off, but our Saviour is very nigh to those who call upon His name. If our heavenly Father made so great a sacrifice as to give His dearly beloved Son that fallen man might be saved, what will He not do for those who will come to Him? How much more will He not with Him freely give us all things? He hears the prayer of the contrite and repentant soul.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 19

That God that was with Joseph in Egypt and with Daniel in Babylon will help all those who come to Him to form a perfect character. "Come," the Word of God says, "come now, and let us reason together. ... though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." [Isaiah 1:18.] Come, then, and let us enlist under the banner of Prince Emmanuel, leaving the black banner to the prince of darkness.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 20

All that Christ has given me belongs to Him, and I will give it to His service. He has given me in trust all the qualifications I possess. I will improve them to His glory. Let us be earnest and persevering in our work for Christ, for the precious reward that Daniel saw in vision is to be given to those who are Christ's. Why not take hold of this work understandingly? Cut loose from the things of earth, and let the attention be directed heavenward. Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, even with the precious blood of the Son of God. And what are many of us doing for God? He calls you as servants to enlist in His army to work for Him, to fight manfully the battles of the Lord. You want to put all the ability and tact you possess into whatever department of this work you are engaged. 4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 21

You can represent Christ as did Joseph and Daniel. They did an excellent work in character building, and now the work is before you to form a character for eternal life. Put away sin and iniquity, and let the love of Jesus into your souls. Christ says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man will hear My voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with Me." [Revelation 3:20.] You hear His tread before the door, waiting for you to respond to His knock. He has invited His entrance into your heart. Will you let Him in? He is the heavenly Guest, and you cannot close the door against Him without ruin to yourself. May your hearts go out in earnest prayer that Christ will take possession of your souls, and He will do it. 4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 22

It is your duty to gather all the knowledge of Christ that you can obtain, that you may impart that knowledge to others. Come to Him in meekness and humility, and open before them the Scriptures. It is the voice of God to them. It may seem very strange to them, and there may be very few who will listen to the voice of mercy. But what did God say to Elijah? His mournful complaint was, "They have torn down thine altars, slain the prophets, and I alone am left and they seek my life." [1 Kings 19:10, 14.] God said to Elijah, "I have seven thousand who have never yet bowed the knee to Baal." [Verse 18.] And there may be those all around you in this city that are living up to the best light they have. The Lord has given us light and truth, that we may work for those in darkness. Do your work with fidelity, and trust the rest with God. Believe that the Lord will save the souls of your fellow men around you, and the faith that you will exercise will be the greatest help to yourself and an honor to the God of heaven. 4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 23

I am so thankful that we have a Saviour. I am so glad that we have a Mediator who is pleading our individual cases before the Father today. And while all heaven is interested in our salvation, let us be interested for ourselves. Let us be forming such characters that we may be fitted for the society of heavenly angels in the kingdom of glory. All the thoughts and energies that are devoted in cheerful, willing service to our heavenly Father and in heavenly pursuits will live. They will not be written in sand and left here to perish. Everything in earth is diverting our attention away from heaven. But will we seek for glory, honor, immortality? May God help this dear congregation that they may have an eternal weight of glory in the kingdom of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 79, 1886, par. 24

Sermon/At Grimsby, England

Grimsby, England

September 21, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 353, 354; 9MR 249-251.

“And as they thus spake, Jesus Himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.” “And ye are witnesses of these things.” Luke 24:36, 48.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 1

Here we have before us the precious evidence that Christ was a living Saviour. A little while before, He was enclosed in Joseph’s new tomb, but He had burst the bands of death and walked forth a triumphant conqueror. While His disciples had been mourning, they had gone to the sepulchre, and Jesus was not there; and while they were wondering where He was, the angel of God said, He is risen. [Matthew 28:6.] Wonderful testimony! The hope of the world! Christ had risen, and their Saviour was a risen Saviour!4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 2

Now the disciples could not credit it when the testimony was brought to them that Christ had indeed risen. It seemed too much for them to believe, for when they witnessed His crucifixion their hopes died. Who can imagine the affliction of their minds when they saw their Saviour in the hands of the cruel mob, when they saw that He was crowned with thorns, when they saw Him treated with derision and insult and mockery? And then the climax had come. They saw Him stretched upon Calvary’s cross as a malefactor, and He whom they had believed would deliver Israel was dying as a criminal!4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 3

It is impossible for us to appreciate the agony of the followers of Christ at this critical moment. And after their Saviour was taken from the cross and laid in Joseph’s new tomb, their anguish was terrible; they had lost their Lord; and when they came to the tomb and found it empty, they were amazed.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 4

But these were not the only ones interested in that tomb. Angels had been watching it; and while the Roman guards were carefully watching the place, the angel of God came and rolled back the stone as though it were a pebble. Then the voice from heaven was heard waking the Sleeper, and Christ walked forth a triumphant conquerer. When the Roman guards caught sight of the angel, they dropped as dead men to the ground. They could not endure the glory of even one angel of God. The angel passed back to heaven, and they saw the tomb, open. Then they went into the city and told that Christ had risen; the disciples had not come and stolen Him away, but He had risen. The priests and rulers could not have such a report as that go out. "Why," said they, "the people would stone us." They put a bribe into the hands of the Roman guards so that they would testify to a lie. But when Christ arose a multitude arose with Him, and these also went into the city and testified that Christ was risen and they were risen with Him, so that the lying report brought by the Roman guards could have but little effect.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 5

But how sad the disciples were when they came and saw not the body of Jesus in Joseph's new tomb! When Mary came and found Him not there, she turned away in sadness, and with weeping said, (to one she supposed to be the gardener), "If you have taken Him away, tell us where you have laid Him." "And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus!" But the voice comes, "Mary." She knows this voice, and turns to worship Him, but He says, "Touch Me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father." [John 20:15-17.]4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 6

Then as two disciples were on their way to Emmaus, traveling up the rugged mountains and rocky steep, they conversed together as they walked and were sad. But there came one to their side and said, "Why are ye sad?" [Luke 24:17.] But we will turn and read it:4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 7

"And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs."4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 8

“And they talked together of all these things which had happened.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 9

“And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 10

“But their eyes were holden that they should not know Him.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 11

“And He said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?” Luke 24:13-17.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 12

Oh, I have thought to myself, if we could only appreciate the work of Jesus Christ, His sympathy, His love, it seems to me that there could not be a heart so stony that it could not be impressed. He is just as ready as He ever was to stand by the side of His apostles and impart to them light and glory, but our hearts are so hard that we do not appreciate the love of a risen Saviour.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 13

“And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering said unto Him, Art Thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days? ... Then He said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken.” Verses 18, 25.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 14

Are any of us condemned in these words? Are there any of us slow to believe all that the prophets have spoken? We want to take every lesson to our hearts and remember to whom it was spoken.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 15

Christ went right back to Moses and the prophets. Here was the evidence that He was the Messiah. He had opened this Scripture to them before, He had told them what would take place, but it seemed to have dropped out of their minds. He had repeated these things to them again and again, and they remembered Him as their heavenly Teacher. And what effect had it upon them? Why, their hopes had been dead, and now they were alive! And they remembered that just such things had been spoken of Christ.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 16

Oh, how often we forget the Scriptures! But here their hopes were revived and responded to the evidence that Christ had given them of His Messiahship. As they came to their abode, He made as though He would go farther, but it was toward evening and the invitation was given for Him come in the tarry with them through the night. Here they showed their courtesy; they wanted still to hear Him converse with them on the Scriptures. And Jesus consented and went into their humble abode and dwelt with them, breaking bread, and all the time words of encouragement were flowing from His precious lips. While He was breaking the bread, they saw the marks of the nails; and when He opened His mouth to bless the bread, they recognized the very voice of their Lord! They were about to fall down and worship Him, but He vanished out of their sight.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 17

They did not sit down and enjoy this good news alone. They went back to Jerusalem and told their companions that Christ had risen. They did not even stop to partake of their refreshments. They were too overjoyed to stop for this, but they ran back and told the good news. It was a new world to them, now that Christ had risen. He in whom all their hopes were centered was risen from the dead; He had walked by their side, and now they hastened back to Jerusalem, stumbling over the stones in their anxiety to reach that upper chamber where their brethren were assembled.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 18

They find the door locked for fear of the Jews. But they knock until they gain an entrance, and then they tell their story, how that Christ had risen and had walked with them as they were on their way to Emmaus. The disciples cannot believe the gracious words spoken, but as soon as they were through with their testimony, lo, there was Another standing in their midst. They had not heard the door open, they had heard no knocking; but who was this stranger? It was Jesus Himself. They thought it was a spirit, and they were afraid. But Christ said unto them, "Peace be unto you." "And He said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have. And when He had thus spoken, He showed them His hands and His feet.” Verses 36-40.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 19

Christ had risen from the dead! What happiness and joy filled their hearts! He had passed through the tomb and brightened it. Death to them had seemed to be a horrible thing. It looked as though they could not pass through to the other side. But here Christ had obtained the victory, and although man had fallen and was condemned to death, yet He could live again. Those who sleep in Jesus will be called from their prison house to a glorious victory and will come forth to a glorious immortality. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 20

But now we want to present to you the words of Christ, how He taught His disciples to preach repentance and remission of sin. And we read that Paul went from house to house teaching the people. He says, I have not failed to preach to them repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. [Acts 20:20, 21.] Now this is the work we are to do, and we want to have this testimony borne everywhere. You need not talk about getting along without any law, and yet know what sin is. The only definition of sin given in the Bible is, Sin is the transgression of the law. But you must repent toward God. And why? Because you have broken His law. And then you must have faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. We see there is nothing in law to save us, but Christ has become man’s substitute and surety. He has worked out man’s redemption. Then what must man do? He must repent, because he has broken God’s holy law. It is just as necessary that we should keep that law now as it was for Adam and Eve to keep that law in Eden. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 21

We want to arouse the conscience. We want the sinner to feel the need of repentance, that Christ may impute unto him His righteousness. But if you fasten upon sin and love sin, the grace of Christ is not with you. It is sin that is so appalling to Christ. He was the embodiment of the holy law. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 22

Suppose that parents had taught their children that God had a law and they must keep it; suppose that they had interwoven it into their lives. Do you think that we would have such a wicked world as we have today? The floodgates of woe and misery have been opened upon our race, and sin is debasing men and women today, and we want to know what we can do to lift up the people.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 23

The fact is that Satan has been playing the game of life for the soul, but pride has come in and the grace of Christ is not abiding there. We want now to listen to the knocking and let Him in. He will come into congregations like this, but He wants to be invited into the soul. He says, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock. If any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." Revelation 3:20. Remove the rubbish, take away your love of self, and Jesus will surely come in if you open the door. Will you let Him in? There are some who never will; they keep piling up the rubbish. But who will open the door and let Jesus in?4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 24

We want the love and peace that Christ can bring us, but there are so many hewing out for themselves broken cisterns that will hold no water. Christ says, "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Revelation 22:17. Oh, how much we want to drink of the cup of salvation! Jesus is the only One who can give us peace.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 25

You may enter the splendid palaces where everything is so fine and you think there must be happiness there, and perfect peace. But if Jesus is not there you will find that iniquity and sin are there. What we want is to be in harmony with Jesus Christ. He has risen, dear friends, and in your despondency you may know He is just as much by your side as He was by the side of the two disciples as they walked to Emmaus. Could your eyes be opened you would see that Jesus is by your side to give you peace and life if you will accept it.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 26

I know what I am talking about. I have seen the time when I thought the waves were going over my head; in that time I felt my Saviour precious to me. When my eldest son was taken from me, I felt my grief was very great; but Jesus came to my side, and I felt His peace in my soul. The cup of consolation was placed to my lips. And then he who had stood by my side for thirty-six years in the desk was taken. We had labored together side by side in the ministry, but we had to fold the hands of the warrior and lay him down to rest in the silent grave. Again my grief seemed very great, but after all came the cup of consolation. Jesus is precious to me. He walked by my side as He did by the side of the sorrowing disciples on the way to Emmaus, and He will walk by your side. When our friends go into the grave they are beautiful to us. It may be our father or mother that we lay away; when they come forth those wrinkles are all gone, but the figure is there, and we know them and they know Christ.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 27

We want to be prepared to meet these dear friends as they come forth in the resurrection morning. Can any of us bear the thought that we should refuse the mercy of Him who has paid such an infinite price for us? Shall we turn from Jesus to the beggary elements of this world? or shall we lay hold upon the hope set before us in the Gospel that we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is? And we shall listen to His voice, sweeter than any music, saying, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." [Matthew 25:34.] We want these words spoken to us. We want a part with the blessed. We want to be with that company around the throne of God, Christ's righteousness imputed to us.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 28

We want to improve every opportunity given us day by day to overcome the temptations of the enemy. This life is a conflict, and we have a foe who never sleeps, who is watching constantly to destroy our minds and lure us away from our precious Saviour who has given His life for us. Shall we lift the cross given us, or shall we go on in selfish gratification and lose the eternity of bliss? We cannot afford to sin, we cannot afford to disgrace the law of God. Adam and Eve could not afford it. Did not they lose by their transgression? And by obedience we shall regain that which was lost. The question with us should not be, "How shall I make the most money in this world?" The question should be, "Shall I serve God or Baal?" [1 Kings 18:21.] "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," but I can say, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." [Joshua 24:15.]4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 29

I do not look to the end for all the happiness, but I get it as I go along. Notwithstanding I have trials and afflictions, I look away to Jesus. It is in the strait, hard places where He is right by our side and we can commune with Him, lay all our burdens upon the Burden-bearer, and say, "Here, Lord, I cannot carry these burdens longer." He tells us His yoke is easy and His burdens light. [Matthew 11:30.] Do you believe it? I have tested it. I love Him, I love Him. I see in Him matchless charms. And I want to praise Him in the kingdom of God and sing, Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain and is raised again. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 30

Shall we break the stony heart? Shall we travel the thorny path that Jesus trod? All the way from the manger to the cross we see the tracks of blood. Shall the pride of the world come in? Shall we seek to make the world our standard? Or shall we come out from among them? The invitation is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, ... and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughter, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Corinthians 6:17, 18. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 31

Oh, what an exaltation is this—to be members of the royal family, children of the heavenly King! To have the Saviour of the universe, the King over all kings, know us by name and to be heirs of God to the immortal inheritance, the eternal substance! This is our privilege; will we have the prize? Will we fight the battles of the Lord? Will we press the battle to the gate? Will we be victorious? I have decided that I must have heaven and I want you to have it or I would not be here. I never would have come, at my age, from California to Europe had I not wanted to tell you how precious the Saviour is and what a precious truth we have. 4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 32

You should search the Bible, for it tells you of Jesus. I want you to read the Bible and see the matchless charms of Jesus. I want you to fall in love with the Man of Calvary so that at every step you can say to the world, "His ways are ways of pleasantness, and all His paths are peace." Proverbs 3:17. You want to represent Christ to the world. You want to show to the world you have a hope big with immortality. You want to drink of the waters of salvation. You want the heavenly angels to be in your dwelling. You want Christ to abide there. You want to teach your children to love and fear God. You want the Sun of righteousness shining in the darkened chambers of your mind, and you want thanksgiving to God on your lips.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 33

Praise the Lord, oh, my soul! He says He has gone to prepare mansions for me:4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 34

“Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 35

“In My Father’s house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 36

“And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.”
John 14:1-34LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 37

Thank God! It is these mansions that I am looking to. It is not the earthly mansions here, for they are to be shaken down by the mighty earthquake ere long; but it is those heavenly mansions that Christ has gone to prepare for the faithful. We have no home here. We are only pilgrims and strangers here, passing to a better country, even an heavenly. Place your mind upon these things, and while you are doing this, Christ will be right by your side. May God help us to win the precious boon of eternal life.4LtMs, Ms 80, 1886, par. 38

Sermon/At Grimsby, England

Grimsby, England

September 21, 1886

This manuscript is published in entirety in 1SAT 48-51.

Morning Talk

However much we know of the Scriptures, it is important that we know still more. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." 1 Corinthians 10:12. One man may think he understands the Scriptures and go out to present the truth, and yet he may be lacking on some points. We may get the heart and mind fixed upon something that has no special bearing upon the true point. A brother came to me and asked me what I thought about the salvation of infants; whether they would be saved. Says I, That does not concern you or me. There are points on which we must be careful not to mar present truth. All those who are to engage in the work of God must bind about their minds. There are those whose imagination is large, and they will be ever reaching out for something original. They will even fasten upon some word in the sermon and think upon that until the whole truth is covered with a mist.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 1

Now we want to know what is essential for our work here. What is essential for our work now? If any of you should be asked to give your opinion on some point and you should not know just how to answer it, do not be ashamed to say you do not know, but you do know what we must do to be saved. When one came to Christ and asked what he must do to be saved, Jesus told him he must love God with all his heart and with all his might and with all his mind and with all his soul and his neighbor as himself. And these are the points we must keep before us—to love God supremely and our neighbor as ourselves. There is a great work before us.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 2

Now there may be those who will inquire what will be the sign of the coming of the Son of Man and we may know what this is. We read that there will be signs in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars, and trouble in the nations [Luke 21:25]; all these tell us that the end is near. The coming of the Lord is at the door. Well we understand what being at the door means. When one stands at the door, all there is to do is to enter.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 3

Now in regard to the coming of the Son of Man. This will not take place until after the mighty earthquake shakes the earth. After the people have heard the voice of God they are in despair and trouble such as never was since there was a nation, and in this the people of God will suffer affliction. The clouds of heaven will clash, and there will be darkness. Then that voice comes from heaven and the clouds begin to roll back like a scroll, and there is the bright, clear sign of the Son of Man. The children of God know what that cloud means.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 4

The sound of music is heard; and as it nears, the graves are opened and the dead are raised and there are thousands of thousands and ten thousand times ten thousand of angels that compose that glory and encircle the Son of Man. Those who have acted the most prominent part in the rejection and crucifixion of Christ come forth to see Him as He is, and those who have rejected Christ come up and see the saints glorified, and it is at that time that the saints are changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and are caught up to meet their Lord in the air. The very ones who placed upon Him the purple robe, and put the crown of thorns upon His brow, and those who put the nails through His hands and feet, look upon Him and bewail. And this is the very sign of the coming of the Son of Man.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 5

Now I want to tell you, brethren, you must be careful not to fasten upon vagaries. We had a good brother whose mind was destroyed because of this. He would read page after page that would turn his mind off from the right point. The third angel's message is the all-important point. Do not let your mind turn to vagaries, but keep your eyes fixed upon the truth. What we want is to give a certain sound. The angel is giving a definite message, "Sound the warning." And what does this mean? Have you heard the voice of the angel? What does it mean? Why, it is the angel giving this message to men, and they are to take up this message and proclaim it to warn others.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 6

You want to open your minds, to gird up the loins of your mind, and hope to the end. You do not want to get many things upon the mind to take it away from the truth the angel is proclaiming. When the latter rain comes upon the people of God, you must have a preparation to press right on, because those whose vessels are clean, whose hands are free just when that latter rain comes get the light that comes from on high, and their voices are lifted every one to proclaim the commandments of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 7

Now there are many signs that will take place before the coming of the Son of Man, but when the white cloud is seen, this will be the sign of the coming of the Son of Man. There will be signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and the nations in perplexity. These all testify that Christ is coming, and He is revealed in the clouds with power and great glory. The sign seen in the setting sun and rising sun has nothing to do with the sign of the coming of the Son of Man.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 8

Now, brethren, you want to get hold of the pillars of your faith. Here is Christ in the great antitypical Day of Atonement, and you must understand that you need a special preparation for the Day of Atonement. We want our sins taken away, we want to confess them that they may go beforehand to judgment. Do not go away in discouragement, but believe that Christ is able to cleanse you from all unrighteousness. We must cease to sin because sin is the transgression of the law. Put away sin and then cling to the Mighty One who is able to wash away every stain of sin. Now this is a work of humility at this time, and we must confess our sins and get nearer to God so He can write "Pardon" against our names.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 9

And be sure, when you go out to teach others, not to get your minds upon little things, but keep your mind upon the great work of God, for Satan will surely turn you off if possible. Do not try to be original and get up something you have not heard your brethren speak of,

for many have been shipwrecked in this way. Keep the mind upon the third angel's message. When you keep this before the minds of the people, they will see wisdom in it. But when you get a great many little trifling things before them, they become confused just like the Jews.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 10

What we want to do is to get the truth before the people.4LtMs, Ms 81, 1886, par. 11

Morning Talk

The disciples were to wait and look for the descent of the Spirit of God and they were to do a great work. They were to carry the truth for that time unto all nations and tongues and peoples. Christ tells them, in (Luke 24:49), "Behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." I have had great anxiety and burden upon my mind while at Basel and night after night could not sleep longer than three o'clock. I thought of our coming to England, and the matter that was presented before me pressed my mind so that when I awoke there was no more sleep for my eyes. My mind was laboring all the time in regard to the work and its importance in every department, and there stood out distinctly what had been impressed upon my mind. There was not all the manifestation of the Spirit of God that we should have, and we should not feel satisfied unless we have it. God will not accept half-hearted work in His cause, but He would have all performed with an exactitude.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 1

Last night I listened to the remarks of Elder Olsen and I knew his mind was laboring in the right direction. It is not the number that you gather into the truth, but it is the quality, the pith of those who take hold of the truth, that counts. In order for this work to go forward as God would have it, we want the Spirit of the Divine upon it. We want to see that God is attending us in all our efforts. Our object is not to get our mold upon the work and carry out our ideas, but it is to so present the truth that all who will take hold of it will feel that they have something to do; not that they are to lower the standard, but they must lift the truth.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 2

Yesterday I wrote out some things on which my mind was led out in regard to the foundation of the work. Now here is the way it is presented to me, and I would like to present it to you so your minds can take hold of it. It is like this: there is not unity of action. Every soul that goes out into the work should have unity and harmony with his brethren. "Well," said a brother, "that is just what I believe." And how do you believe it? Do you believe it enough to come into harmony with your brethren? or are you waiting for them to come into harmony with you? The work of educating workers is a great thing; and if one thinks of getting his stamp on this work, and that he must carry out the work according to his ideas and ways, you see it will have the stamp of man; but what we want is the divine stamp of God upon the work.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 3

If Jesus is in one brother, he will correspond to Jesus in another. There has been too much of disunion in your work. There should be unity in all things and the Spirit of God resting upon the work and upon us; then we are able to give the right instruction to those under our care. What we need is a great deal more of God and a great deal less of selfish wisdom; and unless there is, there will be disunion just as surely as God rules in the heavens.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 4

Most painful burdens have been resting upon my mind as I have considered how the work has been started in different places and how much better it would have been had it never been touched. As soon as one feels that he must give himself to the work, send him out into some unimportant place, says one. This is not the way to do. Another feels that he wants to go out and preach, but is no more fit to start out as a preacher than children are to be sea captains. They must be fitted as was John; he had been with God and learned of Him. And he gives us an example. These young men think they are sufficient to go forth, but they know nothing of how to handle the work; they are unfitted for it. They take their mold and do not see the necessity of correcting anything in their character. So they start out and they step up on the higher round and the very experience they need is dropped out. Instead of being able to give another of their experience, they have none of their own.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 5

As Brother Olsen said last night, we need a training school. Now God will test these (young men) to let them see they need altogether a different mold in order to be fitted for the work and have the work prosper in their hands. They will show weakness in one point and another. Those who go out to labor cannot bring others any higher than they are themselves. They cannot lead them to drink of the fountains that they have never drunk of. Every branch of our work is important. Many know what it is to plead with God in prayer, and many do not know anything about it.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 6

Now there is a great work before us, and it is necessary to lay the foundation well. When you are meeting with success in presenting the truth, do not feel that it is your own work, but give the glory to God, and more success will attend your efforts. You should not feel that it is because of your great wisdom that you have this success. A great deal has been said about this in cautions, yet men do not change. "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still."4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 7

Now brethren, we must lay aside our ways and take God's ways. I am so glad Elder Haskell is coming to England. Why? Because he has seen the work in all these phases, and we can take hold together and work with God. If ever a people needed melting over, it is us. If ever a people needed to be subdued, it is us.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 8

Now God may do something for us, but you are not ready for it. The workers must have the stamp of the divine upon them; and when this stamp of the divine is brought upon them, God will work and open the way so you can have greater success. And when the work moves forward in the fear of God, you may expect that God will work.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 9

There is too much of the spirit that "I am of Paul," and "I am of Apollos." [1 Corinthians 3:4.] There is too much of the feeling that, "I like such an one better." "I would rather hear this one speak instead of him." Now these preferences are all unsanctified. Wherever we go we want to give the impression that we are one. We are working to fit men for immortality, and we will study early and late to defend our brethren. Thus the work of God will move in harmony. There is a great deal more of self about us than we think. When God's mold is upon us we can go to the uttermost part of the world and God will be with us. But when men who want their way and it is crossed, they go, as I have seen them in many places, and set a dead head against you. They may act as though they were on your side, but just let (their will be) crossed and they are against you.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 10

Now we don't want such a class. I have been shown that wherever we go the devil will work to frustrate our plans, and there are those who will act as his agents instead of being as clay in the hands of the Potter, and Satan can handle them just to suit himself. Now I say we must be more cautious, and we must have a corps of workers who have a thorough training. Until they have this, they had better not touch the work. They want a training in their conversation, in their manner of preaching. Those who go out into the field to labor want to know how to address the people.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 11

There are many who might be a power in the field of labor if God were working with them. Let us see what kind of work they are doing, whether we must take it all down and build up another structure or not. God wants us to know how we are laying the foundation and what kind of stuff we are putting into the building. But you want the spirit of the Divine, and you will not dare to touch the work until you have it. I tell you, a higher class must be reached, but these low-minded people we do not need; they only hinder the work.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 12

What we want is a steady purpose, and then to carry it out. When the workers are willing to do as God would have them, then we may begin to educate and branch out more, but the first work is to be united with the Holy Spirit of God.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 13

Those who give themselves to the work do not know what true religion is if they begin a spirit of courtship, as though God had called them to do thus. God never has called them; they do not know anything about His work, or they would have nothing like this. It is the invention of the devil to get hold of them, but they must feel that it is a sacred work they have in their hands and they must do it for time and for eternity. When you have the burden of the work upon you, you will be so afraid that you will not give a right answer to every man that asketh you, that you will have no time for this dallying. This lovesick sentimentalism is a curse everywhere, and when you see it in young people, would you think they are fitted for the work? The command was, "Tarry in Jerusalem, until you receive the Holy Ghost." [Luke 24:49.] You must be so fitted that there will not be any appearance of evil.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 14

Brethren, we need the Spirit of God in our midst; and when God puts His Spirit upon us, this seeking for the supremacy will cease. May God help us to reach a higher standard. What we want is to put self out of sight. I never felt it so much as of late. It is not the theory of the truth, it is not your argument that is needed, but what we want is religion—practical godliness—to teach the people and to weave into our own lives. We want to show in our actions the impress of the Divine and show that Christ is working for us, and with us, and that God is in our midst. We want to be a channel for good.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 15

It is the love of Jesus that we must have. We do not want to be shut in by ourselves, but to have the Spirit and power of God. We can never reach the people unless we have God with us, and we must get out of self and present the truth in the meekness of Jesus.4LtMs, Ms 82, 1886, par. 16

Sermon/At Grimsby, England

Grimsby, England

September 1886

(Philippians 2:1) and onward. Now this is the esteem that we should have one for another, and we should take these words right home to ourselves. Supposing that we should become perfect in this, would there not be a very different state of things among us? It is a great thing not only to believe God's Word, but to be doers of that Word, to carry out the injunctions of God in our lives in all things.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 1

We read a little further: "Do all things without murmuring and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Verses 14, 15. Now this is not merely the position for those who preach the Gospel, though they in a special manner should carry out the principles of the Word of God, but it means every one of us who claim to have the love of God in our hearts and to be connected with Jesus Christ. We need to have it enjoined upon us that we are in a crooked and perverse generation, and we need to have it impressed continually upon our minds what we are to do in that nation. We are to shine as lights in the world. Are we indeed members of the royal family? Are we indeed children of the heavenly King? Are we of that number of whom it is said that Christ is not ashamed to call them brethren? Are we in such close relation to Jesus Christ that He looks upon the work and labor that we perform? We want to know how we stand. We want to know what is our position before God.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 2

We know that the Lord has always had a light in the world. Noah in his day was the light to that crooked and perverse generation. We know that God gave him special light, it was to tell the world that a flood was coming upon the earth, and that they must find refuge in the ark. But how few heeded this warning!⁴*LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 3*

We take another case: There was Enoch. What a blessed thing it is that we have an Enoch! It is stated that he walked with God three hundred years. Notwithstanding the corruption was so great all around him, yet he walked with God, and his light shone out to that degenerate age. And if Enoch walked with God then amid corruption, why cannot men and women walk with God today, in this age of the world?⁴*LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 4*

Many of us know something of this experience. We know that in sadness and grief we feel very frail, but we know that Jesus is right by our side to sympathize with us, and He will help us. We can commune with our best Friend. He is right by our side. We need not go into the heavens to bring Him down, for He is right by us to help us.⁴*LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 5*

As we walk in the streets with those who care not for God or heaven or heavenly things, we can talk to them of Jesus. We have something more precious than they to look upon—it is Jesus. He is with us in the moral darkness of this age. We can tell Him of the afflictions of our soul and the wickedness in the world, and none of these things need hinder us. We can talk with Jesus. We can talk with Jesus as Enoch talked with God; he could tell his Lord all about his trials. Here was the way Enoch walked with God, and when the light shone out upon his pathway, he did not expect to say, “Why, what will my friends and relatives say of me if I take this course?” No, he did that which was right whatever the consequence.⁴*LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 6*

Now Enoch sought to have a connection with God, and those who do not have a connection with God have a connection with some one else who will lead them away from everything good. All of us have a character to form. Enoch formed a righteous character, and the result was that he was translated to heaven without seeing death. When the Lord shall come the second time, there will be some who will be translated without seeing death, and we want to know if we will be among that number. We want to know if we are wholly on the Lord's side—partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust—not by trying to make a clear path for our feet where we shall have no trials or difficulties to meet, but by placing ourselves in right relation to God and letting Him take care of the consequences.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 7

Enoch was the light to the world in his day, and how far that light extended! The light that Enoch reflected from God was broad and deep, and there were those who walked in this light, were blessed in this light, and died in this light, and will come up in the first resurrection.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 8

And there was the message of Noah which the world could not endure. They said it could not be that a flood was to come upon the world, and they laughed, and mocked, and scoffed at the preacher of righteousness. Did that make the message of none effect? No. But we see that none but Noah and his family were saved in the ark.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 9

Abraham was a light to the world, and the Lord said of him, I know Abraham, that he will command his children and his household after him. [Genesis 18:19.] Abraham walked in the ways of the Lord.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 10

Now it is the same with the people of this age. They can be on the side with Abraham and be blessed with him, or they can be on the other side and suffer the consequence. Jesus was the One who was communing with Abraham, and thus we see Christ in the Old Testament; then down through the New Testament we see Him constantly giving the apostles light, and we want to be gathering all the rays of light that have been shining down through the prophets and apostles. We have the advantage of all the light they had.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 11

Great beams of light were brought to Daniel, opening to him the great future that was to come upon this world. We have the benefit of this light and, having all this light, ought to do much better than they. We know how Daniel stood in the midst of that crooked and perverse generation. We know he took his position on the right side because it was right. He did not eat at the king's table, because he had had an education from his childhood that the brain must not be beclouded with improper diet. He was the precious light in that crooked and perverse nation, and they saw that light in Daniel. 4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 12

When his enemies sought to find some accusation against him, they could not. They said, "We can find no accusation against him because his life is one of equity." Therefore they said, "The only thing we can do is to bring an accusation against him concerning his religion," and they tried to get him to dishonor God by separating from Him. When we indulge in sin we dishonor God. [Daniel 6:4, 5.] We are so thankful that we have the example of Daniel, and what gratitude should fill our hearts for such an example. 4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 13

When the decree went forth that no one should offer any prayer except to the king, Daniel attended to his business faithfully, but when his time for worship came, he went to his chamber and there bowed before God three times a day and would let no man come between him and his God. Here was something to be immortalized and handed down to succeeding generations. And what was the result of Daniel's integrity and earnestness? God did not leave him. Although he was cast into the lion's den, there was not a stain upon his character, and the angels of God were cast into that den with him to care for him. And they closed the lions' mouths so they did not hurt him. Now we see what those before us have suffered for the truth's sake. The worthies who refused to bow to the golden image were cast into a burning fiery furnace, but Christ was with them there, and the fire did not consume them. There was not even the smell of fire upon their garments. 4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 14

Now some of us may be brought to just as severe a test. Will we obey the commandments of men, or will we obey the commandments of God? This is a question that will be asked of many. The best thing for us is to come into close connection with God; and if He would have us martyrs for the truth's sake, it may be the means of bringing many more into the truth. 4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 15

But here is the power of self-indulgence, the love of the world, and pride. We want to break away from these and, like Daniel, take a position so that the Lord can help us. Daniel did what he could on his part, and the Lord did not leave him. And it is the same today; when men have done all they can, God will impart unto them that wisdom that is sufficient for them to have. God gave Daniel wisdom and knowledge above all the astrologers there were in that realm.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 16

And it comes down to us through that man who chose to obey God rather than man.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 17

We must put on the whole armor of God and stand on the battle field and fight valiantly the battles of the Lord. We are not here to be butterflies, and to gratify self, but we are here to be lights to a crooked and perverse nation. We are to be loyal to God and heaven. We are gathering light not only for today, but for some special occasion; we are having increased light, and we must let it shine upon all around us. Many whom we try to reach with the truth of God will not accept it, and why? Because it involves a cross.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 18

We will lay Daniel aside and take another character. We will take the Majesty of heaven. You will never be required to make such a great sacrifice as did He to lift man up. He has encircled the race with His human arm, while with His divine arm He grasps the throne of the Infinite, and thus unites earth to heaven and fallen, finite man with the infinite God. Through divine power Jesus gives strength to every one of us that we may overcome. Now there is a work devolving upon each of us. We see how the King of glory left His high command, clothed Himself with humanity, and took upon Himself the nature of man in order that He might redeem him from the disgraceful fall.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 19

The very ones who ought to have acknowledged Him, the very ones who should have received Him, refused to have anything to do with Him, were upon His track to slay Him, and they made it as hard for Him as they could. And not only did they refuse themselves to have anything to do with Him, but they hindered everyone whose intelligence was convinced that He was the Christ. They covered Him with shame and said He was casting out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of devils. What greater insult could be brought upon Jesus than was brought upon Him?4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 20

Now we take His character and life. The Saviour of the world who came to make us better, to give us strength to overcome everything that is unlike Christ—that precious Saviour is leading us, and we can follow where He leads. It is a path of sacrifice, but what if it is? That is just what we need, because we are all full of self, all full of defects and errors and sin; and we want to separate from our own inclinations and self-indulgence and go where Jesus leads the way. And as we follow, Jesus says, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. I am the Light of the world. [John 14:6; 8:12.] If we follow in His footsteps, we shall be a light to the world. He left the commission with His disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to all nations.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 21

This light cost something; it cost the life of the Son of God. And why? Because He loved us with a love that was infinite. By following that light, we walk with Christ as Enoch walked with God, and we are fitting for that company of angels above, and that great reward which awaits the faithful; and what is that reward? It is an eternal weight of glory, but we can only get it by being partakers with Him in His suffering. And if partakers of His sufferings, we shall also be partakers with Him in His glory. I do not want any more exalted position than this.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 22

If we serve mammon we cannot serve God, and if we serve God we will be separate from the service of Baal. And just as soon as we decide that we will forsake sin and evil, and decide not to try to bring down the Lord's standard, but come up to it, then we can say as we follow in the path to eternal life, His yoke is easy and His burden is light.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 23

What we want is religion. What we want is that peace that comes from heaven. When Christ entered that upper chamber where His disciples were assembled, He said to them, Peace be unto you. [John 20:19.] This is what we want, the peace of Christ. Your friends may bring you happiness, but that is not the peace of Christ, and we want to take that course in this life that may be a light to this crooked and perverse nation.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 24

You are seeking a better country. The world may look at you and say, Why don't you go to this party of pleasure and dress more like the world? You can tell them you are seeking to be like Christ. Did He try to imitate the world in dress and practice? Then I will not. There is a perfect pattern given to the world. We know there was pride and fashion when Christ was upon earth. The priests had their splendid dress, but here was Christ who could not wear that splendid dress. He came to help the poor and needy. And our work is to do as Christ did, to seek to do His work. It is to take some of the extras from off our dress and put it upon some of the needy. It is our work to help those who have known nothing but suffering and bereavement.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 25

Brethren and sisters, there are souls to save. And, oh, when I think of those words in Daniel, I find myself waking up in the night and repeating them over and over, "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." [Daniel 12:3.] Look at the sun and the stars marshalled in the heavens and known by their names. The Lord says, They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever. Well, now I want to know if you will fold your hands and take things easy? Will you sit down in the devil's easy chair, deceived, and say, "I have always had an easy time and will take things easy now"? We have a great deal more to do to care for the inward training that we may have the spirit of Christ. We do not want to find any with the spirit of murmuring and complaining. If you have Christ's spirit you will find that when you are wounded you will not rise up in rebellion. What we want is the inward training. I want the Spirit of Christ abiding in me, and Christ says, If any man will hear My voice and open the door, I will come in and sup with him, and he with Me. We have been piling up the rubbish before the door of our hearts, and this must all be cleared away. Christ cannot enter there until we do. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," He says. [Revelation 3:20.] Clear away the barriers that have been piled up around the door of the heart. He wants you to clear them away, and He will come in.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 26

Now let us see if there is not something for us to do. Let us see if we have not bound ourselves about with iron bands. Every one of us must come in that position where Christ can work with us. We must get where we will respect the judgment of others and not think that "My way is the only right way in the world." They say to me in Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, "You cannot labor here as you do in America." But I tell them I will give them the message as God has given it to me. God has not changed since I came to Europe, and I will bear my message just as He has given it to me; and if I fail of meeting the ideas of the people in this place, I want them to remember that God has not changed; He is the same here as in America, and He can give the same message here. It is Christ and Him crucified, and the Christ in me will respond to the Christ in you. Here is the Bible and the truth, and we must come to the platform of eternal truth and seek to be partakers of the divine nature, and then the true light will come into this nation.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 27

The trouble is, more men have their own ways and follow their own will instead of God's will and ways. They cripple God's work and have their own ways and customs. But God wants us to have new and increased light every day, and scatter this light upon the pathway of others; may God help us. When the Spirit of Christ comes into our hearts, this feeling will melt away like frost in the sun. What we want is the sweet, subduing influence of the Spirit of God, and we want self to die and Christ to live in us. We want to grasp the rich promises of God, take up the cross, and yoke up with Christ. He says, "Take My yoke upon you." [Matthew 11:29.] There is but one yoke for any of us, and just as soon as we submit ourselves to Christ, then the first song that will break forth from our lips is, "The yoke of Christ is easy and His burdens are light." [Verse 30.] But if you manufacture a yoke of your own, you will find it is heavy and grievous to be borne.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 28

Christ says, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." [Mark 2:17.] It is not because a man is poor that he is of no value to Christ. What does God care for your riches? Does He make any difference in these things? Instead of this, it is the man who is poor and needy that is of high value in the eyes of Heaven.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 29

Now, my brethren, we want to come to the Lord just as a child to an earthly parent and come in meekness because we have the light that He has given us, and He will help us. If any of you are in darkness, it is because you are not yoked up with Christ. I love Jesus. There is immortality and eternal life for every one of us. I love Him, I love Him, and there is no attraction so great as Christ. It is our duty to have light. We sin if we do not have it. There should be no feeling that others are poorer than I and I will have nothing to do with them. But let me see that Christ is with them, and let me see that they are giving their hearts to God, and that their voices are raised in praise to God and to the Lamb, and it is enough.4LtMs, Ms 83, 1886, par. 30

Sermon/At Grimsby, England

Grimsby, England

September 26, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in HP 369; 9MR 259-264.

“And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David, He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept My word, and hast not denied My name.” Revelation 3:7, 8.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 1

Here we have reason to rejoice. Here is One presented before us who has all power in heaven and in earth. And He says, “I have set before thee an open door and no man can shut it.” [Verse 7.] Could an angel have done this? Is there any greater being upon our earth that could have done this? Is there any power that could have opened this door for the human race? No man could close it. There is only One, He who is equal to Divinity, the Prince of life. He is the One in whom our hopes of eternal life are centered, the Majesty of heaven, the King of glory. It is He who left the royal throne, who left His high command, clothed His divinity with humanity, came down to this earth and was a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, tempted in all points like as we are, that He might know how to help those who are tempted. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 2

When He received baptism at the hand of John, the heavens were opened above Him, and the Spirit of God descended in the form of a dove and rested upon Him; and there was heard a voice from the highest heaven, saying, “This is My beloved son, in whom I am well pleased.” Matthew 3:17. He was then entering upon His mission for which He came to this earth: and God declares His mission for which He came to this earth. The human race is accepted in the Beloved. His human arm encircles the race while with His divine arm He grasps the throne of the Infinite. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 3

He is the open door. The gates are ajar. The door is open and no man can shut it, so that in our weakness none of us need be discouraged. We need not feel that we are to fight the battles of the Lord in our own strength, because the gates are ajar and the communication that was cut off because of man's transgression has been renewed. Christ gave Himself as our sacrifice, and it is through this sacrifice that we are accepted in the Beloved. There is an open door for you. The light from heaven descending upon Jesus Christ acknowledges that He is accepted as our Substitute, and through faith in Him and obedience to God's commandments we shall be brought back again to our Eden home.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 4

Now we want to appreciate the great advantage that is given us through Jesus Christ. We want to know what price He paid for us in order to ransom us from the hands of Satan. In order to know this we must search the Scriptures and place ourselves in right relation to God. We must not transgress God's law as did Adam and Eve, but we must be obedient to all of God's requirements. It is when bending our footsteps heavenward that we are pointing others to our Eden home.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 5

We are to overcome as Christ overcame. And how did Christ overcome? It was by perfect obedience to His Father's commandments. He says, "I have kept My Father's commandments" [John 15:10], and therefore through obedience we are to be brought back to our Eden home.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 6

Now I appreciate this home. I appreciate it more highly than everything else in this earth, and I am bending my steps heavenward that I may have a home in the city whose builder and maker is God. I want the heavenly home. It is true we have trials and sorrows here: we have disappointments and afflictions here: but what of this? I forget all this in considering the eternal weight of glory. I do not allow my mind to be occupied with the things of this earth, because the glory of heaven has eclipsed the attraction of this earth for me, and I see one object, one crown, and it is for me to gain it. In order to gain it I must put all my reasoning powers and faculties to work.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 7

Now when Christ has made the sacrifice He has for us, would it not be most ungrateful in us if we do not accept it? He came to save us from our sins, not in our sins, but from our sins. He came to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Will we allow the final mold to be placed upon us? A great plan has been devised, and now the question is, Will you serve God or Baal? We know what corruption is around us, and the inquiry comes up, What more could I do for My vineyard than I have done? What more could the Lord have done for His people than He has done? Now it is for us to do. "Behold, I set before thee an open door and no man can shut it." [Revelation 3:8.] 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 8

Who is denying Jesus Christ? Who is it? It is those who are making a profession of godliness, those who are claiming to believe in Jesus Christ and yet are assimilating to the world. They are following another pattern. But Christ is our example in all things; and if we imitate the life of Christ, we shall be separate from all sin. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 9

Says Paul, I die daily. [1 Corinthians 15:31.] Our natural inclination would be to be like the world, but there is the invitation, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." [2 Corinthians 6:17.] There is a reformation that we are to make. We are to be as clay in the hands of the potter. We are to be molded and fashioned, and we are to take on the very fashion and mold that God would have us. We are not to take on our own mold, but we must be working to please the God of heaven, working to regain the moral standard. God wants to fit us for a home in His kingdom, and this is the time of our preparation. It is a time of character building, that we may have the right mold of character. God will do His part, angels will do their part, and we are to understand that all heaven is interested in our salvation. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 10

"I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." [Revelation 3:8.] Our works are laid open before God, and they are written in the books of heaven. There is also another book, the Book of Life—called the Lamb's Book of Life—and the names of those who have laid hold upon Jesus Christ are written in this book. If they have been trying to do as the world, their works will appear as they are. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 11

Christ says, "I stand at the door and knock." [Verse 20.] Then He says, "Be zealous therefore and repent." [Verse 19.] We must manifest a zeal in this matter. We need not wait for any special exercise of feeling before we surrender to God. We want Him at the very commencement of the work, and therefore, just as soon as we see that we have been rejecting God, we must come to Him and acknowledge that we have rejected Him and we now want to redeem the time. A great and infinite sacrifice has been made in our behalf, and now we want to show what we will do for ourselves. There is not one of us who will be placed in heaven with the mold of our own will. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 12

Now what time will you set to do this work? You are not your own; you are bought with a price. What time have you set to give yourselves to the Lord? Some think if they have entered the college and come out graduates that they know too much to give themselves to Jesus Christ. Who was Jesus Christ? He was the Redeemer of the world, and He is willing to do great things for us. We are weak in our strength, but Christ says, I know thy works. There is a way that is open to receive us. He will work with us, He is waiting to help us. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 13

I have thought of the mothers. What a work there is before them! Here are children entrusted to their care. In educating them they educate themselves. If they have a patient temperament, the children will manifest the same, and therefore they should feel the need of representing the meekness and love of Christ in their families. These families can be representatives of the family above, but there is work for the mother. It is to be kind and patient and educate her children to become acquainted with Christ from their very babyhood. In doing this work the mother is doing the work God has given her to do. And she is doing her work for time and for eternity. The greatest power that is seen is a well-ordered and well-disciplined family; and when brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, this family will tell upon those around them. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 14

I have said that if God would accept my work in training my children for the future immortal life, I will say I have not lived in vain. But this cost me labor and tears. I have had no time to put on the extra dress, to decorate myself. My time must be spent to prepare these children for the future life, to so fashion them that peace may be in their hearts, and to fit them for usefulness in this life.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 15

This is our work, mothers, but not that they should go out into the pleasures of the world. I have had people say to me, "Why, Mrs. White, your children will not know how to act in society." Said I, "I am educating them for the society of heaven. I want them to be educated to do right because it is right and well pleasing to God."4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 16

In America we have by the lakes a beautiful white lily, and how anxious every child is that he can secure those lilies. You can teach your children a beautiful lesson from these lilies. Their tiny stems strike down into the pure white sand. They leave everything that would stain or corrupt their purity. And just so should our children seek the pure in this crooked and perverse generation. They ought to be educated by their fathers and mothers that they shall gather all that is pure and lovely. Shall they be allowed to receive those things that will stain and spot them?4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 17

We read of a company that stands before the throne, pure and white. [Revelation 7:9.] Now this is what we want our children to be. As Christ has given us the perfect example, the parents must give it to their children. What we want is more of Jesus and a great deal less of self. Self grows very large in our esteem, and we think that after all we are doing all right and will have an entrance into the kingdom of God. But we will not if we do not follow the Pattern. And here is the Pattern, Christ Jesus.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 18

Nothing enters into that city that defileth. "I have set before thee an open door." [Revelation 3:8.]4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 19

Will you become acquainted with Jesus Christ? He is your best friend. Educate your children to become acquainted with Jesus. In their very youth is the time to impress this lesson upon them. How much time are you spending in this work? If you are neglecting this work your children will not stand around the great white throne of God as subjects of Christ. Now here is the open door; fathers and mothers, you can do this work yourself. I have wrestled day and night with God in prayer, Give me my children. I cannot give my children to the powers of the enemy, but I have felt that I must have their influence in this work of saving souls and thus we could be missionaries for God. And they stand by my side in this great work; I feel grateful to God for this.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 20

Now I know something about that door that no man can open or shut. I know as I come to God and offer my prayer as Christ upon the banks of Jordan I will have the blessing of God resting upon me. I know something of this world; and although Satan may thrust his temptations into my mind, I look beyond to One who is mighty to save, and He says, "I know thy works." Every effort we make to bless humanity around us is recognized in heaven. But we frequently neglect the work and serve God with a divided mind. If we ask God for anything, we must not have our minds one half of the time on God and the other half on our own selves.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 21

We know in whom we believe. Men may talk about our having our minds fixed too much upon heaven, but we know better. We have been in the work nearly forty-eight years, and we know something about God's service. I know best what bereavement is when I stand here alone, when he who stood by my side, and on whose large affections I have leaned for thirty years, is gone, and yet I am not alone, for Christ is my helper. Oh, I wish the curtains could be rolled back and we could see Christ in His glory. We are to be members of the royal family, children of the heavenly King. Now it is our privilege to know that Christ is by our side as our helper.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 22

Christ says, "I know thy works." He knows whether you are living a life of perfection, and if you love to talk and think of Him, and whether it is your joy to praise Him. Do we expect to get to heaven at last and join the heavenly choir? Just as we go into the grave we will come up, as far as the character is concerned. "For this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption." [1 Corinthians 15:53.] It is the body that will be changed then, but now is the time for washing and ironing. It is the time to wash our robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 23

When the lawyer came to Christ and asked, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" the answer was, "Keep the commandments." [Luke 10:25-28; Matthew 19:16, 17.] Here a positive question is asked by the lawyer, and he receives just as positive an answer. You must give your powers to God. "Well," said a doctor who was trying to bring my mind down to earth, "you will be unfitted for this earth if you try to put all your strength into the service of God." "Is that so, Doctor? Since I was sixteen I have been traveling east and west and north and south and have seen hundreds converted, and does this unfit me for a connection with the earth? When we have a right hold upon heaven we shall represent the love of Christ to the perishing sinner." The doctor said, "It is those who are in the dance hall that have called for Mrs. White to come and pray for them." They don't call for those who are pleasure lovers, but for those who know what it is to offer up their prayers in faith to God; and when we have an intelligent knowledge of Jesus Christ and His religion, then it is that we can be a blessing to those around us. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 24

Parents want to teach their children of Jesus and fit them, not for the pleasures of this world, but for the future, immortal life. And what are we doing? Are we fitting them for the future, immortal home, or are the pleasures of this world of more value? He will ask you soon, "Where are the children that I have given you? Have you fitted them for the world above?" What will you say then? Every mouth will be closed. God has given us reason and intellect. Give them to Him. Our affections are to be given to God. Your time belongs to God; He has bought it. Soon the question will come to us, What have you done with the blessings I have given you? What you want is to grasp every ray of light which is given you from heaven and live by that light. Then you will be happy. 4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 25

All these terrible losses and difficulties and crimes need not be. Do not charge them to my God. He is not chargeable for them. We would think by the appearance of many professed Christians that they had an idea that those who loved Christ were the most unhappy. But Christ requires nothing of us that would deprive us of one blessing. He requires of us obedience. He wants us to be happy, and He wants us to live with Him through the ceaseless ages of eternity.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 26

We read here that John saw the throne of God and around that throne a company, and he inquired, Who are these? The answer came, "These are they which ... have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Revelation 7:14. Christ leads them to the fountains of living waters, and there is the tree of life and there is the precious Saviour. Here is presented to us a life that measures with the life of God. There is no pain, sorrow, sickness or death there. All is peace and harmony and love. We want you to be in that heaven.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 27

Christ has died that we might keep God's commandments. Will you have your names registered on the Lamb's book of life? Then be careful and zealous to repent of every sin. He says, I will not blot out your name from the Book of Life, but I will confess it before My Father and His angels. [Revelation 3:5.] We want you to be happy here in order to be happy in the heaven above, and in order to be happy here you must make an entire surrender to God. And then ask God to come into your heart and abide there, and by your example seek to glorify God.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 28

The religion of Christ never discourages the receiver. It is fitting him for the society of angels in heaven, and that is where we want to be. We want to be in that position where His light and love will shine upon us, that we can gather rays of light from glory and scatter them upon those around us. We are to repress evil, control self, and seek to build up a character which God will approve. Now is the time of character building. Now is the time to receive grace and strength and power to combine with our human efforts, that we can form characters for everlasting life. When we do this we will find that the angels of God will minister unto us, and we shall be heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. And when the last trump shall sound, and the dead shall be called from their prison house and changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the crowns of immortal glory shall be placed upon the heads of the overcomers. The pearly gates will swing back for the nations that have kept the truth, and they will enter in. The conflict is ended.4LtMs, Ms 84, 1886, par. 29

“Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.” [Matthew 25:34.] Do we want this benediction? I do, and I believe you do. May God help you that you may fight the battles of this life and gain a victory day by day and at last be among the number that shall cast their crowns at Jesus’ feet and touch the golden harps and fill all heaven with sweetest music. I want you to love my Jesus. Give that to Jesus which He has bought with His own blood. Do not reject my Saviour, for He has paid an infinite price for you. I see in Jesus matchless charms, and I want you to see these charms. May God bless this congregation, is my prayer. 4Lts, Ms 84, 1886, par. 30

Sermon/The Two Classes in the Days of Noah

Basel, Switzerland

February 27, 1886

Portions of this manuscript are published in CTr 39, 55, 57-60.

Genesis 6:3, 5-7. "And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years. ... And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them."4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 1

After the translation of Enoch to heaven, the sons of men that were set against the worship of God, were drawing away the sons of God. There were two parties in the world then, and there always will be. The worshipers of God called themselves the sons of God. The descendants of Seth went up into the mountains and there made themselves homes separate from the sons of Cain. Here in their mountainous homes they thought to preserve themselves from the prevailing wickedness and idolatry of the descendants of Cain. But after the exhortations and the influence of Enoch was removed from them, they commenced to unite with the descendants of Cain.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 2

Here I wish to impress upon your minds that there are always two parties: those who stand as faithful sentinels for God, and those that are against God. God has a test and a trial for every living soul upon the face of the earth. There are always witnesses standing faithful to God, as representatives of God's righteousness, and those who are opposed to God, representatives of the government of Satan. It is the privilege of all who witness these two parties to choose which party they will be in.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 3

Here was the faithful Enoch who for three hundred years had been bearing a living testimony to the children of men, and when the descendants of Seth came down and intermarried with the descendants of Cain, then moral corruption flooded the earth. Now, the descendants of Seth might have preserved their integrity before God, and they might have exerted a saving influence upon the inhabitants of the Noachic world, but in the place of doing this they began to unite with the universal corruption that was prevailing in the valleys. The Cain worshipers despised everything like the sacrificial offerings that represented the Lamb of God that was to take away the sins of the world. It is stated in (Genesis 4:26), “And to Seth, to him also there was born a son; and he called his name Enos; then began men to call upon the name of the Lord.” Here we see the two parties standing right out in this degenerate age. It was not all corruption; it was not all fidelity. Here God states that every imagination of the thoughts of the heart was only evil continually. [Chapter 6:5.] 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 4

I spoke to you last Sabbath about the necessity of girding about the thoughts, that the soul should be loyal to God. The law of God was trampled under the feet of the Cain worshipers; they were idolaters; they worshiped the creature instead of the Creator. The descendants of Seth acknowledged the power and government and right of the living God to govern. God had borne with the perversity and iniquity of that long-lived race until He declared that He would bear with them no longer. He sent His angels to Noah to tell him what His purpose was in regard to the inhabitants of the old world. That faithful [preacher] of righteousness declared the message to the inhabitants of the old world, that one hundred and twenty years would be the end of their probation. Some of them were at first affected by the message that was brought to them, but as time passed along year after year, and they saw the earth remain the same as it had been, unbelief came into their minds. 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 5

Noah was commanded to build an ark for the saving of himself and his house. It is stated, “Noah have I found righteous before me in this generation.” [Genesis 7:1.] And it is also stated that, “Noah walked with God.” [Genesis 6:9.] Noah did not stop to question, “What will the inhabitants of the old world think of me if I begin to build this boat upon dry land?” He believed just what God had told him and he commenced to work upon the light and plan that God had given him. He had to employ many carpenters to help him in this great work of building, and there were many of these that were believers at that time. But the largest part of the Noachic world were unbelievers and they made a great deal of sport of Noah. They ridiculed the idea of building a great boat on dry land.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 6

The surface of the earth was very much as it was when God created it, although some changes had taken place. They looked at the lofty trees, and the wonderful things that God had made in nature, and said, “It is impossible that God shall destroy these things.” The sight of their eyes and their senses made a greater impression upon the inhabitants of the Noachic world than the message from heaven, and Noah stood there in his faithful integrity as a witness to that generation.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 7

Abel, Enoch, and Noah were representative men in that age, for the inhabitants of the old world. Every one had had their test upon the law of God. Would they obey God, would they do just as He told them to do, or would they disobey and realize the results? If Noah had been like many in our day who say, “Believe, believe, all you have to do is to believe,” then he would not have condemned the world. But Noah had that genuine faith, that faith that works. He testified by his faith and works to the inhabitants of the Noachic world that he believed God. Had he stood back and said, “I cannot build this ark; why, I will be considered crazy if I build this ark on dry land,” then he would have had no influence for good upon them. But he believed just what God had said, and carried it out by his works. They considered him insane; they laughed at him and mocked him, but still he kept at work in building the ark according to God’s directions, and when the last message of Noah was given to that degenerate age as he stood before the people giving his warning, they turned from him to ridicule him. They had listened to the prayers of Noah that had ascended day after day in their behalf, and with his heart drawn out for them he delivered his very last message to them.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 8

And God said to Noah that he and his wife, and his sons and their wives, should come into the ark. [Genesis 7:1.] You see how few there were who would believe the message of heaven, the Word of God, and thus be saved from the waters of the flood. The consequences of the transgression of God's law were evidenced upon man and upon the earth. Violence and corruption were prevailing everywhere.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 9

But the time came when there was a singular sight witnessed by the inhabitants of the Noachic world. Those who had laughed and scoffed and derided Noah, now could see that something was taking place that was wonderful. There was seen coming, through the forest and from every quarter, animals, two and two, making their way to that ark. These animals were obedient to the commandments of God, but man was disobedient. Then there was seen like a dark cloud in the heavens, the fowls of the air flocking to that ark. Well, at the moment this made an impression upon their minds. But as they had fellowship with one another, in their unbelief and corruption, they put it away from their minds.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 10

Then the commandment is given for Noah and his family to enter the ark. The probation for the inhabitants of the Noachic world is ended. Noah went into the ark, and there is seen a bright light—an angel of heaven came and shut the massive door. So there was a shut door in Noah's time. Noah and his family were shut into the ark and the unrighteous were shut out. The mercy of God was withdrawn from that polluted and corrupt generation.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 11

But we can see what a condition that family were in, shut in that ark seven days. It was a tremendous test brought to bear upon Noah and his family, shut in that ark seven days, and yet no rain came. The jeers and scoffs and triumphs of his enemies seemed complete. But as soon as the seven days were ended, there began to come in the dark and heavy clouds such as they had never seen before, and they increased in blackness, and the rain began to fall from them.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 12

Up to this time there had never been any rain, but a mist had arisen and watered the earth. For this very reason they had taken occasion to triumph. But the rain continued to fall and then there were some serious thoughts. But in order to put these reflections away from them, they went still deeper into their iniquity, and they earnestly looked to see if there was not some evidence that the clouds were rolling back, but there was none. The rain increases until it comes in torrents.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 13

God had concealed in the earth His weapons whereby He would purify the earth at that time. The jets of water began to come up from the depths of the earth, and as this water increased in force, it would throw up stones and uproot trees. Do you not think that there were some who would have been glad at that time to find refuge in the ark? There were some reaching toward the ark, and some entreaties, but it was too late. They began to move their families, and they climbed up to the very highest points of land, but the storm increased until families and beasts would find the highest points of land and struggle for refuge there. They would climb into the highest trees thinking to find refuge there, but these trees would be uprooted and they would be buried in the waters of the earth.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 14

Thus the inhabitants of that long-lived race perished in the flood, and even the beasts perished, except those that were in the ark. Christ said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the son of man be. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all." [Luke 17:26, 27.] Well, thus shall it be when Christ shall be revealed at His second coming.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 15

The law of God was first transgressed by Satan in heaven. He has kept up his controversy upon that point till the present time, and will until the close of time. The test that was brought to bear upon the representative men in past ages will be brought to bear upon men in this age. Will men acknowledge the government of the God of the universe and honor that government? Did it make the inhabitants of the old world any better by trampling upon the law of Jehovah? Did it improve their condition to separate themselves from the law of their Creator? Will it make men and women any better in this age to put their feet upon God's holy law and transgress it?4LtMs, Ms 86,

1886, par. 16

The very same results that were seen in the transgression of God's law by the inhabitants of the Noachic world will be seen upon the inhabitants of this generation. The rights and property, and even the lives of men, were not respected then, but violated. The thoughts and imaginations of the heart were evil continually. They worshiped anything and everything but God. So it is in this age of the world—deception, infidelity, and idolatry prevail to an alarming extent.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 17

Does it make a nation happy to put away the laws of God? The countries here have their laws, and the safety of the inhabitants of these countries are due to their obedience to these laws, and you know how strictly they require that these laws shall be observed. You see an officer by the side of a man who wears the shackles upon his hands and feet, and you know that that man has transgressed the laws of the land. He forfeited his liberty and was put in prison because he transgressed the laws of the country.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 18

And shall man advocate that the Lord of the universe has no law to govern His kingdom? Is it the doctrine of Jesus Christ or of heaven that the law of God has no binding claims upon the children of men? Why, the law of ten commandments is the great moral standard of righteousness in heaven and upon the earth. This great law is the foundation to all laws, to all nations, and to all families.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 19

What a piece of workmanship of the devil it is to say that the law <of God> is done away, and is no more binding upon the human race. We know that the murderer, the adulterer, and the thief get in trouble with this law at once. They are the ones that would like to have this law swept away so they could have free license to all their imaginations and wickedness. We do not think, as we see a man attended by an officer of justice, that he has been keeping the law, but that he has been transgressing it.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 20

Every soul of us living upon the face of the earth must have our test and trials. Circumstances will occur in the providence of God when we will be called to vindicate our faith. We shall give decided evidence which side we are on. We shall either be decidedly the vindicators of God's holy law, or on the side of the transgressors. We shall be tested as Noah was tested. Because the corruption was nearly universal in his age, did he then argue that it would not pay for him to stand separate and alone for God's law? He took his position as God's nobleman on the side of right because it was right.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 21

We shall understand something of what it is to be tested in the near future. There will be laws of the land that will interfere with our obedience to the laws of God, and then the test will come [as to] whose side we are on, on the side of God or the side of those that are against God? We want every one of us to be prepared for that which is come upon our world. You cannot, any one of you, at once jump into the position to stand the test of God. It is by patient continuance in well-doing that you gain the element of character that will enable to you to stand the test at last. It is by persevering integrity of soul day by day, and by calling upon God, that we get strength to stand the test.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 22

There will be every influence that will lead us to make light of God's requirements. But if we are prepared to meet the Son of man when He shall come in the clouds of heaven, we must be getting ready for it now. We are to have the white robes of character without spot before the throne of God. We want a living faith and a living religion. We want that our faith shall be made perfect by our works. And of those who are crying, "Only believe, only believe, and you shall be saved," we want to inquire, "What shall we believe? What is the testing faith for this time?"4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 23

You see that Christ has warned us that false teachers would come with false doctrines, and we want to know what to believe. There is a sure test. It is: If they speak not according to the law and to the testimonies, it is because there is no light in them.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 24

There was one in the parable that Christ gives us, who begged that someone from the dead might go to his brethren and warn them that they might believe. But Christ tells them, "They have Moses and the prophets, and if they will not believe them, neither would they believe though one rose from the dead.” [Luke 16:29, 31.] Thus you see that there is a standard of righteousness and that is God’s immutable law. We are to compare every doctrine and every faith with this great standard of righteousness. The faith is to be tested by this because faith is not always of the right kind. 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 25

We read that the devil believed and trembled, but that faith did not save him. [James 2:19.] We want that faith that has the Bible foundation for it—that faith that grasps a living Saviour and a living God. Paul says that he had taught them, from house to house, repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ [Acts 20:20, 21]—repentance toward God because the sinner is in trouble with the Father; he has transgressed His law, [and] faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ because there is no saving power in the law to pardon the sinner. The blood of Christ alone can cleanse the sinner from every stain of sin. Had they acknowledged that law, it would have pointed out to them in the old world what sin was, and they would not have dared to sin. If the people of this age would acknowledge the law of God as binding upon them, they would fear to commit these crimes. 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 26

Who among this company, amid the moral pollution and corruption of this degenerate age, will stand as representatives of God? Of whom will it be said—as it was of Enoch, Abraham, and Noah—that they pleased God? Why, He is a God of power and grace, and He will clothe every one of us with salvation if we will only throw ourselves upon His mercy. 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 27

He has concealed in the bowels of the earth His weapons that He will use in purifying the earth. He said He would no more cleanse the earth by bringing a flood upon it, but He has fires concealed in the bowels of the earth that will unite with the fires from heaven and purify this earth. And God is gathering out and binding up those who love and serve Him, and the wicked are being bound in bundles, ready for the fires of the last day. It depends wholly upon us which bundles we will be in, whether we will be with the good wheat or bound in bundles for the fires of the last day. 4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 28

We need never expect that all the world is to be converted, and that our faith and obedience to the commandments of God will become popular. But we want now to be obtaining a fitness for the future immortal life. Guard faithfully your thoughts and your imaginations. Have the thoughts and the imaginations upon God and heaven and heavenly things. Be growing up into the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. You want to represent Christ in character; you want to reflect a light to the world that will it be a savor of life unto life or of death unto death. You want individually to preserve lives of piety and reverence to God. And you may be strong in God and in the power of His might, qualified to do His work. And you may be prepared to be translated to heaven as Enoch was, without seeing death. The eternal reward is to be given to those who are faithful and obedient to God. If you show your obedience here, you will show your obedience there as loyal to the God of heaven.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 29

May God help us that we may receive the eternal weight of glory at last, because we have been obedient to His commandments.4LtMs, Ms 86, 1886, par. 30

Preparing for the Time of Testing

Copenhagen, Denmark

1886

Formerly Undated Ms 152. Previously unpublished.

We carry a continual burden as we labor in these large cities. Every kind of pleasure-seeking, the voice of mirth, the voice of wrath and blasphemy is common, but the voice of praise and thanksgiving to God is a very strange thing.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 1

When I feel so deeply and the weight of souls presses me so heavily, I think of Jesus. He was the light of the world, but the minds of the very ones who ought to receive Him and acknowledge Him were lifted up unto vanity. Self-pleasing and strife for the supremacy kept them in constant trials, and Jesus, the only One who could give them light and peace, was not accepted and acknowledged by them. How must the Redeemer of the world [have] been grieved as He saw the indifference of the very men [to whom] He came to our world to present the priceless gift of eternal life, and they scorned the gift and the Giver.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 2

The world's Redeemer was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He gave everything for man. He laid aside His glory. He, for our sakes, became poor, that we, through His poverty, might be made rich, and He lived a life of continual self-denial and self-sacrifice. He humbled Himself that He might reach to the very depths of human woe and misery and lift up man, fallen. He endured torturing agony of soul because of the sins of men. He died on the cross, the most ignominious death, that man might not miserably perish. All that prophets and holy men proclaimed that should be fulfilled in regard to Christ's mission in coming to our world was fulfilled. And yet men's hearts are as hard as adamant.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 3

All that God has, through the prophets, spoken and written in regard to the future will be fulfilled. God will have a people, a chosen people from all nations, all tongues, in all parts of the habitable world. As I look over these great cities, I call to mind Christ's weeping over Jerusalem, exclaiming, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not." [Luke 13:34.] I felt deep heart yearning for the souls for whom Christ had died who knew not the things that made for their peace.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 4

We have the light of prophecy, the Old Testament, that we are standing on the threshold of the fulfilment of great and solemn events. Prophecies are coming down to a point. The dangers and perils of the last days are right upon us. At the present time the angels are holding the four winds. There seems to be a little moment of peace. It is a lull in the conflicting elements just before the outburst of the unprecedented storm that has been gathering its forces for the last great crisis. Nations will be in confusion. Kingdoms will be terribly shaken. Everything betokens the end is near. The churches are making void the law of God, rejecting the truth and choosing [their] delusions. They are not taking sides with the Prince of Peace. They are not ranging under the banner of the Lord God of hosts; and when church and state shall be united in restricting religious liberty, when the institution of the man of sin shall be taken up universally in preference to God's holy, sanctified day; when all men [standing] in church and state [show] strong respect for the man of sin in exalting the heathen day of worship and call it Christian, then it will be time for God to work, for they have made void His law.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 5

Signs then of desolation will be plainly revealed to the God-fearing student of prophecy. The great secession has taken place, the world and church united to tear down God's great moral standard and erect a standard instituted by the man of sin. Then will be earnest men, distinguished men, blinded and deluded with false doctrines; they have taken a deep draught of wine of Babylon, and they rush into superstitious doctrines, into the great apostasy, bearing the very stamp of that dross. God has plainly pointed out in prophecy, "they were drunk with the wine of Babylon," and the same spirit moves the whole.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 6

Another angel from heaven will join the third angel in proclaiming the loud cry, "Come out of her, My people, lest ye be partakers of her sins and receive of her plagues." [Revelation 18:4.] The crisis is upon us. It is coming as a thief in the night steals upon us unawares. 4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 7

If there ever were a time when serious reflecting becomes every one who fears God, it is now when personal piety is essential, when the inquiry should be made, "What am I, and what is my work and mission in this time? On which side am I working? Christ's side or on the enemies' side?" Let every soul now humble his [or] herself before God, for now we are surely living in the great day of atonement. The cases even now of many are passing in review before God, for they are to sleep in their graves a little season. Your profession of faith is not your guarantee in that day, but the state of your affections. Is the soul temple cleansed of its defilement? Are my sins confessed, and am I repenting of them before God, that they may be blotted out? Do I esteem myself too highly? Am I willing to make any and every sacrifice for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ? Do I feel every moment I am not my own, but Christ's property, that my service belongs to God, whose I am? 4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 8

There is in this day abundance of form and display, but vital piety is rare indeed. There are fair-weather Christians enough, but God cannot use such in this time. Sentimentalism abounds. Tasteful and a proper religion so-called is filling the world. It is in harmony with the natural heart because it is cold and like a statue, but has no living, working principle. There is earnestness and deep interest all through our world in false theories. Infidels abound everywhere because of the abounding Christless religion of this age. Satan is taking advantage of all this false Christianity, to work in himself. He is taking the world and the churches captive and setting his agencies to work with a life and power, that the outcome he sees would surprise and startle the Christian world, but a stupor-like death has changed their senses. 4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 9

God's faithful, commandment-keeping people are the ones whom Satan cannot draw upon his side and make them rebellious against God's law. And those who profess to understand the law in which we live are not all half awake. They are, many, fearful, ease-loving, self-loving. The truth as it is in Jesus does not have a refining, elevating, sanctifying effect upon their lives and characters, and they will be dealt with as chaff unless they arouse and are converted.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 10

Every one now needs to build securely for eternity, for their faith will be tested: are they building on the Rock. So many are risking their future and eternal interest on a probability, not on the sure Word of God; and while some are looking forward to the latter rain, to do the work for them that God wants should be done now, they will become so cold they will not recognize the latter rain. Their probation closes, and they are laid in the grave, unfit for their last change. They did not make themselves ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb. What will eternity be to this class?4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 11

I am afraid for these poor souls who eat and drink, plant and build, marry and are given in marriage, as in the days before the flood. We need vital godliness. We need a living connection with God. We must wake out of sleep and watch and wait and pray and work. We have no time for indolence or to follow the customs and practices of the world. We are to catch the divine rays of light from Jesus and flash them upon the pathway of others. It is high time everyone who has the light of truth shall impart the truth to others.4LtMs, Ms 87, 1886, par. 12

The Mother's Trust — Sermon by Mrs. E. G. White at Great Grimsby, England

Great Grimsby, England

Circa 1886

Compare with CTBH 60-72.

The work of the mother is a solemn and important work. Amid the homely cares and the trying duties of everyday life she should exert an influence that will bless and elevate her household. The graces of the spirit must appear in her character, or the great work committed to her hands will be marred by impatience, and will not bear the divine impress of the Holy Spirit of God. Every mother has a sacred charge from the heavenly Father in the children that have been committed to her care, and it is her privilege, through the grace of Christ, to mould their characters after the divine pattern, to shed an influence over their lives that will draw them toward God and Heaven.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 1

The babe in the mother's arms is something more than a burden or a toy. It is a charge committed from God, and it is both a privilege and duty to train it for the kingdom of Heaven. If mothers had always realized their high responsibility, and made it the work of their lives to fit their children for the solemn duties of this life, and for the honors of the future, immortal life, we would not see the misery that exists in so many of the homes of our land.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 2

The mother's work is of such a character that it demands continual advancement in her own life in order that she may be able to lead her children to higher and higher attainments. She must be taught of God. She must be a daily learner in the school of Christ if she would impart instruction in righteousness. The mother who bears this sacred burden will feel the need of divine support, and like the woman in Judea, will bring her little ones to Jesus that His hand may be laid in blessing on their heads, His spirit subdue their hearts.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 3

Satan is playing the game of life for the souls of both parents and children. Mothers are drawn away from the duties of home and the careful training of their children, to the service of self and the world. Vanity, fashion, and matters of minor importance are allowed to absorb the attention, and the education of the precious children is neglected. It is not enough that your children are sent to school and to the house of God; you are to teach them the statutes of Jehovah by precept and example. The Lord says, "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou riseth up." [Deuteronomy 6:6, 7.] The requirements of God are of deep significance, and those who value the salvation of their children will seek to fulfill them in the strength of Christ. 4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 4

The mother, if she makes the customs and practices of the world her criterion, will become physically and mentally unfitted for the careful duties of her lot. Fashion should not hold her bondage for it will weaken her powers of endurance and make life a wearing burden instead of a blessing. Through physical weakness, brought on by over taxation, she may fail to appreciate the great privileges that have been bestowed upon her, and her family will grow up without the benefits of her thought and prayers and diligent instruction. It is Satan's studied plan to pervert every habit of life from its proper channel, that God may be dishonored in the creatures He has made, and that they may become life-long sufferers by breaking the laws of life. Mothers have done themselves great injury by girding their waists with tight garments. They have robbed their children of vitality and lessened their own power to do good in their families and in society. When the waist is girded the organs of the body cannot perform their proper functions with comfort, promoting health and life. It is impossible to take a full inspiration. The lungs are cramped and the lower chambers are rendered useless, and it is no wonder that consumption soon begins its fatal work. The responsibilities of the failing mother have to be laid down, and she is consigned to an early grave. Her children are left in their inexperience to the mercies of the world. 4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 5

It is not the will of God that men and women should die prematurely, leaving their work unfinished. He would have us live with every organ free. It is His will that we should be in harmony with the laws of life. Many complain at the providences of God when disease and death remove the members of the household; but it is unjust to charge God with the sure results of their own transgression of natural laws. Mothers, do you want your girls to live, enjoying good health, then teach them to dress healthfully. You do not want poor, feeble creatures incapable of joy and unfit for usefulness in the world. If you love your child and desire her good, why do you teach her by your example that it is not a sin to deform the human form? What reason can you render to the Creator for marring His handiwork?4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 6

Let us turn away from the fashion plates and study our own organism. We are fearfully and wonderfully made, and we are to present our bodies a living sacrifice to God. Can Christian mothers be worshipers at the shrine of fashion and yet preserve their loyalty to the God of Heaven? This is impossible. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." [Matthew 6:24.] You cannot devote your time and talents to the world, and yet keep your mind and body in a condition to do the work committed to you for time and for eternity in training your children for the heavenly courts.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 7

Oh! If mothers would only consider the wonderful privileges that God has given them, they would not turn aside from their sacred duties for the trivial affairs of the world. The mother's work begins with the babe in her arms. I have often seen the little one throw itself and scream if its will was denied in any way. Then is the time to rebuke the evil spirit. Satan will try to control the minds of our children, but shall we allow him to mould them after his will? These little ones cannot discern what spirit is influencing them and it is the duty of parents to decide for them. Their habits must be carefully watched. Everything that has an evil tendency should be curbed. Regularity should be the rule in all their habits. Mothers make a great mistake in permitting the children to piece between meals. The stomach becomes deranged by this practice and a foundation is laid for future suffering.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 8

Mothers complain of the delicate health of their children and consult the doctor, but if they would but exercise a little common sense they would see that the trouble often results from mistakes in eating or from overeating. Tea and coffee and spices are not good for you or your children. They are stimulating and not nourishing. Pastries, rich cakes, greasy food, and meats are not necessary or wholesome. Mothers should become intelligent as to what is the best quality food and how it should be prepared. Our children should have plenty of simple, nutritious food. There is good religion in a wholesome loaf of bread. Fruits, grains, and vegetables, prepared so that they will be both wholesome and palatable, requires painstaking effort and will keep the blood in a better state, and the body in a stronger condition, than the stimulating diet that so generally is placed upon our tables. We should not feel that what we eat is lost, but should take pains to have the very best food possible for our needs.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 9

But parents should remember that they must control their own appetites and tempers if they would see their children develop noble Christ-like characters. In England I noticed the horror of the saloon that they should have and as they hear the enticing music of the place of vice, the habits of their home-life will not be like a strong fortification against temptation and ruin. It is painful to see the children loitering about the street corners, smoking the stubs of cigars that men have thrown away. They are born with a natural tendency to these evil habits. They have inherited the self-destroying appetite from their fathers, and unless this is overcome they will only be vessels of dishonor unworthy of the societies of saints in light.4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 10

I am glad to know that there is a law here in England prohibiting children under a certain age to use tobacco, but would not the law be more efficient for good if the law-makers themselves would set a worthy example to the youth of this age? Should not this law reach to the parents?4LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 11

Let the sunshine into your parlors. Let the children find their home the most attractive place on the earth. Weave about them such influences that they will not seek for street companions or think of the places of vice except with horror. Seek to have them adorned with a meek and quiet spirit which is of great price in the sight of

God. If your children have good health, pleasant tempers, and the grace of Christ rules their hearts, you may rejoice at your success.⁴*LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 12*

Take up your neglected duties in the name and through the strength of Christ, and you will do a work that will be written in the immortal records of heaven. You may bring your children to Him who has purchased them with His own blood and hear the glad words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," from the lips of the divine Master. [Matthew 25:21.]⁴*LtMs, Ms 88, 1886, par. 13*

God's Immutable Law

NP

c. 1886

Previously unpublished.

1 Thessalonians 3:12-13. “And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: To the end that he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.”4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 1

The only way that we can determine character is by the law of God. What is the law? The detector of sin. The law is not holiness created, but holiness made known. Holiness is perfect happiness. Sin is perfect misery. “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself” [Luke 10:27] was not made when the law was given; it was only proclaimed. The proclamation of the law is mercy, the expression of goodness itself, for it testifies to man what the Creator requires of man on his part. What He ever has and ever will require is perfect obedience to His law, and when Adam failed in obedience to that law sin was brought into the world.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 2

The conditions God had made as the price of everlasting life and eternal happiness were violated by man and there was no hope for man. The law itself could not pardon. There is no saving quality in law to pardon the transgressor of law. If man should say, “Never more will I transgress,” the agreement is broken and there is no word of hope in the law to restore the transgressor of law. God Himself cannot extend forgiveness to the sinner and yet maintain His justice—the infinitely holy, infinitely just, infinitely true. There is something that must be done to place man in a right relation to that law. God so loved the world that He gave His only beloved Son to make an atonement for the sins of the whole world, that man shall not perish but have everlasting life.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 3

Through the death of Jesus man may live, but what a costly sacrifice! The whole plan of redemption is devised on the part of God to save man. In carrying out God's plan, the law would be magnified and made honorable before human intelligences, before the worlds God has created, and before the angelic host. The law that was questioned and that Satan claimed was changed and amended, was beyond change, was faultless, perfect, holy, just, and good. Although Satan threw his whole might against it and obtained on his side a large number of the holy angels, yet not one jot or tittle of that law was moved from its foundation.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 4

Had Satan been able to gain his point, then God would have been found not perfect in wisdom because He had made a law—the foundation of government in heaven and in earth—that was of a character that of necessity could not exist, but must be abolished, since no one could render obedience to such a law. Thus the character of a God of justice and mercy would be impeached before the worlds God had created, before all heaven, and before the human family.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 5

But Satan did not succeed, although he had brought not only the world, who know not God, but the Christian world who claim to know God and His Son Jesus Christ, to take his side and array evidence against God in order that He shall not stand before angels and men infallible, supreme, infinite in wisdom. The most glorious tidings that ever fell upon mortal ears are: “God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have eternal life.” [John 3:16.]4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 6

Is Satan's object then gained? Can man after all be saved in continual transgression of God's law? Christ came not to perpetuate sin but to make an end of sin; “to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and the prophecy, and to anoint the most holy” [Daniel 9:24.]4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 7

Notwithstanding that the law condemns the sinner as still unworthy of the gift of eternal life, unworthy of the confidence of God, through our substitute, Jesus Christ, man may be saved. Jesus will demonstrate to the worlds that have not fallen, who are subjects of God's law and have been watching the controversy between Lucifer—one of the angels exalted but fallen—and the Prince of heaven, that He became more than a martyr: He became an atoning sacrifice. He became surety and substitute for the sinner. In Christ it was demonstrated that the Lord will punish the transgressor, for Jesus suffered the penalty which every sinner will suffer if he does not by faith lay hold on the merits of Christ and return his allegiance to God by obeying His law. In Him we have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of our sins.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 8

But the position taken by the largest number in the Christian world is that because Christ died the royal law of God is no longer in force. This was true of the law of types and shadows, but His laws are as enduring as His own throne. We cannot say otherwise than the Christian world is in a fatal deception on Satan's side, warring against the government of God just as Satan is doing. Unless they repent of sin, which the Scripture declares is the transgression of the law [1 John 3:4], they will stand no higher in the day of final judgment than the sinners who did not claim to be children of God.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 9

One man, a minister of the gospel, uttered words which he will wish in the judgment that he had never spoken. He called God's holy law which Christ came to exalt and make honorable—that law which Christ proclaimed from Sinai mount in such terrible grandeur—an old, rickety law, dead and buried and not deserving a gravestone; an old thunder and lightning law; an old bloody, Jewish law. And then to conclude his blasphemous attempts to pour contempt upon God's holy law, he said he felt better after releasing his feelings in giving the old law a run now and then. No doubt Satan felt the same and was much pleased to have so influential a man as his ally, to utter his feelings in audible words against the Most High God. These are the great, swelling words of the man of sin.4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 10

But let us see in regard to this law that is so terrible and so much against man that it is pronounced a yoke of bondage. Take the first commandment: “Thou shalt have no other gods before Me.” [Exodus 20:3.] Is this a type or shadow? Must this go with the types and the shadows? It is true, it seems to be binding in its character, for it leads man to the one living God and permits him to look to no other gods for help, to reverence and adore. Nevertheless, “Thou shalt” shows that the will of man is interfered with, so it is [perceived as] a yoke. 4LtMs, Ms 89, 1886, par. 11
